The Washington correspondent for The New York Times for more than thirty years describes his youth in Kentucky and reminisces about men and events in the Washington and international scene from the presidency of Theodore Roosevelt to Lyndon Johnson. Index.

Reviewed by F. K. Kelly

America 119:414 N 2 '68 800w

Reviewed by J. F. Menez

Best Sell 28:356 D 1 '68 950w

Reviewed by Vermont Royster

Book World p7 S 22 '68 650w

"In this massive book filled with facts, opinions, anecdotes, and rich humor, Arthur Krock recounts his experiences in the field of 20th-Century journalism and explains what he feels to be the revolutionary transformation of America from a Federal union to a mass democracy—as he terms it, a giant centralized neo-socialist welfare state. . . . He gives vignettes of . . . [many] giants of journalism. . . . The book is crammed with inside information. . . . Krock comments on the Versailles Treaty, the New Deal, World War II and the uneasy peace thereafter, Wendell Willkie, Huey Long, James Forrestal, Nikita Khrushchev, Sherman Adams, the Kennedy clan, and many others. This is a flavorful, substantial memoir and an essential purchase for collections of journalism and contemporary history." L. W. Griffin

Library J 93:2854 Ag '68 300w

Reviewed by N. B. Freeman

Nat R 20:1176 N 19 '68 1050w

"The tug-of-war between [Krock's] philosophical commitment to magnolia-scented political doctrine and his irrepressible personal interest in fresh ideas and men injects an agreeable element of internal tension into the 'Memoirs'. . . . Though the general structure of the [book] is logical enough—an opening chapter on his childhood, three chapters on newspapers, eleven chapters on Presidents—the text is well arranged within the chapters. The chronology is often helter-skelter; and a lifetime of writing 800-word takes has evidently eroded Mr. Krock's instinct for continuous narrative. . . . For the student of history the political chapters of the 'Memoirs' will be of the greatest interest. . . . [However] this is not to say that Mr. Krock's memory is impeccable. When he departs from his memoranda, he can get confused, like anyone else. . . . Still, for all its lapses, this is a rich and absorbing book." Arthur Schlesinger, Jr.

N Y Times Bk R pl S 22 '68 1600w

New Yorker 44:203 N 2 '68 110w

Reviewed by T. G. Plate

Newsweek 72:107 O 7 '68 850w

Reviewed by S. W. Little

Sat R 51:84 O 12 '68 950w

KRUG, MARK M. History and the social sciences; new approaches to the teaching of social studies. 292p $6.50 Blaisdell pub.

300.7 History—Study and teaching. Social sciences—Study and teaching 67-11103

The author "examines new schools of thought and trends in social studies, with particular emphasis on the structure, the inductive, and the public controversy approaches. The first part of the text deals with the nature of history and geography and the interrelations of history, geography, and the social sciences."

KRUG M. M.—Continued

Avenues for [an] . . . integration of concepts and generalizations from the social sciences in social studies instruction are explored. . . . In the second half of the book, Professor Krug suggests new approaches to the teaching of United States history, government, civics, and world history." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"Krug summarizes and evaluates judiciously and intelligently the current discussion on the teaching of history and the social studies. He opts for a humanistic approach and remains refreshingly skeptical of the infatuation with inductive teaching, problem solving, and structure of subject matter gospel in vogue among curriculum reformers today. He reviews rather tediously the various positions taken on the nature of history and the social sciences and on their interrelationships. Occasionally he descends to naive and even tautological statements. . . . [His] suggestions for teaching are sound, balanced, and just a trifle bland. Students will find the book handy as a convenient, up-to-date survey of its subject. Recommended for undergraduate collections until a more searching volume is published."

Choice 4:1140 D '67 200w

"[The reviewer does not] argue that historical narrative has outlived its pedagogical usefulness or even . . . dismiss out of hand the contention that history should be at the core of the social studies curriculum. Rather, [he] contends that if history as a subject is to be effective in the contemporary public school classroom, it will need more careful definition and more adequate implementation than Professor Krug has advocated for it in this book." A. S. Bolster

Harvard Ed R 38:592 summer '68 6200w

"Krug directs the bulk of his criticism at Jerome Bruner's 'structure' concept. . . . The book is filled with errors, and they vitiate Krug's criticism of the new social studies. Anyone who has had anything to do with the writing or publishing of this book should be chastened by the result. Krug forgets what he has already written. . . . Errors abound. . . . Misspellings are common. . . . The index is incredible: a check of personal names reveals 122 omissions and sixty-four inaccurate entries. Perhaps, though, these errors prove to be the strength of Krug's book. They deflect attention from more substantive problems of unity and coherency which are suggested by a reading of only the preface and table of contents. To use one of Krug's memorable sentences in a different context, 'Most scholars [will] undoubtedly have grave doubts' about this book." J. J. Cierznjak

J Am Hist 54:868 Mr '68 1000w

KRYTHE, MAYMIE R. What so proudly we hail; all about our American flag, monuments and symbols. 278p $5.95 Harper

929 Signs and symbols. U.S.—Historic houses, etc. Monuments 68-15993

The author includes information about "the Great Seal, the Presidential and Vice-Presidential Seals, the phrase 'In God we trust,' the American Eagle, Uncle Sam, the Liberty Bell, Independence Hall, the White House, the Capitol, the Statue of Liberty, Washington Monument, Lincoln and Jefferson Memorials and the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier. She gives origins and histories. . . . [and] quotations in reference to each. . . . [There are] glimpses of social activities in the White House and Congress." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"This book is a rich source of fascinating incidents in American history, couched in terms which evoke patriotic sentiment. It will be of wide interest but it will be particularly suitable for high school and college libraries." R. W. Henderson

Library J 93:3118 S 15 '68 130w

"A collection of facts . . . told in language that should make the book useful for junior high school pupils as well as for the general reader, but illustrations are lamentably absent." D. M. Glixon

Sat R 51:69 N 16 '68 70w

KUBY, ERICH. The Russians and Berlin, 1945: tr. by Arnold J. Pomerans. 372p il $6.95 Hill & Wang

940.54 Berlin. Battle of, 1945 68-18850

Drawing on memoirs, diaries, court records, letters and interviews with civilians and combatants on both sides, the author attempts to set forth a history of the events surrounding the Russian capture and occupation of Berlin in World War II. Based on a series of articles which appeared in the German magazine Der Spiegel in 1965, this book was first published in German under the title Die Russen in Berlin 1945. Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by Elbridge Colby

Best Sell '28:151 J1 1 '68 600w

Choice 5:1029 O '68 130w

"Here is another product of team journalism, with all the advantages and defects of this new practice. . . . The book which has grown out of the mass labor and the 50,000 words published by the magazine is jammed tight with fact, anecdote, inference, and judgment. It does not qualify as history, but it contains material galore upon which the historian will later thrive. The German flair for getting down to detail, often tediously so, shows throughout. Humor happily softens the account of the ghastly realities of the culminating crash of Nazism. . . . One of the most fascinating analyses made by Kuby comes in a short chapter . . . about what happened to Hitler and Eva Braun at the very end." Edwin Tetlow

Christian Science Monitor p9 J1 13 '68 750w

"Although this book is objectively written and very readable it offers nothing really new in either interpretation or analysis of the Russian assault on and occupation of Berlin.

However, [Kuby's] analysis which credits the division of present-day Germany as much to the Allies as to the Germans is worthwhile. His book is recommended for larger libraries wishing exhaustive collection on this topic." A. S. Birkos

Library J 93:2237 Je 1 '68 150w

"Kuby's conclusions seem to be better balanced and more carefully thought out than the dramatic presentation in [C.] Ryan's The Last Battle [BRD 1966], and the book should thus provide a valuable other viewpoint for both school and library collections." Larissa Rulofson

Library J 93:[3338] S 15 '68 120w [YA]

"There is, of course, a certain inconsistency between Herr Kuby's assertion that there was really no 'Battle of Berlin' and his admission that several hundred Russian tanks were destroyed by the Panzerfauste operated mostly by fanatized young Nazis. . . . But on the whole [he] is right in saying that morale among most of the German troops in Berlin was low and that many thousands of German civilians, convinced that the game was up, dodged further mobilizations into the German army. . . . A large part of this book (and this makes it particularly valuable) is concerned with the tragedy of the 'ordinary' people of Berlin during the last months of the war. It quotes numerous—mostly unpublished—diaries, some of the greatest interest. . . . [The] translation is excellent."

TLS p640 Je 20 '68 1850w

KUCERA, HENRY. Computational analysis of present-day American English, by Henry Kucera and W. Nelson Francis; with a foreword by W. F. Twaddell; a study by Mary Lois Markworth and Laura M. Bell; and an analytical essay by John B. Carroll. 424p $15 Brown univ. press

427 English language—Word frequency

67-10213

"This volume presents a collection of lexical and statistical information obtained from analysis of the Standard Corpus of Present-Day Edited American English, a computer-processible corpus of language texts assembled at Brown University during 1963-64. . . . [and] referred to subsequently . . . as the 'Corpus.' . . . The bulk of the book comprises two frequency lists of the words in the Corpus. . . . The rest comprises a number of tables and graphs resulting from various counts, calculations, and studies and two essays analyzing some of the results." (Introd)

"For research in modern language, especially modern American English, indispensable; for reference involving problems of word frequency, so nearly authoritative that it renders all previous American English frequency lists obsolete; for the average educated person, interesting browsing, but generally not readable. . . . Two main lists rank words and order them alphabetically; subsidiary data in these lists and in lists of selected words reveal word frequency within genre of writing. Inevitably, both the linguistic corpus and the printed reports, although excellent, have limitations. Most obvious is that, although great care was taken to include widely divergent writing, spoken English is inadequately reflected."

Choice 5:608 J1 '68 170w

"Here are some 300 pages of computer output, with a handsome and learned surround of explication and analysis. The topic is the 1,600 feet of magnetic tape on which the authors and their colleagues recorded just over a million words of text, all published in the U.S. in 1961. . . . A statistical treatment of the data by John B. Carroll makes clear how closely the frequencies follow the well-known log normal distribution. From his two-parameter fit (which is really excellent) he can derive from the theory the expected finite number of words in the entire population sample, which comes to about 350,000. . . . The tape itself—plus a manual for using it, raw material for a dazzling number of curiosities and linguistic researches—is available to all who wish to order a copy."

Sci Am 218:143 Ap '68 480w

KUENNE, ROBERT E., ed. Monopolistic competition theory: studies in impact; essays in honor of Edward H. Chamberlin. 387p 11 $8.95 Wiley

338.8 Chamberlin, Edward Hastings. Competition. Monopolies 66-28747

"The book has two objectives: an appraisal of the changes in economic reasoning that have resulted from Chamberlin's work [Theory of Monopolistic Competition, BRD 1933], and the extension of monopolistic competition theory in areas that have proved resistant to it. [It] is organized into three parts. The first is entitled 'Global Impacts'. Part II deals with 'Impacts on Theoretical Fields'. Part III is concerned with 'Impacts on Geographical and Applied Areas'. The essays in Part III deal, respectively, with Chamberlin's influence on German and Italian economics, on the marketing literature, and on agricultural and banking markets." (Am Econ R) Index.

"[The book] succeeds more in . . . [its first objective] than in the latter respect. In addition, 'Chamberlin vs. Chicago' disputes are renewed—again with inconclusive results. . . . This volume appears more to have been to honor [Chamberlin] for things past than to lay the groundwork for things ahead. On this standard, [it] deserves to be judged a success. But the reader who is interested in substantive research results and new concepts will find the mix rather too heavily weighted in favor of surveys and overviews." O. E. Williamson

Am Econ R 58:192 Mr '68 3000w

"An up-to-date evaluation by 17 leading economists of Chamberlin's theory of monopolistic competition. Generally substantial in content and lucid in exposition. . . . A smorgasbord with something for every economist, perhaps everything for most. . . . Items are useful on reading lists of all sorts. A good source book. Highly recommended for purchase."

Choice 4:380 O '67 200w

"Throughout his life [Chamberlin] struggled to gain acceptance for his theory of monopolistic competition as a general theory of value. . . . The plain fact is that the theory of monopolistic competition has had little impact on economics. This is explicit in several of the contributions in this volume, and it is implicit in all of them. . . . Most readers find Chamberlin's obiter dicta more interesting than his formal analysis. . . . Students of competition find the theory of monopolistic competition neither a useful guide nor a source of inspiration for a testable hypothesis. . . . Few articles in this Festschrift will interest anyone but some future historian of economic thought. Graduate students in price theory can profit from a reading of the contributions of Fellner, Georgescu-Roegen, Samuelson, Bain, Heflebower, and H. Johnson." L. G. Telser

J Pol Econ 76:312 Ap '68 1450w

KUENNE, ROBERT E. The Polaris missile strike; a general economic systems analysis. 434p $8 Ohio state univ. press

359.32 Submarine warfare 66-10715

An associate professor of economics at Princeton University discusses the Submarine Deterrence System. He "develops a set of probability models which include submarine vulnerability, navigation and guidance error, launch reliability, missile range, missile interception, command and control error, and accurate Soviet 'hunches' about the location of our fleet. . . . He then determines the probable fatalities in the 95 largest Soviet cities (their aggregate population is 45.7 million), under four sets of parameter estimates: (1) most favorable, (2) reasonable, (3) unfavorable, and (4) extremely unfavorable." (Am Pol Sci R) Index.

"[Professor Kuenne's study] will be of interest to many political scientists. Those specializing in United States foreign and security policy will find his conclusion, that 'we are overbuilding missile submarines' provocative, to say the least. Those interested in the application of mathematical techniques to contemporary policy issues will find this readable example of quantified analysis instructive. . . . The author is explicit and self-conscious about his exclusion of policy and political variables which might alter the requirements for deterrence in specific real world situations. However, he is not immune from criticism as long as he bills his work as a systems analysis. . . . The book is a major contribution to the small body of systematic and well documented reasoning and analysis of assured destruction capabilities. It is fraught with policy implications—for arms control and nuclear proliferation as well for deterrence, force structure planning, and weapon systems deployment."

J. C. Ries

Am Pol Sci R 61:1177 D '67 800w

"An example of 'tough minded' application of economic theory, statistics and mathematics to problems of cold war military competition. . . . The rise of game theory in economics makes it advisable for most libraries of universities with large graduate programs in economics to acquire this book. It would seem to have less appeal to undergraduates, perhaps except to illustrate how 20 years of cold war have transformed (to put it euphemistically) the social sciences in the U.S. A glance at the author's attempt to discuss the morality of all this ('A Final Word,') ought to be chilling enough for most of us."

Choice 4:1021 N '67 150w

KUH, RICHARD H. Foolish figleaves? pornography in—and out of—court. 363p $7.95 Macmillan (N Y)

343.0973 Obscenity (Law). Censorship

67-24286

"This is a study of the endeavors made by law to define and repress that which it deems to be pornographic. [The various dilemmas] are set forth by way of an . . . examination of [recent] court decisions. . . . Literary classics, old and new, paperback erotica, the magazine Eros, live entertainment, photographs and comic books receive . . . examination. Particular attention is paid to the conflict of freedom of personal action as against that of the protection of the community, and to the role of censorship in today's life. In a final analysis, solutions to the problem are sought and a series of suggestions are made. . . . The author was from 1953 through 1964 an assistant district attorney, serving as a trial prosecutor, administrative assistant to the New York district attorney, and chief of the criminal courts." (Library J) Index.

Reviewed by W. F. Buckley

Book World p5 F 18 '68 1700w

Reviewed by H. M. Burns

Library J 92:4518 D 15 '67 210w

"[This] is a useful book, even if it is not a vastly entertaining one. [Mr. Kuh] has drafted three model laws, designed to set out in detail rules for the police to follow in enforcing the three types of obscenity offenses listed in Redrup [v. New York]. The most helpful item is his model law designed to keep pornography out of the hands of minors. . . . Mr. Kuh also seems to be on firm constitutional ground with his draft law to prohibit lewd posters, advertisements and other public displays. . . . Yet Mr. Kuh seems to be flirting with trouble in his third suggested law, one designed to stop people from 'pandering' smut. . . . [This book sorts out] the confused history of years of decision-making by judges on the subject of obscenity." Fred Graham

N Y Times Bk R p6 D 10 '67 1300w

KUH, R. H.—Continued

"Kuh undertook this study as a former public prosecutor, and his bias is apparent. [His sympathies] surface in his handling of the Lenny Bruce case, which he tried for the New York District Attorney, and here, to me, he is least convincing. . . . [This] is a constantly interesting, informative, and well-annotated discussion of a problem that has baffled the best legal minds. The book may well help rally community opinion to clean up the commercialization of sexual activity in obscene material without doing violence to our liberties or hindering the truly artistic handling of sex." S. W. Little Sat 50:94 N 11 '67 550w

KUHNS, WILLIAM. In pursuit of Dietrich Bonhoeffer; with a foreword by Eberhard Bethge. 314p $6.75 Pflaum press
230 Bonhoeffer, Dietrich. Christianity. Theology 67-29763

The author, a Roman Catholic, describes and analyzes the life and theology of "a Lutheran pastor, his place in the struggles of the German Church, his role as a provocative new theologian, . . . [and as a] promoter of ecumenism in Germany. . . . [The author describes Bonhoeffer's 'religionless Christianity', and] by marshalling pertinent extracts from Bonhoeffer's works examines the idea and the urgency of community, the concrete nature of authority, the anthropological approach to God and Christianity, the doctrine of the Church and the . . . impact of the Incarnation." (Publisher's note) Chronology of Bonhoeffer's life. Bibliography. Index.

"Kuhns' thoughtful study of Bonhoeffer's anthropology complements his genuine analysis of the famous prison letters. The chameleon concept of 'religionless Christianity' found in the later and fragmentary writings of Bonhoeffer is well delineated. . . . The chapter entitled 'A Catholic Looks at Bonhoeffer' is disappointing. . . . The obvious analogy between Vatican II's stress on the Church as the covenant community of the 'People of God' and Bonhoeffer's notion of the 'Church as community' is totally absent in Kuhns' observations. . . . His book, however, combines genuine scholarly research, originality and personal enthusiasm." C. M. Hegarty
America 118:46 Ja 13 '68 700w

"A perceptive book that challenges Christians of all persuasions. . . . With great sensitivity Kuhns examines the possible meanings and unresolved legacy of Bonhoeffer's final questions about holy worldliness, 'Christian atheism,' his relentlessly Christological anthropology and his counsel to responsible action—even the action of a pacifist plotting to assassinate Hitler. . . . Kuhns describes Bonhoeffer's importance for the ecumenical movement against the background of three cultures: the Catholic, the Protestant, the secular. He is unsentimentally candid in his analysis of the deep differences and mutual suspicions between Catholic and Protestant cultures." Bruce Morgan
Christian Century 85:621 My 8 '68 650w
Commonweal 87:390 D 22 '67 40w

"The author weaves biographical data and insights with presentation and interpretation of the Lutheran theologian's seminal thought and fragmentary writings. While in no sense a 'Catholic' approach to the martyred German's amazingly influential work, it does devote one chapter to putting him into perspective for Catholics. Scholarly but largely readable and an excellent book for those who have heard much about Bonhoeffer in bits and pieces and are ready for a comprehensive look." Critic 26:93 Ap '68 100w
TLS p1227 O 31 '68 1250w

KULSKI, JULIAN EUGENE. Land of urban promise; continuing the great tradition; a search for significant urban space in the urbanized Northeast. 282p il maps $13.50 Univ. of Notre Dame press
711 City planning—U.S. Urban renewal 66-24924

A professor of urban planning at George Washington University contends that "the reshaping of an orderly urban environment to preserve tradition and to express meaning in urban design is one of the most urgent problems facing modern society. The cities in [the Northeast Atlantic] area are now being redeveloped, and Dr. Kulski examines the basic problems of urban life and the hazards of redevelopment, studies the operation of government controls and points out the legal reforms and design theories involved in rebuilding urban America." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"A fair and well balanced evaluation of the accomplishments and the failures of the existing programs. . . . Kulski argues for planning and implementation on the megalopolitan level. Such unification of the region would deal with all the social and physical development aspects of the never-to-be finished urban belt. . . . To the specialist, this clear and readable book will be a reminder that the task is complex and that only men who have a synoptic (Kulski's term) view of the problem should guide in the search for solutions. To the layman it will be an eye-opener about the state of our changing urban environment." Choice 4:1286 Ja '68 230w

"[This] is a richly illustrated narrative tracing the evolution of the northeast urban cluster. The author ends with a plea for better transportation development and better design, as well as for identifying what should be preserved: 'A city without a past is not a city.' To build his land of urban promise out of the present chaotic 'megalopolises,' he would have the President appoint a body responsible for planning our urban regions and coordinating the housing, transportation, poverty and other urban programs." Charles Abrams
N Y Times Bk R p6 J1 16 '67 430w

KULTERMANN, UDO. New Japanese architecture. rev ed 180p pl $13.50 Praeger

720.952 Architecture, Japanese. Architecture, Modern—20th century 67-29467

"First published in 1960, and now revised . . . this book presents today's buildings—apartment houses, sports centers, industrial buildings, theaters, city administration offices—and . . . city planning schemes, placing them in the perspective of the past and future. Included . . . are brief biographies of more than twenty of Japan's . . . contemporary architects." (Publisher's note) For the first edition see BRD 1961.

"Although this is a light survey of modern Japanese architecture, consisting principally of photographs and lacking plans and detailed drawings, it may be valuable to architecture students and practicing architects because of its interesting suggestions about architectural design. It shows clearly the connections between Japanese architecture and other native fields of design, such as clothing and hair styling. Moreover, it brings before us representative buildings by the great Japanese architects of today. Librarians should note that this kind of book will become dated rather quickly." Choice 5:766 S '68 90w

"The most interesting additions to Mr. Kultermann's survey are various Japanese schemes for huge, monolithic city-structures in which the individual house becomes a mere interchangeable cell in a big beehive. . . . [This book is] of equal interest to Japonica and serious architecture collections." Wolf Von Eckardt
Library J 93:982 Mr 1 '68 140w

KULTERMANN, UDO. The new sculpture; environments and assemblages [tr. by Stanley Baron]. 236p il col il col pl $20 Praeger
735 Sculpture 68-17366

The "director of a museum of modern art in Germany and professor of architecture has written . . . on international sculpture trends [of the past decade]. . . . He takes up the new images of man, man's environment in sculptured form—including animals, clothing, furniture, objects, transportation, landscape, primary structures, and the use of the elements as media. He also discusses a few of the senior contemporary masters including Moore, Giacometti, and Picasso, but he devotes the bulk of the book to creations of the new breed of sculptors such as St. Phalle, Marisol, Segal, Samaras, Phillips, Oldenburg, Raynes, Cornell, and Christo." (Library J) Bibliography.

"[Kultermann] has peppered the book with a brilliant selection of . . . photographs which are of a size and quality to give a clear indication of the new excitement and creative spirit that has done much to make sculpture more a part of everyday surroundings. . . . More than 400 brief biographies conclude this outstanding survey which is recommended for art schools and libraries." W. J. Dane

Library J 93:2474 Je 15 '68 190w

Reviewed by Lawrence Alloway
Nation 207:663 D 16 '68 10w

"This slightly breathless report [contains] 325 black-and-white illustrations, twelve colour plates and references to some 430 artists. . . . [The volume] lacks elegance in its writing and is perhaps too unquestioning in its assumptions. It constitutes a valuable and comprehensive progress report however on startling developments in many parts of the world. To anyone striving to make up his mind whether some of the neat little notions now doing the rounds may have emptied out the baby with the bath water, it provides an essential cross-index."

TLS p864 Ag 15 '68 350w

KUMAR, DHARMA. India and the European Economic Community; issued under the auspices of the Indian council of world affairs. 272p $6.50 Asia pub.

382 European Economic Community, India—Economic policy. India—Foreign relations
SA67-285

A "report emanating from a Study Committee of the Research Board of the Indian Council of World Affairs. Based on visits to Common Market countries, Switzerland, U. K., and the U. S. by Kumar and other members of the Committee, this study focuses upon community developments [in political and economic spheres] which have relevance for India as well as the Commonwealth." (Choice). Index.

"[A] well documented report. . . . Statistical tables include: India's trade with the Six since 1913-1914; a comparison between Indian figures of exports and those of the European Economic Community, 1959-1963; more detailed figures on India's trade of certain commodities with specific members of the Community as well as with the world at large; forecasts of exports of developing countries to developed countries for 1970; and total exports to India of the EEC of certain items of importance to India. . . . This valuable study which has no competitor at the moment . . . will be of use in undergraduate courses in comparative economics, South Asian studies, and courses focusing on European economic integration."

Choice 5:98 Mr '68 170w

"On the effect of E.E.C., without Britain, on India's foreign trade, [the author's] conclusions are cautious. Up to 1965, it had had 'little perceptible impact', and her guess is that it is not likely to make 'trading conditions much more difficult for India than they would have been in its absence', at least in the short run. . . . If Britain joins, the impact is likely to be more serious, amounting to a drop in Indian exports to the United Kingdom of some 10 per cent. . . . With or without Britain, therefore, the E.E.C. is something of a worry to a country which has enough worries already. These conclusions, which are carefully substantiated, justify the time and trouble that Dr. Kumar has devoted to this study; but they are by no means the only justification, for the first half of the book contains one of the best succinct accounts currently available of the evolution and structure of E.E.C., its relations with its African associates, and its impact on the general pattern of world trade."

TLS p1105 N 23 '67 500w

KUMIN, MAXINE. The passions of Uxport. 399p $6.95 Harper

68-15975

This novel set in a suburb of Boston "tells the story of two marriages at crisis point. . . . Hallie and Mellon Peakes [are friends of] . . . Martin and Sukey Davis, [whose] ten years of marriage have produced their beloved daughter Binky and a patient adjustment on Martin's part to the recurrent acute depressions that torment his gifted wife. And then one fall, winter, and spring, amid the quiet routines of daily life, both families come face to face with brutal threats to life, health, loyalty and love: the awful diagnosis of Binky's recurring fever and fatigue; the pregnancy of Hallie's unmarried niece; and Hallie's own need to find a cure for the stubborn stomach pain in sessions on the analyst's couch." (Publisher's note)

"Kumin stays close to the problems of reality by spelling out the anxiety of Mrs. Peakes in dealing with an abortionist for her unmarried niece. There is an air of sickness, however, over all of the people in the book. . . . [And] there is an enormous amount of attention paid to animals—rather an unhealthy group like the human beings. There are dogs, a three-legged cat, a premature foal, and numberless dead animals left on the roadside. The dead animals seem to represent examples of public and private cruelty. . . . The subject matter is most unpleasant and consistently so. The style is both free and dignified throughout and the mixture of the formal and the colloquial keeps the unpleasantness as the central concern. The [novel] gives us a glimpse . . . into the wasteland world of decadence, corruption, and mental illness, with understanding and compassion." C. M. Siggins

Best Sell 28:88 My 15 '68 700w

"A lot of people are going to recognize themselves in this book. They are going to do this in spite of—perhaps even because of—the rather open characterization of the central characters. . . . There are a lot of other characters, including a horse, a dog and a psychoanalyst not too ancient at eighty to fall in love with his patient. Mrs. Kumin, writing straightforwardly, flexibly and with sympathy, piles on them a season of crisis. . . . This is a good book, even if half the characterization is supplied by the collaborating reader. He collaborates because he finds the account just. . . . The reader over thirty, that is, I don't suppose people under thirty would read the book, or understand it if they read it, or like it if they understood it. But it might be a good idea if they did. It tells it like it is. But you have to know it like it is to know that." C. C. Park

Book World p10 My 5 '68 700w

"While the setting is banal suburbia, the emotional content of the story seems to come out of that 'rag-bag of hunchback dreams' that haunts one of the heroines of Uxport. . . . The two heroines of Uxport are first cousins to women like Kay Strong of [M. McCarthy's] The Group [BRD 1963]. . . . They are gifted, neurotic, beleaguered. . . . The narrative is in general tortuous, extended, and difficult, but it effectively turns suburbia into a surrealist purgatory." Margaret Birns

Library J 93:1500 Ap 1 '68 200w

Reviewed by Mary Carter

N Y Times Bk R p37 My 5 '68 600w

Reviewed by D. J. Gordon

Yale R 58:112 O '68 850w

KUMMER, HANS. Social organization of hamadryas baboons; a field study. 189p il $8.95 Univ. of Chicago press

599.8 Baboons

67-25082

"This document is based upon a year's observation by the author and Fred Kurt of wild Papio hamadryas (Cercopithecidae) in their native habitat in Ethiopia. It is the first field study of this arid-land baboon. . . . The stated purpose of the study was to survey the entire system of social organization within the population. Accordingly the study began with an extensive survey, then narrowed down to increasingly intensive observations of smaller units." (Science)

"Dr. Kummer observed baboons in the wild for some months. What he saw will console readers alarmed by Desmond Morris' Naked Ape [BRD 1968], for it appears that the sexual arrangements of baboons are as preposterous as anything contrived by men, if not more so. The writing is excessively scholarly—flat as a floor and infested with tables and charts, never intended for amateurs." Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 222:106 J1 '68 70w

"The study of primate social behavior has been marked in the past by much intuition and little technique. Kummer's book describes a number of ingenious yet simple techniques, such as the nearest-neighbor sample, which could be of great value to other workers on various species. This study could be used as a guidebook on how to study a primate society. In clarity of description and in the precision with which each statement is supported by factual material the book must also stand as a model of scientific reporting." D. S. Sade

Science 161:561 Ag 9 '68 650w

KUNSTADTER, PETER, ed. Southeast Asian tribes, minorities, and nations; pub. for the Princeton center of int. studies. 2v 486;487-902p il maps $22.50 Princeton univ. press

301.3 Asia, Southeastern—Civilization. Minorities 66-17703

"Twenty anthropologists and other specialists here report their observations—gained largely from original field work—on the relationship between rural minority groups and central governments in the developing Southeast Asian nations. . . . [The authors consider tribal groups] in Burma, China, India, Laos, Malaysia, Thailand, and Vietnam. . . . Descriptions of tribal life and government programs, together with charts, tables, maps, and photographs, provide . . . data on minority populations—their distribution, languages, social customs, economic and religious backgrounds. Statistics on ethnic groups in Cambodia are included in the Appendix." (Publisher's note) Chapter bibliographies. Index to both volumes in volume two.

"This work will remain, for some years, the definitive source on the topic the authors selected to discuss. Southeast Asia, however, in this study, excludes Cambodia, Malaya, Indonesia and the Philippines and includes mainland China and eastern India. The regional emphasis is on Thailand, reflecting the greater availability of information and, possibly, the sponsorship of the study by the U.S. Department of Defense. The authors are experts on the groups described; maps and photographs are excellent; bibliographical notations and index are top-rate."

Choice 4:1324 Ja '68 100w

"What we have here is neither a guide-book nor a gazetteer but a series of rather simple-minded reflections on the consequences of government 'aid' for 'tribal' minorities located in various parts of Southeast Asia from Assam eastwards. . . . The general level of discussion is that of low-grade ethnography touched up with some highly optimistic assessments of the activities of various American and local government-sponsored agencies. . . . It is quite clear that political rather than academic considerations influenced both the selection of authors and the choice of topics. . . . The principal exception here is Lehman's contribution, which is a valuable sociological analysis of the generation of ethnic self-consciousness in its Burma context, [and] McAlister's paper on the distribution of mountain minorities in Vietnam and their role in the Viet Minh war of independence against the French. But in general there must be very few kinds of reader who could discover in these pages the kind of information they might be looking for." Edmund Leach

Science 160:983 My 31 '68 500w

KUPER, JACK. Child of the holocaust. 278p $4.95 Doubleday

B or 92 World War, 1939-1945—Personal narratives. Jews in Poland 68-12773

The author of this biography tells "of his experiences as an abandoned child in Occupied Poland during World War II. Born Jankele Kuperblum, he was eight years old when his parents fell into the hands of the Nazis. He was protected by a . . . Polish farm woman until fear of the Nazis forced her to send him away. After that Jankele wandered from farm to farm seeking shelter." (Library J)

"A heartbreaking, and, by now, all too familiar, personal memoir." S. L. Simon
Library J 93:1622 Ap 15 '68 200w

Reviewed by Regina Minudri

Library J 93:2552 Je 15 '68 90w [YA]

"The author's style is flat and unemphatic, but just the bare bones of this [narrative] hold pity and terror enough." Martin Levin
N Y Times Bk R p33 Je 23 '68 110w

"Kuper's narrative recalls [J.] Kosinski's The Painted Bird [BRD 1965], but there are profound differences between the two books. Many readers have understood The Painted Bird as fact, yet technically it is a work of fiction. Child of the Holocaust, a true story, resembles a novel, partly because it is so artfully rendered but also because it seems at times to verge on the fictional. . . . If Mr. Kuper's book were fiction, it would be described as a paradigm of man's search for identity. . . . [It] gains an added dimension from the warmth and affirmation that inform its pages, testifying to the spirit of a man who emerged whole from a childhood of shame and despair." R. J. Milch
Sat R 51:30 Ag 3 '68 550w

"The charm and fascination of the book lies in this dual role of survival and growing up. Interesting too are the later chapters where Mr. Kuper describes his experiences in the chaotic conditions of Poland, liberated from the Germans. The task of survival was still hazardous in a land infested with bandits, partisans and peasants ready to kill any Jew they could lay their hands on. Finally he established contact with the Jewish community in Lublin and was placed in an orphanage. This was a nightmare experience. The other boys refused to believe that he was a Jew and treated him with the hostility reserved to those who had just murdered their families."

TLS p835 S 21 '67 400w

KURALT, CHARLES. To the top of the world; the adventures & misadventures of the Plaisted polar expedition, March 28-May 4, 1967. 193p il $5.95 Holt

919.8 Plaisted Polar Expedition, 1967. North Pole 68-12210

"Early in 1967, twelve men, all of them complete amateurs, undertook a . . . journey by snowmobile to the North Pole, the first attempt to reach the top of the world by overland motorized vehicle. Led by Ralph Plaisted, a St. Paul, Minnesota, insurance agent, the group included two doctors, a high school geography teacher, a dentist, and a computer engineer. Financed by private organizations and with the encouragement and assistance of the Canadian government, they were going to be the second expedition ever to reach the Pole overland and the first since Admiral Peary in 1909. What made them go, . . . what they experienced in their weeks on the treacherous polar ice cap and how they came to question Peary's success [are here told by the] CBS News Correspondent [who accompanied them]." (Publisher's note)

"Even if you hate snow and ice, you will get caught up in the excitement of the day to day battle against nature's rawest challenge. Midway through the book you will be longing to reach the top of the world; and even though you know this expedition will fail, you will be hoping that Plaisted gets another chance at it. . . . Public libraries, especially, will want copies of this book for their male patrons and it will probably be very popular with teen-age boys at their high school libraries. The discussion and doubts about Admiral Peary's feat will make the book valuable to academic libraries." Charles Dollen

Best Sell 28:39 Ap 15 '68 310w

"Mr. Kuralt's narrative is beautifully developed, vivid and nontechnical; he takes account of both practical details and inner meanings. In the last chapter he presents a keen, candid analysis of reasons why land expeditions to the North Pole fall short of the Pole. . . . This is an excellent book of armchair adventure, in which both the letter and the spirit of truth are observed—the 70 hours' blizzard alone is worth the price of the book. For public and high school libraries." Phyllis Pope

Library J 93:2005 My 15 '68 190w

Reviewed by Regina Minudri

Library J 93:2552 Je 15 '68 60w [YA]

"[The expedition's] object was to prove the superiority of the snowmobile over the huskie for Arctic travel. They used eight of these 10-horsepower, tracked vehicles which ride on skis, and anyone who has glided over a snow-covered pasture on the versatile playthings can understand the challenge. . . . [Kuralt] has given us a graphic picture of what it was like, but his book badly needs a map to orient the reader."

N Y Times Bk R p39 Ap 28 '68 370w

KURTH, RUDOLF. Introduction to stellar statistics. 175p pl $8 Pergamon

523.8 Astrophysics 66-24821

This volume deals with "the theory and methodology of statistics and probability which are applicable to problems of astronomy. In addition to a discussion of the elements of probability, statistical distributions, and tests of hypotheses, the book contains a chapter on the integral equations of stellar statistics. Applications of statistical techniques and descriptive parameters have been discussed for distributions of stellar brightness, stellar motions, galaxy distributions, stellar distances, and the like. . . . Appendices give a list of suggested research problems, a discussion of quadratic forms on the unit sphere and some recent results on the distribution of stellar velocities." (Science)

"Most of the material has been covered in the classic work of [R.] Trumpler and [H. F.] Weaver. Statistical Astronomy, which in many ways is a better book for a beginner in the field. Kurth's book offers a concise review of the observations. . . . The presentation is very formal which makes reading a little hard unless one already has some knowledge of statistics. (In this respect Trumpler and Weaver is superior.) A large bibliography, however, makes it a useful book to have. In summary, probably more for specialists than for students of astronomy."

Choice 5:806 S '68 170w

Reviewed by S. W. McCuskey

Science 159:1090 Mr 8 '68 390w

KURTZ, PAUL, ed. Sidney Hook and the contemporary world; essays on the pragmatic intelligence. 474p $10.95 Day

191 Philosophy, Modern. Hook, Sidney 68-24145

"Eleven of the essays . . . deal with Hook's life and philosophical career, or with the doctrines he has espoused in such fields as moral philosophy, politics, religion, metaphysics and the theory of knowledge. The other 12 essays are independent contributions to these fields by a number of scholars." (N Y Times Bk R) Contributors include A. A. Berle, R. M. Gale, M. Konvitz, M. White, B. D. Wolfe and others. Bibliography of works by and about Hook.

"This Festschrift presents essays by appreciative colleagues who comment on the various aspects of Sidney Hook's engagement. The range of this involvement is truly amazing. Illustrative of the scope of the Festschrift as well as of Hook's interest are the following: Marxism, democracy and majority rule, government and civil disobedience, the American dream, ethical theory, naturalistic humanism, metaphysics and the theory of inquiry. Recommended for all philosophy collections in academic and large public libraries." R. A. Gray

Library J 93:3790 O 15 '68 130w

"Among the essays deserving of special attention, perhaps the most striking is . . . [one] by the distinguished political philosopher Ernest van den Haag, on the conflict between obedience to law and the demands of conscience. . . . Despite the presence of . . . other interesting papers, this volume remains an unsatisfactory tribute to Sidney Hook. The reason, oddly enough, is that it strikes too uncritically laudatory a tone. There is one proposition on which virtually all of the contributors agree: Hook is a fighter. . . . And yet, of 23 contributions to this volume, only three—by Raziel Abelson, Richard Gale and Milton Munitz—directly challenge Hook's positions. And even these essays do not deal with the controversial issues of politics and ethics on which Hook has taken an increasingly conservative, cold-war, anti-Communist stance, but rather on such low-key issues as the logic of ethical discourse or the nature of metaphysics." R. P. Wolff

N Y Times Bk R p60 N 24 '68 950w

KUYKENDALL, RALPH S. The Hawaiian kingdom; v3, 1874-1893, the Kalakaua dynasty. 764p il $12 Univ. of Hawaii press

996.9 Hawaiian Islands—History (38-28602)

"In the final posthumously published volume [of this trilogy, the author] completes his history of the Hawaiian kingdom by covering the reigns of David Kalakaua and Queen Liliuokalani. He deals with . . . Hawaiian relations with the United States, immigration problems, and the struggles for ascendancy." (Library J) Index. For volume one see BRD 1939.

"Unfortunately [this] is the most disappointing of the three [volumes], focusing too rigidly on internal Hawaiian political events. A better, less detailed book on the period is [M.] Tate's The United States and the Hawaiian Kingdom [BRD 1966]. . . . The present volume has excellent illustrations. . . . With the two earlier volumes, Kuykendall's book represents the most comprehensive internal history of Hawaii yet done, and the trilogy is strongly recommended for purchase for general undergraduate libraries."

Choice 5:850 S '68 110w

"[This book] appears some four years after the author's death. . . . It was prepared for the press by his friend, Charles H. Hunter, who also completed about fifty pages of the text. . . . Both Kuykendall and Hunter deserve high praise. The reviewer has no really adverse criticisms to make. . . . The few misprints and doubtful statements may safely be overlooked. On balance, it is a sound, thorough, perceptive study. . . . The book is too large and clumsy to hold easily, . . . the mere bulk . . . will scare away the very persons who should read it." W. A. Russ

J Am Hist 55:412 S '68 750w

"Mr. Kuykendall reveals much that was not known before. . . . One does not have to be a prophet to predict that all subsequent scholars will have to lean heavily, no matter what their interest, upon his work." Hyman Kublin

Library J 93:2238 Je 1 '68 190w

KYLE, ELISABETH. Great ambitions; a story of the early years of Charles Dickens. 217p $4.50; lib bdg $3.97 Holt

B or 92 Dickens, Charles—Juvenile literature 68-10062

"In a fictional biography the author tells the story of Dickens' life from the time he was twelve and an apprentice in a blacking factory to his twenty-seventh year, when he was already well established as an author." (Horn Bk) "Grades eight to ten." (Best Sell)

"This volume is an ideal way of presenting background for the literary efforts of Charles Dickens to young readers. . . . The author brings Dickens to life and offers young readers a rare opportunity to share the experiences of Dickens' earlier days."

Best Sell 27:466 Mr 1 '68 90w

Reviewed by M. L. Birmingham

Commonweal 88:302 My 24 '68 60w

"An excellent introduction for children to Dickens, the book provides insight into how an author thinks and creates."

Horn Bk 44:190 Ap '68 140w

Reviewed by G. W. Allen

N Y Times Bk R p22 Je 23 '68 140w

L

LABAREE, LEONARD W., ed. The papers of Benjamin Franklin, v 11. See Franklin, B.

LABARGE, MARGARET WADE. Saint Louis: Louis IX, most Christian King of France. 303p il maps $6.95 Little

B or 92 Louis IX, Saint. King of France. France—History—To 1328 68-17271

In this biography the author stresses "Louis's essential goodness as a man and . . . his essential greatness as a ruler of men. She also describes . . . the social, political, and religious temper of thirteenth-century France." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"[This is a] carefully documented and flowingly written biography by an author who is [with] photographic reproductions of various illustrative materials, several maps, [and] a genealogical table tracing Louis' lineage from Philip Augustus (his grandfather) to Philip IV, the Fair (his grandson)."

Best Sell 28:123 Je 15 '68 200w

Christian Century 85:789 Je 12 '68 40w

"An excellent biography by an author who is an expert on the Middle Ages, and a very good writer, too. Her work shows why King Louis was regarded as a paragon among medieval kings: he was magnetic and down-to-earth, devout and effective. He built, studied, prayed, and fought, and he solved the problems of his day . . . with equity and power. The author assumes that her readers, like herself, cannot wholly share Louis's contemporaries' admiration for his two failed crusades (1250 and 1270), so she takes particular pains to describe other facets of the King's religion that seem more relevant to the present."

New Yorker 44:64 Jl 6 '68 120w

LACEY, W. K. The family in classical Greece. 342p pl $8.95 Cornell Univ. press 301.42 Family. Greece—Social life and customs 68-14817

The author "explains the structure of the family, the social and economic pressures that affected it, and the . . . legal measures that were devised to regulate and protect it. . . . [He] supports his views of family life by quoting and discussing relevant writings of the Greek philosophers and by citing contemporary literature." (Publisher's note) Glossary. Bibliography. Indexes.

"When he is concentrating on social analysis, Lacey is very good. As a historian he shows little appreciation of the variable quality of ancient sources, especially of the historical works of Aristotle; he relies most uncritically on the latter's Athenian Constitution and seems not to have grasped the contributions of Jacoby, Hignett, and Day and Chambers to the criticism of this work."

Choice 5:1022 O '68 130w

"Lacey explicitly and very successfully focuses on the point that the oikos has been a continuing . . . unit of Greek social structure, always maintaining its integrity and some of its significant functions. . . . [Always in context are] thorough discussions of marriage, inheritance, education, and the like. Commendably frank and sober is the treatment of homosexuality. The plates are well-chosen and well-reproduced. . . . Faults in substance are almost not to be found." H. L. Levy

Class World 62:55 O '68 410w

"The material is presented with a judicious sense of what is true and false, though its organization occasionally leaves a little to be desired. It is probably inevitable, because of the imbalance of evidence, that . . . four of the nine chapters deal exclusively with Athens. . . . A lot of valuable points are made, even though . . . the fact that the volume started as a course of university lectures may be rather evident. However, not too evident. . . . It would have helped if the notes, or each section of them, could have had page as well as chapter references. . . . The illustrations are first-class, and described by unusually good captions."

TLS p618 Je 13 '68 650w

LACHS, JOHN, ed. Animal faith and spiritual life. See Santayana, G.

LACHS, JOHN. Marxist philosophy: a bibliographical guide. 166p $5 Univ. of N.C. press

016.3354 Dialectical materialism—Bibliography. Marx, Karl—Bibliography. Communism—Bibliography 67-27158

"With the practical needs of students, scholars, and interested laymen as his primary consideration, [the compiler] selected 1557 titles in English, French and German including some pamphlet and periodical material. He has not included highly technical economic studies nor material which is largely propaganda. . . . Subject matter [is divided] into . . . topics such as 'Classics of Marxist Philosophy' and 'Dialectical Materialism,' with a bibliographic list and accompanying critique for each topic." (Library J)

"A helpful, current bibliographic guide to the philosophy of Marxism. . . . [Lachs] evaluates the accuracy of the works, and the insight they provide, and notes where an author is committed to a particular point of view. Because so much of the literature on Marxism is purposefully partisan, the use of this book is indicated in areas needing scholarly study, possibly by doctoral candidates." W. L. Morin

Library J 92:4140 N 15 '67 170w

"This small volume makes only modest claims, but even these would seem to be exaggerated. It provides no guide to those writings of the Marxist founding fathers which are of special interest to philosophers, for it does not help much . . . to be told that Lenin's 'Philosophical Notebooks' can be found in his Collected Works. . . . [It] appears to be unaware of the existence of a collected edition of Lukács, or of all but one work by Ernst Bloch. Among the omissions in the three languages Mr. Lachs has purported to survey, one notes in passing the names of Adorno, Althusser, Avineri, Axelos, Benjamin, Desanti, Habermas, C. B. Macpherson, and the east German Philosophisches Wörterbuch of 1964. . . . We may conclude that the University of North Carolina Press ought to reconsider its publishing policy."

TLS p827 Ag 1 '68 360w

LACHS, PHYLLIS S. The diplomatic corps under Charles II & James II. 269p $7.50 Rutgers Univ. press

354.42 Great Britain—Diplomatic and consular service. Great Britain—Foreign relations 65-23235

As noted "In the preface, this book examines the English diplomatic corps from 1660 to 1688, and not English foreign policy. There are eight chapters dealing with such matters as the structure of the diplomatic corps, duties and responsibilities of officials, personnel, the make-up of embassies, protocol, rights, and writings. These are followed by a short chapter giving conclusions [and] three appendixes." (Am Hist R) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"There are good notes, but they are, unfortunately, at the back of the book. . . . The scholarship is of high quality, the printing not always so, and the writing is clear and readable. It may be said that, within the limits the author imposed upon herself, the subject has been treated exhaustively and perhaps even definitively. Others working in the period will surely find the list of diplomatic personnel . . . useful and also some of the tables showing sums paid representatives. There are many charming stories illustrating the various aspects of the diplomatic corps. Within these limits, this is a good book. . . . [But] the nearly complete absence of judgments reinforces what might be called the antiquarian as distinct from the historical bent of this book." George Woodbridge

Am Hist R 73:1149 Ap '68 300w

"Originally a Ph.D. dissertation, this book contains the usual scholarly paraphernalia, is well organized, but is not especially imaginative nor excitingly written. Lachs tends too much to the narrative, rather than the analytical, approach and hence fails to answer questions which have been raised by herself. She occasionally clutters the text with a plethora of detail, and, by restricting her topic to 28 years, tends to give the impression that this was an especially vital period in the corps, when in reality most of its procedures and practices remained unchanged. To scholars of the 17th century the work contains little that is new; to the undergraduate student interested in diplomatic history, the book gives a short, brief description of the 17th-century diplomatic corps."

Choice 3:448 J1 '66 180w

LACOUTURE, JEAN. Ho Chi Minh: a political biography; tr. from the French by Peter Wiles; tr. ed. by Jane Clark Seitz. 313p $5.95 Random house

B or 92 Ho Chi Minh, Vietnam—History 68-14527

The author of Vietnam: Between Two Truces (BRD 1966) has written a biography of the President of North Vietnam which traces his development from peasant to revolutionary to leader of his people against the French and finally against the United States. Chronology. Index.

Reviewed by Peter Arnett

Book World p5 J1 7 '68 800w

Choice 5:1367 D '68 120w

Christian Century 85:900 J1 10 '68 120w

Reviewed by H. S. Hayward

Christian Science Monitor p9 J1 27 '68 650w

"This excellent biography . . . offers one of the most detailed portraits yet written of Vietnam's number one Communist. Lacouture traces Ho's life, career, and vicissitudes from his birth in 1890 through 1966. . . . He concentrates upon the years of struggle for liberation from French colonial rule and the agonies of Vietnam ever since. By no means definitive and not free from arguable speculations, this work nonetheless underscores the hard-core elements in Ho's personality, thought, and ambitions. Lacouture adds useful commentary upon the revolutionary's ideas as they are embodied in Ho Chi Minh on Revolution: Selected Writings, 1920-66 (BRD 1967). This timely book is recommended to libraries of all sizes, public and academic." Hyman Kublin

Library J 93:2477 Je 15 '68 180w

"The biography really comes alive for the years 1945-6 when the Viet Minh came to power and Lacouture himself first went to Vietnam. There are fascinating descriptions of the Viet Minh-French negotiations which bring out the extreme lengths to which Ho was prepared to go to avoid bloodshed. . . . M. Lacouture gives a good but brief description of the Geneva Conference. He then goes on to the present situation, giving a dispassionate but totally damning picture of the American involvement. In his sketches of the situation in the North, it is rather disappointing to see M. Lacouture who is one of the world's most brilliant and sensitive writers on contemporary Vietnam rely so heavily on the turgid 'Hanoiology' of P. J. Honey. It is also sad that a book which will become a standard book for anyone interested in Vietnam should have so many petty mistakes." Martin Bernal

New Statesman 75:588 My 3 '68 1550w

"In his research for this book Lacouture has uncovered important new information concerning Ho's life, particularly his early years. . . . [He] provides some continuity in his treatment of Ho's political role and development up to mid-1947. Thereafter, however, his coverage is not comprehensive and the narrative is broken up into a rather scattered series of events. . . . For Americans concerned with a realistic approach toward a negotiated settlement in Vietnam, this book should also be helpful in understanding the nature and objectives of the N.L.F. . . . This is a sympathetic biography, but Lacouture has made a clear effort to be objective, incorporating even Trotskyite criticism and emphasizing Ho's willingness to apply ruthless measures when he considered them politically necessary. [The] translation appears to be a good one, reflecting Lacouture's clarity and liveliness of style." G. M. Kahin

N Y Times Bk R p6 Ag 4 '68 1350w

Newsweek 72:81 J1 15 '68 950w

Time 92:70 J1 19 '68 1200w

"[This work] deserves a considerable success, and will probably achieve this, since it appears . . . at a time when attitudes to Vietnam are in a state of flux. . . . M. Lacouture's book is an admirable guide to the thinking of Hanoi's leaders, and to the experiences which have shaped that thinking. Originally published in Paris in 1967 . . . this book should provide a valuable corrective to the sometimes extreme positions on Vietnam which are put forward in political debate in this country. The view that Ho Chi Minh is a patriot first and a Communist second emerges from a reading of M. Lacouture's book as a considerable oversimplification. . . . M. Lacouture does not attempt to conceal the political ruthlessness which is one of Ho Chi Minh's least appealing characteristics. But in general this is a sympathetic biography, written with passion by a man who feels deeply about the West's failure to come to terms with Vietnam's unique nationalist revolution." TLS p448 My 2 '68 550w

LACY, A. D. Greek pottery in the bronze age.

303p il $26.50 Barnes & Noble

738.3 Pottery, Greek [67-108472]

"This survey of the Neolithic and Bronze Age pottery from Greece, Crete and the Islands also tries to depict the general developments in the Minoan, Helladic, and Cycladic cultures." (Class World) Bibliography.

Choice 5:665 J1 '68 140w

"There are four beautiful color plates, 115 text figures, 64 of which are pages of well-reproduced vases, and four maps. Mr. Lacy does a good job with the pottery. His remarks on the use of the wheel, on the types of slip, and on the decorative gloss paint are sensible and clear. His criticisms of shape and design are acute and stimulating. He provides a clear, simple, straightforward, comprehensive survey. But he falls down badly when he goes beyond pots. . . . The historical and cultural presentation of the Bronze Age seems an ill-digested composite from the respective followers of Evans and Wace, inconsistent at many points and often misleading. . . . The bad historical survey of the cultures renders this a poor book." R. J. Buck

Class World 61:354 Ap '68 200w

"[This book] is aimed at both 'the specialist and the ordinary reader.' It will, however, infuriate the former and mislead the latter. . . . It is claimed to be up-to-date and comprehensive yet . . . none of the recent work by Mervyn Popham on Cretan material or the results of the latest work at Mycenae are cited in the text or the bibliography. [The author] knows the background well and writes about it fluently, if sometimes discursively and inaccurately. . . . The Chronological Table is sadly muddled. . . . The contribution that this book does make lies purely in method. Mr. Lacy's new approach with its lucid arrangement has been useful and could well be imitated in both teaching and study. . . . The 'comprehensive bibliography' is totally inadequate." TLS p370 Ap 11 '68 450w

LACY, CREIGHTON. Frank Mason North; his social and ecumenical mission. 300p $6.50 Abingdon

287 North, Frank Mason 67-14983

A biography of a church "leader in Methodist and ecumenical missions [who was active for over 40 years] in both home and foreign missions [and was a] . . . founder of the Federal Council of Churches (one of the forerunners of the present National Council of Churches)." (Publisher's note) Index.

"This book performs the function of another entrée into the period just emerging as one of great historical interest to American historians in general and church historians in particular. As to the quality of this specific book, something is left desired: Lacy is too apologetic for North and writes in the 'grand old man' style of biography and, in addition, indicates his lack of theological acuity in analysis of North's theology and in his subtle value judgments that intrude throughout the book. Nevertheless, add this book to your library for a preliminary account of one of the most influential men of the most important era in our country's past." Choice 4:1396 F '68 180w

"Professor Lacy, who teaches in the religion department at Duke, has written a sympathetic and soundly researched book that is fully recommended for college and university libraries." Lawrence Mills

Library J 92:2149 Je 1 '67 100w

LADD, BRUCE. Crisis in credibility. 247p $5.50 New Am. lib.

301.15 U.S.—Politics and government—1963-68-17057

"The aim of this book is to discuss the credibility problem [in the United States] in a manner which will enable the reader to comprehend its broad scope. The writing is intended neither as the 'last word' on the subject nor as a treatment of every facet of the problem. It deals exclusively with three practices of the executive branch [of the government]—secrecy, lying, and news management. No attempt has been made to discuss the communications failures of the Congress and the press." (Acknowledgments) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by M. A. Hecker

Library J 93:759 F 15 '68 130w

Reviewed by J. D. Lofton

Nat R 20:665 J1 2 '68 200w

"The battle between the Johnson Administration and both fact-seeking journalists and Congressmen is presented in great detail. It follows a familiar pattern. . . . The author, who has been a newspaper editor, political campaign press secretary and legislative assistant to a Congressman, weakens his case by an excess of moralizing and a curious blindness to the not unknown irresponsibility and pettiness of the press itself. Still, his target is the Government, and the evidence he sets forth assures a bulls-eye."

N Y Times Bk R p12 Mr 10 '68 260w

"Mr. Ladd raises rapidly through the fumbling and almost forgivable attempts of the almost novices among past Chief Executives until he can get to President Johnson. . . . The author's examples will be mostly familiar to those practiced in spreading calipers over the credibility gap. . . . Skillfully, Ladd sketches the dimensions of the government information problem in that painfully protracted investigation . . . of the House Subcommittee on Government Information. . . . The most damaging evidence is gathered, as one would imagine, on Vietnam, for it is here, in the justification and explanation of this unwanted and hateful war, that the information policies of the Johnson Administration show up most poorly." S. W. Little

Sat R 51:70 F 10 '68 650w

LAEUCHLI, SAMUEL, ed. Mithraism in Ostia; mystery religion and Christianity in the ancient port of Rome [by] Dennis Groh [and others]; with a pref. by Giovanni Becatti. 116p il $5 Northwestern univ. press

295 Christianity and other religions. Ostia, Italy—Antiquities 67-20690

In this volume, "Dennis Groh gives physical descriptions of the shrines in the city. John

LAEUCHLI, SAMUEL—Continued

Schreiber considers the implications of their locations for the organization, practice and strength of the cult. Samuel Laeuchli evaluates the psychological appeal of the tenets of Mithraism for the populace of Ostia. Jerry Stewardson and Ernest Saunders contribute an iconographic and liturgical analysis of scenes from the life of Mithras represented in the shrines, and Laeuchli concludes the series with more general reflections." (Class World)

"A valuable contribution toward the solution of not-yet-resolved long controversies concerning mutual influences of Mithraism and Christianity. . . . Accompanied by 33 excellent illustrations, this work gives a considerably new insight into the problem. . . . This is a source guide for the scholars and archaeologists and for students of comparative religion." Choice 5:792 S '68 140w

"This collection of essays is intended to encourage cooperative efforts by Christian scholars, classical historians and archaeologists to understand the form and content of Mithraism, its confrontation with Christianity and the reasons for its defeat by Christianity. . . . [However] given its extremely tentative character, there is little [in the book] for the reader to seize upon about Mithraism in Ostia or elsewhere that has not already been said." R. T. Scott

Class World 61:255 F '68 260w

LAFFIN, JOHN. Women in battle. 192p pl $5 Abelard-Schuman
920 Woman—Biography. Women as soldiers 68-10342

The author "tells the stories of these women soldiers, among them such familiar figures as Joan of Arc and Nancy Wake, and other comparatively little known women such as Kit Welsh, who fought for England in the late seventeenth century, and Loreta Velasquez, who was determined to fight but didn't care which side she took." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

Best Sell 28:173 J1 15 '68 80w [YA]

"In the first part of the book [Laffin] presents a general study with data on individuals, their engagements and involvements. Then he discusses a list of feminine fighters: Hannah Snell, Molly Pitcher (whom he associates incorrectly with Virginia rather than with Pennsylvania), and others. Obviously, he is enjoying himself in this brief treatment. His touches of humor and occasional strong expressions of feeling add to the book's charm. It is not an essential purchase, but is pleasant and informative." E. R. Alexander

Library J 93:2864 Ag '68 110w

LAHUE, KALTON C. Kops and custards; the legend of Keystone films; (a book) by Kalton C. Lahue and Terry Brewer; with a foreword by Kent D. Eastin. 177p pl $4.95 Univ. of Okla. press

791.43 Keystone Film Company. Moving pictures—History 67-24625

In this "history of an important era in the development of the American motion picture [the author describes the work of] Mack Sennett, as the shaping hand behind most of the Keystone Film Company productions. . . . [He tells of] the hundreds of short films turned out at Keystone in its five years of existence (1912-17). . . . [and of the] comedians (such as Chaplin, Mabel Normand, and Roscoe Arbuckle) [who] worked with Sennett." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"In spite of some stylistic and organization deficiencies, this consistently interesting book contributes significantly to the history of [American film-making]. . . . The appendix contains an invaluable list of Keystone films with release dates, directors, and stars, which in itself is highly important for students of film history." Choice 5:642 J1 '68 170w

"Mr. Lahue is author of a more general work on American comedy: World of Laughter: The Motion Picture Comedy Short 1910-1930 [BRD 1966]. This new book is better written." G. D. McDonald

Library J 93:2018 My 15 '68 130w

"[This account] lines up rather well with such other delightful products . . . as E. Wagenknecht's The Movies in the Age of Innocence [BRD 1963] and K. Lahue's two earlier books, World of Laughter [BRD 1966] and Continued Next Week [BRD 1965]. . . . The authors have talked to numerous survivors of the Sennett era, have produced a fuller listing of Sennett's films than before, and gathered together a lot of information on the productions not previously known. They play completely fair with all of this, but at the same time they write with infectious enjoyment about life in the Sennett fun factory, and give a vivid picture of Sennett himself and of the other larger-than-life characters around the Keystone Studios." TLS p1080 S 26 '68 130w

811 67-14519

LAING, DILYS. The collected poems of Dilys Laing; with an introd. by M. L. Rosenthal [ed. by Alexander Laing]. 464p $8.50 Western reserve univ. press

This collection includes the four volumes printed during the poet's lifetime plus "poetry from the unpublished work found among her papers after her death and selected by her husband Alexander Laing with the aid of various poets and critics." (Library J) Index of titles and first lines. Most of the poems have previously appeared in various literary periodicals.

"An impressive summing up: fragile, feminine, and lyric, yet with a directness and moral passion that burns through the fragility to give it a claim to a central place in 20th-Century poetry. There are too many poems here, some merely frivolous or fretful, but, at her best, Mrs. Laing spoke out as a mature, whole woman, a loving woman frightened at the course of civilization. . . . Belongs in college, public, and school library collections." Dorothy Curley

Library J 92:4510 D 15 '67 140w

Reviewed by Thomas Lask

N Y Times Bk R p12 Ja 21 '68 430w

"Dilys Laing's was an alert, fanciful, yet inherently troubled mind. There is anguish here, an agony which she shares with other contemporary poets of her sex; something of the darkness of Sylvia Plath without that poet's relentless drive toward death, and something of the intensity of Anne Sexton without her preoccupation with Bedlam. [Dilys Laing's] attitude to God was, like Emily Dickinson's, irreverent, mocking, and frequently outraged. . . . The poetry moves with an easy fluidity born of a natural fearlessness. It is both spontaneous and disciplined. . . . The poems are never contrived; they are—there is no other word for it—necessary. . . . [There are] some failures, especially where the stress of emotion, repressed or confused, chokes the articulation. But, for the most part, the clear voice triumphs over its difficulties." Louis Untermeyer Sat R 50:31 D 2 '67 850w

"The previously uncollected poems, both early and late, which comprise about one half of this first collected edition, testify to the steadiness of her character as a poet, and the finest of them will undoubtedly add to her reputation. Like any other collected volume, this one is best read piecemeal, since any attempt to absorb its sheer bulk is bound to be too much for most readers." S. F. Morse Va Q R 44:507 summer '68 170w

LAING, MARGARET. The next Kennedy. 320p $5.95 Coward-McCann

B or 92 Kennedy, Robert Francis 68-11878

A British journalist has written a biographical study of the Senator from New York based on "interviews with his family, friends, enemies, acquaintances, and associates, including a campaign trip with RFK himself." (Publisher's note) Index.

"The reader might ask if this book is really about Robert F. Kennedy or a book on the family, where Robert gets worked into the story already told so many times. . . . There is too much pool-side conversation . . . too much from the journalistic morgue in this account. . . . [It] does not really live up to its dust cover promise to focus on the ultimate question—namely, 'Does Robert F. Kennedy possess the necessary qualities to be the next President of the United States?'" G. C. Roberts

Best Sell 28:13 Ap 1 '68 750w

"This engrossing biography of Robert Kennedy stresses the emotional and psychological history of a provocative young man. . . . Solid and penetrating, it should appeal to politically-minded young adults because this national figure inspires either love or hate, but seldom apathy." Dorothy English

Library J 93:315 Ja 15 '68 80w [YA]

Reviewed by A. L. Fessler

Library J 93:746 F 15 '68 180w

"The only thoroughly bad writing in this book is in the passages descriptive of Robert Kennedy's family relations. . . . On this subject Miss Laing's usually crisp prose deteriorates into a swooning style that makes what is really an admirable set of relationships seem downright repellent. . . . Miss Laing is convinced, and adduces much evidence to prove it, that in his early days Robert Kennedy was strongly imbued with the belief that the end justifies the means. . . . The author's designation of this type is 'zealot.' Harsher critics make it 'bigot.' But either term designates a man who is strong, bold, ruthless and unjust. Miss Laing asserts flatly that Robert Kennedy has exhibited all these qualities, not only in his handling of public affairs, but in his relations with his staff. . . . But Robert Kennedy, even by this somewhat devastating account, has other qualities that may be just what are needed in the existing situation. . . . In sum, he is presented here as a strong and dangerous man, driven, like all the Kennedys, by ■■■■■■■■■■ maniacal energy." G. W. Johnson

New Repub 158:33 F 10 '68 550w

LAIRD, MELVIN R., ed. Republican papers; ed. with an introd. by Melvin R. Laird. 500p $7.95 Praeger; pa $1.95 Doubleday

309.173 U.S.—Social conditions

68-23350;68-16888

The editor "has elicited contributions from Republicans and Democrats, conservatives and liberals, academicians and public officials, who probe . . . the bundle of interrelated urban, economic, and budgetary problems that beset us. The book, released simultaneously in paperback, is not offered as a Republican platform or a handbook for precinct captains, but as a means of energizing public debate." (Sat R) Topics include: the federal system, crime, poverty, civil rights, housing, agriculture, social security, employment, the budget, monetary reform, and Congressional reform.

"The collection is a melange of articles—for the most part perceptive and thought provoking—that address themselves to domestic issues from a variety of perspectives. Readers seeking to find some insight into G.O.P. views, however, will be disappointed. . . . The writing is uneven, the editing chores were neglected or overlooked, and the tone reflects the A pages of the Congressional Record all too often. . . . Even the impetus of election year interests will do little to fan wide interest in this work, and it is of only passing interest to the academician. Skippy notes; few, bibliographic citations. . . . Not recommended." Choice 5:1222 N '68 220w

"This is not a conventional denunciation of the Democratic administration coupled with praises for the GOP which would normally be expected in an election year. Instead, it is a sober attempt to study problems and offer solutions. The authors include Republican Congressmen and academic experts. The writing is not exciting but then these essays were not written to entertain but to inform. One of the best discussions is 'When Liberals Went Wrong' by Daniel P. Moynihan. If these papers have any theme, it is that consideration of America's problems must involve more of the nation; it cannot all be left up to Washington. The book is recommended for specialists, informed and general readers." Keith Fubank

Library J 93:2669 JI '68 190w

"One acquires a vague feeling of conspiracy—call it attention to detail—about . . . this collection of essays [which] must have been written and trimmed to size in late 1967. Even with that lead time, however, it manages to anticipate in some detail the platform that passed without a whisper [at the National Convention] in Miami. . . . What Laird has in this collection [is] . . . some good stuff, some not so good. What he doesn't have, and its absence is conspicuous, is a stiff belt of partisan politics. Maybe Richard Nixon will write that chapter." N. B. Freeman

Nat R 20:965 S 24 '68 1100w

"Laird's publication is not the conventional election-year partisan potboiler. . . . The approach reflects [his] own pragmatism. He hopes that the dialogue generated by the panel will help the G.O.' become the channel through which men of varied disciplines, philosophies, and political commitments will search for 'viable and practical solutions.'" Donald Young

Sat R 51:32 Ag 6 '68 800w

LAKOFF, SANFORD A., ed. Knowledge and power; essays on science and government. 502p $9.95 Free press

509.73 Science—U.S. Science and state

66-23079

A collection of papers "on the interaction of science and government written by authorities in the field of political science, history of science, natural science, and government . . . concerning topics such as The Oppenheimer Trial, The Mohole Project, The Establishment of NASA, The Test Ban Treaty, etc. . . . [The articles] are taken from Science, Physics Today, government monographs, dissertations, addresses, and books to be published." (Choice) Bibliography. Indexes of names and of subjects.

"The book artfully and thoughtfully brings together the two bodies of knowledge and develops in the reader a sense of the interaction between them. Lakoff's essay, 'The Third Culture,' is a thoughtful amplification of Snow's 'Two Culture' discussion. This essay suggests the inclusion of the social scientist as a third focal point in the division of the culture. . . . Could be read by natural scientists, social scientists, and political scientists. Each could benefit some. Students of political science and politically naïve scientists would gain considerably by reading this book." Choice 4:1260 Ja '68 190w

"[Lakoff] takes the scientific age for granted and sees little need to ask general questions about its broad implications for the art and organization of government. Instead, he prefers to focus on the analysis of specific instances and concrete events in the encounter between science and government. . . . [He] begins the volume with an excellent essay about the intellectual origins of the knowledge society. . . . [Four essays] study the characteristics of new, public or semi-public organizations designed to take charge of novel, science-induced tasks with which the Federal government finds itself confronted. . . . Schoettle's study of political issues at stake and of organizational alternatives for the country's space effort represents a highly informative case study. . . . Carl William Fischer contributes a useful study of [the President's Science Advisory Committee's] functions, organization, membership, and working methods. . . . The volume contains . . . a number of competent case studies on organizational innovations and other science policy issues. What is most often missing is reflection on what these new developments mean for the political organization of society and the 'business' of political decision-making." Juergen Schmandt

Harvard Ed R 37:664 fall '67 3500w

"Judging from the Lakoff volume, the most striking characteristic of present-day relations between science and government is that they are highly institutionalized. . . . [Two articles pose] a problem that scientists will recognize as especially important—namely, the extent to which scientific findings can be employed in the making of national policy. The two cases have to do with the feasibility of a nuclear test ban described by Cecil Ueyehara and the relationship between smoking and health by Stanley Joel Reiser. . . . [One group of articles] addresses the problem of finding appropriate criteria for determining the level and distribution—of national resources for the support of science. . . . [These] are uplifting rather than penetrating. . . . [and] were originally written for ceremonial occasions." N. W. Polsby

Science 155:1660 Mr 31 '67 650w

Reviewed by E. B. Skolnikoff

World Pol 20:535 Ap '68 2800w

LALIBERTE, NORMAN. Wooden images [by] Norman Laliberte and Maureen Jones. 136p il col il $7.50 Reinhold

745.51 Wood carving. Folk art, American

66-14435

After a historical "introduction the text takes up flat images, relief images, sculptured

LALIBERTE, NORMAN—Continued

images, and assembled images in turn. The final section, entitled 'Projects and Problems,' gives . . . advice on a varied group of simple projects to be cut out of wood." (Library J)

"Reproductions include works ranging from ancient to contemporary sculpture, with major emphasis on American folk art. As can be imagined, many of the pictures are very small and, in some cases, are too poorly reproduced to be of value. . . . There is an introduction to basic hand and power tools, to glues, nails and other fasteners, and to coloring media. No index."

Choice 4:1372 F '68 110w

"Approximately two-thirds of the 136 pages of this book are filled with black-and-white illustrations of the wooden objects described in the text. The illustrations are clear, well chosen, and tastefully worked into the text. . . . The instructions are general, and specific details, drawings or measurements are not found. The price of the book seems high, but the profuse illustration may justify it." Jerrold Orne

Library J 91:5380 N 1 '66 100w

"Both artists and craftsmen should find this valuable. The unique quality of wood is quickly seen in the variety of illustrations ranging from early Egyptian to the modern world. Heads, figures, animals, puppets, toys and games are all here in flat or three-dimensional pieces. . . . An unusual book, this is highly recommended." Richard Howard

Library J 91:6220 D 15 '66 80w [YA]

LALL, ARTHUR. How Communist China negotiates. 291p $7.95 Columbia univ. press

327.51 China (People's Republic of China)—Foreign relations 67-29051

Formerly Indian ambassador to the United Nations and chief Indian negotiator at the Laos conference of 1961-1962, the author states his primary purpose is to analyze the Laos negotiations "in the context of the Chinese Communist theory of international relations. To provide a broader perspective, I have also included general observations on the nature of the Chinese presence at international conferences and on the background and training of the Peking government's negotiators. Another supplementary chapter briefly analyzes three bilateral negotiations which led to agreements between the Peking government and three Asian states." (Pref) Index.

Reviewed by V. S. Kearney

America 118:605 My 4 '68 90w

Choice 5:1018 O '68 120w

Christian Century 85:302 Mr 6 '68 70w

"The most interesting part is a tantalizing brief chapter, 'China's Approach to Negotiation,' in which Mr. Lall analyzes China's approach to diplomacy in terms of Mao's theory of contradictions. . . . [His] point is that if negotiations, such as those at Geneva over Laos, are seen through a Maoist prism, the reversal of position and apparent contradictions in Chinese line become more understandable." O. H. Schell

Commonweal 89:91 O 18 '68 450w

"One can only admire the perception [Professor Lall] reveals in appraising the detailed planning, careful techniques, basic assumptions, and patterns of behavior of the Communist Chinese delegates. Simultaneously he presents an insider's view of an important international conference about which not much has officially been divulged. His conclusion that Communist China, depending upon its needs and purposes, will negotiate or use force to settle disagreements is reasonable. If hardly startling. A stiff price for a small book." Hyman Kublin

Library J 93:1150 Mr 15 '68 210w

"[Mr. Lall] has combined his personal knowledge of the inner workings of the Conference with available records and published materials to produce an immensely detailed account of the negotiations. . . . With the same interest in theory which he displayed in his 'Modern International Negotiation' [BRD 1961], Mr. Lall tends to stress the similarities in basic principles of negotiations between Peking and all other nations." Tang Tsou

N Y Times Bk ■ p3 Mr 31 '68 1550w

Reviewed by Eric Britter

Sat R 51:29 My 11 '68 550w

LAMB, ALASTAIR. Asian frontiers; studies in a continuing problem. 246p maps $5 Praeger

915 Asia—Boundaries 67-18543

The "senior fellow in Sino-Soviet studies and professor of Chinese at the University of Leeds has written a . . . study analyzing historical and contemporary political geography in the three great zones of Asia: the Russian, the Chinese, and the Southern, which stretches from Iran to Vietnam." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"[This] study offers a valuable perspective on our current involvement in Southeast Asia. . . . [It] is a good addition to an academic collection, and is especially useful for its distinction of zones, boundaries, and frontiers." R. E. Will

Library J 93:1001 Mr 1 '68 160w

"Dr. Lamb succeeds both in elucidating the nature of boundaries and disputes over them and in showing that the same principles and forces underlie confrontations that are not usually seen as border disputes at all. [This] is a book of cogent scholarship that will benefit and stimulate all students of international affairs, not only those primarily concerned with Asian affairs."

TLS p454 My 2 '68 1250w

LAMB, BEATRICE PITNEY. The Nehrus of India; three generations of leadership. 276p il maps $5.95 Macmillan (N Y)

954.03 Nehru, Motilal—Juvenile literature.

Nehru, Jawaharlal—Juvenile literature.

Gandhi, Indira (Nehru)—Juvenile literature.

India—Politics and government—Juvenile literature 67-17209

The author portrays "some of the modern history and current problems of India through the story of the three generations of Nehrus who helped to shape that country's destiny. The account is chronological, from Motilal Nehru's birth in 1861 [through the activities of Jawaharlal Nehru] to the political difficulties encountered by . . . Indira Nehru Gandhi in 1967. [Annotated bibliography. Index.] Grades eight to twelve." (Library J)

"With a look at the caste system, religion, art, and culture inherited by Motilal's India, the author . . . discusses political parties, partition, language, and religious differences; independence and the new constitution; and the series of Five Year Plans for agricultural and industrial development—all related to the serious questions of education and poverty. . . . The book offers much more historical background than does the recently reviewed portrait of the three Nehrus in Emmeline Garnett's Madame Prime Minister [BRD 1967]. V. H. Horn Bk 43:605 O '67 190w

"A well written, interesting collective biography. . . . The personal and public life of Jawaharlal Nehru is, appropriately, given the fullest coverage including an account of his differences with Mohandas Gandhi and a sympathetic view of Nehru's foreign policy and his stand on the Kashmir dispute (but little mention of India's seizure of Goa). The treatment of Mrs. Gandhi gives a more vivid picture of this complex woman than juvenile collective biographies usually attempt. Well documented. . . . this is excellent supplementary material, stimulating enough to be of general interest to many young people." M. A. Dorsey

Library J 93:883 F 15 '68 180w

Reviewed by Stanley Wolpert

Pacific Affairs 41:456 fall '68 240w

LAMBERT, CAMILLE. The clinic habit [by] Camille Lambert, Jr., and Howard E. Freeman; in collaboration with James M. Dunning [and others]. 191p $4.50; pa $1.95 College & univ. press

614.5 Teeth. Public welfare. Public health —U.S. 67-13187

"The major hypothesis of this book is . . . 'Teen-aged children in families who are or have been users of dental clinics are likely to suffer poorer dental condition than children of similar age in families who have not used clinics.' . . . The study was conducted in Brookline, Mass., a largely middle-income community with a reputation of . . . providing superior health, welfare and educational services. A total of 624 families with at least one school-aged child seventeen years of age or under constituted the study population. The modes of data collection included a structured interview with a parent and an intensive dental examination of the teen-aged child." (Am Soc R) Index.

"The implications of this study should disturb any public health official operating or planning any sort of clinic. It clearly demonstrates that even in a well-run clinic, which is providing high quality service, the long-term objectives may be defeated by short-term success. Although this specific study focuses on a public health dental clinic, its message has wider implications." L. J. Taubenhau

Am J Pub Health 58:198 Ja '68 270w

"While the authors appreciate the limits of their design and their data, and while they display wisdom and sophistication in assessing the program and policy implications of their findings, they sometimes waver between making associational and causal interpretations of their findings. . . . Some readers may question the assumptions contained in the title of the book, in the concept of 'bureaucratic orientation,' and in the authors' general line of reasoning. However, few would doubt that the findings merit consideration and should not be ignored by those responsible for designing medical and dental programs. One of the chief virtues of the book is that it contains a number of interrelated empirical findings which are important in their own right." Sol Levine

Am Soc R 33:489 Je '68 650w

LAMBERT, GAVIN. A case for the angels. 185p $3.95 Dial press

68-18640

A young Englishwoman, "Dora Poley, has been ditched by her American husband who favours the drug scene and three in a bed. . . . After her languid despair is exploited by a lesbian friend, Dora decides to join her husband's ménage. . . . At the end she's found on a boat with her husband and buddies voyaging kinkily into oblivion." (New Statesman)

"Lambert is a strange and mordant writer, a gifted conveyor of tones and shadows. . . . One of these days he may come up with a kinky contemporary Madame Bovary—but it hasn't happened yet. His central character here, Dora Poley, like Daisy Clover before her [in Inside Daisy Clover, BRD 1963], is a displaced person: a neurotic and very female romantic, getting along as best she can in a culture that downgrades sexual differences. This sick society is an upper-class, vaguely employed, jet-set hippie community, living on the fringes of the demi-arts, . . . groping for sensations in drugs and sex. They enjoy all of them, except Dora, who has fallen out of love with life. . . . Unfortunately, [the novel] is loaded with polemics. Lambert's dichotomy seems fatuous, as if Dora's only choice is between group sex or no sex at all, Keith or a Goldwater Republican. And even California is not that neat." Lee Israel

Book World p9 My 5 '68 420w

"This is a dreary little novel in which cardboard characters plod their ways from page one to the book's end. . . . I found [it] a dull story with no redeeming qualities." Maybelle Lacey

Library J 93:1162 Mr 15 '68 130w

"In essence the story is rather wan. . . . The fabric of Lambert's style, however, is so delicate, his eye and ear so shrewd, that it seems enough, for there is great pleasure in the book. There are few male authors who are able to worm their way with such perception into a woman's mind. . . . [Dora's] not a puritan; all the same, her action, or lack of it, never entirely convinces." David Haworth

New Statesman 76:147 Ag 2 '68 320w

Reviewed by Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p31 Ap 14 '68 240w

TLS p880 Ag 15 '68 190w

LAMBERT, JACQUES. Latin America: social structure and political institutions; tr. by Helen Katel. 413p $10; pa $3.25 Univ. of Calif. press

320.98 Latin America—Politics. Latin America—Social conditions 67-29784

The author describes "twenty Latin American countries. Much of the tension and anarchy that have characterized Latin American life since Independence he ascribes to uneven social development—the survival of archaic rural societies within political boundaries that have come to embrace advanced and increasingly self-conscious urban sectors. . . . Problems of dysfunction and the roles of elites are discussed . . . [as well as] such matters as why legislatures with majorities from progressive parties have consistently avoided implementing agrarian reform. . . . For this English edition, the author has added material on developments through 1965. Lambert is a member of the Faculty of Law and Economic Sciences at the University of Lyon." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index. Originally published in French in 1963.

"One of the best of the one-shot studies and explanations of the present Latin American scene and its development from Indian and Iberian origins. The book contains little that is not available elsewhere in more specialized volumes and monographs, but it summarizes and discusses the often complicated Latin American institutions with clarity and insight. Lambert ranges over a wide scope of topics in his search for multiple themes in Latin America. Appropriate for the undergraduate, the graduate, and the general reader having an interest in Latin America. Numerous tables; excellent bibliography arranged topically and by country."

Choice 5:1210 N '68 100w

"A lucidly written, suggestive analysis of the search for a third way in Latin American politics that is not a copy of North Atlantic institutions nor of the authoritarian people's democracies. Mr. Lambert presents facts and argument authoritatively and readably, in terms of three major categories: the fully developed countries, the underdeveloped countries, and countries of unequal development. . . . Highly recommended for public and academic libraries." F. E. Kidder

Library J 92:4512 D 15 '67 110w

LAMONT, CORLISS. Freedom of choice affirmed. 214p $5.95 Horizon press

123 Free will and determinism 67-27793

In this defense "of free will from the humanist and naturalist viewpoint, . . . Dr. Lamont [attempts to] show that human free choice . . . co-exists with and uses the determinism embodied in scientific laws and man-made machines. He decries those schools of history, philosophy and psychoanalysis that see man as a puppet or automaton entirely subject to forces within or without himself. . . . The discussion throughout draws upon science, literature, religion and the problems of everyday life; and considers the thought of such men as Einstein, Erich Fromm, William James, Spinoza, Thornton Wilder, Melville, Luther and [others]." (Publisher's note) Glossary. Bibliography. Index.

"A much-needed addition to writing on this difficult subject of freedom of choice. Lamont supports the metaphysical notion that man finds himself in a pluralistic universe in which there is a large element of chance, and it is the presence of chance that makes choice possible. . . . [This] book provides the reader with a fresh perspective. Neither dualistic on the one hand nor coldly deterministic on the other, [the author] presents an interesting case for human freedom within a naturalistic framework. The good undergraduate student will have no difficulty in handling this book."

Choice 5:787 S '68 110w

Nation 207:57 N 11 '68 60w

LAMPE, DAVID. The last ditch. 250p pl maps $5.95 Putnam

940.54 World War, 1939-1945—Underground movements. World War, 1939-1945—Great Britain 68-15314

"The book investigates the German plans for occupied Britain and . . . the countermeasures undertaken by the British with such secrecy that more than two decades after the fact those concerned denied knowledge of or participation in an organized Resistance movement." (Publisher's note) Index.

Best Sell 28:123 Je 15 '68 200w

"Although three of his chapters deal with the scanty and by now familiar evidence of German plans for the occupation of Britain after her conquest, most of Mr. Lampe's book is concerned with the training and organization of Auxiliary Units, which he believes to have reached, within three months of being formed, a pitch of efficiency 'unparalleled at any time during the war by Britain's more conventional fighting units.' ('If you will believe that,' as the Duke of Wellington said, 'you will believe anything.'). . . Honesty compels me to warn Lampe's readers that accuracy is not his strong point. His references to the German plans for Operation Sea Lion are callow where they are not misleading, and his statements about facts within my own knowledge seldom contain more than a grain of truth, and often less. Nevertheless, The Last Ditch is full of lively anecdotes about training exercises, security precautions and laughable misunderstandings which will give pleasure to the surviving participants." Peter Fleming

LAMPE, DAVID—Continued

Book World p10 Je 2 '68 550w

Economist 227:51 Ap 13 '68 450w

"Of the numerous books written about Britain's fight against German invasion in 1940 few present a consideration of what the British would have done if the invasion had actually succeeded. . . . No doubt with the plans so skillfully made, [the] Auxiliary Unit would have caused some havoc for a short time; resistance in such a small country could not have continued long. This is an unusual book [which] . . . contains the famous Gestapo arrest list for Great Britain. [It is] recommended for large and medium-sized public libraries, history departments, and some young adults." P. W. Filby

Library J 93:2236 Je 1 '68 100w

Reviewed by Marian Trahan

Library J 93:2552 Je 15 '68 40w [YA]

"Plans for the invasion of England make up about half of The Last Ditch; the rest is an account—not, as far as I know, published before—of an organised British resistance movement, which, it seems, was ready for action by September 1940. It was created on the basis of the Old Boy network, but was linked at the top with the Army and the Home Guard. In its early days, adventurous officers like Peter Fleming had an amusing time working out various ways of annoying a German occupation force. Their booby-traps and ingenious ways of killing Germans sound like stuff from a James Bond novel. They were to do their work at night with radio communication between hideouts. They were brave men. . . . They could scarcely hope to hold up an invasion; at best they meant to play merry hell with the Germans after they had penetrated the coastal strip." Kingsley Martin

New Statesman 75:451 Ap 5 '68 850w

LANCMAN, ELI. Chinese portraiture. 188p il col pl $10 Tuttle

759.951 Portrait painting. Art, Chinese 66-15265

"Beginning with legendary and historical mention of portraits, Mr. Lancman traces the art to contemporary work. In this chronologically arranged discussion, the emphasis is placed on the Chinese attitude toward portraiture as it was affected by both religion and political upheavals and attempts to interpret that attitude for the Western eye." (Library J) List of dynasties. Bibliography. Index.

"Not everyone will agree with all of Mr. Lancman's theories of art nor with some of his sweeping statements; however, his work is an important contribution to the understanding of oriental painting. The reproduction of originals in public and private collections are superior, and the format has that satisfying quality usual in the products of this publisher." Paul von Khrum

Library J 91:3927 S 1 '66 110w

"Mr. Lancman fails to define what he means by portraiture. . . . Granted that connoisseurship for Chinese painting is beset with difficulties, it is still not acceptable to form conclusions about period or individual styles on the basis of copies or examples of dubious attribution. Mr. Lancman feels no such inhibition; in one case he describes a highly suspect work, whose uncertain status he acknowledges in a footnote, as 'a classic example of the achievements of the T'ang dynasty in the art of figure and portrait painting.' Occurrences of wrong transliteration and erratic citation are so numerous that they cannot be listed in detail." Hsio-yen Shih

Pacific Affairs 40:142 spring-summer '67 420w

LANDAU, L. D. General physics; mechanics and molecular physics [by] L. D. Landau, A. I. Akhiezer [and] E. M. Lifshitz; tr. by J. B. Sykes, A. D. Petford [and] C. L. Petford. 372p il $8 Pergamon

530 Physics

[67-30260]

The "phenomena and principles of mechanics, heat, and solid state physics are presented . . . [with] emphasis given to the interrelationship between physics, physical chemistry, and crystallography." (Choice) This is a translation of the 1965 Russian edition. Index.

"Written in a didactic, compact, technical language for general physics students, [assum- ing] a knowledge of calculus and vector algebra. . . . Because of the authoritative, up-to-date, pithy presentation, this book would be an excellent introduction to further study for the advanced undergraduate in physical science; graduate students could benefit from the professional lucidity of the treatment. . . . Typography and the functional diagrams are very good. Translation is excellent. Highly recommended for physics collections in colleges and universities."

Choice 5:1000 O '68 160w

"This is a book on a very elementary college level. . . . It was first written in 1937 but was not published until a few years ago. Rewritten and brought up to date by Akhiezer and Lifshitz, it retains some of the old-fashioned style and point of view of the '30's. The presentation of the material is formal, cool, and graceful. . . . A considerable amount of authoritarianism is to be detected in the pedagogical approach of the book. Definitions are laid down, assumptions are made, Laws of Nature are invoked, and results are deduced. . . . [There are] no problems, so this book may not be useful as a classroom text; but it can be highly recommended for supplementary reading or review purposes." M. A. Rothman

Science 160:667 My 10 '68 550w

LANDAU, ROM. Morocco; Marrakesh, Fez, Rabat; phot. by Wim Swaan. 160p $15 Putnam

916.4 Architecture, Islamic. Decoration and ornament, Architectural 67-23125

This book discusses the history of Morocco and is illustrated by photographs of Moroccan architecture, street scenes and inscriptions. Bibliography.

"Landau discusses three cities—Marrakesh, Fez, Rabat—giving Rabat slight attention. Only in a chapter on the people does he give 20th-century Morocco much place. His accent is on the distant past, and here Mr. Landau proves to be a learned, if occasionally pedantic, student of Morocco's early rulers. The pictures, limited by the scope of the text, emphasize architecture, yet every one is an attractive, informative work of art. Because of them the book merits consideration. . . . Footnotes to the text are given in the wide margins, and this sometimes causes the reader to momentarily confuse them with the picture captions. The bibliography shows a strong European, especially French, bias and may have limited appeal in North America." C. P. May

Library J 92:4152 N 15 '67 170w

"It is the colour photographs that make this book. There are 105 plates, . . . many of them are in colour and give a striking impression of the brilliance and clarity of the country. Wim Swaan's greatest achievement is his photography inside mosques which the European tourist is not allowed to enter. . . . Mr. Swaan has chosen well, concentrating on such masterpieces as the Qarouine mosque in Fez. There are fifteen pictures of this mosque: its vaulting, its chandelier, its doors. All of them are valuable and a relief to the non-Muslim's frustration. . . . After the warmth and excitement of the photographs, Rom Landau's text is drier than the Sahara. . . . This fifty-page potted history of Morocco, complete with tables of dynasties and comparative chronology, is as indigestible as six-month-old couscous."

TLS p135 F 8 '68 390w

LANDEN, ROBERT GERAN. Oman since 1856; disruptive modernization in a traditional Arab society. 488p maps $12.50 Princeton univ. press

953 Oman—History

66-21835

"Oman and its modern history [are] studied in terms of the stages of development under the impact of Western trade and technology. . . . The author devotes the greater portion of the book to the penetration of European influence, especially British influence, into Oman and the Persian Gulf and the political and economic changes that these countries have undergone since the mid-nineteenth century. A brief discussion of early Oman history, its social and religious structure before European penetration, are sketched." (Ann Am Acad) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"A thorough, scholarly, well-documented, and interesting volume. . . . After he sets the stage, the author describes the social, economic, and political forces in the area during the nineteenth century and illustrates and analyzes the poignant effects of the steamboat, the expensive products of European machines, the suppression of the slave trade, . . . and the curtailment of the illicit French arms traffic to Afghanistan. . . . For students of the development of new states the final three chapters have special meaning, for the quarrels between conservative-reactionary forces and moderate-liberals, stemming from the intrusion of an outside society, are shown to have involved religion, political structures, taxation and finance, trade and every facet of human existence." S. N. Fisher

Am Hist 73:1588 Je '68 460w

"To this reviewer's knowledge, this is the first systematic study of modern Oman in a Western language. . . . One would wish to know more about the patterns of intricate domestic politics than the author provides, especially in recent times. The twentieth century is briefly discussed . . . as an epilogue. The author's approach is essentially narrative rather than analytical, but factual material is very much needed about a country not very well known to Western scholars. . . . [Dr. Landen] is to be congratulated on such a thorough historical study." Majid Khadduri

Ann Am Acad 337:188 My '68 490w

Choice 5:1204 N '68 160w

LANDRETH, CATHERINE. Early childhood: behavior and learning; 2d ed of The psychology of early childhood; consulting eds: David Krech and Richard S. Crutchfield. 388p il $9.50 Knopf

155.4 Child study 67-11118

This revised edition of The Psychology of Early Childhood (BRD 1958) includes "coverage of new approaches to child psychology in the 1960s. . . . [The author] evaluates the implications and the limitations of discoveries about child development from the prenatal period to the age of seven, using . . . anecdotes about her own experience to highlight specific points." (Publisher's note) Glossary. Filmographies and bibliographies. Indexes of subjects and of names.

"[This volume] offers much more than the label of 'second edition' might imply. [There are] major organizational changes and additions. . . . This new organization highlights significant research during the last nine years; for example, the more clearly defined biological basis of behavior, emphasis on prenatal and perinatal factors in the development of behavior, and importance of the reciprocal nature of the infant's interaction with his environment. The growing national concern for disadvantaged children is reflected throughout the book. . . . [which] combines scholarship and a certain flair that will capture the interest of readers." Marjorie Smith

J Home Econ 60:230 Mr '68 370w

"This book is written primarily as a basic text of students in courses concerned with the behavior and learning of children from the prenatal period through age six. Catherine Landreth's purpose is: to give a balanced presentation of what is known about the behavior and learning of this age group; to stimulate meaningful inquiry into complex problems rather than to search for simple answers; and to encourage use of facts rather than memorization. . . . The reader . . . benefits from different interrelated approaches: research, instruction, and children's responses. . . . Valuable for pertinent library collections." E. P. Nichols

Library J 92:2934 S 1 '67 200w

LANDSTRÖM, BJÖRN. Columbus; the story of Don Cristóbal Colón, admiral of the ocean and his four voyages westward to the Indies according to contemporary sources; retold and il. by Björn Landström [tr. from the Swedish by Michael Phillips, and Hugh W. Stubbs]. 207p maps $14.95; deluxe ed $20 Macmillan (N Y)

B or 92 Columbus, Christopher. America—Discovery and exploration 67-19550

The author of The Quest for India (BRD 1965) describes "the development of European notions of the world and relates the . . . story of Columbus from his early years at Genoa . . . to his death in Spain. . . . [He includes] quotations from Columbus' journal (as copied by Las Casas) and from Fernando Colón." (J Am Hist) Chronology. Bibliography. Index.

"This is an elegant book. . . . [It] is the product of substantial investigation of published sources and cruises to many of the points Columbus touched. As the author states, his interpretations follow those of Samuel Eliot Morison. . . . The account is graceful and lucid, and the translation is excellent. . . . The numerous maps, woodcuts, sketches, and paintings in color—some copies and others the product of the author's own and not inconsiderable skill—make this a most attractive work. Landström provides lengthy explanations of technical matters but places them apart from the narrative. Beautiful and almost free of errors, this is a magnificent gift book for the layman that is entirely acceptable to scholars." J. E. Fagg

J Am Hist 54:874 Mr '68 200w

"A book everyone will learn from and read with pleasure, this is recommended for all general libraries, and for those specializing in geography and history." E. L. Yonge

Library J 92:3997 N 1 '67 100w

TLS p250 Mr 14 '68 340w

LANE, MARGARET. The day of the feast. 325p $5.95 Knopf

68-12674

Miles Asshe, a young Englishman who is in Morocco to locate a missing friend, becomes "involved in some of the curious expatriate lives . . . [especially that of] an English girl, Tavy [Williams], who has been abducted by a ruffianly charmer called Quattrell and now lives with her baby son in a Berber household." (TLS)

"[This novel is a disappointment]. Here is the recipe for the Feast. . . . Pulverize the American, the Homosexual, the Wastrel, the Mid-wife and the Berbers with a blunt pen. . . . Toss in the Lover and his Wife and permit them to stew in their own juice. Boil the Unwed Mother and the Protagonist separately. . . . [Arrange] on a bed of warmed-over Morocco. . . . Drown in a sauce of unexceptional prose. . . . Yet if this 'Feast' seems unsavory, it is not totally unpalatable. Certain characters . . . emerge alive from the ordeal. . . . When the reader's mind has been rendered dull and stupid by the mass of the novel, [the] 'underdeveloped' characters are capable of providing a measure of relief. It is their presence which prevents . . . an utter famine." Jacob Salomon

Best Sell 28:289 O 15 '68 550w

Christian Science Monitor p13 S 19 '68 110w

"[The author] has woven a plot with just enough suspense, intrigue, sex, local color, and conflict to produce a charming love story in an old-world, yet modern setting. . . . In a generation of frustration usually culminating in disaster, it is refreshing to be involved, as a reader, but to be certain everything will turn out all right in the end. Nothing is Pollyanna-like about the story, however. Public libraries will want this book for their fiction readers, and a book club might offer it without apologies." E. F. Waterman

Library J 93:3579 O 1 '68 110w

Reviewed by Elizabeth Janeway

N Y Times BK R p33 O 13 '68 900w

"For the first 50 pages of [Miss Lane's] novel, it looks as though we are to be treated to a feast of Moroccan travelogue with the merest pretence of interest in the rather dull young man she takes on his first visit there. . . . But once Miles is involved in Tangier, . . . [the] story starts to move fast. . . . Miss Lane manages to unravel the romance and the somewhat tame machinations of her seedy expatriates quite neatly, without allowing the hocus-pocus of spells and superstitions to turn it into a fairy-tale. . . . It might have been easier to care, at least about Tavy and Miles, if [they] . . . behaved less like a couple out of Galsworthy. . . . One cannot help suspecting, however, . . . that none of [the author's] characters is nearly as real to her as [Morocco itself]."

LANE, MARGARET—Continued

TLS p310 Mr 28 '68 650w

LANE, MARK. A citizen's dissent; Mark Lane replies. 290p il $6.95 Holt

364.12 U.S. President's Commission on the Assassination of President Kennedy. Lane, Mark—Rush to Judgment. Kennedy, John Fitzgerald—Assassination 68-13044

"In the first part of this book, 'The Dissent,' [Lane] recounts the difficulties of getting Rush to Judgment published. He then reviews the statements of the CBS inquiry, lawyers, professors, and a few others among the defenders. In 'The Issues' he takes up the two main controversial points: the origin of the fatal shots and the report's single bullet theory." (Library J) Citations. Index.

"Mark Lane's Rush to Judgment [BRD 1966] was perhaps the most influential work in arousing critical reaction to the Warren report. . . . Mr. Lane has thoroughly studied the new material on both sides of the controversy which has appeared during the last two years. One gets the impression that further weaknesses in the report have been disclosed and clever use has been made of them. On the other hand, the problem remains unchanged insofar as neither the guilt nor innocence of Oswald can be considered proved beyond reasonable doubt. This book will be in demand by all who are really interested in this case." H. H. Bernt

Library J 93:2518 Je 15 '68 180w

"[This] is a trivial and tedious volume, ingenuously detailing Lane's ceaseless assaults on the mass media in search of personal publicity, and rehearsing the minutia with which he overwhelmed this or that opponent in debate on a college campus, or filled the night air on some late, late radio show. . . . Lane is not above . . . innuendo." A. M. Bickel

New Repub 158:28 Je 22 '68 1100w

"The method of the book is to bludgeon the reader with a seemingly endless supply of miniduplicities allegedly committed against an honorable and crusading Mark Lane by dishonorable and fearful minions of the media. . . . I for one would have been prepared to live with the non sequiturs, nit-picks, quibbles and rehash that constitute the body of this book, if my confidence were not destroyed in the underlying system of fact-gathering." V. S. Navasky

N Y Times Bk R p32 Jl 14 '68 1150w

LANE, ROGER. Policing the city, Boston, 1822-1885. 299p $8.50 Harvard univ. press

352 Boston—Police 67-17313

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by S. J. Mandelbaum
Am Hist R 73:912 F '68 450w

Reviewed by J. A. Tarr
Ann Am Acad 378:172 Jl '68 600w

Reviewed by M. D. Hirsch
J Am Hist 55:389 S '68 600w

LANEY, AL. Covering the court; a 50-year love affair with the game of tennis. 285p $5.95 Simon & Schuster

796.34 Tennis 68-19944

This memoir covering a half-century of tennis reportage "begins with the summer of 1914 when the teen-aged Laney, on a visit to New York, faced a terrible decision: to see Christy Mathewson pitch or to watch . . . Maurice McLoughlin play tennis. He chose to go to Forest Hills." (Book World) Index.

Reviewed by John Quinn
Book World p12 S 15 '68 550w

"[This] is published opportunistically. At a moment when revolutionary things are happening in the conduct of tournaments, it reviews in a personal and anecdotal way their history since 1914. . . . This is not just history. It is intelligent firsthand reporting of great matches and great moments in the game with vivid character sketches of the players and descriptions of their games, many of which have become legend." K. G. Jackson

Harper 237:107 Jl '68 280w

"[These reminiscences] provide a nostalgic glimpse of the golden age of tennis. . . . [Laney] gives less generous treatment to the modern era of tennis, exemplified by the 'big game' as promoted by Jack Kramer. Somewhat testily, Mr. Laney questions the expertise of the players familiar to tennis fans of today, asserting that most of the tactics of tennis were developed well before Kramer appeared upon the scene. Although Mr. Laney is occasionally guilty of lapses into mawkish sentimentality and often wanders into irrelevant details . . . his book should appeal to followers of tennis and is recommended for sports shelves of public libraries." E. G. Hamann

Library J 93:3018 S 1 '68 110w

LANG, GLADYS ENGEL, jt. auth. Politics and television. See Lang, K.

LANG, KURT. Politics and television [by] Kurt Lang and Gladys Engel Lang. 315p $6.95 Quadrangle bks.

384.55 Television in politics. U.S.—Politics and government 68-13460

The authors discuss the ways in which television influences politics and the public's political actions and beliefs. Among the televised events studied are the "coverage of General MacArthur's homecoming, the national political conventions, Nixon's 'Checkers' speech, the Kennedy-Nixon debates, and the influence of televising early election returns. Their theme throughout is that TV . . . conveys an actuality different from what an eyewitness experiences." (Publisher's note) Most of the chapters were first published in sociological journals. Index.

Reviewed by Neil Compton
Commentary 46:28 D '68 650w

Reviewed by R. A. Hamm
Library J 93:1899 My 1 '68 100w

"That television is changing the nature of politics in America is no new and exciting discovery, but the authors of this sociological study . . . have produced the first real body of evidence to indicate how thorough and important those changes are. By studying the rôle of television in conventions and elections, the authors present a convincing account of the positive and negative aspects of the problem. . . . The danger of democracy's becoming the tool of the adman and the commentator may seem unlikely, but it is closer than we might think. This book is a welcome first approach to the problem. Its authors are objective; their objectivity and refusal to give in to sensationalism gives their warning its real force. It is a warning we cannot ignore."

Va Q R 44:clxxiv autumn '68 120w

LANG, MARIA. A wreath for the bride; tr. by Joan Tate. 157p $3.95 Regnery

68-31461

When Anneli Hammar "disappears mysteriously on the eve of her wedding, Inspector Christer Wick of the Stockholm Crime Squad, in town for the wedding, is called upon to use his talents to help find the missing bride-to-be. He finds her murdered and uncovers another murder made to look like suicide." (Best Sell)

Best Sell 28:241 S 15 '68 80w

Reviewed by M. K. Grant
Library J 93:3583 O 1 '68 40w

"[Even though the killer is] a trifle easy to identify, Miss Lang's story is told with great charm and warmth, her people are simple and appealing." A. J. Hubin

N Y Times Bk R p75 N 24 '68 110w

Reviewed by Sergeant Cuff
Sat R 51:45 O 26 '68 20w

"A nice conventional small-town story—in the Agatha Christie manner, says the blurb, and this is not far off."

TLS p864 S 15 '66 40w

LANG, OLGA. Pa Chin and his writings; Chinese youth between the two revolutions. 402p $7.95 Harvard Univ. press

B or 92 Li, Fei-kan. China—Politics and government—Republic, 1912-1949. Anarchism and anarchists 67-17314

This biographical study focuses on the life and work of the anarchist novelist before 1949. Bibliography. Glossary. Index.

Reviewed by D. M. Lowe
Am Hist R 73:1222 Ap '68 360w
Choice 5:1138 N '68 250w

"[Miss Lang] believes that [Pa Chin's life is] far more important than [his] works, and [she] deftly weaves in [his] historic background and [his] political and social context. . . . [Her] brilliant biography is the story of how a child of the gentry in the deep interior of China grew up to embrace the whole of the Western radical humanist tradition." M. C. Wright

N Y Times Bk R p3 Ja 28 '68 750w

"Serious studies by westerners of Chinese writers are so rare that this thoughtful and well-informed work of Mrs. Lang's is almost unprecedented. Her rich experience of Russian, west European and Chinese life, combined with a strong feeling for anarchism, gave her a good start from which to produce a sympathetic study. . . . Pa Chin as a writer is of little intrinsic interest. . . . His work does, however, deserve a little attention because it was popular with the sentimental students, petty officials, schoolteachers and office workers of the big cities of China in the second quarter of the century; it thus tells us quite a lot about their attitudes. . . . One can disagree profoundly with Mrs. Lang's attitudes and interpretations which are built on some fundamental misconceptions of the Chinese revolution, but one must do so with respect for her integrity and seriousness." TLS p198 F 29 '68 700w

LANGE, DAGMAR. See Lang, M.

LANGER, SUSANNE K. Mind: an essay on human feeling. v 1 487p il $10 Johns Hopkins press

120 Mind and body. Perception. Esthetics 66-26686

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Choice 5:206 Ap '68 180w

Reviewed by M. C. Beardsley
Harvard Ed R 38:353 spring '68 2850w

Reviewed by Melvin Rader
J Aesthetics 26:543 summer '68 1750w

Reviewed by Forest Hansen
Music Lib Assn Notes 24:704 Je '68 1000w

Yale R 57:XII summer '68 1150w

LANGGUTH, A. J. Jesus Christs. 227p $4.95 Harper 67-28818

This first novel consists of a "series of fables about Jesus as he might have been if he had been born at various times in history up to and including the present. Jesus appears at a Congressional hearing and gets 'bleeped' whenever he claims divine authority for his views. Jesus leads a West Coast hippie community. Jesus loses his nerve as a guerrilla (read Viet Cong) lookout. At one time, Jesus even meets another Jesus and takes him for the Devil." (Newsweek)

Reviewed by Lester Goran
Book World p16 F 4 '68 250w

"Some readers will be displeased by the seeming levity of this fictional account of a Jesus who turns anti-hero. The theological sophisticate, on the other hand, will be delighted and instructed by this trenchant and witty treatment of the paradoxes inherent in His being either man or deity. Protagonist and secondary characters undergo apparently endless metamorphoses as required by God and time. They suffer from history's special biases but always retain personal essence. Usually the short sequences fade into successive scenes, but the demand for, and response from, Christ seem permanent. The disciples as well as Jesus emerge as delightfully human. This book is highly recommended for public, academic, and theological collections." J. R. Willingham
Library J 93:572 F 1 '68 120w

Reviewed by William Hamilton
New Repub 158:34 Ap 6 '68 1000w

"An original work, one that establishes Mr. Langguth as one of our most promising younger novelists in reworking big themes—the religious quest, the meaning of life and death, God. . . . The movement of the novel . . . finds its source not so much in the developing character of Jesus as in men's reactions to him—reactions that in the end takes on a reality that affects his own self-understanding. . . . Traditional religious practices are a frequent object of investigation and satire. . . . [The author] has not lost his journalist's eye for the significant detail and the quip that stands by itself. The result is a tightly written series of fables for a scientific age, vignettes of man's religious quest, the gods he desires, creates and discards, his reactions to those thrust upon him." E. B. Fiske

N Y Times Bk R p31 Mr 10 '68 750w

"Many of the fables are only a few lines long; others stretch into complete short stories. Some are mystic, some humorous, still others deadly serious. But in spite of the seemingly helter-skelter arrangement of the episodes there are several unifying elements that hold the narrative fragments together and make them into a strange sort of novel. . . . [Langguth] is ingenious. Even so, he may be doling out too much new wine in too many new bottles. After the 60th or 70th coming, even the best of messiahs palls." R. A. Sokolov

Newsweek 71:102 Mr 11 '68 390w

TLS p1170 O 17 '68 370w

LANGLEY, HAROLD D. Social reform in the United States navy, 1798-1862. 309p $8.50 Univ. of Ill. press

359.00973 U.S. Navy. Seamen 67-10440

"The author illustrates the influence of reform efforts on naval institutions by investigating four [themes]: the origins and activities of religiously motivated societies dedicated to working among sailors, particularly the American Seamen's Friend Society; the Navy's manpower shortage and methods of recruitment; agitation against corporal punishment; . . . and the movement to abolish the sailor's ration of whiskey or grog. . . . These developments are set against a . . . history of the Navy and its position vis-a-vis the national political arena." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"The informed reader will soon recognize that the book is more satisfactory as a study of one or two facets of the social reform movement than as naval history. The author's knowledge of naval technicalities leaves something to be desired, and careless errors in other matters are simply exasperating. R. E. Johnson

Am Hist R 73:1239 Ap '68 450w

"Langley's account of these reform efforts draws from extensive research in source materials; but his presentation, by considering each reform movement separately, is unnecessarily redundant and pedestrian. . . . Of interest only to specialists in American naval and antebellum history."

Choice 4:1438 F '68 240w

"Langley's research, which seems painstakingly thorough, has produced a solid addition to the body of naval literature. The book is interesting, well documented, and clearly, if not always deftly, written." W. R. Herrick

J Am Hist 54:645 D '67 440w

"A brief but balanced work of serious scholarship—somewhat less than satisfactory, however, in its tangential treatment of the mutiny aboard the brig Somers. [The author] deals primarily with the Navy of the sailing ships." H. W. Baldwin

N Y Times Bk R p63 N 5 '67 70w

Reviewed by K. J. Bauer
Social Studies 59:274 N '68 320w

LANNING, EDWARD P. Peru before the Incas. 216p il maps $5.95; pa $2.95 Prentice-Hall

980.4 Peru—Antiquities. Indians of South America—Peru 67-28395

An associate professor of anthropology at Columbia University describes the growth of prehistoric Peruvian civilization, including the development of agriculture, governments and social systems. He includes "pictures and descriptions of tapestries, ceramics, and architecture, and explains how archeologists have used relics, geography, and climatic conditions to confirm or disprove theories of cultural development." (Publisher's note) Glossary. Bibliography. Index.

LANNING, E. P.—Continued

"A survey and synthesis of Peruvian prehistory from earliest times up to the Spanish conquest. There is emphasis on chronology, cultural continuity, cultural-environmental relationships, and the rise of native urban civilization. Much new data on the preceramic and early ceramic periods are incorporated. . . . Highly recommended for college survey courses on New World archaeology. Illustrations, both photographs and drawings, are good but not numerous."

Choice 5:540 Je '68 120w

Reviewed by Mary Gormly

Library J 93:202 Ja 15 '68 220w

"[This is the first book] to use John H. Rowe's classification of Peruvian culture history by time periods rather than by cultural stages. . . . I think the most important and exciting new material that Lanning contributes is that derived from his work on the central coast. Here, not far north of Lima, he and his colleagues have established a long chronology of preceramic periods dating from perhaps as long ago as 10,000 B.C. or even earlier. . . . This is all new, as far as general books are concerned. Lanning's chronology represents the first apparently unbroken sequence from a very early hunting and gathering stage to developed agriculture based on irrigation and Peruvian civilization. The rest of the book deals with more familiar aspects of Peruvian life and, the title notwithstanding, includes a very good summary of Inca history and culture." Alfred Kidder

Science 160:1212 Je 14 '68 550w

TLS p1290 N 14 '68 100w

LANNING, GEORGE. Green corn moon. 250p $5.95 Viking

68-29054

"Henry Evans happily undertook the job of being ghost writer for a deceased lady novelist. [This] would make it possible for him to marry Alice quite soon—in August, the month of the green corn moon, an appropriate time for a couple already in their mid-thirties. . . . The internal discords within the Episcopal diocese for which Alice worked precipitated a round of confusions that threatened to achieve nightmare proportions. Henry, as Alice's husband-to-be and the dead novelist's ghost, found himself in the exact middle. Church factions pulled and hauled at him, fighting and plotting to get him on their side." (Publisher's note)

"Lanning, the brilliant editor of The Kenyon Review . . . [with his] wry humor and penetrating satire makes [this novel] one of the best so far this season. . . . Winifrid Winch (sic) is the heroine of the current novel [being ghost-written by Henry] and she is as much fun, or more, than the real Alice. Her comments on the passing lunacy are priceless and they allow Mr. Lanning to make quite a few asides, especially about ecclesiastical eccentricities. . . . The variety of other people who come to life in the book will be thoroughly familiar to any reader who is a regular church-goer. . . . Public libraries will certainly want to consider [this] for first-purchase priority; academic libraries with collections of modern literature will also be interested in it." Charles Dollen

Best Sell 28:290 O 15 '68 500w

"This is a comedy—no, a farce—of which the setting is a small town with strong ecclesiastical (Episcopalian) affinities and a statistically improbable, though not impossible, proportion of old ladies, maids or widows, among its inhabitants. . . . Mr. Lanning has a pleasing way of writing, cool, witty and elegant. . . . He can build up a comic scene with great verve: he has a splendid drunken party and an even better scene involving clerical nudity. . . . Altogether, I love the book quite considerably. Where I thought that it comparatively failed was in its story: . . . not enough happens. The pace is slower than it should be. One is in danger, almost, of stopping to think. That is fatal to farce." Patrick Cruttwell

Book World p19 N 24 '68 330w

Harper 237:128 D '68 300w

Reviewed by Jewell Smith

Library J 93:4582 D 1 '68 70w

Reviewed by David Dempsey

N Y Times Bk R p32 O 13 '68 500w

"Lanning has closely observed small-town life, and he writes about it with insight as well as humor. He makes something, but not too much, of the always comic difficulties . . . of remodeling an old house, and he gets more humor than might have been expected out of the problems of a literary ghost. . . . At first I was moderately enthusiastic about the book, and there are some nice touches all the way through, but before he gets to the end Lanning is working awfully hard at being funny. . . . The original idea isn't buoyant enough to float a whole book. Well, Mark Twain had that trouble too." Granville Hicks

Sat R 51:29 O 19 '68 550w

LANSING, ALFRED, jr. auth. Drugs. See Modell, W.

LAPEDES, DANIEL N. Helpful microorganisms. 192p il $4.50; lib bdg $4.28 World pub.

576 Microorganisms—Juvenile literature 68-14700

The author "first gives a general treatment of microorganisms—how they come into being, how they live and grow, and how they decay. It is after this basic treatment that the advantages of many microorganisms are considered: in their role as food, drink, vitamins, vaccines, antibiotics and steroids. [Index.] Grades seven to ten." (Best Sell)

"The author offers a fascinating approach to microorganisms for the young reader. . . . Besides clearing up the popular-misconceptions, the volume will serve as a fine introduction to scientific reading for young biologists."

Best Sell 28:227 S 1 '68 80w

"Microbiology is seldom dealt with at the secondary level, but Mr. Lapedes successfully does so in this interesting and informative account which covers all major areas of the science. . . . [There are] numerous excellent photographs and diagrams. Some background knowledge of biology will be necessary for full reader understanding, but the book should prove valuable both as a supplement to biology texts and as a starting point for science students interested in this specialized field." C. G. Wood

Library J 93:13318 S 15 '68 80w [YA]

LAPIDE, PHINN E. See Lapide, Pinchas E.

LAPIDE, PINCHAS E. Three popes and the Jews [Eng title: The last three popes and the Jews]. 384p il $6.95 Hawthorn bks.

261.2 Catholic Church—Relations. World War, 1939-1945—Jews 67-11768

The author attempts to establish the Catholic Church's "historically deplorable attitude [towards the Jewish people] until the time of Pius XI. He then relates how, since that time, there has been a gradual change in Vatican policy, particularly during World War II. . . . [He] examines Nazi-occupied Europe country by country and traces the efforts of Catholic citizens and Pius XII to save Jewish people. . . . [Mr. Lapide argues] that the Catholic Church was actually instrumental in saving close to 860,000 lives . . . [and] saved more lives than all the other churches, religious institutions and rescue organizations combined." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"This book, by an Israeli author, . . . is more than a defense of Pius XII. It is a study of the relationship of the Catholic Church to the Jewish people under the reigns of Pius XI, Pius XII and John XXIII. [Mr. Lapide] takes for granted that contemporary anti-Semitism is ultimately, in the last analysis, the fruit of Christian teaching and the Church's attitude to the Jews. Historians are not agreed on this theory. . . . [His] treatment of history prior to the present century is the weakest part of [this] book. . . . [However] the Catholic reader who is today accustomed to self-accusation and the revelation of Christian cowardice is deeply moved by the detailed reports [of what the Church did to save the Jews from extermination]." Gregory Baum

Commonweal 87:364 D 15 '67 750w

"In particular, [Mr. Lapidé] seeks to correct the criticisms made by such authors as Rolf Hochhuth. . . . [He bases his] case on a variety of sources, not all of them above criticism, but [he] establishes beyond doubt that the 'quiet diplomacy' of the Vatican could be effective in those situations where the national leaders had not fallen completely into Hitler's power."

TLS p274 Mr 14 '68 300w

LAPIDUS, IRA MARVIN. Muslim cities in the later middle ages. 307p $7.50 Harvard univ. press

301.3 Cities and towns—Near East. Civilization, Islamic 66-21339

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by R. W. Smith
Am Hist R 73:552 D '67 850w

Reviewed by Thomas Naff
Ann Am Acad 337:188 My '68 650w
J Pol Econ 75:902 D '67 350w

LAPIERRE, DOMINIQUE, jt. auth. Or I'll dress you in mourning. See Collins, L.

LAPP, RALPH E. The weapons culture. 230p $4.95 Norton

355.03 U.S.—Military policy. U.S.—Defenses 68-10881

The author, who was an associate physicist with the Manhattan Project and is now consulting physicist of the Nuclear Science Service, argues that "the United States' dedication to arms making constitutes a national danger—that the interplay of three forces exerted by military, scientific and technological, and industrial sources has accelerated this expansion until it has made American culture essentially a 'weapons culture.'" (Library J) Glossary, Index.

Reviewed by E. A. Dooley
Best Sell 28:14 Ap 1 '68 750w

Reviewed by T. C. Schelling
Book World p12 Jl 14 '68 700w

Choice 5:682 Jl '68 200w

"Not everyone will agree with all of Dr. Lapp's conclusions, but the entire work is provocative, extremely well documented, and reflects the opinions of a scientist who is not awed by his colleagues." E. R. Alexander
Library J 93:1004 Mr 1 '68 150w

"When the author takes the reader by the hand and leads him into the complex world of weapons technology, he is at his best. . . . But when Mr. Lapp turns from technology to his main theme, that a venal conspiracy of business men, brass hats and politicians is foisting terribly costly and unnecessary weapons on the American public, he is less convincing. One looks, in vain for a thoughtful analysis of what is proper and improper in the weapons field. . . . Instead of documenting ways in which the 'military-industrial complex' has misused its influence and betrayed public trust, presumably in search of swollen profits, Mr. Lapp resorts to polemical, sweeping language. Thus the reader is continually ambushed by such phrases as 'the weapons octopus,' 'the infection has spread in our society,' [and] 'insidious grip.'" William Beecher
N Y Times Bk R p66 N 17 '68 550w

"Although The Weapons Culture offers a good account of significant events in the arms race, Ralph Lapp's suggestive title hovers in the reader's mind raising questions Lapp does not consider. . . . [He] does not deal with the impact of the arms economy on the society as a whole. . . . He does not talk about the political and psychological techniques required to sell the American public a permanent arms race nor about the impact this extraordinary development has had on our political system. He does, however, give an interesting insight into the impact of the 'weapons culture' on the making of national security policy. Lapp's book offers glimpses into the tortured politics of defense spending, but his own analysis underscores the inadequacy of his proposals to reform the system." R. J. Barnett
Science 160:293 Ap 19 '68 1700w

LAPSLEY, JAMES N., ed. The concept of willing; outdated idea or essential key to man's future? foreword by Seward Hiltner. 222p $5.50 Abingdon

153.8 Free will and determinism 67-22764

This book grew out of a conference on religion and psychiatry held at Princeton Theological Seminary, April 19-21, 1963. It is a "collection of six contemporary statements by theologians and psychologists on the continued relevance of willing to understanding man. The history of this idea is . . . traced, its . . . bearing on existentialist conceptions of the self [examined and] . . . theological questions of individual responsibility and destiny [are discussed. A] . . . consideration of what it would be like to create androids (artificial human-like beings) is [presented]." (Choice) Index of names. Index of subjects.

"[A] stimulating collection. . . . No other current anthology is quite like this. . . . It should hold its own in the expanding literature on this many-dimensional problem and suit those students familiar with its occurrence in religion, philosophy, and psychology." Choice 5:332 My '68 170w

"Probably the book's most original and constructive contribution is Lapsley's attempt in the concluding chapter to resolve the central issue arising from the conference: whether willing is a broad, life-force, largely unconscious type of process or whether it is a more narrow, conscious conflict-reducing and resolving phenomenon—or some combination of these. . . . Also to be found in the book: a lucid essay by J. Macquarrie on willing processes within the framework of Heidegger's existentialism; brief discussions by H. Kerr and S. Hiltner of 'The Fate of the Will in Modern Theology'; and an imaginative exploration of how men and computers are alike yet different by W. Studdiford. . . . By providing new insight into the thorny nature of the problems involved, this book witnesses to the urgent need for further interdisciplinary dialogue on the meaning of willing and selfhood." L. W. Putnam
Christian Century 85:330 Mr 13 '68 550w

LAQUEUR, WALTER. The road to Jerusalem; the origins of the Arab-Israeli conflict, 1967 [Eng title: The road to war 1967]. 368p $6.95 Macmillan (N Y)

956.94 Israel-Arab War, 1967 68-17517

"Following a short survey of the relations between Israel and the Arab countries from 1948 to 1966, Mr. Laqueur, editor of the Journal of Contemporary History, describes . . . the political developments of the crisis in the Arab countries, in Israel, and in the Great Powers during the three weeks between May 15 and June 5, 1967. He gives a special chapter to a survey of world public opinion." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"While partial to the Israelis, like most Anglo-American writers on the subject, Laqueur shows considerable sympathy and understanding for the Arabs, and his eminently readable book offers penetrating insight into the war's origins and the conflicting passions that made the third round virtually unavoidable." Ronald Steel
Book World p1 Je 23 '68 450w

"Mr. Laqueur has written the most ambitious account—the only one . . . with a real claim to be 'history'—and it must rate as the best produced since the June war. No one need bother writing another until he has digested the amazing amount of information [here] . . . and managed to go it one better. . . . His conclusions are those of the historian who sees too much to accept patterns and coherence where none exists." Economist 227:48 Je 29 '68 290w

"[This] will be compared with a similar book, Theodore Draper's Israel and World Politics [BRD 1968]. But while Mr. Draper deals with the diplomatic prehistory of the war, Mr. Laqueur is concerned with its political prehistory. . . . Basing his account on newspapers, radio broadcasts, and interviews, Mr. Laqueur, who is interested in the crisis as a concrete historical situation, has produced an objective and interesting book which includes an appendix of significant documents. Recommended for academic and large public libraries." David Shavit
Library J 93:1137 Mr 15 '68 200w

Reviewed by M. J. Bandler
Nation 207:443 O 28 '68 400w

LAQUEUR, WALTER—Continued

"Professor Laqueur sets out lucidly and convincingly the various moves and counter-moves by Israel, her neighbours and the Great Powers which culminated in the outbreak of war on 5 June. With the war itself and its aftermath he does not deal. A particularly valuable feature of this book consists in the appendices which reproduce—among other documents—successive speeches by Nasser made shortly before and after the war, which enable the reader to compare his pretensions before, with his apologia after his defeat." Elie Kedourie

New Statesman 75:802 Je 14 '68 550w

Reviewed by Amos Elon

N Y Rev of Books 11:14 Ag 1 '68 3750w

Reviewed by Chaim Potok

N Y Times Bk ■ p3 Je 9 '68 280w

Reviewed by Emil Lengyel

Sat R 51:27 J1 20 '68 340w

TLS p701 J1 4 '68 340w

LARKIN, MARGARET. The hand of Mordechai. 256p il $5.95 Yoseloff

956.94 Israel-Arab War, 1948-1949. Agriculture, Cooperative 68-14404

An account of Yad Mordechai, a kibbutz in southern Israel, near the Gaza Strip, and its struggle for existence during the Israel War of Liberation in 1948.

Reviewed by M. J. Bandler

Nation 207:444 O 28 '68 100w

"Something of the tenacity with which the Israeli fights is conveyed. . . . [This] is an official history of the kibbutz, done in journalistic fashion and without the sharp penetration into the essential nature of kibbutz life that we find, for example, in Hugh Nissenson's current book, 'Notes From the Frontier' [BRD 1968]. But there is more than enough here to show us the dedication of a people to its land; and the account of the defense of the kibbutz, which is done in great detail and takes up much of the book, affords us a vivid picture of the extent to which Israelis are willing to die for their land." Chaim Potok

N Y Times Bk R p3 Je 9 '68 280w

TLS p701 J1 4 '68 340w

LARNER, JEREMY. The answer. 216p $4.95 Macmillan (N Y)

68-12931

Most of this novel takes place in a few days in February 1964. Alex Randall, a 20-year-old university student, "has unsatisfactory encounters with his girl and with his father, smokes marijuana with his friends, discovers his roommate berserk under the influence of the 'answer drug,' and rushes off to the mansion of Dr. Magus Tyrtan, prophet of spiritual salvation through drugs, seeking an antidote for the roommate. . . . [He] stays in the mansion for several days, and his adventures . . . make up most of the story. Finally, Randall takes the drug himself, experiences long hallucinations, then flees, to find that his roommate has hung himself. Thereupon. . . . Randall attacks Tyrtan, but ineffectually. A brief epilogue written as from 1980 disposes of the various characters, and of the drug itself." (Commentary)

Reviewed by John Thompson

Commentary 45:71 Ap '68 1650w

"This is a big novel about the drug-oriented hippie subculture which flourishes in the large metropolitan areas by the editor of The Addict in the Street [BRD 1965]. This is an ambitious but deeply flawed novel. Mr. Lerner has apparently tried to adapt the Gothic novel to the requirements of the society about which he so scathingly writes. He has incorporated the vocabulary of the subculture itself, which is interesting and valid. Flawed or not, this novel on a subject of national concern is recommended for all libraries, public and academic." J. C. Pine

Library J 93:1021 Mr 1 '68 230w

"Although this has been highly touted elsewhere as the novelistic stopper to the big questions about the experiences of the extreme fringe of our YA subculture, its style, its indecipherable messages from the drug-high narrator, and its assortment of mentally or sexually aberrant characters make this a poor gamble for YA collections." Sumika Yamashita

Library J 93:2551 Je 15 '68 130w

"I wish that Lerner had left Alex ■ happy disciple of the Drug, for his novel might then come to a conclusion that would provide some excuse for reading it. As it is we have nothing but the usual emotionally fastidious young man who has a fling at controlled lunacy and then decides to come home. . . . Lerner, in his anxiousness to present the 'scene,' has forgotten to put anyone in it. . . . The old composite of the alienated youth, 'impossibly apperceptive and self-concerned,' cannot be trotted out, put in a new setting and expected to be taken seriously. This along with that incredibly punishing description of the mind afloat, is really all Jeremy Lerner has done." Jack Richardson

N Y Rev of Books 10:34 Ap 11 '68 950w

Reviewed by Anatole Broyard

N Y Times Bk R p4 Ap 7 '68 500w

New Yorker 44:174 My 18 '68 90w

Reviewed by R. A. Sokolov

Newsweek 72:80 J1 22 '68 140w

"Lerner clearly knows his subject. His presentation of drug-cult isms is more vivid than magazine exposés can ever hope to be. He writes about Heavenly House and the acid trip with such clarity and understatement that they never push over the dangerous border into monotonous fantasy. The real victory of this novel is that, with an insidious irony similar to that of Swift's A Modest Proposal, it draws the reader into the protagonist's mind, then forces both to a new awareness. . . . There is, however, something profoundly unsatisfying about the book. . . . The language [is obtrusive]. . . . Even when the pseudo-poetry subsides into plain English the hero's Byronic gloom permeates the novel in a most annoying way." H. S. Resnik

Sat R 51:28 Ap 6 '68 800w

Va Q R 44:xvii summer '68 100w

LARNER, JEREMY, ed. Poverty: views from the left; ed. by Jeremy Lerner & Irving Howe. 319p $5 Morrow

339 Poverty. U.S.—Economic conditions—1961—. Economic assistance, Domestic 68-22429

Twenty essays which probe into aspects of the War on Poverty from economic, sociological, political and practical points of reference.

Christian Century 85:561 Ap 24 '68 40w

Reviewed by J. A. Levine

Christian Science Monitor p9 My 23 '68 600w

Reviewed by Christopher Norwood

Commonweal 89:257 N 15 '68 1500w

"Appropriately, Michael Harrington's critique of 'The Politics of Poverty' introduces this collection of . . . essays, many of which have previously appeared in Dissent, a magazine of the democratic left. . . . Most of the contributors accept without reservation Mr. Harrington's thesis—originally postulated in 'The Other America' [BRD 1962]—that poverty is a national shame which requires 'radical' or massive public remedies. Even Stephen Thernstrom, whose attack on Mr. Harrington's analysis of the dimensions of the problem is included for balance, does not dispute this fundamental assumption. . . . The collection is a critical commentary on topical problems affecting or related to the fight against poverty such as discrimination and unions, food stamps and the Department of Agriculture, Appalachia and the general failure of the war on poverty. . . . Even those libraries which subscribe to Dissent should consider adding this book to their shelves." K. F. Kister

Library J 93:1012 Mr 1 '68 210w

Reviewed by K. C. Vogel

Library J 93:[3339] S 15 '68 120w [YA]

Reviewed by Paul Marx

New Repub 159:33 J1 6 '68 380w

"[These] excellent essays [are] nearly all devoted to defining the special characteristics of one or another group of the New Poor, and showing why the old procedures will not work for them. Contributors include . . . Paul Jacobs, Robert Lekachman, Ben Seligman, and Paul Bullock. They explore many major situations of poverty, from Harlem . . . to the grape-pickers of California and from Head Start to Old Age Assistance. . . . [The] book maintains that the New Poor have no bootstraps. The many suggestions are therefore marked by direct social concern for building the internal and external resources of the individual poor person." Spencer Pollard

Sat R 51:20 My 25 '68 550w

LARRABEE, ERIC, ed. Museums and education. 255p $6.50 Smithsonian inst. press; for sale by Random house

370 Museums and schools. U.S.—Galleries and museums 68-20000

This is a compilation of papers exploring "the educational function of museums. The writer of one paper [suggests that museums] . . . are obsolete, that modern communications technology can perform their educational functions more effectively than can physical visitations. . . . Writers of other papers say that museums need to apply what is known about the learning process and should know the curricula of schools. They recommend also that teachers should learn how to use the potential of museums." (Library J) Bibliographies.

"This compilation of 14 papers [was] presented at a conference sponsored by the Smithsonian Institution. . . . There is food for thought in this excellent [collection] for naturalists, and for other interpretive workers in the field." C. S. Johnson

Library J 93:3731 O 15 '68 150w

"This intriguing volume should help free museums (and their curators) from unwarranted charges of arbitrariness, stuffiness, and irrelevance. The lively summary of proceedings reveals participatory vigor as well as editorial wit. Taken as a whole, this book should remind readers of the enormous potential for learning inherent in the nation's display cabinets, however modest. A strong work of wide appeal among educators." John Calam

Sat R 51:112 N 16 '68 140w

LARRICK, NANCY, ed. On city streets; an anthology of poetry; il. with phot. by David Sagarin. 158p $4.95 Evans, M.&co.

811 Poetry—Collections—Juvenile literature 68-30505

This "is a collection of poems about city sights and people . . . [compiled] with the help of more than one hundred inner-city and small city youngsters. . . . [The poets include] Carl Sandburg, E. B. White, Walt Whitman . . . Charles Reznikoff, and Gwendolyn Brooks . . . Gregory Corso, James Tate, Lawrence Ferlinghetti and others." (Publisher's note) Index of poets and titles. Index of first lines. "Age twelve and up." (Commonweal)

"The moods of the poems are as varied as the moods of the city. There are melancholy poems and bitter poems, quiet poems about parks and whimsical poems about alligators on escalators. . . . The quality of the poems is uneven; there are some Whitmanesque listings of urban sounds and smells that say nothing to me, but the editor notes that all the poems have been tested and chosen for their appeal to young people. That may be an adequate value. Another flaw is that some of the photographs could be more relevant to the poems they face. All in all though, this is a book that should bring many happy surprises to urban kids soured on poems about daffodils and nightingales." L. P. Scanlon

Commonweal 89:291 N 22 '68 160w

"The jumble of city living is sorted into neat bundles of sights, people, images, common childhood experiences—an approach which should be helpful to teachers. Most of the poems come from standard collections of magazines, but it is good to have them together, especially with numerous full-page photographs which reinforce the messages. Though a few humorous poems are included, there is a striking note of detachment in many pieces, showing poets as observers rather than participants in the tradition of urban life." Priscilla Moxom

Library J 93:4724 D 15 '68 130w

Reviewed by C. H. Simonds

Nat R 20:1281 D 17 '68 30w

"Sharp, immediate, full of evocative music . . . the book has poems whose sequences arrive thrilling and smiting at one's life. . . . The short ones, the loving ones, the mysterious ones, the shouting ones, the ones with animals, the ones from other cultures, the ones perhaps most like children—very frail and very strong, like bubbles. . . . [This book] opens up a great landscape of poems that children want." Muriel Rukeyser

N Y Times Bk R p38 N 10 '68 360w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland

Sat R 51:29 D 21 '68 110w

LARSEN, EGON. Munich. (Cities of the world) 80p pl $3.95 Barnes, A.S.

914.3 Munich—Description

67-21488

The author describes the Munich of today. Index.

"Mr. Larsen, a Münchner . . . for most of this century, writes with wit, taste, affection, and frankness of a city he loves. His comments are invariably helpful, and he succeeds in avoiding those guidebook clichés that have become a language of their own. These light-hearted pages are wholeheartedly recommended to anyone planning a first trip to Bavaria." T. M. Robinson

Library J 93:550 F 1 '68 80w

TLS p739 Ag 17 '67 600w

LARSON, ARTHUR. Eisenhower: the President nobody knew. 210p il $5.95 Scribner

973.921 Eisenhower, Dwight David 68-27778

"Larson is a close friend of former President Eisenhower and was the director of the U.S. Information Agency, one of the President's speech writers, and an assistant to him during his term of office. This book is . . . an assessment of the ex-President's philosophy and opinions while in the White House. Mr. Larson's conclusions—Eisenhower's handling of foreign affairs was superb, but his actions on domestic issues were somewhat ineffective. . . . [He] presents Eisenhower as the man who met crises with strength and decision." (Library J)

"[Larson] portrays Eisenhower as a man who lived by basic principles—'rigid rules of life'—that were not understood by the press and many of his associates. . . . Within these limitations, Eisenhower operated much more effectively than his critics seemed to realize. In Mr. Larson's view, Eisenhower managed to overcome the domestic and international crises he faced with patience, subtlety and undramatic strength of character. . . . More than any other President in the last 20 years, Eisenhower strongly supported the United Nations . . . and other international efforts. . . . Larson shows that his activities in all these areas were based upon deep and abiding principles. . . . His book should be considered as a valuable contribution to the understanding of a charismatic leader." F. K. Kelly

America 119:220 S 21 '68 700w

Reviewed by G. W. Johnson

Book World p21 N 3 '68 900w

"This book is not really a biography. . . . While Mr. Larson may be called a liberal Republican, Eisenhower was more moderate in his approach to domestic problems. Therefore, they did not always agree. Yet, even in discussion in this field, the treatment is generally laudatory. . . . Larson here attempts to enhance this image. However, a more powerful book than this will be needed to bring Eisenhower into the company of the great presidents. Use this one for supplementary reading not as a biographical study." S. L. Mott

Library J 93:2883 Ag '68 210w

"[An] affectionate and quite informative memoir of [Larson's] years near the center of the Eisenhower circle to bolster his conviction that Ike 'unquestionably ranks among the great Presidents.' That is a highly subjective opinion, naturally, since there is no generally acceptable scale of values for measuring Presidential greatness. . . . The subtitle of this slender volume, 'The President Nobody Knew,' is a bit overblown: it isn't all that revealing. But it is full of astute and provocative insights, some of them quite new to this reviewer, into Eisenhower the Man and Eisenhower the President. . . . If the reader does not come away sold on Mr. Larson's thesis about Eisenhower's 'greatness,' he will at least have a sounder footing for whatever opinion he does hold." Cabell Phillips

N Y Times Bk R p8 O 13 '68 1250w

LARSON, JEAN RUSSELL. The silkspinnors; il. by Uri Shulevitz. 93p lib bdg $3.95 Scribner

67-23688

"The last group of weavers in all China . . . lived in a remote place, jealously guarding a once-great art. It was young Li Po of Foochow who determined to find the Silkspinnors and persuade them to return to the world that needed them. Equipped with a quick wit, courage, kindness and his flute, Li Po set forth on his quest. Weathering stormy seas in a junk sailed by an erratic captain, he reached a distant island and made a friend of a much-feared monster. He tricked a sorcerer. He befriended an overworked coolie and solved a food shortage in the town of Woo. And . . . he won the Silkspinners back from the sadness born of selfishness to the joy of giving." (Book World) "Grades three to five." (Library J)

LARSON, J. R.—Continued

"An air of elegance and enchantment pervades this tale of ancient China. The prose flows as easily and smoothly as lustrous silk once did from the skilled hands of the Silkspinners. . . . [The] line drawings, Oriental in feeling, have style and humor in perfect harmony with the text. A lovely book." P. G. Book World p20 O 29 '67 140w

"The boy finds the silkspinners—a group of people who have opted out of society in disapproval of society's bad ways. (Sounds familiar, doesn't it?) The boy persuades them to return without too much difficulty—the limitations of a closed-community life had already begun to tell. Which might sound like every parent's message to hippies except that Mrs. Larson has such a light, subtle touch that it doesn't read that way." P. M. D.

Christian Science Monitor pB6 N 2 '67 100w

Reviewed by H. B. Quimby
Library J 92:3852 O 15 '67 110w
N Y Times Bk R p28 Ja 21 '68 70w

LASAGNA, LOUIS. Life, death, and the doctor.

322p $6.95 Knopf

610 Medicine. Public health. Physicians

67-18612

In the first part of this book the author "takes a critical look at medical education and offers a variety of . . . approaches to improvement. In the largest section of the book he deals with the explosive issues that revolve around the question of who shall live—birth control, abortion, euthanasia, human experimentation, organ transplants, and heredity control. He then discusses the interaction of medicine and law." (Library J) Index.

Christian Century 85:821 Je 19 '68 30w

"A reasoned, candid, and informed examination of the vital medical questions of our times. [Dr. Lasagna] writes with style, conviction, and a high degree of objectivity. He operates from the rather rare principle among doctors that the public has as much right and ability as the professional to understand sensitive controversial issues. . . . Medical, public and academic libraries will find this book a worthwhile addition." M. L. Garvey

Library J 93:2014 My 15 '68 200w

Reviewed by Matt Clark

New Repub 159:21 Ag 3 '68 550w

"[Lasagna] has now produced the finest book on medicine for the general reader in the last 20 years. . . . Each section stands as a brief, informed and literate analysis of a remarkably complex problem. It is the author's peculiar gift that he can say in 10 pages what other men require whole volumes to deal with. . . . There are moments when he seems too reasonable, too fair. He can be infuriating in his honesty and detachment. . . . This is not to say Lasagna is neutral; he is not. But he does not propose to solve the medical problems of the world in a single volume; he is unwilling to simplify issues in order to justify his stance. In the final analysis, this restraint is the book's great virtue." J. M. Crichton

N Y Times Bk R p28 N 10 '68 320w

"Independent and literate, no spokesman for the AMA or other strongholds of 'doctor power,' Lasagna has performed a thorough examination on his profession and discovered alarming symptoms of decay, neglect and senility. Almost everything he says is available to the interested reader elsewhere, but nothing could be more useful than this compendious handbook of medicine's ills, written with fairness, much verve, rich documentation and a passionately liberal point of view." R. A. Sokolov

Newsweek 71:96B Je 17 '68 800w

LASSALLE, H. M. ENOMIYA-. See Enomiya-Lassalle, H. M.*LASSWELL, HAROLD D., jt. auth. Formosa, China, and the United Nations. See Chen, L.-C.*LASZLO, ERVIN, ed. Philosophy in the Soviet Union; a survey of the mid-sixties; comp. and ed. by Ervin Laszlo. (Sovietica; publications of the Inst. of East-European studies. Univ. of Fribourg). 208p $10 Praeger

197 Philosophy, Russian. Dialectical materialism

This survey comprises "papers by Gustav A. Wetter, Joseph M. Bocheński, K. G. Ballestrem, and other Western specialists. . . . Among the subjects discussed are aesthetics, ethics, logic, atheism, psychology, and social, political, and legal philosophy, as well as the relation of this vast corpus of thought (and of the men who are developing it) to Western philosophers and philosophy." (Publisher's note) "The studies on Soviet logic and atheism have originally appeared in a special issue of Inquiry (Vol. 9,1) devoted to philosophy in Eastern Europe. . . . The other papers of this volume are reprinted from Studies in Soviet Thought." (Foreword)

"The authors, mostly past or present associates of the University of Fribourg's Institute of East-European Studies, are among the leading Western specialists in Soviet philosophy. They report informatively and critically on recent developments in various areas of Soviet thought. . . . Not as comprehensive or systematic as [G. A.] Wetter's Dialectical Materialism: A Historical and Systematic Survey of Philosophy in the Soviet Union [BRD 1959] or Bocheński's Soviet Russian Dialectical Materialism, but an updating of those works that is an indispensable supplement to them, particularly for libraries that do not take Studies in Soviet Thought."

Choice 5:509 Je '68 160w

"Whether the authors deal with Soviet ideas about God's existence, the Soviet concept of truth, theory of objective beauty, or freedom of thought, it can be said that in none [of the essays] is the treatment superficial. Because there is inevitably some repetition of subject matter in several essays, the difference in approach and emphasis is a definite advantage." H. H. Bernt

Library J 92:4161 N 15 '67 160w

LATHAM, JOHN WILKINSON. British military swords; from 1800 to the present day.

91p il pl $5.95 Crown

739.7 Arms and armor

67-26322

"A director of 195-year-old Wilkinson Sword Ltd., . . . presents in chronological arrangement within their categories descriptions and . . . photographic plates illustrating swords of general officers, the brigade of guards, infantry, household cavalry, cavalry, artillery, and of engineers and corps. . . . The appendixes, in effect, are subchapters concerned with methods of supply, British government specifications, sword knots, variations in regulation problems, and a . . . 1790 controversial paper affirming the superiority of English swords over German ones. (Library J)

"The 'Select Bibliography' is a little frustrating for the American reader because many of the references are necessarily unfamiliar and not readily available. This book should be welcomed by all collectors of English, European, and American arms. It is the only definitive work of this scope and will be indispensable to collectors of British militaria." L. B. McCauley

Library J 92:4492 D 15 '67 360w

"[This book's] fundamental weakness lies in the author's apparent failure to appreciate the importance of sound documentation in a work of this kind. . . . In the book's favour it can be said that it includes very useful sections on the history of the nineteenth-century sword scandals, the manufacture of swords, methods of supply (including reproductions of some hitherto unpublished makers' marks), and government specifications for swords. It is also extremely well produced, with a really excellent series of half-tone illustrations, mostly of sword-hilts, and one colour plate."

TLS p222 Mr 16 '67 350w

LATHEN, EMMA. Murder against the grain.

184p $4.50 Macmillan (N Y)

67-20183

"Theft of nearly a million dollars in the course of the commercial complications surrounding a goodwill wheat deal joins [John Putnam] Thatcher to a professional detective from Moscow . . . [Mikhail Maseryan and to Inspector Lyons] from the New York police. Each makes his . . . contribution to the unravelling of [the mystery]." (TLS)

Reviewed by M. K. Grant

Library J 92:2813 Ag '67 90w

"I keep saying 'urbane, witty, faultless, delightful'; what other adjectives is one to use for Lathen's precise blends of formal detection and acute social satire?" Anthony Boucher
N Y Times Bk R p47 S 17 '67 110w

Reviewed by Sergeant Cuff

Sat R 50:37 O 28 '67 40w

"Miss Lathen boldly tackles United States/Soviet trade relations in a charming book of classic quality. . . . [Her] touch with international relations is perfectly balanced, and her light asides, such as the performing otters and the beatnik club, are charming. Also, this is good proper detection."

TLS p1242 D 21 '67 210w

LATHEN, EMMA. A stitch in time. 185p $4.50
Macmillan (N Y)

68-17201

John Putnam Thatcher, bank vice-president "has problems in settling the estate of the late Pemberton Freebody because Atlantic Mutual Insurance says Freebody was a suicide, and therefore refuses to pay the $100,000 policy on his life to Hanover University. The university takes the case to court, and the trial of the century begins when the company calls Dr. Wendell Martin of Southport Memorial Hospital to the stand." (Library J) Among other novels featuring Thatcher as banker-detective are Accounting for Murder (BRD 1965) and Murder Makes the Wheels Go 'Round (BRD 1966).

"This is an articulate study of the high cost of drugs, as well as a picture of the infinite variety of knowledge at the fingertips of a small-town banker. Emma Lathen at her hilarious best even though I wouldn't put this book in a hospital library." M. K. Grant
Library J 93:2262 Je 1 '68 120w

"Seventh in a remarkable series of detective stories about Wall Street banker John Putnam Thatcher. Doctors, being human, have left various items of hardware in patients since the beginning of surgery, but rarely does such an instance turn an entire hospital upside down and reveal its unexpectedly unsavory contents. Thatcher gets drawn into the matter as a more or less disinterested but curious onlooker: why did the highly successful if absent-minded doctor who is opportunely bashed on the head leave no money to soothe his grief-stricken wife? A nice puzzle in a most interesting setting—and Miss Lathen's witty, beautifully-controlled writing is a particular pleasure." A. J. Hubin

N Y Times Bk R p24 J1 7 '68 110w

Reviewed by Sergeant Cuff

Sat R 51:34 J1 27 '68 50w

"[The author is] a writer with a social conscience. . . . In [this book] she takes rather more sighting shots at the American group whose guaranteed incomes are, as she says, 'roughly ten times the national average.' This group is composed of American doctors. And no British reader is going to finish Miss Lathen's cunning, witty new book without thanking heaven for the N.H.S. . . . Most writers, and especially most American writers, with social consciences run them up on a flagpole. Not so Miss Lathen: anyone would think she put proper presentation of a story first, last and always. That she has a conscience can be no more than a burgeoning suspicion."

TLS p880 Ag 15 '68 180w

LATOUR, ANNY. The resurrection of Israel; tr. by Margaret S. Summers. 404p maps $7.95 World pub.

956.94 Palestine—History. Zionism—History.
Israel—History 67-26958.

"An attempt to present, by means of letters, diaries, memoirs and newspaper reports, the . . . history of the Jew's relation to the land of Israel." (N Y Times Bk R) Glossary. Chronology. Bibliography. Index. First published in 1965 as La Résurrection d'Israël.

"Latour, a French historian who herself played a small role in furthering the Zionist cause . . . [has woven excerpted material] chronologically into a somewhat sketchy and episodic account, drawn together by brief connecting narrative. The story is sometimes touching, sometimes entertaining, it nearly always holds the reader's interest. But it is not a history and the treatment is, of course, one-sided. A bibliography is included, though specific references, unfortunately, are not given for the sources quoted. The book's value is as a supplementary volume to one of the numerous political histories of modern Zionism."

Choice 5:1348 D '68 120w

"In 24 chapters of the present book, each pretentiously labeled . . . Miss Latour connects extensive quotations from recognized works about Israel and the Jews with short paragraphs of her own trivia. . . . The library that wants a general history of the Jews or of Israel should look elsewhere; for the comprehensive collection, rest assured that you have most of the works Miss Latour has so extensively quoted here." William Newman

Library J 93:991 Mr 1 '68 200w

"Filled with interesting tidbits of history, You will discover who wrote the Hatikvah, the national anthem of Israel; how the Zionist flag came into existence; Theodor Herzl's anguished feelings over his unsuccessful attempts to interest the leaders of Europe in the Zionist cause; Ben-Gurion's reactions to his first day in Palestine; and so on. The material is connected by a running narrative. But too much is attempted and the result is a thinness of documentation and a cinematographic effect that is wearying in the end."

Chaim Potok

N Y Times Bk R p3 Je 9 '68 280p

LATTIMORE, ELEANOR, jt. ed. Silks, spices and empire. See Lattimore, O.

LATTIMORE, OWEN, ed. Silks, spices and empire; Asia seen through the eyes of its discoverers; ed, annot. and introduced by Owen and Eleanor Lattimore [maps by Andrew Mudryk]. 340p $8.95 Delacorte press

915 Asia—Description and travel. Voyages and travels 67-24633

"Lattimore, head of the department of Oriental studies, University of Leeds, . . . [presents an anthology of narratives which] span more than 20 centuries and were written by a variety of people: traders, diplomats, Buddhist monks, Christian missionaries, adventurers, and empire builders. Although most of the accounts were written by Europeans, there are also those written by several Chinese monks and a North African adventurer." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"[The authors] have surveyed the early accounts of travel in Asia and have selected those which illustrate the excitement of the discoverers. . . . The introduction and notes greatly enhance the text. This is a collection which should appeal to the general reader and is recommended for public and high school libraries particularly." C. W. Stucki

Library J 93:4140 N 1 '68 110w

"[The Lattimores] stuck to the subtitle of [their work] and managed to do so in an original and imaginative way. The result is a personal and integrated book, not a routine academic compendium. For they introduce us to their Asia, which they have been studying for over thirty years, and in doing so they put China and Japan firmly in their geographical place—the periphery of Asia, not the center. The Asia that comes through this book is an area known to few of us. . . . Though the area includes much of western and northern China, there is little that is conventionally 'oriental' in the images we are presented. . . . Much of Owen Lattimore's research has been concerned with Mongols, and not surprisingly they form an important undercurrent in this book." Jonathan Spence

N Y Times Bk R p51 S 15 '68 900w

LATTIMORE, RICHMOND, tr. The odyssey of Homer. See Homer

LAUFER, LEOPOLD. Israel and the developing countries: new approaches to cooperation. 298p $6: pa $2.50 Twentieth cent. fund 338.91 Technical assistance. International cooperation 67-29176

The author, a staff member "of the U.S. Agency for International Development, describes Israeli cooperation with some 80 developing countries of Africa, Latin America, Asia, and the Mediterranean area. . . . The cooperation consists mainly of technical assistance . . . either by exporting Israeli expertise to developing nations or by training their nationals in Israel. Mr. Laufer reviews briefly several multilateral channels of cooperation, such as the UN, the Organization of American States, and the Colombo plan, and some bilateral arrangements of selected countries." (Library J) Index.

LAUFER, LEOPOLD—Continued

"Laufer's study provides a detailed description of [Israeli programs]. . . . The crucial question is the transferability of any of [the Israeli] institutions to other countries. . . . The author does not sufficiently evaluate the impact that trainers had in their own countries . . . [and] there is insufficient analysis of their successes and failures. . . . [The book concludes] with a brief description of other aid programs, especially on the part of some developing countries to others. Taiwan's and Yugoslavia's aid program are especially noted . . . [as are] the many advantages of these programs as compared with those of the highly developed countries. [Laufer] would have strengthened his case had he provided detailed case studies of some of these programs. Nonetheless, the book is an important contribution to the study of economic development and the role of various foreign aid programs in aiding this process." E. Kanovsky

Ann Am Acad 337:186 My '68 750w

"An examination in depth of the experience and potentialities of mutual assistance activities among developing countries. . . . Israel's assistance programs in youth training, agriculture, professional training, and joint commercial enterprises are described and evaluated. In less detail and depth, Laufer presents the multilateral and bilateral programs initiated by emerging countries other than Israel and not involving Israel. This important book is based upon field research in 20 countries and interviews and discussions with hundreds of knowledgeable people on five continents. It describes a new force in the development process. . . . Highly recommended."

Choice 5:838 S '68 120w

"This survey should be of special interest to international and governmental agencies assisting developing countries, to economic departments of academic libraries, and to interested readers." Victor Novak

Library J 93:1474 Ap 1 '68 160w

LAUNAY, A. J., comp. Dictionary of contemporaries. 368p $15 Philosophical lib.

920 Chronology, Historical. Biography—Dictionaries 67-31998

"The aim of this dictionary is to show who were the contemporaries of any . . . influentially creative person of note, born at any time before 1900 A.D. . . . In each section [covering] twenty-five years, writers, artists and composers are given separate headings [and listed alphabetically with birth and death dates.] The sections are preceded . . . by a general list [of] major events, kings, presidents, heads of State, reigning popes, and notable persons." (Pref) Index.

"The emphasis on contemporaries is somewhat misleading, but perhaps the book might be useful for leading to sources of influence. However, there is much repetition and indeed this nonbook could have been produced by the author's feeding all the entries in Webster's Biographical Dictionary into a computer. The fact that the last section is '1876-1900' is also a decided drawback. Hardly necessary for any library, particularly at this price." H. S. Weeks

Library J 93:1128 Mr 15 '68 260w

"This very useful dictionary . . . is a valuable reference for historians, biographers, students, and general readers."

Social Studies 59:234 O '68 80w

LAURENCE, A. village in Normandy: written and il. by Laurence. unpub $3.75; lib bdg $4.75 Bobbs

914.4 Normandy—Description and travel—Juvenile literature 67-20456

"In French as well as in English, the narrative describes the daily rounds of Ferdinand, the postman, from the time of his breakfast at the café to his final delivery at the blacksmith shop." (Horn Bk) "Ages five to eight." (N Y Times Bk R)

"The charm and flavor of life in rural France is evoked in a beautiful picture book. . . . As Ferdinand rides his bicycle from place to place on the village green, the author-artist uses muted blues, greens, grays, and reds against white to depict the ancient stone buildings, the verdant countryside, and the cozy warmth of the general store." S. D. L.

Horn Bk 44:411 Ag '68 120w

Reviewed by H. B. Quimby
Library J 93:3291 S 15 '68 60w

Reviewed by Nona Balakian
N Y Times Bk R p8 Je 9 '68 180w

LAURENCE, JOHN. The seeds of disaster: a guide to the realities, race policies and world-wide propaganda campaigns of the Republic of South Africa. 333p pl maps $5.95 Taplinger

968 Africa, South—Race relations. Propaganda, South African 68-20088

The purpose of this book is "to describe and dissect the propaganda image being advanced by the South African Government of itself and its policies. . . . [The] book provides a general survey of South Africa—its history, its peoples and its problems. . . . The author also examines the regime's overseas propaganda drives, disclosing the active role played by South African Nationalists in fostering racial unrest abroad, particularly in countries such as the United States. . . . [He seeks to] show how an organized domestic campaign of 'brainwashing' and censorship is conducted at home in order to exploit and reinforce the traditional feelings of racial hostility between the Bantu and the white South African." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by V. S. Kearney
America 119:560 N 30 '68 100w

"This report will convince many readers that apartheid land poses a serious threat to world peace. . . . Laurence's recurrent theme is 'Beware of South Africa's propaganda.' The country's current campaign of 'sweet reasonableness' is merely a smokescreen, he says, and he documents his contention with voluminous detail. No mere tourist, Laurence has worked for years in South Africa. Furthermore, he is an advertising man and knows how to separate fact from fiction. . . . Using official government releases [he] exposes the truth behind the smiling mask. Instead of the desired image of generous whites taking care of incompetent blacks, we view the bald injustices of legalized brutality. . . . He exposes such euphemisms as 'separate freedom' and 'peaceful coexistence,' and includes unforgettable descriptions of what is without doubt a closed society and a police state." A. C. Payne

Christian Century 85:1175 S 18 '68 380w

"This book is a clear telling of why people who in part, at least, certainly are decent and humane can become a nation of blind zealots. Buy it and recommend it." M. D. Herrick

Library J 93:3795 O 15 '68 90w

Reviewed by David Lytton
New Statesman 75:620 My 10 '68 110w

Reviewed by C. C. O'Brien
N Y Rev of Books 11:18 N 7 '68 220w

"Laurence shows how official propaganda effectively disguises the true state of affairs. . . . The description of the anonymous voice of the S.A.B.C. [South African Broadcasting Company] provides a chilling chapter calculated to dispel any lingering doubts about the totalitarian trend in the management of the country's affairs. If [this book] were made compulsory reading in South Africa would it materially alter public opinion? (The suggestion is purely hypothetical; the book is banned in South Africa.) One has the impression that logic and fact are already debased currency: the racial situation is so bound up with irrational fears that white South Africa no longer has any will to disbelieve what official voices tell it. But the outside observer, at least, has been warned."

TLS p522 My 23 '68 1200w

LAURIE, BOB, jr. auth. Skiers' paradise. See Lund, M.

LAVALLEY, ALBERT J. Carlyle and the idea of the modern; studies in Carlyle's prophetic literature and its relation to Blake, Nietzsche, Marx, and others. 351p $8.50 Yale univ. press
828 Carlyle, Thomas 68-13916

The associate professor of English, San Francisco State College, "takes Carlyle out of his historical context and attempts to 'demonstrate his central role in a dominant modern tradition, that of the artist as problematic prophet. . . . He examines Carlyle's concern with the unconscious, his exploration of alienation, his awareness of multiplicity, and his attempt to resolve these strands of thought through personal myth. He also compares Carlyle with . . . other 'moderns.'" (Library J) Bibliography.

Choice 5:1300 D '68 160w

"Mr. LaValley's perspective can be suggestive, but it also leads him far afield. The considerable saving grace is his careful analysis of each of Carlyle's major works, an analysis in which the Carlyle we are accustomed to is presented with fresh insight. The best of recent Carlyle studies, the book is a necessary purchase for colleges and is highly recommended for public libraries." Keith Cushman

Library J 93:2245 Je 1 '68 200w

Reviewed by Christopher Ricks

N Y Rev of Books 11:31 D 24 '68 1200w

"Mr. LaValley is an intelligent scholar-critic partly disabled by the loose impressionistic type of approach that he has adopted. . . . He writes shrewdly on Heroes and Hero-Worship and has valuable insights on Past and Present and Sartor Resartus. He makes good use of Blake and Nietzsche. . . . There are plenty of good things said . . . but they have to be deciphered. If American dissertations on Eng. Lit. continue to be written in a language so heavy with abstractions—polarities, paradigms, conceptualizations, redemptive processes, mythologizings clog Mr. LaValley's pages—we shall soon be forced to insist that it is a foreign language and needs to be translated for the English market."

TLS p675 Je 27 '68 850w

"[The author] makes Carlyle come alive in his pages without overvaluing him. Particularly the chapter on The French Revolution has something of Carlyle's cheerful daemonic drive and his rich problematic comprehensiveness. . . . Mr. LaValley enjoys sweeping and approximately specific historical comparisons, and his writing has a looseness that goes with its flexibility, verve, and generosity. He occasionally falls into the vice of considering major nineteenth-century writers—for instance, Dostoevsky—as examples of trends rather than as artists whose work cannot so easily be packaged even for a moment. And the last chapters of the book, though valuable illustrations of Mr. LaValley's arguments seem too long drawn out. But . . . [the book] is a clear, forceful, relevant study."

Yale R 57:XVIII summer '68 800w

LAVAN, GEORGE, ed. Che Guevara speaks. See Guevara, E.

LAVENDER, DAVID. The Rockies [maps by Harry Scott]. 404p $8.95 Harper

978 Rocky Mountains. The West—History 68-17036

This book traces the range's history, "focusing new attention on the period that began in 1859, following the first gold strikes. . . . Mr. Lavender tells the story of primitive towns burgeoning into industrial complexes: Denver, Pueblo, Helena, Salt Lake City, among many others. . . . [and] is especially concerned with the get-rich-quick spirit which pervaded the Rockies and led to violence, lawlessness, vigilantism, and political expediency. . . . [He reveals] the struggles from which eventually evolved codes peculiar to the mountainous West, relating to mineral claims and grazing laws, water rights, [and] forest reclamation." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"Mr. Lavender has produced a volume so comprehensive in scope that it is bound to become a standard work in this field. . . . He takes us along the white man's path in time, from discovery in 1540 to the 20th century. . . . [His] book can be highly recommended as ■ history of the American West. It has good maps and excellent pictures on the fly leaves, . . . my only disappointment was in the lack of illustrations." Charles Dollen

Best Sell 28:74 My 15 '68 410w

Reviewed by W. O. Douglas

Book World p3 Je 16 '68 500w

"[This book] is a montage of historical sketches carefully drawn to document the author's strong conservationist point of view. All through the book, he moves toward the conclusion that the West, traditionally exploited, is now faced by what he calls the 'new stampede.' . . . Relying principally upon better known published sources, with a generous sprinkling of references to more specific documentary items, the author has produced a work that reads well; but it is shot through with strong personal overtones. . . . The fact that the book has a distinct point of view strengthens rather than weakens it." R. G. Athearn

J Am Hist 55:662 D '68 330w

"The book is carefully planned, packed with incidents and stories, and is easy to read. Public libraries with an interest in the West will find this a good addition." Marco Thorne

Library J 93:1630 Ap 15 '68 130w

LAVROV, PETER. Historical letters; tr. with an introd. and notes by James P. Scanlan. 371p $9.50 Univ. of Calif. press

320.01 Political science—Philosophy 67-18900

Based on the so-called Paris edition, published in Geneva in 1891, this is "the first complete translation into English. . . . Lavrov was the founder and chief ideologue of the main trend of Russian Populism. It was he who defined the social and moral obligation of the Russian educated man in the humanization of popular life." (Choice) Annotated bibliographies. Index.

"The Historical Letters are a vital source for the study of the revolutionary movement and for Russian social thought generally. Scanlan provides an informative biographical sketch and a most valuable analysis of Lavrov's intellectual development and writings. The notes provide a wealth of illumination; the bibliography constitutes an essential guide for the student of Russian social and intellectual history. Courses in Russian intellectual development are the material beneficiaries of this creditable work."

Choice 4:1434 F '68 130w

"The general reader may well wonder why [this work] should have caused such tremendous heartsearching among young radicals of [its] day. It contains a great deal of convoluted argument on matters of social theory (not, as the title would suggest, of history) and puts forward the thesis that privileged intellectuals owe a moral debt to the common people, which they can repay by ministering to their needs and spreading the gospel of socialism. . . . In his introduction to these essays Mr Scanlan shows that Lavrov was less of a marxian determinist than is commonly supposed, but he overlooks the perverted religious impulse that inspired Lavrov's militant secure progressivism."

Economist 225:527 N 4 '67 180w

Reviewed by Leonard Schapiro

N Y Rev of Books 11:25 D 5 '68 350w

TLS p128 F 8 '68 400w

LAWALL, GILBERT. Theocritus' Coan pastorals; a poetry book. (Washington, D.C. Center for Hellenic studies. Publication) 144p $5 Harvard univ. press

884 Theocritus—Idyllia 67-14343

The author "investigates Idylls 1-7 for structural and linguistic parallels, and concludes that they were written to be read together, in the order in which the Vatican recension has them; that the collection was composed in Cos. in the late 270's. . . . [and] is distinguished by certain pervasive antinomies, such as the distinction between the private and the public realm, between town and country. [He considers that Idyll 7] . . . summarizes and perfects all the features present in the rest of the Coan collection." (Class World) Index.

"This book will be helpful in many ways to those studying Theocritus. An appendix treats the chronology of the poet. An index includes a list of passages cited. The discussions of these passages are imaginative interpretations based upon a sound sense for the meaning of metaphor and symbol. But far from a random discussion of passages, there is developed an important theory that Idylls 1-7 were all composed on the island of Cos as a poetry book. Idyll 7 is not a real harvest, but an autobiographical harvest of poetry which recapitulates the themes of the first six poems. . . . This book is a tribute to the aims of the Center for Hellenic Studies, under whose sponsorship it was written and published."

LAWALL, GILBERT—Continued

Choice 5:338 My '68 180w

"As a critic who looks for unity in a poem and between the poems of a corpus, [Lawall] is perhaps not sufficiently alert to the question whether a pastoral lyric ought to be judged by the same standards as other literary forms. Terms like 'heroic,' 'metaphysical,' 'symbolic' abound; the danger is that so massive an attack may shoot over the heads of its targets. There are some excellent remarks, such as the comparison of Lycidas with a sculptured satyr. . . . [However,] this reviewer happens to be out of sympathy with [the author's] critical method; that is, probably, why he cannot accept [his] thesis of a Coan collection. It seems no more likely than Hubaux's thesis of an original collection of ten." T. G. Rosenmeyer

Class World 61:114 N '67 290w

LAWICK-GOODALL, JANE VAN, Baroness. My friends the wild chimpanzees; phot. by Baron Hugo van Lawick; foreword by Leonard Carmichael; prepared by Nat. geographic special publications division, Robert L. Breeden, chief. 204p $4.25 Nat. geographic soc.

599 Chimpanzees

67-12051

This story was written by "a young woman who spent almost seven years observing chimpanzees in the Gombe Stream Game Reserve in Tanzania, Africa. . . . Her observations mainly cover family structure and social interactions. . . . [In addition the author] describes her personal adventures and misadventures." (Natur Hist) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"[The author] discovered that wild chimps not only use tools . . . but they also contrive them . . . and they include meat in their diet. Undoubtedly, Mrs. Goodall is saving much of her information for a more complete report. Such information may have been considered inappropriate for the intended audience of this book. Recommended for the general reader." Vincent Caccese

Library J 92:2424 Je 15 '67 180w

Library J 92:2666 JI '67 70w [YA]

"An ingenious and charming story. . . . [Jane's account] is one to inspire admiration. . . . There are a few minor points that I found objectionable . . . but they do not mar the general high quality of the book with its especially outstanding photographs. The color plates are magnificent, large, and abundant. They are probably the finest collection of chimpanzee portraits to be found. . . . There is an excellent photographic series on the range and diversity of facial expressions, on grooming activities, on baboons with chimpanzees, and on gesturing behavior used in different social situations. It is a book that I can unreservedly recommend to all readers." Evelyn Shaw

Natur Hist 76:99 D '67 650w

LAWRENCE, D. H. D. H. Lawrence: poems selected for young people, by William Cole; drawings by Ellen Raskin. 120p $3.95; 11b bdg $3.77 Viking

821

67-3752

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by Anthony Thwaite

New Statesman 76:600 N 1 '68 140w

Reviewed by R. J. Mills

Poetry 112:129 My '68 240w

TLS p1109 O 3 '68 300w

LAWRENCE, D. H. Phoenix II; uncollected, unpublished, and other prose works by D. H. Lawrence; coll. and ed. with an introd. and notes by Warren Roberts and Harry T. Moore. 640p $12.50 Viking

828

68-2311

"Six years after D. H. Lawrence's death, Edward D. McDonald edited Phoenix [BRD 1936], a . . . collection of his posthumous papers. These were the known prose nonfiction works that had not previously been published in book form in a D. H. Lawrence volume. . . . Since then a number of other uncollected pieces have come to light; still others have appeared only in scattered Lawrence volumes that are out of print or not easily available. Phoenix II now brings these . . . pieces together. A few of them, such as the unused 'Preface to Black Swans' and two . . . autobiographical fragments, are from manuscript. . . . Many of the others, such as the discarded Prologue to Women in Love, have appeared in periodicals but were never included in earlier Lawrence volumes. . . . The small volume of essays called Reflections on the Death of a Porcupine and the entire contents of Assorted Articles are reprinted here complete." (Publisher's note) Index.

"The bird rises from the ashes much less robustly this second time around. . . . [The editors] would seem to have gone into the highest attic and the most remote closet in order to complete the Lawrence canon, with the result that the greater portion of what they print can be of interest only to the absolute zealot, the devotee of Lawrence who wants everything. . . . The fiction in Phoenix II is nearly all very early and almost all of it shows Lawrence in his clumsiest, most self-conscious or most eccentric manners. . . . Much the best piece . . . as the editors indicate they too feel, is Lawrence's Introduction to Memoirs of the Foreign Legion, by Maurice Magnus. Lawrence, we learn, once spoke of it as his finest piece of writing, and if it is scarcely that it is very good and wholly convincing." Richard Gilman

New Repub 158:31 Mr 23 '68 1150w

"[This collection] contains work ranging from 1907 to 1929, just before Lawrence's death, and shows [his] range of voices clearly. It shows, too, that although there is some chronological development—Lawrence did get his truer tones of voice through more consistently in the Twenties—he was nevertheless capable of reverting to all sorts of odd and uncertain tones almost up to his death. I hadn't realised before reading this second Phoenix collection just how many self-conscious, stylistic tricks he persisted in using." Richard Hoggart

New Statesman 75:796 Je 14 '68 2100w

"There are no letters, poems, or plays, but otherwise the total range of Lawrence's writing is represented . . . from every period and of every quality except flat. Lawrence may weary his reader with his railing, but his work is never lifeless; he is fully there in every line, for they are cries of his, these lines, and they are as he is, and go as he goes, whether well or ill, precisely. Nowhere in these pieces does he touch bottom . . . nowhere is he as sick as he was when he wrote 'The Woman Who Rode Away'; . . . rarely, also, did he write with such luminous and original beauty as he manages in 'Flowery Tuscany.' . . . The set is certainly superbly titled, for Lawrence lives, as the kids say: bright, burning, acrid, and smoky." W. H. Gass

N Y Rev of Books 11:3 Ag 1 '68 1500w

"Every admirer of Lawrence will want the handsome new volume alongside its predecessor (the familiar layout and style of which are happily retained). . . . Yet a doubt remains about whether this is the right way now to complete (or nearly complete) the work of collecting Lawrence's essays: the volume contains some items which are (or were very lately) in print, some long out of print, and some now printed for the first time. Many buyers will therefore be duplicating things they already have; others who might want a copy of, say, Assorted Articles . . . may be put off by the formidable expense of the whole big book. Still, the appearance of Phoenix II is an occasion for real gratification."

TLS p222 Mr 7 '68 1150w

LAWRENCE, JACOB. Harriet and the promised land. unp il $5.95 Windmill bks; for sale by Simon & Schuster

811

68-25752

This is the story in verse of "Harriet Tubman, the slave who became famous for her daring work as a conductor on the Underground Railroad." (Sat R) "Ages six to ten." (N Y Times Bk R)

"Mr. Lawrence's work consists of series of panels in which each dramatic episode of [the] story is rendered as a vivid pictorial tableau. . . . The interest resides not so much in the individual panel as in the cumulative force of the entire narrative series. . . . [The panels] are accompanied by brief, ballad-like verses. The quality of the color reproduction is not all that it might have been. . . . [but] the book must be counted a success, and a rare one—a children's book that treats a moving and heroic chapter of Negro history with feeling and dignity." Hilton Kramer

N Y Times Bk R p62 N 17 '68 260w

"The oversize pages lend themselves admirably to the bold and forceful paintings, somber in tones, stunningly composed, and starkly dramatic in mood." Zena Sutherland

Sat R 51:64 N 9 '68 60w

LAWRENCE, JOHN. Soviet Russia [maps drawn by Marc Sale]. (Countries of today) 127p il $4.25; lib bdg $4.12 White

914.7 Russia—Description and travel—Juvenile literature. Russia—History—Juvenile literature 68-18407

This book consists of two parts. The first, beginning with a description of the nation's geographical features, continues with an account of its history to 1967. The second half concerns life in Russia today—its cities, villages, religion, the Ukraine, the Asian provinces and Siberia. Index. "Grades seven to ten." (Library J)

"Fascinating and generally fair history of the Russian people, past and present. The land comes alive and the history almost contemporary as John Lawrence traces the nation from the Empire of Kiev to the Revolution and triumph of Communism in 1917. Most of the black and white photographs have never been seen before in the West." L. P. Scanlon

Commonweal 89:290 N 22 '68 50w

"An informal and loosely organized volume, spotty in coverage, simplified in approach, often misleading in its generalizations, and frequently archaic in its terminology. There is absolutely no mention of the Soviet governmental system, nor of Party organization, and errors of fact are common. . . . Two skeleton maps of Russia are included, both inaccurate and woefully uninformative. Mr. Lawrence can do better; his A History of Russia [BRD 1960] is an admirable introduction for teenage readers, but this present volume is a grave disappointment." Rosemary Neiswender

Library J 93:4420 N 15 '68 160w

"Soviet Russia is a misleading title for Mr. Lawrence's book, which is not an appraisal of present conditions in Soviet Russia but rather a lightning history of the republics that now form the Soviet Union. His approach is strictly regional, and he deals with the different republics in separate chapters. . . . [His] attitude is liberal, passing, for instance, from ritualistic denunciation of Stalinism to equally ritualistic praise for present rising standards of living."

TLS p1162 N 30 '67 70w

LAWRENCE, LOUISE DE KIRILINE. The lovely and the wild; drawings by Glen Loates. 228p $6.95 McGraw

598 Birds—Ontario 68-20508

"For over thirty years Mrs. Lawrence has lived among the balsam fir and black spruce forests of Ontario's Pimisi Bay region. . . . [Here she describes] feeding, flight, nesting and migration habits of the region's birds." (Publisher's note)

"A delightful volume of nature writing [which] is highly recommended for general collections." William Newman

Library J 93:1493 Ap 1 '68 170w

"Apart from contributing to the great pool of knowledge that bird banders collect all over the world, [the author] has discovered that the bands on the birds she trapped make it possible for her to distinguish one chickadee from another. . . . The sharpness of her observations and the accuracy of her notes have resulted in an abundance of detailed information that almost amounts to character sketches of individual birds. In her preliminary chapters Mrs. Lawrence writes with the strength and simplicity of Isak Dinesen. . . . Among many perceptive observations there is one in which [she] describes the loss of self that is involved in bird watching. The silence, the stillness, the attempt to be invisible over a long period of time change the proportions of her life and give her access to another world." Brooks Atkinson

N Y Times Bk R p26 Je 9 '68 460w

LAWRENCE, MILDRED. Inside the gate. 192p $3.50 Harcourt

68-25187

"Piper Hiatt had felt an outsider ever since she and her mother had moved to southern Florida just before her senior year in high school. All her efforts to become a part of the school life came to nothing. . . . Then she met Mitch. . . . a high-school dropout and a motorcycle enthusiast. . . . As Piper tried to help Mitch untangle his problems, she had less time for her own and was unwittingly drawn out of herself." (Publisher's note) "Age twelve and up." (Book World)

Best Sell 28:377 D 1 '68 90w

"The theme is well handled. The author avoids the flaw common to many teenage novels of miraculously turning her moth into a butterfly. Piper and Mitch's problems are normal in high school, and they make a realistic start at working them out." J. H. Clarke

Book World p26 (children's issue) N 3 '68 110w

"Miss Lawrence even understands the motorbike, appreciating it as a promise of freedom, not just a dangerous symbol of gangland." P. M.

Christian Science Monitor pB11 N 7 '68 100w

"Familiar problems and the age-old search for identity are interpreted here in contemporary terms. . . . Piper, who tells the story, is reluctant to lie, but is not above deception when it seems expedient. She has, however, a core of honesty, is perceptive of the needs of others despite a natural adolescent preoccupation with self; and her balance and wit make her engaging." R. H. V.

Horn Bk 44:564 O '68 190w

Reviewed by Peggy Sullivan

Library J 93:4732 D 15 '68 100w

LAWSON, DON, ed. Great air battles; World Wars I and II. 223p il $4.95; lib bdg $4.59 Lothrop

940.0 European War, 1914-1918—Aerial operations—Juvenile literature. World War, 1939-1945—Aerial operations—Juvenile literature 68-14065

A collection of "first hand accounts, stories and articles. . . . [which] depict the famous air battles of World Wars I and II." (Publisher's note) "Grades eight to ten." (Best Sell)

"The editor of this volume has compiled a fascinating account of the famous fighting planes and bombers used in World Wars I and II. Quentin Reynolds describes how aerial combat began in 1915; Winston Churchill writes of the 'Battle of Britain'; and a U.S. pilot describes his first bombing mission over Europe. Included are numerous photographs of fighters and bombers. Interesting and fast-moving."

Best Sell 28:65 My 1 '68 70w

Reviewed by C. G. Wood

Library J 93:[3318] S 15 '68 90w

"[This] collection of previously published pieces . . . does not deliver what the title promises, but, that fact aside, it is readable enough. . . . Curiously there is nothing on the air war in the Pacific except an account of the death of Admiral Yamamoto, which is interesting, but not terribly consequential. Mr. Lawson's commentary between pieces is informed and filled with affection for his subject." P. G. Fredericks

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p24 My 5 '68 130w

LAWSON, JOHN. A new voyage to Carolina; ed. with an introd. and notes by Hugh Talmage Lefler. 305p il maps $10 Univ. of N.C. press

917.56 North Carolina—Description and travel. Indians of North America—North Carolina. Natural history—North Carolina. South Carolina—Description and travel 67-23498

First published in 1709. Included with the account of Lawson's "overland swing through

LAWSON, JOHN—Continued

North and South Carolina in 1700 is a description of the government, history, settlement, and mercantilistic potential of North Carolina, a natural history of the region, and an . . . account of Indian life in the area." (J Am Hist) Index.

"[Lawson's] obvious delight with what he saw about him and his keen reportorial powers—whether describing the sex life of the possum or Indian, or a potential fertile settlement, or the flora and fauna, or the powers of the Indian 'Doctors and Conjures' to cure all manner of illness—originally made this a valuable promotional tract and more recently a fascinating source book of colonial Carolina. Hugh Lefler's introduction and notes provide clarity and a rich background for Lawson's book. The inclusion of DeBry's woodcuts of John White's drawings, plus other illustrations, maps, and a comprehensive index, makes this a definitive and handsome new edition of one of the most valuable of the early histories of the Carolinas." C. R. Haywood

J Am Hist 55:115 Je '68 210w

Va Q R 44:lxviii spring '68 120w

LAWSON, JOHN. The spring rider. 147p $3.95 Crowell

68-17079

Jacob and his sister Gray "meet the young Union soldier who lived—and died—so long ago and in whose yearly return to the ghostly battlefield is epitomized man's ambivalent yearnings for peace and for victory. Hannibal, the soldier falls in love with . . . [Gray] and knows that the only way he can keep her is to take her with him to death; he must choose between peace and fighting, between saving his beloved or sacrificing her. . . . Ages eleven to thirteen." (Sat R)

"Out of a legend of the past grew this imaginative, highly original story, a subtle blend of fantasy and reality that, even if not always clear to the reader, cannot fail to hold him fascinated from first page to last. . . . Threaded with poetry and dreams, with humor and common-sense, this is an oddly arresting tale, in which, against an often shadowy background, every character stands out alive and unforgettable." Polly Goodwin

Book World p14 O 13 '68 330w

Reviewed by John Allen

Christian Science Monitor pB11 N 7 '68 200w

Reviewed by L. P. Scanlon

Commonweal 89:289 N 22 '68 150w

Horn Bk 44:564 O '68 270w

Reviewed by Ruth Robinson

Library J 93:4732 D 15 '68 130w

"A breathtaking blend of fantasy and reality, its premise is disarmingly simple: from the dust of an Old Civil War battlefield in Virginia, the Union and Confederate armies rise to fight again. . . . Lawson is such a profoundly original writer that his work is more than the sum of its parts. Both poetic and homely, it speaks through intimations—creating a landscape in which the real and unreal blend together, and then evaporate like mist." Barbara Wersba

N Y Times Bk R p34 Ag 18 '68 240w

"Each spring, they say, the rider comes, thin and tall in his stovepipe hat, to watch over his people in a delicate merging of present and past. . . . Effective as a fantasy, stirring as an adventure story, touching as a plea for love and peace, but most impressive for the beauty of its writing, [this novel] has the ineluctable stamp of distinction." Zena Sutherland

Sat R 51:37 O 19 '67 170w

LAWTON, DENIS. Social class, language and education. 181p $5 Schocken

370.19 Social classes. Language and languages. Educational sociology 68-12141

Concerned with "lower-class pupils' comparative 'failure' at school, [the author] shows that the problem involves not simply ensuring equality of access to educational institutions, but also sub-cultural differences in attitude to and response to education. . . . [He shows the] differences in language development and usage between middle-class and lower-class children. Various theoretical and empirical studies are described. . . . [and] a critique is given of the work of Basil Bernstein on language and social class. There is also an account of the author's own research work on the speech and writing of secondary school boys." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index of authors. Index of subjects.

"Lawton's own findings prompt him to advise teachers against 'qualms of conscience' over trying to effect cognitive transformations of lower-class students under their direction. A scholarly work, the book offers an interesting European perspective on an ongoing North American educational concern."

Sat R 51:74 S 21 '68 100w

"This book is useful both as a compendium of the relevant information so far amassed on speech differences between some classes, and for Mr. Lawton's own experimental contributions and conclusions. . . . [There is] a summation of the relations between language and 'thought'—the section on Russian contributions to the subject is especially useful. It is, of course, now massively established that working-class and middle-class speech patterns differ, and that working-class speech patterns are inadequate to middle-class educational paths. But even at the detailed levels of Mr. Bernstein's and Mr. Lawton's work, we need more facts. . . . [The author's] final conclusions are, however, sensibly and unsentimentally presented, and should evoke useful discussion."

TLS p642 Je 20 '68 950w

LAWYERS COMMITTEE ON AMERICAN POLICY TOWARDS VIETNAM. Consultative Council. Vietnam and international law; an analysis of the legality of the U.S. military involvement; Richard A. Falk, chairman; John H. E. Fried, rapporteur. 162p $3.75; pa $2 O'Hare bks.

341.3 U.S.—Foreign relations—Vietnam. International law. Vietnamese Conflict, 1961-1967-19573

The lawyers "explain the necessity of legal analysis of the United States involvement in Vietnam; . . . they examine legality with regard to a variety of legal aspects such as the Charter UN; the 1954 Geneva Accord; obligations toward the Security Council; the alleged 'commitment' of the United States to war action; and finally the United States Constitution." (Library J) Index.

"A committee of lawyers, professors of law, and political scientists have produced a compelling statement on the presumed illegality of the U.S. military involvement in Viet-Nam. . . . The book should not be judged by standards of academic objectivity; this is a lawyer's brief, designed to convince through legal argument rather than through dispassionate description. . . . There is no other work of this kind in the field. The appendices, containing various U.S. and international legal documents pertaining to the Viet-Nam conflict, provide a good balance to the text." Choice 5:871 S '68 120w

"Arguments are summarized in a succinct conclusion. Although the authors have avoided technical jargon, the book is intended mainly for lawyers and for laymen with the requisite background. . . . With continuing interest in the Vietnam war, this book is recommended for all except the smallest collections on international relations and international law." H. H. Bernt

Library J 92:2597 J1 '68 180w

LAZARSFELD, PAUL F., ed. The uses of sociology [by] Paul F. Lazarsfeld, William H. Sewell [and] Harold L. Wilensky. 902p $15 Basic bks.

301 Sociology. Social policy 67-28388

This book "is divided into six parts. The first deals with sociological perspectives. . . . The second part discusses the uses of sociology in the professions, and covers law, medicine, social work and social welfare. Part three treats the uses of sociology in establishments: management, the military, police, educational institutions, the consumer, foreign policy, public administration, and political parties and polls. Part four covers social problems and formal planning. . . . Part five treats rapid social change, part six looks at institutional problems in applied sociology." (Library J) Contributors include N. J. Smelser, Marvin Bressler, Nathan Glazer, H. J. Gans and others. Chapter bibliographies. Subject index. Name index.

"This is an official book of the [American Sociological Association. . . . Over-all many of the papers seem curiously out of date in conception, even though most of them have somewhat been updated since the 1962 annual meetings. I have a feeling that a similar book undertaken today would be rather different. . . . The book will probably be quite disappointing to the many students now turning to sociology in their hopes of applying themselves to solving the country's many problems." Lee Kainwater

Am Soc R 33:622 Ag '68 1200w

"Clearly, this is a whale of a book. . . . Its sheer size and shape is impressive. . . . It will have different 'uses' for different readers: some will dislike the great mass of its blubber; others will delight in its steaks; but all of us who live in the darkness of contemporary sociology will find that its whale oil produces light that is truly illuminating!" Daniel Lerner

Am Soc R 33:623 Ag '68 1500w

"[The volume contains] two papers that illustrate what is admirable and terrible about contemporary American sociology. The admirable paper is Nathan Glazer's 'The Ideological Uses of Sociology,' and any reader who will not buy the volume should at least xerox these pages. . . . The terrible paper is Robert Angell's 'The Ethical Problems of Applied Sociology.' It is terrible not only for the foolish things it says, but because these views of a distinguished sociologist . . . are shared by all too many academic sociologists." Harold Orlans

Am Soc R 33:625 Ag '68 3900w

"A very large, pedestrian compendium of original essays. . . . Contributors are in general quite distinguished sociologists. Their performance is on the whole perfunctory, useful mainly for bibliographic guidance."

Choice 5:129 Mr '68 60w

"This book will be widely used and widely referred to and may be expected to enjoy heavy readership in academic and non-academic settings." Paul Wasserman

Library J 92:2797 Ag '67 200w

LAZER, HARRY. The American political system in transition. 276p $4.95; pa $2.75 Crowell
320.973 U.S.—Politics and government
67-14292

In this consideration of the flexibility of the government of the United States, the author "examines the ways in which Congress, the courts and the Presidency have adjusted to new social forces, and defines their changing roles [from 1900 to the present]." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"Although Lazer traces the historical background of the forces of change over the 60 years of his century, his book tends to be highly 'present-minded' and admittedly 'liberal' in its orientation. On the whole, he is concerned more with the changes in institutions than with the dynamic forces behind these changes. The book is more of an interpretative essay than a detailed textbook. The specialist will find little new in his conclusions, and the beginning undergraduate without a sufficient factual background might find himself lost. But the more advanced undergraduate or beginning graduate student will find this overview of major changes useful."

Choice 4:1051 N '67 130w

"Since the end of the Civil War and especially since 1900 the extensive industrialization and urbanization of American society have dictated fundamental changes in the American political system. The reluctance of forces within the state governments and the Congress to adjust to the new socio-economic order contributed to a growth in the power of the federal government and the Presidency as agencies for political modernization. These shifts in power permitted the adoption of reforms which foreshadow the development of a 'new political system.' This process has been insufficiently appreciated because it entails changes within traditional institutions rather than the destruction of old ones and the creation of new. The book is timely, the interpretations fresh although perhaps overly optimistic."

Va Q R 44:xxxvi winter '68 120w

LAZO, MARIO. Dagger in the heart; American policy failures in Cuba. 426p $5.95 Funk

327.73 U.S.—Foreign relations—Cuba. Cuba
—Foreign relations—U.S. 68-31632

This is an account "of Castro's victory and his first years in office [seen] from the vantagepoint of high government circles in the United States and Cuba." (New Repub)

"Though Lazo's defense of the Batista regime renders this volume unpalatable, he does raise questions, e.g., concerning the Bay of Pigs and the missile crisis, that ought not to be ignored in this era of East-West 'détente.'" V. S. Kearney

America 119:560 N 30 '68 80w

Reviewed by B. D. Williams

Best Sell 28:414 Ja 1 '69 700w

"Dr. Lazo writes with intimate, first-hand knowledge of all the key events and diplomatic maneuvering which preceded and followed Castro's rise to power. His accounts of the Bay of Pigs and missile crises are extremely well researched and reveal many additional facts about these episodes. Most interesting, for purposes of philosophical discussion, is Dr. Lazo's attempt to spell out why Cuba was lost to Communism. He places the blame essentially on modern liberal ideology." F. J. Johnson

Nat R 20:1178 N 19 '68 650w

"[There is a] wealth of information in [this] work. It contains the best account to date of Castro's victory. . . . It weaves together personal reminiscences, anecdotes, and statistics to support [its] major theses. . . . For Lazo, US control is benevolent. . . . An extreme example of [his] determination not to criticize any American corporation is his treatment of United Fruit. . . . Given Lazo's assumptions about the benefits of colonialism and the good economic growth in Cuba under US tutelage, it is small wonder that he takes an extremely cold view of Castro's regime. Yet his chapter describing current trends in Cuba should not be ignored." David Morris

New Repub 159:26 N 16 '68 1300w

LEACACOS, JOHN P. Fires in the in-basket; the ABC's of the State department. 552p $3.95 World pub.

353.1 U.S. Department of State 68-19330

The "chief of the Washington Bureau for the Cleveland Plain Dealer analyzes the functions of the State Department, its day to day operations, and its relationships with Congress, the President, other federal agencies, the mass media, the people, and foreign nations. In so doing, he examines the routines and methods of the State Department in handling everyday situations and crises. He discusses the organizational structure of the State Department, detailing the operation and responsibilities of its many subdivisions." (Library J) Index.

"While at times the narrative is disjointed and rambling, the many historical vignettes, bits of information, and anecdotes make for interesting reading. Mr. Leacacos does not attempt to add to the volumes of criticism of the State Department, but merely to present an inside view of its operations with an understanding of its complexity and inherent problems. . . . More a popular presentation than a scholarly treatise, this book is recommended for public library collections." T. J. Michalak

Library J 93:2884 Ag '68 160w

Reviewed by K. W. Thompson

Sat R 51:41 S 14 '68 70w

LEACH, EDMUND. A runaway world? 98p $3.75 Oxford

309.142 Great Britain—Social conditions.
Great Britain—Moral conditions 68-24745

A British anthropologist, in the BBC Reith lectures for 1967, questions assumptions on man and society. He attacks "the need for 'objectivity' in science; the worth of individuality and competition; the rightness of law and order; the values of privacy; the 'wisdom' of the elderly; the sanctity of the family. . . . The titles of individual talks indicate the scope of his concern: Men and Nature, Men and Machines, Men and Morality, Men and Learning, Ourselves and Others. . . . Leach is Provost of King's College at Cambridge University." (Publisher's note)

"Dr. Leach, though his position is at the pinnacle of the university establishment, is very definitely a swinging don; no flies on him; nor much intellectual baggage either, for that matter. . . . [This book] is a rambling, bitter and unreasoned assault on just about every institution and every belief of Western civilization. The family, the political party, the democratic state, individual liberty, religion, capitalism of course, any person over the age of forty—are summarily indicted for having failed to keep up with the times. . . . There aren't many facts in these lectures, but all of them are wrong." Irving Kristol

LEACH, EDMUND—Continued

Book World p5 Ag 25 '68 700w

Christian Century 85:1065 Ag 21 '68 50w

"Dr. Leach's philosophy of 'evolutionary humanism' will shock many readers. He attacks our most cherished presuppositions: 'Privacy is the source of fear and violence. . . .'; 'The family . . . is the source of all our discontents.' Nevertheless, he successfully conveys his own anxiety for the future, and his provocative book should find its way into libraries. Incidentally, his strictures on British society apply a fortiori to the American scene." T. J. Pedley

Library J 93:3544 O 1 '68 150w

"Besides over-simplifications there are certainly inconsistencies of stance and argument. Surely [the author] should have talked more about money, class and power—if only to indicate how the young might 'enforce quite arbitrary rules of early retirement'. In print (though not, I think, in the spoken broadcasts) the manner, as of Naughty Uncle Edmund divulging the gospel of sex to the kiddies, is often cloying; and one reflects that it is easy to be wise and confident on the Banks of Cambridge. Clever sixth-formers will have a great deal of fun arguing Leach down. And yet, this will be the highest tribute to his success." Angus Calder

New Statesman 75:617 My 10 '68 700w

LEACH, EDMUND, ed. The structural study of myth and totemism. See Conference on recent anthropological studies of myth and totemism. School of Oriental and African studies, University of London, 1964

LEACH, MARIA. How the people sang the mountains up; how and why stories; il. by Glen Round. 159p $3.75; lib bdg $3.56 Viking 398.2 Folklore—Juvenile literature. Animals —Stories 67-8078

The author "recognizes three classes of 'how and why' stories: the serious and mythical; the merely amusing and anecdotal; and the legendary, explaining some local phenomenon or geographic feature. Each of her examples, drawn from the primitive lore of all the continents, is supported by a . . . note and citation at the end of the book. [Bibliography] Ages nine to twelve." (N Y Times Bk R)

"Folklorist Maria Leach has gathered . . . some 80 how-and-why stories—of earth, sky and sea, of man, animals and all other forms of life. The brief selections, often simplified and condensed, vary from one-line sayings to two-page stories and make a jolly book for browsing." Virginia Haviland

Book World pt 2, p28 (children's issue) N 5 '67 250w

Horn Bk 44:59 F '68 150w

"The author's notes and bibliography not only point out motifs but serve to introduce readers to the scholarly research which adds interest to folklore. Told in terse, unembellished style, this collection will delight storytellers, young group leaders, and their young audiences. Glen Round's drawings add just the right decorative touch to a generally well-designed book." M. A. Wentroth

Library J 92:4614 D 15 '67 130w

Reviewed by Della Thomas

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p52 N 5 '67 210w

LEAF, RUSSELL C., Jr. ed. LSD, man & society. See DeBold, R. C.

LEANEY, A. R. C. The letters of Peter and Jude; a commentary on the first letter of Peter, a letter of Jude and the second letter of Peter. 143p $3.50; pa $1.65 Cambridge

227 Bible. N.T. Epistles—Commentaries [66-29214]

"An introductory section on each letter touches on questions of date, purpose and authorship. This leads straight into the commentary, where text and comment alternate in easily manageable sections. Dr Leaney adds a concluding essay on 'The Christian Hope' which asks how present-day Christians are to re-interpret the concept of Christ's second coming in glory to judge the world." (Publisher's note) Index.

"Another useful commentary in the Cambridge [Bible Commentary] series, based on the translation in the New English Bible. The introductions make clear the background against which the commentator understands the writing: I Peter presupposes the situation described by Pliny; II Peter dependent on Jude; all from the early second century. The exposition deals with the main questions without being technical. Leaney is anxious to show the relevance of the text to modern thought without trying to impose modern ideas on the ancient writers."

Choice 5:68 Mr '68 90w

Reviewed by Shildes Johnson

Library J 92:117 Ja 1 '67 30w

LEAR, EDWARD. Edward Lear's The Scroobious Pip; completed by Ogden Nash; il. by Nancy Ekholm Burkert. unp $3.95; to libs & school $3.79 Harper

821 Animals—Poetry—Juvenile literature 68-10373

"The beasts, birds, fish and insects arrive to examine the Scroobious Pip. When he materializes 'by the beautiful shore of the Jelly-bole' they want to define him. He replies and they come to accept on faith his answer that he is himself: 'My only name is the Scroobious Pip!'" (N Y Times Bk R) The verses "were composed exactly a century ago, but were never quite completed by Lear. The manuscript was found, together with a small pen drawing of the mysterious insect-bird-beast-fish, among his papers after his death. . . . [The illustrator] has based her visual concept of the quadruplicate creature upon this original sketch and poet Ogden Nash has . . . filled in the two missing lines and two additional missing words from the handwritten manuscript." (Book World) "Ages six to ten." (N Y Times Bk R)

"A beautiful buzztential picture book: the brush and ink drawings are delicate, dream-like, scrumptiously scroobious in tone. Chippetty tip! Chippetty tip! The Scroobious Pip couplets lend themselves to chanting, and the whole family should have a grand time reading aloud and dawdling over the drawings." Eve Merriam

Book World p2 (children's issue) N 3 '68 320w

Christian Science Monitor pB14 N 7 '68 80w

"Nothing much happens but between Edward Lear and Miss Burkert, the shores of Jelly-bole are made utterly enchanting. The jollity and whimsy of Lear's poem is lushly dramatized in magnificent full-color double-spreads, splendid with magical oriental detail. All ages." L. P. Scanlon

Commonweal 89:292 N 22 '68 70w

Reviewed by Della Thomas

Library J 93:4724 D 15 '68 130w

"[The illustrator] has done this Lear in gentle pastels, very delicate, very misty. It is a handsome book, and children will doubtless take pleasure in identifying the myriad life, including the prehistoric, that abounds. Yet for Lear it seems too sentimental and pretty. The exquisitely executed animals are bland and dreamy; and the slightly insipid children holding the Pip's spectacles and posing in balletic stance strike me as interpolations." N. L. Magid

N Y Times Bk R p32 O 6 '68 230w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland

Sat R 51:68 N 9 '68 120w

LEARY, TIMOTHY. High priest; original art by Allen Atwell and Michael Green. 353p $7.95 World pub.

200 Hallucinogenic drugs 68-9031

This book chronicles sixteen hallucinogenic trips the author experienced between January 1959 and June 1962. A split-page format allows letters, articles, interviews by Leary and others to be printed alongside the main text. It "is the first of a four-volume biblical account of the birth, structural growth, exile, return, persecution, redemption, and flowering of the LSD religious cult." (Publisher's note) Bibliography.

"[The] book is comprehensible to those who have taken LSD, and others who have not may explain away their failure to understand (or care) on the grounds that they haven't been admitted to the temple. Leary covers himself very well. His book is called High Priest, for obvious megalomaniacal reasons, and it calls on the reader to be interested in everything the Leary crowd does and thinks. . . . [It is] written in the pretentious cryptic way of Leary cultists and jargon users everywhere." David Sanford

New Repub 159:32 O 26 '68 1100w

Reviewed by Howard Junker
Newsweek 72:106 N 4 '68 440w

LEARY, TIMOTHY. The politics of ecstasy. 371p pl $6.95 Putnam

154 Hallucinogenic drugs 68-29674

A collection of the author's statements and writings of the last five years gathered to form a testament of the psychedelic way of life which Leary advocates. Some of the material here has appeared previously in such publications as Esquire, Harvard Review and Playboy.

"For readers who belong to the middle-aged, alcohol-dulled, non-seed-carrying establishment there is probably little harm in this latter-day Gautama's repetitious mystic maunderings and quaint tales of LSD-sparked hallucination-ecstasy that include the experiencing of earlier incarnations, evolutionary switches, primal memories. . . . But for unsophisticated readers, those who are not aware that medical science does not know very much about the nature and effect of the biochemicals advocated by Dr. Leary as fun, and/or mind-expanding, and/or the way to find God, this book can be quite dangerous because of its persuasiveness. . . . Recommended as an unusual personal document, but let the reader beware and be aware of the accepted medical science picture." George Adelman

Library J 93:3770 O 15 '68 360w

"Gentle and persuasive as Leary is in person, he is not a writer. Nor is there much shock left in his turn-on, tune-in, drop-out formula or his assertions that thinker-tanker Herman Kahn has tripped and that James Joyce is the greatest psychedelic writer ever or that the British are 'a nation of inveterate trippers, heads and stoned visionaries.' The charms of psychedelia have faded, and author Leary suffers accordingly." Howard Junker

Newsweek 72:106 N 4 '68 440w

LEASOR, JAMES. Singapore; the battle that changed the world. (The crossroads of world history ser) 325p $5.95 Doubleday

959.5 Singapore—Siege, 1942. Singapore—History. World War, 1939-1945—Singapore 67-15355

The author "focuses on the story of the events which led to the [British] surrender of Singapore to the Japanese on February 15, 1942. He is more concerned with the events leading to the fall of Singapore and its effects than with the actual fighting. . . . The surrender of the garrison, writes Mr. Leasor, marked the retreat of the West from Asia and helped to create a political vacuum which North Vietnam is now seeking to fill." (Library J) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"The trail of doom is fully patterned, with lively human incidents that make the narrative vivid and real. The trick of the novelist is used in a plan which starts with a lively picture of the surrender itself, then goes into various flash-backs to tell the essentials of the tale. There is quotation aplenty to liven the telling. There are evidences of British attitudes on the part of the author, like the spelling 'tyres' (for the American tires). . . . The book is readable, apparently soundly based in its facts, . . . and seems at an initial reading to support its general thesis, . . . that Singapore marked one of the turning points in the world's history, although not the sole cause thereof. Personalities of commanders and of statesmen are well indicated and make the reading attractive, although personality seemed to have little effect on outcome." Elbridge Colby

Best Sell 27:418 F 1 '68 500w

"The muddy prose is as characteristic as the muddy sentiment. . . . To most of the world . . . the battle of Singapore was not really a shocking revelation. . . . What is surprising is to find an Englishman 25 years after the setback at Singapore seriously bemoaning an alleged loss of British face there and seriously supposing that this 'changed the world.' . . . Mr. Leasor's exercise in nostalgia is a long book (or reads so); it backs and fills discouragingly over much of the recent history of the Far East in a series of flash-backs like nesting boxes. It thus arrives tardily and tired at its nominal subject—the battle." Gordon Harrison

Book World p10 J1 7 '68 900w

"[Leasor's] account is sprawling, often disorganized, and repetitious; it is in need of disciplined editing as he jumps back and forth in time and place. Despite these defects, he gives the reader a full account of the reasons for the . . . loss of Singapore by Britain. . . . His story has benefitted by interviews with some of the survivors. [This] is recommended for all general collections." Keith Eubank

Library J 93:73 Ja 1 '68 230w

TLS p818 Ag 1 '68 420w

LEAVIS, F. R. Anna Karenina, and other essays. 248p $5.95 Pantheon bks.

809 English fiction—History and criticism.
American fiction—History and criticism 67-25426

"The 16 papers—prefaces, lectures, articles—reprinted in this collection cover a number of years and are mainly devoted to the consideration of various novels [by such authors as Tolstoy, Twain, Hawthorne, Melville, James, Eliot, Conrad and Lawrence]. . . . In the lecture on 'Anna Karenina' [Leavis] is concerned to bring out the wonderfully comprehensive portrayal of life in it, and to refute the criticism of James and Arnold who saw it as diffuse and lacking in 'architecture.'" (Christian Science Monitor) Index.

"Leavis is by no means an easy writer. He reasons very closely, he bristles with nice distinctions and subtle nuances, with qualifying statements and parentheses, and it needs resolute concentration to follow him. . . . Leavis's name is a guarantee that his book will reach a large public, and it deserves this. It is a combative book, for in almost every case he is engaged in refuting the contentions of others, but this merely lends it something of the attraction of a debate. It forces one to reconsider cherished judgments of one's own, and it lures one to read books one has neglected. What more could one ask of criticism!" Eric Forbes-Boyd

Christian Science Monitor p9 Ja 22 '68 750w

Reviewed by Frank Kermode

Commentary 46:83 J1 '68 3700w

Reviewed by Martin Green

Commonweal 89:128 O 25 '68 950w

"[All of these papers] are characteristically strenuous and earnest. Some are harsh in tone, censorious or exasperated—notably the account of T. S. Eliot as a literary critic. . . . [Leavis] demonstrates the greatness and complexity of Tolstoy's book in a most sympathetic analysis. He is equally good at extracting the maximum value from far less massive works of fiction such as the tales of Henry James and Conrad or Mark Twain's 'Pudd'nhead Wilson.' Because he is pre-eminently a teacher, Dr Leavis usually addresses himself to the already converted—to serious students of literature. Only those who have a pretty intimate knowledge of the texts under discussion can get a great deal from the careful investigations of the master. . . . But readers encountering him in this volume, as in previous ones, are bound to salute his powerfully discriminating intelligence and the uncompromising honesty of his ugly, tortuous prose."

Economist 225:1060 D 9 '67 650w

"The volume is Leavis-as-before: moral, scrutinizing, boosting D. H. Lawrence for the wrong reasons, knocking about anyone who doesn't agree with Mr. Leavis. The tone is polemic; in fact in many of the essays he begins by attacking someone else's view of a work. Although Mr. Leavis is a perceptive and intelligent critic, his tone gets on the reader's nerves. The volume is perhaps useful for libraries that have no other example of his work." Elaine Bender

Library J 93:1900 My 1 '68 110w

Reviewed by Alan Lelchuk

Nation 207:217 S 9 '68 1400w

LEAVIS, F. R.—Continued

Reviewed by Clarence Brown
New Repub 158:30 Je 15 '68 1900w

Reviewed by Philip Rahv
N Y Rev of Books 11:62 S 26 '68 7100w

"Leavis's ultimate distinction as a critic lies in his unerring sense of how—in what forms and with what limitations—the pressure of creative intelligence shows itself in the writers he admires. In his essay on The Shadow-Line he suggests, with a wealth of telling quotation, that we are most aware of this intelligence in Conrad when we are closest to him as a personality, when he waives his sometimes over-elaborate fictive relation to his most decisive themes. . . . It is in his sense of where to look for that creative intelligence, fully 'in possession of its experience', that Leavis can often surprise us most, and by surprising us shock us into radical rethinking."

TLS p1121 N 30 '67 2850w

LE CARRÉ, JOHN. A small town in Germany.
333p $6.95 Coward-McCann

67-15283

In this novel "Alan Turner arrives from London to investigate a breach in security [of the British Embassy at Bonn]. A temporary employee, Leo Harting, has apparently absconded with the crucial Green File and a mass of other secret papers. Turner's job: find them. The permanent staff, an encyclopedia of the English class system, dislikes Turner, the angriest of young men, and tries to keep him at arm's length. Turner stops at nothing." (Newsweek)

Reviewed by W. B. Hill
America 119:563 N 30 '68 60w

Reviewed by B. J. McGurl
Best Sell 28:317 N 1 '68 800w

"Without any question J. Le Carré is an exceptionally gifted writer. . . . Like Graham Greene (a writer who has much influenced him), Le Carré is adept at building up excitement, and manages to sustain one's interest in the rather flat-footed and indeterminate quest for the missing diplomat. . . . The trouble is the story itself. It really is remarkably silly. . . . It seems to me, the espionage theme—such as it is—is forced and unreal. . . . [and] the Cold War setting, so acutely conveyed in The Spy Who Came in From the Cold, has become theatrical, stale and artificial." Malcolm Muggeridge

Book World p3 O 20 '68 800w

Reviewed by Pamela Marsh
Christian Science Monitor pB13 N 7 '68 550w

Harper 237:128 D '68 300w

Reviewed by Norman Horrocks
Library J 93:4307 N 15 '68 200w

Reviewed by John Gliedman
Nation 207:731 D 30 '68 950w

Reviewed by Guy Davenport
Nat R 20:1173 N 19 '68 70w

"This book is much more than a professionally polished performance. It is also a devastating attack on our representatives abroad, those highly trained men, occasionally blessed with a private income, with sharp, swiftly-working, perception and ultimately empty minds. The dissection of the diplomats Bradfield and de Lisle is particularly cruel because it is done without any crudity and because both men are shown to be more than ordinarily competent. . . . [Turner, the protagonist,] is not only supremely perceptive and intuitive, which enables Le Carré to write some of the best interrogation dialogue since [A.] Koestler in Darkness at Noon [BRD 1941], but he has what one can only describe as an overpowering moral vigour. . . . [Le Carré] has shown that he is really not a thriller writer at all but one of the best novelists we have." T. G. Rosenthal

New Statesman 76:641 N 8 '68 1550w

"Le Carré's new novel is as ingenious as anything he has written. . . . [The denouement] is as ingenious as the finale of 'The Spy Who Came in From the Cold' [BRD 1964. This] . . . is an exciting, compulsively readable and brilliantly plotted novel. Le Carré has shown once more that he can write this kind of book better than anyone else around—and he has done so without repeating himself." Richard Boston

N Y Times Bk R p5 O 27 '68 950w

New Yorker 44:250 D 7 '68 100w

Reviewed by R. A. Sokolov
Newsweek 72:125 O 28 '68 550w

Reviewed by Sergeant Cuff
Sat R 51:58 N 30 '68 550w

TLS p1218 O 31 '68 550w

LECKIE, ROBERT. The battle for Iwo Jima; with maps by Ted Burwell and photographs. (Landmark bk) 173p $1.95 Random house 940.54 Iwo Jima, Battle of, 1945—Juvenile literature. U.S. Marine Corps—Juvenile literature 67-20386

On February 19, 1945, the United States Marines landed on the Japanese-held island of Iwo Jima. The author describes the daily events of the campaign. Index. "Grades six to ten." (Best Sell)

Best Sell 27:263 O 1 '67 80w

"In one of the best of the 'Landmark Books', Leckie has provided a graphic description of the horror and heroism of the battle for Iwo Jima. Day by day the author leads the reader from one scene of incredible danger and bravery to another, as the Marines suffer 19,938 casualties while inflicting 21,000 on the enemy. Excellent photos supplement the text. . . . A good choice for those interested in history or tales of courage." C. G. Wood

Library J 92:4262 N 15 '67 100w [YA]

LECKIE, ROBERT. The wars of America; foreword by Richard B. Morris. 1052p maps $12.50 Harper

973 U.S.—History, Military 65-20433

"In chronological order, [the author] relates the War of Revolution; the War of 1812; the Mexican War; the Civil War; the Indian Wars; the Spanish-American War and the Philippine Insurrection; World War I; World War II; the Korean War; and a brief account of Vietnam up to June, 1967. . . . [In each] he points out the influence of politics upon military decisions." (Best Sell) Bibliography. Index.

"Leckie attempted a vast undertaking when he decided to write an account of all the wars in which America has engaged since early colonial times. . . . Certain wars do not receive the coverage that they rightfully deserve. The military historian reading this book may be disappointed, since he will probably not learn anything new that he is not already familiar with, and may even wish to challenge a few of the author's interpretations. In controversial issues, such as the dismissal of General MacArthur during the Korean War, Mr. Leckie refuses to take a definite stand one way or the other. . . . The majority of his research came from a very limited number of secondary sources. . . . However, [he] writes in a style that retains the interest of the reader and provides an excellent over-all survey of our wars in a single volume." B. D. Williams

Best Sell 27:436 F 15 '68 250w

"Several threads of continuity in the American way of war are pointed out. . . . Dissent at home has almost always been a factor. . . . Leckie does not pass judgment on President Johnson, but he finds Truman stumbling in the Korean War even though especially strong in the Cold War up to that time. Roosevelt is seen as making the grievous errors of pushing unconditional surrender and believing Stalin. Wilson won the war he pledged to stay out of and then lost the peace he went to war for. And so on down the list. The synthesis of America's experiences in war is the strength of the book. For that reason it should be read. It can be enjoyed as well for good, exciting entertainment. But be wary of the details. In all too many instances, disturbing signs of shallow scholarship break through. . . . Shortcomings notwithstanding, this book is a worthwhile contribution to the field of American history." D. R. Palmer

Book World p4 Ja 28 '68 900w

"Certainly student and scholar will have no reason to use Leckie's work especially after the publication of R. F. Weigley's History of the United States Army [BRD 1967]. Nevertheless, maps are both satisfactory and indispensable. . . . Not really a necessity in a college library, The Wars of America should be in every public library."

Choice 5:862 S '68 200w

Reviewed by Henrietta Buckmaster
Christian Science Monitor p7 O 24 '68 1300w

Reviewed by J. E. Wiltz
J Am Hist 55:111 Je '68 110w

Reviewed by R. M. Kennedy
Library J 93:1137 Mr 15 '68 250w

New Yorker 43:139 Mr 30 '68 220w

LECKIE, ROBERT—Continued

"[The author] treats not the causes of our wars, nor the controversies that have always attended them, nor their results, so often equivocal, debatable, or flatly disappointing, but the manner in which they were fought, their leadership, their pages of glory and of shame. . . . As military history, Mr. Leckie's volume has four cardinal virtues: compression, accuracy (in general, not always in detail), color, and boldness in the delivery of judgments upon movements and men. . . . It should be noted he has something useful to say about the military character of the struggle between the Viet Cong and the Americans, South Vietnamese, Australians, and Filipinos. Indeed, for all of its objectionable elements, the book as a whole will be profitable reading for today and tomorrow. Mature Americans in particular will find it both stimulating and highly interesting. It is the impulsive young whom we should hesitate to trust, unguided and unwarned, with its stirring pages. And yet some of them will find there lessons in dedication and sacrifice." Allan Nevins

Sat R 51:25 Mr 2 '68 1450w

LE CORBUSIER. Le Corbusier 1910-65 [ed. by] W. Boesiger [and] H. Girsberger [tr. by William B. Gleckman]. 351p il col il $25 Praeger 944 67-25150

This book is a pictorial record of the architect's "work from his early country house at La Chaux-de-Fonds to his recently completed Exhibition Pavilion at Zurich." (Library J) Bibliography. Index of works.

Choice 4:1372 F '68 140w

"Except for a few buildings designed before his death in 1965, almost all of the material contained in this new volume was illustrated in his earlier autobiographical work Creation Is a Patient Search [BRD 1961]. Since almost all of the material in this new book has been previously published, the price of $25 . . . seems quite high. Still, it is a publication that will remain as a standard text on this architect, and it should be acquired by any library seeking to develop a representative series of publications on 20th-Century architecture." David Gebhard

Library J 92:4402 D 1 '67 130w

Reviewed by Vincent Scully

N Y Times Bk R p3 N 19 '67 900w

"An exceedingly handsome presentation, in a single stout volume based on a seven-volume original, of the works of one of the most gifted of twentieth-century architects—that testy, superlatively self-assured Swiss genius Charles-Edouard Jeanneret, who early in his adult life, in homage to some remote French ancestors, renamed himself Le Corbusier. . . . Admirable as the photographs in this book are, the text that accompanies them is deplorable. Though it contains the necessary facts, its tone is relentlessly doting, and the authors would have done well to imitate their hero's habitual aphoristic acerbity. The text is printed in French, German, and English. The third language is evidently known to the translator only through a dictionary."

New Yorker 43:65 D 30 '67 350w

LEDERER, WILLIAM J. The mirages of marriage. by William J. Lederer & Don D. Jackson. 473p $7.95 Norton

301.42 Marriage

68-16608

This analysis of the marital relationship "covers the false assumptions of modern marriage and . . . [the] nature of the need to realize that the marital relationship is an interlocked system in itself rather than a function of individual partners. It discusses the techniques of appraising one's own marriage, the use of counselors, the dangers of unilateral therapy, and the major elements of a satisfactory marriage." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"A supremely practical handbook. . . . [The main flaw] is that when the authors do theorize they tend, especially in the early chapters, to overassert their liberal, no-nonsense approach to the subject. In their attempt to be frank, they occasionally become glib, instead. It is one thing to assert: 'The Christian marital vow is based on the fallacy that nothing will change,' and quite another to formulate an alternative that will allow for the complexity of change in modern society. . . . The virtues of the book, however, outweigh its occasional lapses. By far the most valuable sections are those that set up detailed experiments in interaction: sessions on interpreting nonverbal communication, on improving inadequate verbal communication, on discovering and reducing destructive habitual responses." G. L. Miranda

America 119:388 O 26 '68 600w

"A virtual encyclopedia of marital relationships, stripped of false romanticism. . . . We are happy to say that for once, while sex receives its due, it does not dominate."

Christian Century 85:1220 S 25 '68 30w

"Lederer, a popular novelist, and . . . Jackson, a leading psychiatrist, have written a provocative, mirage crushing, and mature diagnosis of ailing marriages. They offer couples various techniques for diagnosing and curing their own self-destructive unions. They also destroy many marital myths. . . . The authors' aim is primarily constructive—to suggest ways and techniques by which couples may create functional (not necessarily happy or romantic) unions based on mutual trust, respect, tolerance for each other's differences, and a minimal amount of debilitating blockage for each individual. . . . This excellent book . . . is recommended for public libraries." Juliet Woodbury

Library J 93:3148 S 15 '68 220w

LEDERER, WILLIAM J. Our own worst enemy. 287p $4.95 Norton

959.7 Vietnamese Conflict, 1961-. U.S.—Foreign relations—Vietnam, Vietnam—Foreign relations—U.S. 68-13487

The author of A Nation of Sheep (BRD 1961) and co-author of The Ugly American (BRD 1958) argues that we are fighting several wars in Vietnam—a large-scale, bombing war; a guerrilla war; a political war for the people's loyalty; and a moral war. He claims that we are losing all of them, and suggests diplomatic and military changes in our Vietnam policy.

Reviewed by Paul Kinery

Best Sell 28:108 Je 1 '68 550w

"Lederer's new book is merely a repetitious restatement of points he has already covered in previous books. It escapes the faults of reiteration because we have never listened to what he has had to say. All the startling facts he presents are literally true. . . . To the best of my knowledge, they have never been so explicitly chronicled before (Lederer uses real names and places), and because of this the book is inestimably valuable. The flaw in his presentation lies in his methodology. Bill Lederer deals in polemics. . . . The danger lies in the half truths thus exposed. . . . The central question—why we are there at all—is carefully skirted." E. J. Cutler

Library J 93:2509 Je 15 '68 550w

Reviewed by C. J. Kalamaras

Library J 93:3997 O 15 '68 130w [YA]

"[This book] has the makings of a significant exposé of American and Vietnamese corruption at the expense of the war effort. But its effect is mostly, if not entirely, dissipated because the author is so angry. Indeed the book fairly sputters. It is so cluttered with extravagant, undocumented charges . . . that its numerous valid points are lost in the fury. . . . The book also contains some fascinating—and close-to-the-bone—revelations on American 'doormat diplomacy,' meaning the way we allow corrupt Vietnamese to take advantage of our extreme respect for Vietnamese independence. Some of the material is worth a Congressional investigation." J. M. Mecklin

N Y Times Bk ■ p3 Je 30 '68 180w

"[This book] is in an old muckraking tradition. Corrosive and explosive, it lays on with a heavy hand. Lederer . . . wants to put the disturbing facts before the American people. They are indeed appalling. If Lederer set out to shock and dismay his readers, he has achieved his purpose. Anyone who reads this book, hawk or dove, will come away from it with a new grip on Vietnamese reality. There is lots of muck to rake in Vietnam, and Lederer rakes it. He cites facts, names names, and pulls no punches. The chief villain . . . is our supposed ally, the Government of South Vietnam. Lederer's . . . evidence, much of it gathered at firsthand, is impressive and depressing. . . . Yet, [he] observes, we persist in following the old course, refusing to learn from our mistakes or even admit that we made them. Self-deception has led to self-inflicted defeats. That is why he says, we are our own worst enemy." Hal Dareff

Sat ■ 51:26 J1 13 '68 500w

LEE, ALFRED MCCLUNG. Race riot, Detroit 1943, by Alfred McClung Lee and Norman D. Humphrey; with a new introd. essay by Alfred McClung Lee. 143p il maps $7 Octagon bks.

301.451 Detroit—Riots. Negroes—Detroit
68-20841

In this reprint, the authors present a "chronology of events which occurred before, during and after the Detroit riot of June 21, 1943 . . . [based on] newspaper accounts, interviews and official reports. . . . [The] difference between the riots of the '1960's and that of 1943 is pointed out in a new introduction. . . . Suggestions for circumventing riots [are included.]" (Library J) For the original edition see BRD 1943.

"Bitterly dramatizes the failure of a city and a society to change the attitudes and actions which a quarter of a century later still offer some of its citizens little alternative to violence. . . . It is debatable whether now or then the suggestions for circumventing riots, including the establishment of a 'Bi-Racial Index,' 'Public Opinion Polls' and a 'Race Sentiments Barometer' are to the point or merely sociological rhetoric. This reprint should be purchased by academic and large public libraries." Janet Freedman

Library J 93:3771 O 15 '68 220w

"[There are] many familiar echoes in this reissue of a twenty-five-year-old study. . . . In an introduction to this new edition Dr. Lee says: 'While we do not believe that armed intervention should ever be regarded as accomplishing anything other than buying some time,' the U.S. Army should be called in 'as soon as the danger becomes apparent.' Lee has dropped his earlier recommendation that the state militia be summoned. . . . To this reviewer Lee's endorsement of the Army and 'well-trained state police' . . . [reveals that] even after twenty-five years, there are still some lessons to be learned." Ernest Dunbar

Sat R 51:26 Je 1 '68 390w

LEE, CALVIN B. T. One man, one vote; WMCA and the struggle for equal representation [by] Calvin B. T. Lee with the assistance of Alan Kanzer. 186p $3.95 Scribner

340 Apportionment (Election law). U.S. Supreme Court. New York (State)—Politics and government 67-19989

A "case study of one of the Reapportionment cases (WMCA vs. Lomenzo), wherein the Supreme Court in 1964 decided that legislative districts within a State should be equal in population. . . . [The author attempts to show] the impact of the overrepresentation of the rural counties of New York, how and why courts became interested in the problem of equal representation, and the interrelation between Federal and State courts and between courts and legislatures. . . . [He includes] information on 'how lawyers prepare and argue their cases, how decisions are made, and how these decisions are implemented, modified or frustrated.'" (Library J) Bibliography.

"Carefully documented, clearly, if somewhat dryly written, and developed in depth. . . . A solid job of scholarship that is within reach of the undergraduate. Strongly recommended for college libraries."

Choice 5:872 S '68 90w

"Lee, a former staff member of the American Council of Education, is emphatically in favor of the principle of 'one man, one vote.' . . . [His] book is one that can be recommended for libraries with collections of constitutional law and history." C. P. Armin

Library J 92:2790 Ag '67 190w

LEE, EDWARD N., ed. Phenomenology and existentialism. See Phenomenology and existentialism

LEE, JAMES MICHAEL, ed. Catholic education in the Western world; foreword by George N. Shuster. 324p $7.95 Univ. of Notre Dame press

377 Catholic Church in Europe. Catholic Church in the U.S. Church and education 67-12120

"Catholic educators in France, Germany, Netherlands, Italy, England, and the U.S. examine the methods and meaning of Catholic schools in their respective countries. Lee (head of the Department of Education, Notre Dame) evaluates Catholic education in the U.S. Each chapter follows the same format, thus providing the basis for a comparative study. Areas covered are: a brief history, relationship with government schools, present forms, financial support, curriculum, instruction, program of religious education, pupil personnel and guidance service, staff, parents and school, and special educational problems and prospects." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"This pioneer work shows a pattern of contrasts and aims to bring about an educational renewal in the Catholic schools the world over."

Choice 5:242 Ap '68 120w

"Through its focus upon Catholic education, this volume makes a unique contribution to the burgeoning shelf of books on comparative education. . . . The discussion of government schools is more than merely incidental, which adds to the book's usefulness. Tables are introduced wherever helpful. The style throughout leaves the reader feeling as though he had just waded through six long encyclopedia articles. One is left with the impression that, relatively speaking, Catholic schools in the United States are neither so inferior nor so deprived as they are sometimes depicted. Recommended for Catholic and general educational collections." C. E. Zakrzewski

Library J 92:1479 Ap 1 '67 200w

LEE, JIM. Jim Lee's Chinese cookbook; il. by Isabella Lee. 342p col il $8.95 Harper

641.5 Cookery, Chinese 68-28207

The author includes "Chinese cooking methods and utensils, a description of Chinese foods obtainable in American markets, special Chinese ingredients, cutting meats and vegetables, and a chapter on how to use the recipes that occupy [most of the book]." (Best Sell) Index.

Best Sell 28:351 N 15 '68 60w

Reviewed by Gloria Levitas

Book World p4 D 15 '68 20w

Reviewed by Yvonne Horton

Christian Science Monitor p8 N 29 '68 60w

"This excellent and unique book for the beginner and those who wish to understand the whys and ways of Cantonese cooking contains many useful sections, especially the ones on rice, soup, and shrimp. The recipes, all tested by Chinese Jim Lee with a professional Chinese chef, Lee Lum, are arranged from the easy to the more complex. . . . The book is rich in the lore of Chinese cooking. Highly recommended for public libraries." Marvin Kohl

Library J 93:4141 N 1 '68 90w

"Jim Lee has written the most lucid and best organized Chinese cookbook in ages. . . . The recipes sound delightful . . . each is given with sufficient—and amusing—explanations." Nika Hazelton

N Y Times Bk R p28 D 1 '68 60w

LEE, JOHN. Caught in the act. 255p $4.50 Morrow

68-14807

"Brian Douglas, an alcoholic free-lance photographer divorced by his wife and travelling in Spain, chances to photograph a meeting of several men in an inn and is immediately caught up in a series of murders and a pursuit to obtain the picture and the negative. The men he photographed, it turns out, were plotting the overthrow of the Spanish government." (Best Sell)

"You get a tour of Spain, but you won't miss anything by not reading this."

Best Sell 28:11 Ap 1 '68 110w

"An unusually perceptive first with living people in credible danger." M. K. Grant

Library J 93:575 F 1 '68 70w

"A welcome first novel. . . . Standard gambit, but admirably developed; Mr. Lee is fine at page-turning suspense, at authentic local color (in Madrid and other parts of Spain), and at getting you genuinely involved with his characters." Anthony Boucher

N Y Times Bk R p37 Mr 3 '68 80w

Reviewed by Sergeant Cuff

Sat R 51:50 Ap 27 '68 30w

LEE, MARSHALL, ed. Psychedelic art. See Masters, R. E. L.

LEE, W. STORRS, comp. Maine; ■ literary chronicle; ed. with commentaries, by W. Storrs Lee; il. by Maurice Day. 487p $7.95 Funk

917.41 Maine

68-15601

This volume contains a "selection of articles and poems by Maine friends and native writers on topics from the earliest Viking visitors to the pleasures and problems of living there today. . . . The selections . . . from Father Sebastian Rale, Elijah Kellogg, Henry Thoreau, Sarah Orne Jewett, . . . John M. Todd, Kenneth Roberts [and others], are . . . introduced, showing how a chosen piece by a particular writer fits into the scheme of things." (Library J)

"Here is Maine as it was discovered, settled, fought over, developed, exploited, developed some more, and forever written about. . . . [The editor's] culling seems satisfactory. One says 'seems' for the process of choosing material from books and records covering nearly 500 years necessarily becomes somewhat arbitrary. . . . [This reviewer] found much of interest in Mr. Lee's selections, but . . . can any chronicle or any anthology entirely satisfy? . . . You doubtless will not read this collection through. You will read excerpts and enjoy them. You will keep the book handy for reference. But sometimes you will look at it . . . and say, 'Yes, it is a good book but I wish the editors had not left out. . . .'" Roland Sawyer
Christian Science Monitor p9 Ag 15 '68 600w

"Surprises abound, and shared interests are revealed. As a prospectus and résumé of Maine's heritage, this book succeeds, without sacrificing reader interest in the process. . . . This will be a good addition to Americana collections." M. M. Ferguson
Library J 93:2874 Ag '68 110w

LEEDS, ROSLYN D. Introducing the atom; il. by John V. Morris. 143p $3.95; to libs & schools $3.79 Harper

539.7 Atoms—Juvenile literature 65-11453

This book "tells about the atom and its basic parts: the proton, the neutron, and the electron. Atomic numbers, symbols, and weights are explained, and electrons and their arrangement around the nucleus are discussed. . . . Scientists who have made major contributions in the field of nuclear physics are listed in a biographical section." (Publisher's note) Glossary. Bibliography. Index. "Grades ten to twelve." (Library J)

"[Mrs. Leeds] has taken a complex subject and has succeeded in explaining the fundamental concepts clearly and interestingly. . . . A number of drawings add to the interest and value of the book."

Best Sell 27:466 Mr 1 '68 90w [YA]

"The author's attempt to collect for young adults all the concepts underlying an understanding of the atom has resulted in a presentation which, although well organized, suffers from oversimplification and a lack of explanatory material. . . . The illustrations are attractive but insufficient to clarify the text, while the inclusion of a list of biographical resumes on many well-known atomic scientists is useful but can be found in other better books." Paul Goldstein

Library J 93:307 Ja 15 '68 140w [YA]

LEFEBVRE, HENRI. The sociology of Marx; tr. from the French by Norbert Guterman. 214p $5.95 Pantheon bks.

335.4 Communism. Sociology. Marx, Karl 68-10253

A French sociologist attempts to "resolve some of the contradictions which time and experience have indicated exist in the writings of Karl Marx and to provide a 'new reading of Marx.' [The book] is a study of Marx's conception of the dialectical movement of reality and truth. Professor Lefebvre claims that Marx is not a sociologist but that there is a sociology in Marx, for . . . Marx asserts the unity of knowledge and reality, of man and nature, and of the social sciences and the physical sciences. . . . As such his theory therefore is not history, not sociology, not psychology, etc., but comprehends these approaches, these aspects, these various levels of the whole." (Library J) Index.

"Translation of this seminal work, particularly in view of current interest in Marxism as a frame for thought rather than a fixed ideology, is a noteworthy event for scholars whatever their philosophical proclivities. Lefebvre argues that characterization of Marxism as 'economic determinism' is a partial analysis based on failure to distinguish between the work of Marx as a critic of capitalism and the work of Marx as a student of human relations over the course of history. . . . Essentially, the book is an argument for 'open Marxism' as an analytic model superior to 'neopositivist' and 'neo-scientist' models for the comprehension of change in social relations. A must for all libraries that serve students of sociology and allied fields. No comparable work in English."

Choice 5:1002 O '68 190w

Economist 229:70 O 26 '68 280w

"Whether Professor Lefebvre has succeeded in his attempt to provide a new reading of Marx depends a great deal on the reader's orientation and whether he accepts Marxism as a basic guideline to his thinking and behavioral patterns. This reviewer found the basic analysis interesting. It is a stimulating work, meant to convince, and to develop in depth the faithful follower's awareness of Marxism. By the same token it should be read thoroughly by those who [do] not believe in Marxism as a way of life but who should be knowledgeable in this area. In this context colleges and universities and larger public libraries would find it useful." W. L. Morin

Library J 93:764 F 15 '68 350w

Reviewed by Alasdair Macintyre

New Statesman 76:400 S 27 '68 650w

"For one who already knows the historical Marx . . . Lefebvre's little volume is useful. The trouble is that in virtually isolating Marx from event and circumstance, and also, unhappily, from those whose ideas, either in point or counterpoint, are required for the understanding of what Marx so often was getting at, we end up with a kind of pastiche. I am sorry to say that in Mr. Lefebvre's hands the impossible has almost been achieved; Marx is made dull. More accurately, perhaps [he] seems rather an academic intellectual of contemporary Parisian society than the titan he actually was." R. A. Nisbet

N Y Times Bk R p6 My 19 '68 850w

LEFEVER, ERNEST W. Uncertain mandate; politics of the U.N. Congo operation. 264p il $7.50 Johns Hopkins press

341.13 United Nations. Congo (Democratic Republic) 67-22890

In this political analysis of the U.N. peace-keeping mission to the Congo during the 1960-1964 Congo crisis, the author, "adjunct professor of international affairs at the American University, examines the behavior of the United States, the USSR, Belgium, the Afro-Asian states, and the Congolese factions, in terms of their political interests and objectives. He assesses the Mission's accomplishments and failures in terms of the Security Council mandate, the expectations of the supporting states, and the political cost. He deals, as well, with the legal, administrative, and military aspects of the UN intervention; and [argues] that the multinational effort did not suspend internal or international politics, but rather provided an additional instrument that was used, manipulated, or ignored by the various governments." (Library J) Chronology. Annotated bibliography. Index.

"Lefever's second book on the Congo, [the first was Crisis in the Congo, BRD 1965] and the better of the two. He concludes that the U.N.'s Congo intervention both magnified and probably prolonged the Congo crisis. . . . Though the conclusion can be challenged . . . [Lefever's] scholarship is unimpeachable and his presentation clear and lucid. Recommended for college libraries, but should be read in conjunction with Gerard-Libois' Katanga, Secession [BRD 1967], Conor Cruise O'Brien's To Katanga and Back [BRD 1963], and Crawford Young's Politics in the Congo [BRD 1965, 1966]."

Choice 5:849 S '68 160w

"A generally gloomy view of the U.N. operation in the Congo. Lefever points out that the U.S. made slight gains out of what was essentially its operation but that there is little future for this kind of activity."

Christian Century 84:1570 D 6 '67 40w

LEFEVER, E. W.—Continued

"[A] detailed political analysis. . . . Mr. Lefever clarifies the essential differences between peacekeeping and peacemaking and points out the 'severely limited peacemaking capacity of a U.N. peacekeeping force when the host state is torn by internal conflict.' For academic and larger public libraries." Louis Barron

Library J 93:758 F 15 '68 290w

Reviewed by Neal Ascherson
New Statesman 75:838 Je 21 '68 180w

LEFEVRE, PERRY, ed. Philosophical resources for Christian thought; ed. and with an introd. essay by Perry Lefevre. 142p $3 Abingdon

201 Philosophy and religion. Christianity—Philosophy 68-11465

Concerned with "developments in both philosophy and Christian thought. . . . representatives from each of four schools of philosophy . . . speak of the possibilities for dialogue between philosophy and religion. . . . The authors and their contributions are: Theology and Philosophy in the Recent Past by P. Lefevre; Process Philosophy as a Resource for Christian Thought by C. Hartshorne; Phenomenology as Resource for Christian Thinking by Q. Lauer; The Two Faces of Socrates—Language Analysis as Resource Thought by F. Ferré; Existentialism and Christian Thought by J. Macquarrie. This material was presented originally as the Alden-Tuthill Lectures at Chicago Theological Seminary." (Publisher's note)

"All of the essays are exploratory rather than definitive and are sufficiently nontechnical to make them useful for undergraduates. Short but important and worth a place on the library's shelf."

Choice 5:639 Jl '68 120w

"Despite the eminent qualifications of the authors, the chapters are so short as to permit only the barest suggestions of the value of contemporary philosophy to the Christian thinker. Not surprisingly, Frederick Ferré's well-written contribution suffers most in these cramped circumstances, since language analysis seems to have less direct bearing on religious thought than other contemporary schools. Each of the contributors has written several books in his own field; these books will aid the reader who is really interested in contemporary philosophic resources for Christian thought. That this volume may kindle such an interest in students of theology and philosophy is probably its chief value." J. K. Amrhein

Library J 93:1904 My 1 '68 180w

LEFF, GORDON. Heresy in the later middle ages: the relation of heterodoxy to dissent, c. 1250-c. 1450. 2v $15 Barnes & Noble

273 Heresies and heretics. Theology—History. Church history—Middle Ages. Sects 67-113563

Heresy, according to the author, "was an extreme and sometimes violent expression of the problems confronting medieval society. Its source was the tension between Christian precept and practice, which the church was decreasingly able to overcome. . . . Heretical fires were fanned by the winds of heterodoxy, particularly over the problem of ecclesiastical poverty, conciliarism, and a growing sense of apocalypticism." From these bases, [Mr. Leff] discusses the legacy of Saint Francis and the Spirituals, Eckhart and the Free Spirit, Wycliff and the Lollards, Huss, and several of the remaining high medieval heresies, the Cathari and the Waldensians." (Library J) Bibliography.

"Works of excellent scholarship are always welcome to students of late medieval thought. [These two volumes] will doubtless be of great interest to Reformation scholars as well. The work is impeccable, reads beautifully, and deserves a wide audience. . . . Mr. Leff's high repute among specialists is well deserved even on the basis of these volumes alone." I. M. Berger

Library J 93:1636 Ap 15 '68 190w

"Dr. Leff is personally uncommitted to any school of theology or thought. His strength lies in patient, even laborious, analysis. His purview, at least as seen in his writings, is restricted: he expresses no regret for what has passed or enthusiasm for what is to come in history. But he has a singularly clear and unemotional grasp of conventional doctrinal orthodoxy as understood by leaders of the church in the fourteenth century, and he applies his touchstone as rigidly as any Dominican inquisitor to the writings of his theologians and heretics. . . . [He] has written an important and in some respects a definitive work. . . . The book is long, and has its longueurs, its faults of style and occasional misreading (or misprinting) of the manuscripts. But it is a notable work in a very difficult field."

TLS p84 Ja 25 '68 3000w

LEFF, GORDON. Paris and Oxford universities in the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries; an institutional and intellectual history. 331p il $7.95; pa $3.50 Wiley

378.4 Paris. Université. Oxford. University 67-29940

In part one Professor Leff "considers the institutional and academic aspects of the two schools in terms of their history and curriculum; in part two he deals with doctrinal and intellectual developments." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"A most informative and readable history. . . . [The author's] style is pleasant and marked by a notable clarity even in discussions of abstruse material. He succeeds in relating the two universities to the intellectual and political climates of the church and the state, and to modern aspects of university theory. . . . Highly recommended for college libraries." D. K. Fry

Library J 93:1626 Ap 15 '68 180w

"A straightforward, scholarly work, a solid mass of research. The history, curriculum and intellectual development of the universities are treated in separate sections rather than concurrently, which makes for a lot of leafing back and forth. However, every now and again the author allows himself (and us) the half-holiday of a challenging generalization."

N Y Times Bk R p38 Ap 21 '68 190w

Va Q R 44:clxxii autumn '68 90w

LEHANE, BRENDAN. The quest of three abbots. 240p il $6.95 Viking

274.15 Ireland—Church history. Christian biography. Columba, Saint. Brendan, Saint Columbanus, Saint 67-20300

An "account of early Celtic Christianity . . . told against the background of European history of the first seven centuries A.D. It is focused on the biographies of three Irishmen, . . . Saints Brendan, Columba, and Columbanus, who lived in the fifth and sixth centuries. . . . [The author describes the confrontation] between Roman and Celtic Christianity . . . at the Council of Whitby in 664. . . . [when] Celtic Catholicism went into eclipse." (Publisher's note) Chronology. Bibliography. Index.

"In a lively narrative, which makes the most of a strange welter of myth, legend and fact, the author brings us three portraits, each different but each sharing the Celtic spirit. [He shows that] the Church of Brendan, Columba, and Columbanus was a Celtic Church—independent, unstructured, monastic; and it could not compete with the centralized, highly structured, hierarchical Roman mode. . . . The legends and myths surrounding the 'Three Abbots' are charmingly told. Frequently originating in Early Irish pagan materials they betray all the love of Nature, the interest in animals, the unsophisticated humor, and the fierce national pride which we have come to associate with Irish literature. Mr. Lehane has done his job well." S. P. Ryan

Best Sell 28:75 My 15 '68 410w

Christian Century 85:594 My 1 '68 40w

"Lehane is a journalist, born in London of Irish-Scottish parents, educated at Cambridge, and founder of Image magazine. . . . [He] is an enthusiast who has read widely, writes well on a fascinating subject, and has a good critical mind. Recommended as a popularization especially for public libraries." T. M. Avery

Library J 93:548 F '68 80w

New Yorker 44:87 Je 29 '68 190w

TLS p831 Ag 1 '68 340w

LEHMANN, JOHN. A nest of tigers; the Sitwells in their times. 294p il $6.95 Little

828 Sitwell, Dame Edith. Sitwell, Sir Osbert, 5th Bart. Sitwell, Sacheverell 68-24243

"Only so much biography is given as provides a background for the subject, which really is what people thought about the [three English writers] and their works and what the Sitwells thought about them. . . . For the most part, the Sitwells are allowed to describe themselves in . . . selections from their published works, and from Edith's . . . letters. Sometimes Mr. Lehmann lets contemporaries like Evelyn Waugh, Maurice Bowra, Cyril Connolly, . . . have their say about [them]. There are numerous extracts, for and against, from the newspapers." (N Y Times Bk R) Bibliography. Index.

"[The author] leads us painstakingly through a number of [the Sitwells'] books. He seems most at home with those of Edith, . . . and least of all with those of Sacheverell, who could in no way be described as a 'tiger' and whose place in this volume is rather uncertain. . . . It was obviously an extremely difficult task to deal with the output of so versatile and prolific a family, and Mr. Lehmann's interim manner of doing so is not entirely successful. Between the lengthy quotations he intersperses generous (though not wholly uncritical) measures of praise, reprints occasional reviews of the books in question, and provides details of their publishing history. The result of this method is often rather flat, and very far from the spirit of his subjects, whose aim, as Evelyn Waugh remarked, was to declare war on dullness." Michael Holroyd

Book World p5 S 22 '68 750w

"Lehmann's book has little that is new about the Sitwells. What he has done, and done superbly, is to gather and contrast what they and others have written about their own lives. He discusses the impact their careers, and particularly their attitudes have had on art and other artists. And by skillful draughts from their own works he has shown each member of the tribe distinct, by intelligent discussion the output of each unique. On Dame Edith's poetry, surely the most significant Sitwell achievement, he is especially illuminating. . . . But if it is his examination of their work and impact that makes Mr. Lehmann's an important book, it is his stories of a wildly eccentric family that make it an entertaining one." Pamela Marsh

Christian Science Monitor p11 S 12 '68 430w

"The book seems to be a 'Who's Who' of London artistic and intellectual figures of the 1920's. Anecdotes brighten it considerably; Mr. Lehmann's commentary on the Sitwells' work, especially on the travel books by the two brothers, and the select bibliography make the book a good starting point for a more extensive study. Since few studies of the Sitwells are available, this one should be a good investment for large public libraries and academic libraries, but smaller libraries should be more cautious in ordering it because of its limited appeal." Elizabeth Nelson

Library J 93:3127 S 15 '68 130w

Reviewed by Rayner Heppenstall

New Statesman 75:732 My 31 '68 330w

Reviewed by Stephen Spender

N Y Times Bk R p5 S 22 '68 900w

"The gossip becomes live gossip when Mr. Lehmann deals with the curious resurrection of metropolitan literary life in the 1940s, the days of the blitz and the Sesame Club, when Dame Edith's letters to him revealed some interesting details. Even this has been better done before in autobiographies—such as Mr. Lehmann's own—but his affection for this vulnerable, quarrelsome, less-comic-than-she-imagined intellect strikes some sparks of sympathy. A brief memoir on her alone might have been better than this slack compendium. . . . There are two flickers of interesting literary comment. . . . Both are—and fully acknowledged to be—by Evelyn Waugh. The rest is blandness."

TLS p636 Je 20 '68 600w

LEHMANN, ROSAMOND. The swan in the evening; fragments of an inner life. 156p $4.50 Harcourt

B or 92

68-18183

"The first half of the 'fragments' is about Rosamond Lehmann's childhood and youth in Edwardian England. . . . Her middle years were not serene but there was a strong bond between her and her daughter Sally (Mrs. Patrick Kavanagh) whose unexpected death in 1958 in Jakarta was such a shock to her mother that at first it seemed unbearable. However, soon, and continually thereafter, Rosamond Lehmann had 'experiences' that brought calm and courage. She [writes of them and of] her conviction that the individual personality does endure after death." (Library J)

Reviewed by Jean Stafford

Book World p4 Ap 21 '68 700w

"Poetically delicate, the first half of the 'fragments' is . . . written with the grace and perception that marked [Rosamond Lehmann's] few novels of the 1920's and 1930's. . . . In the last part of her book the style changes. Psychic experiences and time, no doubt, have made an impression, not easy to analyze, on her mind. The flashing enchantment of youth is gone. Mrs. Lehmann's experience has been a sobering one. This reminiscence is significant as autobiography and should not be considered as more than a modest contribution to ESP. It is an excellently produced book with a print that is a joy to read. Recommended for general collections." K. T. Willis

Library J 93:1472 Ap 1 '68 300w

"[This book] embarrasses because it puts the reader in the position of being an intruder on a terrible private grief. For Miss Lehmann herself there is the difficulty of conveying to those of us who are generally hostile to the belief that it is possible to have comforting contact with the dead, that she has had this experience. This makes her at once aggressive towards ourselves and fragmentary and allusive about what happened. . . . One is left tantalised, respectful but at a loss. Believers may feel otherwise. It must be said that the sensations, classical in such manifestations of being borne upward into the air, of seeing rooms pervaded by a blue light, of smelling the intoxicating odours of flowers are gracefully put down. Grief is an uncommon subject and I would have thought that Miss Lehmann would have done better to have written this book as a novel." V. S. Pritchett

New Statesman 74:879 D 22 '67 200w

Reviewed by D. C. Goddard

N Y Times Bk R p16 Jl 14 '68 260w

Reviewed by J. A. Pike

Sat R 51:30 Je 1 '68 1350w

"[This book] is addressed to [the author's] eldest grandchild Anna. It is an attempt to put into words a series of experiences which are ineffable. The mystical experience is incapable of being transmitted even by as fine a writer as Miss Lehmann. Unless Anna has a similar experience, she will be left as cold by it as any uneasy humanist. But though this book will communicate little to those who have experienced nothing like it, the experience will be immediately understandable to those, often less articulate, who are not so convinced as to be incapable of new experience. . . . Miss Lehmann tries some formulations based upon her reading and her experience with the College of Psychic Science. She is very tentative, and rightly so. Just as mystical experiences are incapable of being described, so even more they cannot, except tentatively, be theorized about. . . . [But this] is a courageous book, the more moving because the author was clearly reluctant to communicate to others what to herself was wonderful."

TLS p1031 N 2 '67 600w

LEHRBURGER, EGON. See Larsen, El.

LE HURAY, PETER. Music and the reformation in England, 1549-1660. 454p pl $12.50 Oxford

783 Church music. Music—History and criticism. Composers, English 67-16680

"Opening with a chapter on the progress of musical reforms during the reigns of Henry VIII and Edward VI, the book progresses to chapters on the economic and religious background from 1558 to 1660, the Chapel Royal, and the sources of the music—including a . . . discussion of performance problems. The second half of the book is devoted to a . . . study of the music. Sixteenth and seventeenth century techniques of word setting are examined, with particular reference to contemporary theories of 'expressive' composition, and there are chapters on each of the major composers." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. General index and index of musical examples.

Christian Century 84:1401 N 1 '67 40w

LE HURAY, PETER—Continued

"Ranging broadly and surely through his prodigious material, [Le Huray] fashions without undue simplification a balanced and thoughtful portrayal of the church and its organization, its music and liturgy. . . . If on rare occasion the material lacks thrust, . . . the problem lies in the sources which give us a bare minimum of information and are often faulty or unreliable. The author handles them with imagination and insight and has gleaned a great deal from them. His discussion is sobering and thorough, and the suggestions which he offers will prove of considerable value to the performer. . . . [Le Huray's] deft analyses and comparisons keep [this study] from becoming a dry catalogue of facts on the one hand, or a series of glossy descriptions on the other. . . . At the end are useful appendices: a list of publications of devotional music, [and] an exhaustive survey of modern editions." David Josephson

Music Lib Assn Notes 25:29 S '68 1000w

"A much needed book, . . . written with authority and enthusiasm . . . [and] full of good things, but their arrangement calls for some criticism. It is written as much for the amateur as the scholar, and is none the worse for that; but even the amateur might welcome a more coherent sequence of chapters. . . . [Le Huray's] text is interspersed with no fewer than forty-six tables setting out his findings with admirable clarity. . . . But the system of references is infuriating. Apart from the fact that notes are relegated to the end of each chapter, the reference, when found, frequently turns out to be so abbreviated as to necessitate consultation of the bibliography itself. It says much for the author that in spite of this his book remains compulsively readable."

TLS p159 F 15 '68 550w

LEIBOWITZ, HERBERT A. Hart Crane; an introduction to the poetry. 308p $7.50 Columbia Univ. press

811 Crane, Hart

68-13559

Through an "analysis of the poet's diction, imagery, syntax, verse forms, and metrics, [Mr. Leibowitz seeks to show that Hart Crane] . . . is a meticulous craftsman who developed a poetry of celebration and visionary intensity unlike any other in American poetry." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"Mr. Leibowitz of Columbia University goes beyond the modest title of this book not only to introduce but also to supply a full and highly informative analysis of Crane's poetic. He has catalogued Crane's 'forty most frequent words' and his 'most important images' and considers the poetry by subject—diction, imagery, syntax, and so forth, offering generalizations along the way." W. K. Bottorff

Library J 93:753 F 15 '68 120w

"[This] is a brilliant study of the evolution of rough drafts into finished poems; of obsessive words, images, and symbols; of literary borrowings that become so transformed in Crane's reworking as to seem ultimately new. . . . Leibowitz shows us the behind-the-scenes operations that turn ideas into art. . . . [However] sometimes he hel tangles the materials of the art with the finished product." John Unterecker

Yale R 57:455 Mr '68 550w

LEICESTER, HENRY M., ed. Source book in chemistry, 1900-1950. 408p il $11.95 Harvard Univ. press

540 Chemistry—History

68-14263

"A continuation of A Source Book in Chemistry, 1400-1900 [BRD 1952], this volume contains selections from ninety classic papers in all branches of chemistry—papers upon which contemporary research and practices are based." (Publisher's note) The papers are divided into four sections: Techniques; General and physical chemistry; Organic chemistry; and Biochemistry. Bibliography of biographies. Index.

"The range of appeal for readers should be from students to emeriti!"

Choice 5:752 S '68 90w

"The last [biochemistry] section seems the weakest. While none of the names or selections included should be deleted, a few more might judiciously have been added. This book should be given a toehold in history of chemistry and history of science collections and in general science libraries." Harold Oatfield

Library J 93:2673 J1 '68 180w

"This latest book of Leicester's will undoubtedly be greeted with the same acclaim met with by its predecessor, for it possesses all of the earlier volume's advantages and none of its shortcomings. The new work serves as a veritable mirror reflecting the trends characteristic of 20th-century science. . . . Not only the better-known classics of the period are included but also many lesser-known works worthy of note. . . . This attractive, readable volume will . . . be a valuable supplement for today's texts." G. B. Kauffman

Science 162:110 O 4 '68 340w

LEICHMAN, SEYMOUR. The boy who could sing pictures; written and il. by Seymour Leichman. 59p $3.50 Doubleday

Fairy tales

68-18947

"When Ben leaves the Palace to tour with his father, Zoomac the Royal Jester, he sees the great sadness in the eyes of the townspeople. To ease the misery of the poor, he sings to them of beautiful things. And the rainbows and jewels and butterflies of which he sings magically appear as pictures in the air for all to see. But Ben's . . . gift incurs the wrath of Pom and Circumstance, the villainous courtiers." (Publisher's note) "Ages six to ten." (N Y Times Bk R)

Reviewed by M. B. King

Book World p14 (children's issue) N 3 '68 160w

Reviewed by Melvin Maddocks

Christian Science Monitor pB4 N 7 '68 40w

"This lovely original story weaves the miracle of a fairy tale with the profound problem of misery increasing in a kingdom while time and money are spent on war. . . . The fine poetic passages . . . are relieved by honey, humorous detail. The illustrations, in water color and black-and-white, are superb. An excellent read-aloud, a distinguished book providing impetus for discussion." Marjorie Lewis

Library J 93:4405 N 15 '68 190w

"The story that began as a fantasy and developed with humor ends as an allegory about what is good and important and beautiful, told in a way a child can understand. As the author is his own illustrator, the pictures not only fit the text but add to it by underlining the meanings. They have a striking vitality and are packed with detail. . . . When the King thinks, you see the pain of his thoughts; when the people dance, they flow all over the page; and when the boy, forgetting his troubles, sings his last song of gladness, there is a sunburst of color to match the feelings this book inspires." Aileen Pippett

N Y Times Bk R p28 S 22 '68 350w

LEICHTER, HOPE JENSEN. Kinship and casework [by] Hope Jensen Leichter and William E. Mitchell; with the collaboration of Candace Rogers and Judith Lieb. 343p il $7.50 Russell Sage 362.8 Social case work. Kinship. Jews in the U.S.

66-24898

"Sociologists have contended that the extended kinship network has lost its functions in large urban and industrial settings, and case-workers have . . . been so convinced that the nuclear family relations were the crucial ones for the emotional health of an individual that they have given little attention to the part played by the larger kin network. Analysis of . . . data on the clients of [the Jewish Family Service in New York]—collected through a variety of procedures including interviews, genealogies, home observations, and questionnaires—indicates that involvement with kin was far greater in this group than would have been anticipated on the basis of earlier theories." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"This monograph features several items worthy of comment. It provides some further empirical evidence that the extended kinship group has not been phased out of significance even in an urban industrial context. It draws attention to 'environmental diagnosis' rather than limiting attention to the individual intrapsychic processes generally emphasized in psychiatric theory. . . . I do not, however, see where the authors have succeeded in articulating a 'broad framework of concepts' which should be of use to a whole menagerie of administrators, clinicians, and social scientists (as promised on the dust jacket) or which could be of any heuristic value to caseworkers in 'treating families.'" T. W. Rogers

Am J Soc 73:50 Ja '68 380w

"The present study is an interesting and useful contribution. . . . [It shows] that in at least one ethnic group—American Jews whose parents were born in Eastern Europe—an extended family system prevails, even in New York City. . . . From this finding, which is substantiated by a mass of material, the authors conclude that caseworkers should go beyond the immediate family in treating marital and parent-child relationship problems. Especially, they should give up their overweening reliance on Freudian theory for explanations of how family problems arise and how they should be dealt with. . . . Whether these are good and feasible suggestions cannot be discussed adequately in a brief statement." H. L. Witmer

Ann Am Acad 376:202 Mr '68 600w

LEIDEN, CARL, ed. The politics of violence; revolution in the modern world; ed. by Carl Leiden and Karl M. Schmitt. 244p $5.95; pa $2.95 Prentice-Hall

323.2 Revolutions 68-14469

The authors attempt to "explore the meaning of twentieth century revolution and seek the connection between violence and the contemporary political process. Focusing on events in Cuba, Mexico, Turkey, and Egypt, [they] investigate four major themes: the preconditions of revolution, the role of ideology in revolution, the stages in the development of a revolution, and the relationship of violence to revolutionary action." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"The authors do not purport to be breaking any new theoretical ground but simply offer a . . . summary of the literature on the theory and analysis of revolutionary causation and development." Consequently, any attempt to accurately comment on their contributions to the subject meets with failure from the beginning since it is almost impossible to distinguish their comments from those of their contemporaries. Because of their exhaustive treatment of all relevant ideas on the subject, their extensive bibliography and index, the book is highly recommended for undergraduate libraries."

Choice 5:1367 D '68 120w

"This book demands reading. After several case studies and some theoretical discussion the authors, mindful of technology and rising expectations, predict continuing revolutions in the decades ahead. Read and see why."

Christian Century 85:728 My 29 '68 50w

"The authors present four studies of modern revolutions . . . [which] point up the similarities of all revolutions, but perhaps more important, the unique qualities of each which can be explained by the depth of the individual 'dysfunctions,' the cultural environment, the personalities of the leaders, and the influence of foreign powers." Salvatore Nerbo

Library J 93:2666 J1 '68 200w

LEIDY, W. PHILIP. A popular guide to government publications. 3d ed 365p $12 Columbia univ. press

015.73 U.S.—Government publications—Bibliography 68-17551

"A selected, classified, and annotated index to those publications issued by the federal government that are of general interest and usefulness. . . . [The publications listed are those considered to be] most useful to the individual citizen and, therefore, most important to libraries and other community centers. . . . Included are titles on such subjects as education, infant and child care, farming, home maintenance and repair, home economics, carpentry, communism, astronautics and space sciences, animal diseases and parasites, livestock, wildlife, civil defense, occupations, and citizenship." (Publisher's note) Index. For first edition see BRD 1953.

"Most of the works cited here were published between January 1961 and the middle of 1966. Leidy's book . . . is still meant for the layman but its increasing urbanity recommends it to high school, small public, and junior college libraries."

Choice 5:453 Je '68 290w

"The first two editions of Leidy's Guide have been a real aid to the layman and the librarian in providing a usable and intelligent introduction to at least some of this material. The third edition employs the same arrangement but a somewhat larger scope. Basically, the same criteria for selection also apply. . . . Several publications of the Pan American Union, which are not included in the Monthly Catalog [of the U.S. Superintendent of Documents] or in the second edition of this Guide [are included]. . . . Considering the vast resources at his disposal, the compiler has come up with a disappointingly small list. But a bibliography of 3000 popular works, arranged for easy retrieval, is better than a listing of 65,000 titles as they appear in the more specialized and comprehensive sources and certainly better than none at all. The arrangement is by broad subject headings . . . with numerous cross references. . . . For each entry, complete bibliographical information is supplied including full title, publisher, date, pagination, illustrative matter, price, and order number. . . . For some of the subject headings, the compiler has provided invaluable comments on publishing trends and indicated additional sources of publications." R. D. Harlan

Library J 93:965 Mr 1 '68 600w

Reviewed by D. M. Glixon

Sat R 51:62 My 18 '68 90w

LEIFER, MICHAEL. Cambodia; the search for security. 209p $6 Praeger

327.596 Cambodia—Foreign relations 67-18970

The author "seeks to account for Cambodia's changing policy—and for the . . . conduct of its head of state, Prince Norodom Sihanouk—the man who 'embodies Cambodia.'" (Publisher's note) Index.

"[The author] describes the brilliant work of Prince Sihanouk in maintaining stability within his country while wresting independence from France, and he explains why Sihanouk chose the policy of neutrality and how his government has practiced it. . . . This is not a big book, but it performs a large task very well. Leifer . . . explains Cambodia's search for security in a deeply troubled part of a profoundly divided world. In accounting for Cambodia's foreign policy, Leifer also illuminates the complicated situation in Southeast Asia. He does not answer the question of whether Cambodia's policy is the wisest course nor does he explore the implications of such a policy for world politics and international security." Amy Vandenbosch

Ann Am Acad 337:177 My '68 390w

"A carefully written narrative account. . . . Although those specialists who have followed Cambodia's political scene will find nothing new in this book, it will be extremely valuable to those with a general interest or for students at the introductory level in courses on Southeast Asia. . . . Leifer has done a good job of weaving together all the zigs and zags of Sihanouk's statements and actions into a logical and coherent whole. Together with J. P. Armstrong's Sihanouk Speaks [BRD 1965] this book will provide the small library . . . with a general background on Cambodia's foreign policy."

Choice 5:872 S '68 200w

"This account of recent political history is really the Prince's story. As a personal tale it should be fascinating but Professor Leifer . . . has made of it something generally accurate yet dull. But most libraries with general collections should have the book." Paul Bixler

Library J 92:2567 J1 '67 170w

"By stressing Prince Sihanouk's resentment of insults, real or imagined, and through a readiness to use such terms as 'erratic' and 'obsession,' Dr. Leifer tends to diminish the difficulties which Sihanouk has had to face and which, to date, he has been able to overcome. . . . In the same way, arguing that Sihanouk is 'congenitally incapable of acting as a member of an alliance' draws one's attention away from the extraordinarily difficult position in which Cambodia finds itself in its search for a formal guarantee of its security. Indeed, the book's clear and concise final chapter which emphasizes the fundamentals of Cambodian diplomacy, and its relative success to date, contrasts with the picture of a querulous and emotionally unstable prince which occurs elsewhere in the study." Milton Osborne

Pacific Affairs 41:448 fall '68 600w

LEIGH, JAMES. Downstairs at Ramsey's; a novel. 250p $4.95 Harper

67-28819

"The narrator of the tale is Victor Ramsey [whol] . . . discovers that he can hear every word spoken in the downstairs apartment [where live Hardy Brewster and] . . . his best friend Jim Long. . . . Into their predictable—if unkempt—lives comes a foster daughter, Delilah, a fourteen-year-old temptress. . . . cast in the Lolita mold. . . . Brewster is torn between obvious desire for the girl and the realization that he is playing into her hands. But, try as he does, Brewster comes to realize that there is no escaping the fate that hangs over the occupants of the apartment.' (Best Sell)

LEIGH, JAMES—Continued

"Leigh combines a truly sophisticated wit and multi-dimensioned character portrayal in his novel. . . . [He] has taken a delicate theme and rendered it eminently readable. He has, in so doing, admirably combined a fine comic sense with a sure instinct for the tragic failures of man." Fred Rotondaro

Best Sell 27:472 Mr 15 '68 300w

Reviewed by W. J. Smith
Commonweal 88:242 My 10 '68 430w

"Mr. Leigh seems to be attempting poignant black humor, but the urbane Mr. Ramsey, who narrates the entire book by eavesdropping, comes off as a dirty old man, and his tenant is too passive to arouse any emotional responses in the reader. It's a pity because Mr. Leigh writes well, is wryly humorous at times, and has a fine ear for dialogue. Small, selective fiction collections can ignore this one and hope for something better next time."

Barbara Nelson

Library J 93:209 Ja 15 '68 190w

"[The author] establishes the texture of life in the Brewster household in deceptively casual scraps of dialogue that brilliantly set the stage for Acts II and III. He advances the story by means of an eavesdropping device that confines it and compresses it without seeming at all contrived. And he has some refreshing observations to make on moral conduct in the post-Lolita era." Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p46 F 18 '68 180w

Reviewed by John Greenya
Sat R 51:30 Mr 2 '68 430w

TLS p669 Je 27 '68 340w

LEISY, JAMES F. The folk song abecedary; musical autobiography by Alfredo Seville. 391p il $12.50 Hawthorn bks.

784.4 Folk songs 66-15352

A compilation of "about 200 familiar tunes with commentary, notes, verses, and discography. (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"Libraries need Child's Ballads and Princeton's music to them [see B. N. Bronson, The Traditional Tunes of the Child Ballad, BRD 1959 and 1963]. . . . [C.] Haywood's Bibliography of North American Folklore and Folk Song [BRD 1951], and Bruno Nettl's [An Introduction to Folk Music in the U.S.A.]. Leisy's work will not be missed but it could serve one of two purposes: a popular, introductory reference or as a browsing reference. . . . The book concludes with an excellent, beginning bibliography and a decent singer-title index. The intended audience is the layman, but this volume appeals as a subsidiary reference for libraries able to afford the luxury. Not definitive or scholarly."

Choice 4:402 Je '67 90w

"Leisy's selections are good, and his suggestions on how the songs can be sung and list of recordings after each song [are] valuable. However, there are a number of shortcomings: the Bibliography lists the old, not latest edition of Lawless; Leadbelly sings 'Titanic' on Folk. 2941, not 2914; no discography is listed after 'Michael, Row the Boat Ashore,' although a number of versions are available. . . . Mr. Leisy should have included relevant recordings from the 'Archive of Folk Song' of the Library of Congress. The index should have included more references from variant names and an index of first lines. In scholarship, selection, and scope, the collection lies somewhere between [John A. and Alan Lomax's Best American Ballads;] Folk Songs: U.S.A. [BRD 1948] and [Alan Lomax's] Folk Songs of North America [BRD 1961]. Those desirous of complementing their folk-song collections will find this a worthy addition." Allen Cohen

Library J 92:1162 Mr 15 '67 140w

LEMAY, CURTIS E. America is in danger [by] Curtis E. LeMay with Dale O. Smith. 346p $5.95 Funk

355.03 U.S.—Defenses. U.S.—Military policy 68-22203

A criticism of American military and diplomatic policy by a "former member of the Joint Chiefs and first commander of the Strategic Air Command [who] analyzes and challenges the government's claim to have greatly strengthened our military position. . . . [He criticizes] civilian manipulation of technical military decisions as unprecedented and disastrous. . . . analyzes our limited war strategy with particular reference to Vietnam and proposes immediate steps to insure not simply a military victory but a stable political and social solution." (Publisher's note) Index.

Reviewed by R. E. O'Brien

Best Sell 28:120 Je 15 '68 800w

"Long an outspoken advocate of both the possession of crushing military (air) power and the will to use it, the writer has set down a litany of accusative complaint about every aspect of military and diplomatic policy since John Foster Dulles. . . . As his juniors in the Air Force will remember, LeMay can deliver a vicious chew. This is one of his more important performances. Between massive strikes at the untutored laymen who interfere with the professional warrior, LeMay illuminates a wide range of military-political subjects. He invades economics to declare that 'any arms race with the Soviet Union would act to our benefit.' . . . [This] is a superhawk primer. But it should be read carefully as a possible blueprint for an ultranationalistic American administration." James Real

Book World p17 Je 9 '68 600w

"[The author's] opposition to recent American policy is restated in this book in repetitive and often frightening detail. . . . No better statement of the 'hawk' position and all its implications exists. LeMay's excursions into history and politics are faulty and misleading, but his military logic seems unimpeachable. The book offers, quite contrary to the author's intent, the most powerful possible argument for civilian control of the military."

Choice 5:1041 O '68 190w

Christian Century 85:761 Je 5 '68 40w

Reviewed by John Lustig

Library J 93:2885 Ag '68 310w

"A damning exposé of Secretary McNamara's obsession with cost effectiveness as a substitute for sound military doctrine, graphically showing the decline of our nuclear superiority vis-à-vis the Soviet Union. General LeMay, speaking from experience, explains how the doctrine of civilian control of the military has been misinterpreted as a requirement to ignore the sound military advice of our top military men and to substitute doctrine based on wishful thinking. In a very comprehensive manner, he lays out the strategic situation, deterrence, nuclear proliferation and military superiority." T. S. Power

Nat R 20:808 Ag 13 '68 1150w

"[The author] has chosen as his special targets the 'defense intellectuals' of the Kennedy and Johnson administrations, and specifically Secretary of Defense Robert S. McNamara. . . . Some of what he says is petulant or politically unrealistic. . . . However, when it comes to military and strategic matters, he speaks with knowledge and authority. . . . LeMay's opinions are not all critical, and he offers some positive suggestions relative to United States defense organization and employment. . . . Regardless of the political or international impact of General LeMay's jobation, delivering it must have made him feel years younger and pounds lighter. His choice as literary collaborator of General Dale O. Smith, who received wide celebrity for his ability to delineate the Air Force party line in clear, straightforward prose, was a good one." Arthur Prager

Sat R 51:39 Je 8 '68 1700w

LEMERCIER-QUELQUEJAY, CHANTAL, jt. auth. Islam in the Soviet Union. See Ben-nigsen, A.

LEMMONS, REUEL G., ed. The New Smith's Bible dictionary. See Smith, W.

LENAGHAN, R. T., ed. Caxton's Aesop. See Aesop

LENANTON, CAROLA MARY AMINA
(OMAN). See Oman, C.

LENG, SHAO CHUAN. Justice in Communist China: a survey of the judicial system of the Chinese people's republic. 196p $6.50 Oceana

347 Justice, Administration of 67-14398

A "survey of the evolution of Communist China's judicial system. The first part traces the historical development of Communist justice and judicial theory between 1927-49. Discussion of constitutional-legal changes in the post-1949 period emphasizes the political and educational role of the newly formed People's Tribunals and the emergence of the uniquely Chinese notions on 'Socialist legality.' The second part is devoted to [an] analysis of the workings of specific legal institutions such as the People's Courts, the People's Procuracy, the police, and the People's Lawyer. A description of statutory powers, actual procedures, and ideological propensities of these institutions completes [the study]." (Choice) Index.

"[A] much needed, concise survey. . . . Although one would wish to know a great deal more about Mao's legal views and about the Communist party's actual involvement in the legal process, this volume is by far the most useful contribution that is available for the undergraduate, and the nonspecialist. Highly recommended."

Choice 5:1222 N '68 130w

"So far as this reviewer knows, this is the first book written on the judicial system of the Chinese People's Republic published in the United States. . . . It is [Leng's] thesis that law and justice are always considered part of the political system, that is, they are intended to serve political purposes. His explanations of the on-the-spot trial, sentence, and execution scenes do make sense, if they are not any less brutal. . . . Although not very profound, [Leng's] observations and analysis are generally fair, accurate, and to the point. (Obviously, the lack of available materials caused him to glide over certain areas). Most academic, special, and large public libraries should consider the purchase of this title." Wen Chao Chen

Library J 93:768 F 15 '68 150w

L'ENGLE, MADELEINE. The journey with Jonah; with ill. by Leonard Everett Fisher. 63p $3.75 Farrar, Straus

812 Jonah, the prophet—Drama. Children's plays 67-19885

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Horn Bk 44:184 Ap '68 200w

Reviewed by Julia Losinski

Library J 93:307 Ja 15 '68 200w

N Y Times Bk R p26 Ja 21 '68 100w

L'ENGLE, MADELEINE. The young unicorns. 245p $3.75 Farrar, Straus

68-13682

The author of the Newbery Award winner A Wrinkle in Time (BRD 1962) has written a story set somewhat in the future which "centers on a struggle for control of a laser beam that can alter a human brain. . . . [Characters include] Emily, 12 and blind [who] must find inner discipline to use her musical genius. Dave, 17 and rebellious, must shake loose from a gang and a wretched father. Kindly Dr. Austin must learn that to be good is no longer enough in big-city life. . . . Ages twelve to sixteen." (Book World)

Reviewed by Ethna Sheehan

America 119:656 D 21 '68 80w

Best Sell 28:154 Jl 1 '68 120w

"What more unlikely setting for a novel of suspense than New York City's Cathedral Church of St. John the Divine? What less likely suspects for massive villainy than the highly placed clergy? Yet Madeleine L'Engle spins her complicated new tale of street gangs and unscrupulous scientists in, around and even under the great Manhattan church and involves its leaders in the fast-paced plot. . . . Like the polyglot neighborhood in which the story takes place, the book seems somewhat over-populated with protagonists, problems and plots. . . . But it's a first-rate suspense story, complete with missing formulae, Oriental scientists, unnecessary brain operations, cryptic telegrams." Joan Beck

Book World p5 (children's issue) My 5 '68 200w

Reviewed by P. M. Daltry

Christian Science Monitor p11 Je 13 '68 210w

Horn Bk 44:329 Je '68 280w

"What's most fun here is the author's outrageous imagination coupled with her ability to characterize so many people adequately; the sheer number, however, will occasionally leave readers bewildered. Dave, a troubled youth, begins and ends the book, but in between the action sways away from him, and nearly all the characters receive equal time. Surprisingly, the supernumeraries and suspense-gorged plot are so integrated as to add up to a carnival show for young readers in a giddy, mind-stretching book." J. C. Thomson

Library J 93:1323 Mr 15 '68 190w

Reviewed by Maia Wojciechowska

N Y Times Bk R p30 My 26 '68 480w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland

Sat R 51:42 My 11 '68 170w

LENGYEL, JÓZSEF. From beginning to end [and] The spell; tr. from the Hungarian by Ilona Duczynska. 139p il $4.95 Prentice-Hall

68-11913

The title story "traces the experiences of the political prisoner from childhood to his final release from Siberia. Bread is the central unifying factor . . . as something for which men will fight, kill, and reveal their essential natures in wartime prison." (TLS) The Spell which "comes first in the book . . . tells of life after the ordeal. [The] protagonist . . . settles in a strange peasant village and eventually blends into the forest. As a charcoal burner and then a gamekeeper, he retreats from people into the trees. . . . Gradually his spirit begins to convalesce. The possibility of love reawakens in him as he warms first to the trees, then toward a dog, and finally, in a tacit, undemonstrative way, toward a few neighbors." (N Y Times Bk R)

"In the Hungarian language I have little doubt that the book is first-rate literature. But its translation into English is another matter. . . . The English resembles late 18th-century prose fiction. The tremendously affective content of the work is thus masked over by a certain quaintness communicating a sense that it all happened ages ago. It didn't. Literature aside, this true account is as close as anyone has come to a concretization of philosopher Nicholas Berdyaev's 'Slavery and Freedom' [BRD 1944] which is itself an affecting existential document. Our affluent America, each and every citizen, ought to be compelled to read this deeply personalized account of the 'I-it' confrontation." J. J. Murray

Best Sell 27:472 Mr 15 '68 500w

"The style is terse, befitting a man who has suffered much and speaks little. The dialogue is crisp, and the narrative moves at a fast pace. The picture of life in the prison is vivid. . . . The characters are not memorable, and the central character is rather shadowy, probably purposely to represent all the prisoners. This . . . holds interest throughout, and should appeal to a number of readers. Public and college libraries will probably want it." J. S. Robotham

Library J 93:572 F 1 '68 200w

Reviewed by Liam Lenihan

Nation 206:512 Ap 15 '68 300w

Reviewed by R. A. Sokolov

N Y Times Bk R p30 Ap 14 '68 600w

"[This] is not, as its dust jacket states, 'a novel translated from the Hungarian', but two excellent short stories, based on the author's experiences as a political prisoner and detainee in Siberia. . . . [The Spell] hints, quietly but effectively, at the need for a minimum of human sympathy, even for such broken solitary as the former political prisoner who wishes to feel self-contained, and it demonstrates simply the varieties of acceptance and rejection that such men may expect to find in closely knit, isolated communities. . . . [The title story] is spare and yet vivid. Characters appear and disappear, but leave a powerful sense of having lived. Places, especially the prison camp and the trainload of released prisoners, are evoked with an alarming authenticity. Unaccommodated man, frightened, helpless, but clinging to existence without hope or reason, is presented here with an unusual skill and power."

LENGYEL, JÓZSEF—Continued

TLS p1113 D 1 '66 500w

LENSEN, GEORGE ALEXANDER. The Russo-Chinese War. 315p 11 maps $15 Diplomatic press

951 Boxers

67-26314

"This is the story of the hostilities between Russia and China in Manchuria at the time of the Boxer uprising in 1900, ... reconstructed from the diaries, memoirs, and reports of Russian participants." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"The first full-length treatment of Sino-Russian hostilities in Manchuria during the Boxer Rebellion of 1900. . . . Lensen argues convincingly that the heavy commitments in Manchuria required to achieve Russian victories antagonized the Japanese and provoked the Russo-Japanese War. Lensen writes clearly, vividly, and with full mastery of his subject. . . . But the heavy emphasis on actual combat and military detail will stun many a lay reader. . . . Because of the omission of direct references to the source material, the book will be of limited value to specialists."

Choice 5:104 Mr '68 210w

"An enthralling narrative of the dramatic and sometimes tragic situation of the small groups of Russian railwaymen and soldiers scattered along the Chinese Eastern and South Manchurian railways, isolated as the surrounding Chinese society exploded. The story abounds in locomotives and river-steamers, in extremes of heroism and brutality." Michael Futrell

Pacific Affairs 41:97 spring '68 300w

LÉONARD, ÉMILE G. A history of Protestantism; v 1, The reformation; ed. by H. H. Rowley; tr. by Joyce M. H. Reid. 461p maps $12.50 Bobbs

280 Protestantism

68-12987

This, the first of three volumes, contains the story "of the Protestant movement from its roots in the medieval period to the present time. E. Léonard, professor emeritus of Hebrew language and literature, Manchester University, emphasizes nonreligious factors involved in the Reformation. His thesis is that the Reformation was the final development of Roman Catholicism. He traces . . . the origin and expansion of Lutherism and the influences which partially constituted the environment in which it arose and developed. He includes the major currents of the Reformation, and the rise and influence of Calvinism." (Library J) Bibliographies. General index. Index of persons. Originally published in French titled Histoire générale du protestantisme.

Choice 5:1150 N '68 140w

"Leonard's history of Protestantism has long enjoyed an outstanding reputation in France. The subject is of course enormous in its scope and complexity; not every historian would care to take it on. But Leonard did so and now, by dint of Prof. Rowley's work in editing the French version and Joyce M. H. Reid's translation, the work should find a wider audience."

Commonweal 88:415 Je 21 '68 70w

"Highly recommended for informed laymen and general readers." Shildes Johnson

Library J 93:2504 Je 15 '68 130w

"The translation by Mrs. Reid is fairly free, and therefore highly readable, and she copes admirably with the problems involved, and her problems—such as the relation of piety and faith to the French piété and the German Frommigkeit, are problems for us all. But the text of the work is what really justifies the venture. Professor Léonard has a gift of perceptive epigram and an eye for historical contour. He writes with a controlled imagination so that his summaries of great issues and his sketches of individuals are masterpieces of compression. Needless to say he is at his best with Frenchmen and French history. His lucid account of Calvin and Calvinism makes this section of the work one to which scholars will often return."

TLS p478 My 26 '66 420w

LEONARD, GEORGE B. Education and ecstasy. 239p $5.95 Delacorte press

370 Education—U.S. Teaching

68-25150

"Leonard, who is West Coast editorial manager for Look magazine and who has written several . . . articles on the subject of education . . . finds that our schools, in obedience to society's demands, foster the outworn values of 'narrow competition, eager acquisition, and the aggression that accompanies them.' These values, while essential to civilized life of the past, are now, he points out, 'inappropriate and soon may be disastrous.' . . . [He describes advances] in an educational Utopia of 2001 A. D. that can truly bring ecstasy in education, and then [attempts to show these] already in progress in isolated instances across our land." (Library J)

"[The author's] description of education as it might be involves a fundamental rejection of the Protestant ethic. . . . He would replace education's insistence on delayed gratification, on order, rigidity and work whose sole object is success, with a system that encourages fantasy, meditation, immediate sensual and intellectual reward, close physical contact and direct encounter. . . . The Summerhill experience suggests that this kind of education produces more mental stability and happiness. . . . Leonard's prescription for education has, however, far more profound implications than the reform of American education. . . . [However], few members of the educational establishment are likely to take this visionary thesis seriously. . . . The result will be their loss and our children's." Gloria Levitas

Book World p7 O 27 '68 430w

"Although to this reviewer the book seems misguided in parts, it deals boldly, radically, imaginatively, tenderly, with a vital subject. It says magnificent things brilliantly. It also says doubtful things brilliantly, and in such brilliance the doubts loom clear and portentous. . . . Leonard seems to commend group soul-searchings, group love-ins, even group cry-ins, if expertly guided. History is very wary of group emotion, expertly guided. Some of our author's suggestions seem likely to explode. Yet he has enriched us. . . . More splendidly still, he clearly suspects that 'for all practical purposes,' the human spirit has no walls. This suspicion, implicit in parts of his vivid book, may be its greatest strength." Neil Millar

Christian Science Monitor p9 O 21 '68

750w

"The educational establishment has been castigated, not by an angry basic educationist, but by a man who finds heroism, albeit of a pathetic, futile variety, in our teachers. . . . The book is recommended for specialists and for informed readers." Robert Stewart

Library J 93:3002 S 1 '68 150w

Reviewed by Jeffrey Hart

Nat R 20:1171 N 19 '68 2200w

"In calling Leonard's picture of future education sentimental, I am not of course putting down his conception that education is concerned as much with emotional as with intellectual development, or that the two are and should be inextricably linked. . . . [But] if the schools are to educate feeling people, the system itself must be changed—and not by T-groups and the Esalen Institute (to which Leonard, as Vice-President, devotes an admiring chapter) but by basic changes in the allocation of power and the functioning of the economy. In its efforts to avoid confronting these not-very-mysterious determinants of American educational policy Leonard's book turns gimmicky and wanders into neural physiology, genetics, and computer technology illustrated by snippet references to the thought of Harold Taylor, Marshall McLuhan, J. Bronowski, and a host of other less familiar names." E. Z. Friedenberg

N Y Rev of Books 11:18 N 21 '68 1250w

Reviewed by M. R. Shedd

Sat R 51:62 D 21 '68 900w

LEONHARD, KURT. Picasso: recent etchings, lithographs, and linoleum cuts. See Picasso, P.

LEONTIEF, WASSILY. Essays in economics; theories and theorizing. 252p $6; pa $2.50 Oxford

330.1 Economics

66-24437

A professor of economics at Harvard presents papers on 'economic theory, its structure, its use, and its misuse. . . . The six essays in Part I deal with [such] subjects as . . . the problem of interdisciplinary cooperation and the 'Significance of Marxian Economics for Present-Day Economic Theory.' In Part II . . . analytical problems [are examined]. Three of the chapters are devoted to critical appraisals of Keynes's General Theory. . . . Other chapters discuss such matters as the theory of foreign trade, wage determination, and economic growth. Part III considers . . . specific applications [of theory]. One essay analyzes the effects of automation; another, the possible effects of foreign aid on the rate of growth in underdeveloped countries. The last two chapters deal with problems of economic planning." (Publisher's note) Many of these papers have been previously published in such professional journals as the Harvard Law Review, Econometrica, and the Quarterly Journal of Economics. Index.

Reviewed by M. McManus
Am Econ R 58:551 Je '68 1000w

"To quote from the dust jacket . . . 'these twenty essays will be of interest not only to economists but also to laymen concerned with the present day relationships of economic theory to public problems and governmental policies.' This is an honest appraisal of this representative collection of essays. . . . Leontief's excellent prose style enhances [the book's] value for undergraduate readers. . . . In Part II the essays cover topics of greatest interest to persons with some formal training in economics. . . . Warmly recommended for all libraries and readers."

Choice 4:322 My '67 180w

"[These papers] appeared between 1933 and 1964. They reveal a wide range of theoretical and practical interests and a broad and cultured mind. . . . Among the applied papers, I would especially call attention to a paper on automation which, though written in 1952, has lost none of its relevance, and a vigorous argument in another that knowledge would be better utilized if the Government were to hold all patent rights on inventions developed under research contracts with it. This argument (with which I fully agree) is, I might maliciously note, purely theoretical; no empirical evidence at all is presented to show that discoveries made under Government contracts would be more widely utilized if the user did not have patent protection." Kenneth Arrow

N Y Times Bk R p28 D 10 '67 850w

LEPPMANN, PETER K. Resistance to innovation in higher education. See Evans, R. I.

LERCHE, CHARLES O. Last chance in Europe: bases for a new American policy, by Charles O. Lerche, Jr.; foreword by Kenneth W. Thompson. 221p $5.95 Quadrangle bks.

327.73 U.S.—Foreign relations—Europe.
Europe—Foreign relations—1945— . Europe
—Politics—1945— 67-12351

The late dean of the School of International Service at the American University argues "that the initially correct assumptions of American strength and European weakness, on which the postwar alliance was built, have long since lost their relevance. American policy, as Lerche saw it, was based on rigid and outdated assumptions which contributed to friction between the U.S. and European nations. The solution is to be found in an acceptance of the changed situation and a realization that Europe must be granted equality of status if not role." (Choice) Index.

"This, [Lerche's] last book, is in many ways his best. . . . [It] delivers a deliberate argument, and Lerche secures his logical flanks carefully before advancing each time to the attack. The points of [his] arguments are not novel but the language and imagery he uses are provocative. . . . [However] a really full treatment of NATO would have to take more account of the three-cornered, intricate relationship of the U.S., China, and Russia in Asia today." F. H. Hartmann

Am Pol Sci R 62:239 Mr '68 450w

Reviewed by Paul Findley
Ann Am Acad 374:187 N '67 450w

"[The author] provides a thoughtful and stimulating reassessment of American relations with Europe in the postwar period. . . . [His] interpretation is the result of the application of a perceptive mind to a major problem in American foreign policy. This is definitely a policy oriented work and may be subject to criticism as situations change, but the analysis of Atlantic relations to 1965 is brilliant. Recommended for libraries of all sizes."

Choice 4:1177 D '67 170w

Reviewed by H. W. Mott
Library J 92:1630 Ap 15 '67 160w

LERNER, DANIEL, ed. Communication and change in the developing countries; ed. by Daniel Lerner and Wilbur Schramm; foreword by Lyndon B. Johnson. 333p $9.50 East West center press

301.2 Social change. Communication 66-13022

An examination of the role and function of various communication media in inducing change. Concerned for the most part with areas in China, India and the Philippines, "this volume represents the work of more than a dozen experts from the United States and Asia who attended the East-West Center seminar on 'Communication and Change' in August, 1964." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"The social actionist should find this book of readings more valuable than the social researcher. . . . The theme of communication as a means of stimulating democratic developments runs through the readings somewhat unevenly and ambiguously. . . . In larger part, the book is focused on the use of communication. . . . There is value . . . in Lerner's chapter [on] 'International Cooperation and Communication in National Development.' The section on 'Case Studies of Communication and Change: India, Communist China and the Philippines' has material particularly relevant to area specialists and change agents. Development researchers will probably find Dube's chapter on 'Communication, Innovation and Planned Change in India' the most profitable." F. B. Waisanen

Am Soc R 33:144 F '68 600w

"[This book is] concerned not only with the thrust of technological and social change occurring in the less developed countries but also with the attitudinal change of the great powers toward the backward societies (from colonialism to cooperative partnership). . . . Especially valuable are nine individual case studies of the communications media in India, mainland China, and the Philippines. Harry T. Oshima's contribution on the relationship of economic growth and communications is of extraordinary interest, and both Lerner and Schramm (with two essays apiece) are authoritative and perceptive, as usual." K. F. Kister

Library J 92:1165 Mr 15 '67 130w

"Pye contributes some thought-provoking ideas about the forms of communication in developing countries, and more particularly on the problems of legitimation of authority. Most of the other papers are descriptive. . . . [Lerner discusses] the need to provide opportunities for initiative in the developing countries, especially in connection with foreign aid programmes; the possibility of encouraging more systematic policy studies of 'democratic development'; and the role of the mass media in accelerating the pace of economic development. His remarks on these subjects are generally cogent, although they follow perhaps too closely official views on aid for development. The references to the Alliance for Progress, for example, give no hint of the controversies which rage over the objectives of this particular institution for international aid." T. B. Bottomore

Pacific Affairs 40:349 fall-winter '67-'68 220w

LERNER, GERDA. The Grimké sisters from South Carolina; rebels against slavery. 479p il pl $6.95 Houghton

B or 92 Grimké, Angelina Emily, Grimké, Sarah Moore. Woman—Rights of women. Abolitionists 67-25213

A biography of two sisters, "Charleston-born aristocrats who deserted the church of their youth, the land of their birth, and the political beliefs of their family [and who] were outstanding abolitionists. . . . [The author describes the leaders of various] movements, political, religious, and dietary, [who] influenced the sisters, and . . . gives an account of the sisters' pioneering efforts for woman's rights." (Library J) Index.

"A conscientious and well researched biography of the famous pioneers of woman's rights. . . . [It] is a story which has long highlighted reform annals. Here it is given full circumstantiality. Lerner's interest and narrative sense also help give her protagonists, and such related figures as Theodore D. Weld, new dimensions. Lerner writes as an historian, but her book can be enjoyed by general readers as well as students. An appendix reproduces the printed speeches of Angelina Grimké Weld."

LERNER, GERDA—Continued

Choice 4:1440 F '68 110w

Reviewed by Larry Gara

J Am Hist 55:138 Je '68 800w

"Lerner in this 'life and times' biography of two unusual females lays tedious stress on the times. . . . Most of this has been told before and better. The unique attraction in Miss Lerner's account is that two Southern women moved to the North to fight slavery. Much will be made of the fact that after the Civil War the sisters became acquainted with three mulatto children of their dead brother and did much to assist the capable young men who bore their family name. This is a very minor part of the book, but it undoubtedly will help sales." W. S. Powell

Library J 92:2917 S 1 '67 160w

LERNER, LAURENCE, ed. Thomas Hardy and his readers; a selection of contemporary reviews; ed. with a commentary by Laurence Lerner and John Holmstrom. 173p $5 Barnes & Noble

823 Hardy, Thomas

68-31951

"This anthology of criticism is intended to show what contemporaries thought of the novels of Thomas Hardy. . . . The main source of material has been the daily, weekly and quarterly papers published in England. . . . Each section contains a short note on the publishing history of the novel; then the reviews; then an editorial commentary." (Pref)

"[The editors] have been selective and present the greatest number of articles on Tess of the D'Urbervilles, Jude the Obscure, and Far from the Madding Crowd. This book will be extremely useful for college students and graduate students, and interesting to any informed reader. Any library without 19th-Century periodicals should welcome it." Elaine Bender

Library J 93:2875 Ag '68 110w

"The struggle of criticism to cope with Hardy begins very early on, and [this book] . . . gives us an insight into the beginnings of the process. . . . The insight is bound to be limited because the effects of journalism are cumulative, so that a proper awareness of this context needs to grow out of a survey of the complete documentation. . . . Given that this is impossible, . . . this selection seems to me to be the next best thing and to offer genuinely an initial insight into the social context of Hardy's work which will indirectly deepen our awareness of the novels. . . . I have only one complaint. The editors don't offer any description of the periodicals from which the reviews are taken, and this makes it difficult to assess [them] in a historical perspective." John Goode

New Statesman 75:274 Mr 1 '68 500w

LEROI-GOURHAN, ANDRÉ. Treasures of prehistoric art. 543p il col il $40 Abrams

571 Cave drawings. Art, Primitive 67-22851

"Using a punch-card cataloguing system, the author, director of the anthropological Museum of Man in Paris, brings . . . statistical analysis to bear on this enigmatic area. He places the major portion of cave art between 17,000 and 12,000 B.C., and he sees it as the work of seminomadic people moving within a restricted hunting area. . . . He takes exception to the usual techniques of reconstructing ancient society by analogies drawn from contemporary ethnographical groups, and of dating the cave paintings by means of looking for changes in style." (Natur Hist) "There are sections on the discovery of prehistoric art, paleolithic chronologies, types of artifacts such as weapons, tools, ornaments, and religious objects, the meaning of cave art, animals of cave art and their stylistic evolution, descriptions of sites, and documentary photographs, with a . . . classified bibliography, and an index of sites." (Library J) Published originally in 1965 entitled Préhistoire de l'Art Occidentale.

"Leroi-Gourhan skillfully combines the resources of science and art to bring up to date the pioneering work of the late Breuil. His text is no mere series of captions, but a clear exposition of the discovery, content, and stylistic development of the various arts of the ancient Europeans. In spite of its exhaustive documentation, the book will be attractive to the informed public."

Choice 5:476 Je '68 200w

"[The author is] probably the world's most eminent authority on European Paleolithic art. His new, and in many instances, unusual, viewpoints incorporate all recent relevant scholarship. . . . He studies closely, analyzes, and interprets thousands of prehistoric artifacts—from cave drawings to carved bones, from wall paintings to statuary—in this tremendously important volume. . . . Absolutely no collection of art history or art forms can be considered effective until it has added this basic, scholarly, and exciting volume to its shelves." Lee Ash

Library J 93:744 F 15 '68 320w

"All future examinations of Stone Age culture will draw upon, and refer back to, this book; it will have to be considered if only to take exception to any of its analyses and conclusions. . . . It would be unfair, however, to stress only its high professional value, because even at $40 it is a handsome bargain for the non-specialized reader. He will find the text interesting and informative; the writing style lucid and informal and with a minimum of detailed technical elaboration. . . . The 121 color plates are uniformly excellent [with] hundreds of black-and-white photographs and diagrams. . . . [The author's] methodology is logical and careful as he always attempts to proceed from the evidence, but sometimes he strays." Bernard Goldman

Natur Hist 77:71 Mr '68 410w

Reviewed by Sheldon Nodelman

N Y Times Bk R p6 Ja 7 '68 1600w

"[The author] proposes a radically new chronology of Paleolithic art and an equally novel interpretation of its cultural significance. . . . [However, his methodology] is seriously defective. . . . Nevertheless, this is a book with which students will reckon for some time. Not only does it contain the latest series of proposals on Paleolithic art, it is the most completely documented presentation of the subject and therefore a gold mine of information whose value is not lessened by the methodological wrongheadedness and ill-founded interpretation. In the opinion of this reviewer, the failure of the book is a function of too big an attempt too soon." M. H. Levine

Science 161:150 Jl 12 '68 700w

Sci Am 218:144 Ap '68 120w

LEROUX, ETIENNE. One for the devil; tr. from Afrikaans by Charles Eglington. 203p $4.95 Houghton

68-15024

The second novel of a projected trilogy. The first novel was entitled Seven Days at the Silbersteins (BRD 1967). Here "eighteen years have passed since the Silbersteins entertained Henry von Eeden on their wonderful estate and he and Salome became betrothed. Salome is dead and her child Adam Kadmon is now a giant whose abnormalities are feared and suspected. When 18-year-old Lila is found slain, an inexorable tide of suspicion rises, culminating in the primitive judgement against Adam despite 20th-Century police science: Stone him to death!" (Library J) First published in Afrikaans under the title Een vir Azazel.

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 221:114 My '68 40w

"Anyone who has not read the first book of this trilogy . . . need not feel he has missed much of the continuity. There is no continuity in either book. In both books there is a vagueness, a sort of hop-scotch device. . . . 'One for the Devil' begins with the finding of the drowned body of a nude girl in the trout lake that was fed by many artificial and arty streams. Practically the rest of the story is a leisurely walk of two men: Dr. Johns who philosophizes eruditely but seldom relevantly with the detective Sergeant Demosthenes H. de Goede. . . . Clichés are paraded ironically. . . . In this work anything and everybody can be simultaneously lewd and virginal and sacrosanct—so jumbled are the ideas and ideals. . . . [The characters are] all unbelievable. . . . [The events] are improbable." Sr. M. Marguerite

Best Sell 28:28 Ap 15 '68 500w

"[An outline of events in this story] doesn't at all suggest the artistry and imagery the author uses to skirt, study, and plunge into his themes. Those who remember Seven Days at the Silbersteins will meet some familiar characters, miss some others, and learn more about the farm society 'Welgevonden' where Nordic, Semitic, and African cultures come together. The author sometimes bedazzles with his borrowing from mythologies and philosophies, but he also can contrive a clear-cut, simple Detective-Sergeant. . . . An unusual novel, highly recommended." J. M. Carroll

Library J 93:1162 Mr 15 '68 170w

"Encrusted within Leroux's Afrikaners at Welgevonden are the myths and dilemmas of South Africa's withdrawal into what has become a valueless and impersonal society completely out of touch with reality. Who was Lila's actual murderer? We can never be certain. Only the collective nature of guilt is a certainty; and even this is shrouded in Leroux's tortuous weaving of story, myth and dream. It is undoubtedly this obscurity which has prevented Leroux's works from being banned in his native country. One for the Devil (even more than its predecessor) reads as if it were an allegory of an allegory. Yet in this story of apartheid today Etienne Leroux has brilliantly frozen as much of South African white resistance to social change as we are likely to get for a long, long time." C. R. Larson
Sat R 51:37 My 4 '68 500w

LEROY, JULES. Ethiopian painting in the late middle ages and during the Gondar dynasty [tr. by Claire Pace] [Eng title: Ethiopian painting in the late middle ages and under the Gondar dynasty]. 60p 11 60col pl $40 Praeger

759.963 Illumination of books and manuscripts. Mural painting and decoration. Painting, Ethiopian 67-20403

This volume reproduces paintings from manuscripts and murals made in the period 350 A.D. to the eighteenth century. Bibliography. Index.

"This [is a] sumptuous survey with its 60 color plates and 14 figures printed in Italy and mounted on heavy black and gray stock. The 36-page introduction is equally comprehensive and elegant, and the captions, bibliographic notes, and index are authoritative without being pedantic. As art, the paintings are hieratic, derivative, and provincial, but the obscurity of their subject matter is compensated for by the brilliance of their color and charm of their comic-strip drawing. Thus the book is a delight for browsing, and should appeal equally to scholar and to amateur." Choice 5:188 Ap '68 130w

"The reader's first impression of [this book] is extremely favorable. Tasteful craftsmanship is evident on every page. . . . [However, the] color plates [are] of uneven quality. It is high time that the ecstatic folk art of Ethiopia is being made accessible to us. In this respect this book fulfills its purpose admirably. Mr. Leroy's scholarship is perfunctory and his style dry. Nor does he penetrate deeply into the stylistic, aesthetic, or symbolic world of this art." Peter Fingesten
Library J 93:1619 Ap 15 '68 110w

"[This is] an important pioneer work of great interest. The text gives a general introduction to the development of Ethiopian painting from the late Middle Ages to the Gondar period and the colour plates provide a valuable collection of material . . . to illustrate this. As an attempt at a general outline of painting in Ethiopia the book can be thoroughly recommended. . . . It is in the much broader field of appreciation of different periods and styles that the present reviewer is most at issue with the author." TLS p655 Je 20 '68 700w

LEROY, MAURICE. Main trends in modern linguistics; tr. by Glanville Price. 155p $4.50 Univ. of Calif. press

410 Language and languages 67-13140

The author "has highlighted the outstanding events in the history of linguistics and has sifted . . . the main concepts directing contemporary theory. The 30-odd pages of Part I trace 'The Formation of Linguistic Method.' The 10 pages of Part II contain a . . . discussion of the work of Ferdinand de Saussure. The 70-odd pages of Part III focus on 'Linguistics in the Twentieth Century.'" (Choice)

Indexes of names and of subjects. Originally published in French under the title of Les Grands Courants de la Linguistique Moderne.

"[The] third and most important section is devoted to post-Saussurean theorists, specifically the work of Trubetsky, Martinet, Guillaume, Hjelmslev, as well as Indo-European dialectology, Soviet linguistics, typology, and stylistics. A two-page conclusion looks to the future for new and better methods of analysis, classification, and comparison. One of the best international surveys since its appearance in French in 1963. This English translation, of value to both graduate and undergraduate students, should be added to all university collections."

Choice 5:190 Ap '68 190w

"Leroy attempts to summarize the work being done under headings such as the Geneva School, Mechanism and Mentalism, . . . Stylistics. Such an organization does not favour analysis in depth. What we get is not much more than a catalogue raisonnée; interspersed with the author's own cautious value judgments, in which his lack of sympathy with extreme positions is evident. . . . It is remarkable that the field of syntax has no section whatever devoted to it. And to place Chomsky within the context of statistical linguistics, language laboratories and machine translation also misses the point in a way which was inexcusable even in 1963. Leroy's rather narrowly continental European outlook makes itself felt throughout. American linguistics, which from Bloomfield onwards has been a major seminal influence, is left almost completely out of the picture."

TLS p728 Jl 11 '68 440w

LESHAN, EDA J. The conspiracy against childhood. 368p $6.50 Atheneum pubs.

372.21 Children—Management. Child study 67-25483

The author of How To Survive Parenthood (BRD 1965) criticizes the computer approach to education, early forcing to read, the Montessori method (too rigid), overemphasis on tests and grades and the pressures of urban life on everyone, teenagers especially. Bibliography. Index.

"[Mrs. LeShan] is a child psychologist with experience in areas such as nursery-school education, play therapy, and diagnostic work in child guidance clinics. She asserts that, if the tensions, pressures and current educational methods directed toward children continue, childhood will be virtually eliminated. [Her book ponders] the meaning of human excellence, considering the human potential and learning in the larger sense, and discussing education extending into the college years, as well as assessing the community responsibility for all children. It is also a . . . reflective book, urging parents to pause in their frantic haste and deliberate on what they want for their own and all children, then to decide how best to accomplish this. Readers familiar with Mrs. LeShan's earlier books will recognize repetitions; nevertheless, this volume stands on its own competence." E. P. Nichols
Library J 92:3036 S 15 '67 240w

"[Eda LeShan] writes in direct opposition to the viewpoints of [Mava] Pines [Revolution in Learning, BRD 1968] and [Joan] Beck [How to Raise a Brighter Child, BRD 1968]. . . . While her heart is in the right place, she seems unaware of the recent sophisticated research in this field. For every paragraph that begins, 'There is no evidence . . . one need only consult Pines's or Beck's sources to find the evidence.' Bonnie Stretch
Sat R 51:79 Mr 16 '68 370w

LESKOWITZ, IRVING, jt. auth. Plants are like that. See Stone, A. H.

LESLIE, ROBERT FRANKLIN. The bears and I; raising three cubs in the north woods; il. by Theodore A. Xaras. 224p $5.95 Dutton

599 Bears. British Columbia—Description and travel 68-20168

The author recalls "experiences in the British Columbia northland and life as foster 'father' to three orphaned bear cubs." (Library J)

"The author of this engaging book was trying to earn enough money to put himself through college by panning for gold along the shores of the Babine Lake in the wilds of northwest Canada. One day an old she-bear brought to the shore of the site where he was living, in a cabin borrowed from his Indian friend Red Fern, three bear cubs, obviously not her own. . . . The three soon endeared themselves to Mr. Leslie, who . . . knew that he must raise them as bears which eventually would go back to their natural habitat in the woods. . . . The account of their adventures is absorbing, with thrills and humor and a great deal of forest know-how. Illustrations . . . are few but appropriate. Those readers who made 'Born Free' [by J. Adamson, BRD 1960] a best seller will probably also welcome this."

LESLIE, R. F.—Continued

Best Sell 28:148 J1 1 '68 260w

Reviewed by Jane Manthorne
Horn Bk 44:578 O '68 200w

"Mr. Leslie conveys the crystalline silence of deep winter, the impartial cruelty of the forest fire, the unconfined exuberance of spring; all nature urging the sharing of the bears' playful, gently earnest trust and painful acquisition of wisdom. A true story, a sad ending, but one of hope for the freedom of all wilderness and its wildlife. Public librarians will enjoy recommending this book." Anita Nygaard

Library J 93:2678 J1 '68 110w

Reviewed by Janet Strothman
Library J 93:[3339] S 15 '68 130w [YA]

LESTER, ANTHONY, ed. Essays and speeches. See Jenkins, R.

LESTER, JULIUS. Look out, Whitey! Black power's gon' get your mama! 152p $3.95 Dial press

301.451 Negroes. U.S.—Race relations 68-23852

The "field secretary of the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee (SNCC), has written a . . . history and explication of the black power movement. He reads into the earlier period of the civil rights movement the anger of its present mood and sees that anger as one with the black reaction to oppression from American slavery's earliest days." (Library J) Bibliography.

Reviewed by Nat Hentoff
Commonweal 89:359 D 6 '68 40w

"Oratorical, hortatory, angry, and sometimes humorous. . . . While what Mr. Lester describes may not be abstract reality, it is reality ■ he sees it—and that this is the reality seen by a portion of the American population is in itself a reality which must be faced. Mr. Lester's black power concept would see the present system destroyed as being inherently inequitable. In its stead he offers a vague, unformulated, non-communist socialism." J. M. Elrod

Library J 93:2647 J1 '68 100w

"For those who don't comprehend the extraordinary sense of community rising among blacks—a swirling ferment of pride, increasingly disciplined rage, and very concrete programs from neighborhood corporations to community schools—Julius Lester's book should finally make it all clear to just about anybody. . . . [He] writes with spare, idiomatic directness—angry, jaunty, sure of himself and of what has to be done. It is a book that ought to be the basis for a whole year's work in every high school in the country, black, white, Puerto Rican, Mexican . . . because it is so specifically relevant to where this country has been and to what the options are now." Nat Hentoff

Nation 207:53 J1 22 '68 1100w [YA]

"Lester ranges from the coldly analytical to the vehemently subjective, often in the same paragraph. It is, I think, to his credit that he does not attempt to extract himself from his experiences and hide behind bogus objectivity. . . . [Certain pages] seem to be addressed to white readers, other pages to blacks. This puts a strain on the prose. Still this is a valuable book, explicating the SNCC history, style and theory even better than [Stokely] Carmichael's Black Power [BRD 1967]. It will be an indispensable part of the library of every person who wants to understand what has happened to the Movement in the last fifteen years." A. B. Spellman

New Repub 159:36 S 14 '68 900w

Reviewed by Truman Nelson
N Y Times Bk R p16 O 13 '68 500w

Reviewed by A. M. Lee
Sat R 57:20 Ag ■ '68 460w
Time 92:[85] J1 26 '68 440w

LETTERS on wave mechanics [by] Schrödinger [and others] ed. by K. Przibram for the Austrian academy of sciences; tr. and with an introd. by Martin J. Klein. 75p il $6 Philosophical lib.

530.1 Wave mechanics 65-23493

"This book consists of twenty-one letters exchanged between Schrödinger and three of his outstanding contemporaries: Max Planck, the original inventor of the quantum concept, H. A. Lorentz, Holland's great theoretical physicist, and Albert Einstein. The letters [were mostly] written immediately after the publication of Schrödinger's [series of papers on wave mechanics in 1926]." (Publisher's note)

"[This] is a stimulating reminder that those theories which are most widely accepted today were the subject of greatest controversy at the time of their inception. Max Planck was enthusiastic, Albert Einstein guardedly optimistic, and Hendrik Lorentz penetratingly but constructively critical. It is unfortunate that the selection does not extend beyond Schrödinger's own correspondence, for the most vigorous opponents of his theory are not represented. . . . But what is included will fascinate anyone who has ever been a student of modern physics, from the undergraduate and informed layman to the full professor, and the book should find a place in every public and university library." T. J. Pedley

Library J 92:4013 N 1 '67 200w

"The book gives one a rare opportunity to see the workings of great scientific minds in the process of discovery, and it also affords a glimpse of the graces of European academic life just before the Nazis destroyed it. One of the most extraordinary letters was written by Einstein in 1926. In it he criticizes what he takes to be the Schrödinger Equation. On the basis of simple intuition, he then goes on to derive an equation that answers his objections. Much to Schrödinger's delight, this 'new' equation was exactly the Schrödinger Equation; Einstein had misread Schrödinger's original paper."

New Yorker 44:178 Ap 6 '68 200w

Reviewed by E. N. Hiebert
Science 160:664 My 10 '68 1650w

LEUCHTENBURG, WILLIAM E., ed. The New Deal; a documentary history. 263p $7.95 Univ. of S.C. press

973.917 U.S.—Politics and government—1933-1945 68-3193

The readings in this anthology include "contemporary reporting, poems, stories . . . official documents and court decisions. All are organized topically and chronologically into nine sections, providing a . . . history of the first two Roosevelt administrations." (Choice)

"[The] readings in this broadly selected anthology constitute less a documentary history of the New Deal, than a successful effort to evoke the spirit of an era. . . . Few standard or readily accessible readings are included. There is, for example, no coincidence with any of the 15 selections in [C. A.] Chambers' The New Deal at Home and Abroad. . . . A useful collection for undergraduate libraries, but the students themselves will probably prefer the lower-priced Chambers' book."

Choice 5:1214 N '68 130w

"[The editor] has chosen well from the wealth of available material. None of the selections are overly long yet each contributes to the flavor and pace of the book. . . . The introduction contains an outline of each section and selection and this might well have been incorporated at the appropriate point in the text, but this is a minor criticism. Most libraries could probably use this book as additional source material." F. W. Summers

Library J 93:2862 Ag '68 220w

LEVANT, OSCAR. The unimportance of being Oscar. 255p pl $5.95 Putnam

B or 92 68-20949

"This is a collection of more of Mr. Levant's reminiscences of his experience in show business, and of his family. He also offers opinions on such varied subjects as Winston Churchill, Averell Harriman, and the war in Asia." (Library J) Index.

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams
Atlantic 222:96 Ag '68 20w

"Some of the anecdotes are funny. Most are at least amusing. The egotist under the neurosis comes out plain and rather distorted. But, as one of his most ardent critics has said, there is no meanness there."

Best Sell 28:170 J1 15 '68 120w

"The emphasis is not on the seamy side as in [Mr. Levant's] Memoirs of an Amnesiac [BRD 1965]. . . . This book has only nine obscene words or situations. Mr. Levant says his personality has been changed by his physical and psychological tragedies. This may account for his less bitter and more relaxed outlook, and for the lack of feeling that bad language and crudity are synonymous with maleness. . . . [The] book is recommended for general purchase and performing arts collections." W. H. Matthews

Library J 93:2479 Je 15 '68 170w

"This second segment of Oscar Levant's autobiography . . . is somewhat misnamed. The importance of being Oscar Levant, after all, does revolve around a galaxy of important or, at the very least, well-known names. Mr. Levant's memoir has no chapter headings,—but he could have captioned them Songs, Smiths, Tomboys (the gay set), Pundits, . . . Critics & Columnists, Radio-TV, Sexy Oscar (personal amorous recall), Bandleaders. Intermittently, the author harks back to his schizo past, but he is no misanthrope. . . . He is sagacious about intra-industry details . . . [and] devotes much space to his efforts to bring good music to Hollywood's post-Tin Pan Alley gold rush of 1929, when sound came to movies. . . . The composer musician-author may be faulted on the importance of being Oscar Levant. But the end-result has been a life of witty, well-rounded intimacy with a world of people who matter." Abel Green

N Y Times Bk R p7 J1 14 '68 550w

LEVANTROSSER, WILLIAM F. Congress and the citizen-soldier; legislative policy-making for the Federal armed forces reserve. (Ohio state univ. Merston center for educ. in nat. security. Publication) 267p $6 Ohio state univ. press

355.3 U.S.—Armed Forces 67-10545

The author, "a colonel in the U.S. Army Reserve, sets himself three broad goals: (1) to gather evidence which would support or refute the argument that 'Congressional primacy of interest' involving the Federal reserve forces is 'exceptional in comparison with the ascendancy of the executive in national defense policy-making,' (2) to study the results of Congressional decisions in developing policies affecting the Federal reserve forces, and (3) to study the political methods of 'citizen-soldiers in the legislative arena.' He attempts to achieve these goals by examining in detail six aspects of reserve affairs which are pertinent both to the development of the modern reserve components and to the role of Congress in making policy concerning these components." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"Two reservations seem in order: (1) the six 'aspects of reserve affairs' are discussed in outline only with very little factual detail or insight, which often makes case studies interesting; and (2) the conclusions . . . cited in the Preface are simply reasserted from time to time with no attempt to tie them in with data." L. A. Froman

Am Pol Sci R 62:263 Mr '68 480w

"Since Levantrosser's study is limited to the post-World War II era and deals mainly with the reserve components exclusively under national control, it differs from other recent studies concerning Congressional participation in reserve forces policy-making. A well written, specialized work that provides insights into overall national defense policy." . . . Recommended for senior college libraries."

Choice 5:682 J1 '68 160w

LEVENSON, JOSEPH R., ed. European expansion and the counter-example of Asia, 1300-1600. 141p maps $4.95; pa $1.95 Prentice-Hall

940 Europe—History. Asia—History. East and West 67-25928

Using selections from the works of 20th century scholars, the editor attempts to distinguish the technological, social and philosophical differences between Europe and Asia in order to explain Western expansion and Asian non-expansion between 1300 and the present. Bibliography.

"Levenson (Berkeley), a recognized authority on Chinese intellectual history, confronts here the great problem of modern world history: why Europe expanded to Asia and not the reverse. Unfortunately, the method employed—the gathering together of short excerpts from a variety of secondary works—does not make for a very meaningful treatment. Most of the excerpts are mere snippets. Despite the connective tissue which Levenson has applied as editor, there is little cohesiveness to the book and less justification for its publication. Good college libraries should have most if not all the volumes from which the excerpts were drawn; there is little reason why they should spend good money on this collage."

Choice 5:846 S '68 100w

Reviewed by John Davidson

Pacific Affairs 41:263 summer '68 120w

LÉVÊQUE, PIERRE. The Greek adventure; tr. by Miriam Kochan. 595p il pl maps $12.50 World pub.

913.38 Civilization, Greek. Greece—History 68-26837

This volume outlines the "story of the rise of Greek civilization, from the first neolithic settlements and the period of the migrations to the Hellenistic era and the Roman conquest. . . . [It discusses the] territorial expansion into the Mediterranean world, and later, into Asia as far as India and China. . . . The impact of the Greeks on other nations, and the development of their culture . . . [is] described against the background narrative of the social and political history of this . . . period." (Publisher's note) Chronological tables. Glossary. Bibliography. Index.

"An exceptionally concise but complete survey of the history and culture of Greece, valuable not only for its clear text but as much for its numerous maps and charts and statistical tables. . . . There are many illustrations in black and white throughout the text and 16 pages of photographic plates which have the virtue of not being trite. . . . Highly recommended for libraries."

Best Sell 28:299 O 15 '68 110w

"[This] book is particularly valuable for the weight it gives to the periods and regions which fall outside what may be called the hard core of Greek history as it was once traditionally taught. . . . [Few readers are] aware of the impact of the Greeks on the Celts, the Nubians or the Chinese. . . . [The author offers] a superbly succinct presentation of familiar material combined with an exemplary lucidity in interpreting the newer areas of classical scholarship. Such a book is naturally addressed primarily to the general reader. It is a pity that occasionally Professor Lévéque (or perhaps his translator) seems to forget him and to revert to jargon which will be intelligible, if at all, only to the professional scholar."

TLS p802 J1 25 '68 600w

LEVER, JILL, jt. auth. Illustrated glossary of architecture, 850-1830. See Harris, J.

LEVI, ISAAC. Gambling with truth; an essay on induction and the aims of science. 246p $7.95 Knopf

501 Science—Methodology 67-10712

A professor of philosophy at Western Reserve University argues that "in an attenuated but, nonetheless, interesting sense, scientists do gamble. But the stakes are truth, information, simplicity, explanatory power, and the like. Consequently, an analysis of the character of these stakes together with a theory of rational gambling ought to lead to interesting conclusions about inductive inference. This book attempts to show that this is so." (Pref) Bibliography. Index.

"The title of this book is inviting but on a closer view the ordinary reader, however well schooled, is likely to put it down. This book is a solid comprehensive discussion of the problem of rational belief. Philosophical issues are explored in depth, and one would best bring to the study a formal background in philosophy-of-the-old-sort plus formal logic, theory of probability, statistics, Boolean algebra, geometry of sets, and theory of lattices. Levi demonstrates uncommon competence with extraordinary penetration. As a monograph it stands alone. It is clearly for the scholar at the highest level and would hardly be touched by the ordinary student."

LEVI, ISAAC—Continued

Choice 5:215 Ap '68 120w

Reviewed by R. C. Jeffrey
J Philos 65:313 My 16 '68 4500w

Reviewed by T. M. Bogle
Library J 92:1936 My 15 '67 100w

LEVI-STRAUSS, CLAUDE. The scope of anthropology; tr. from the French by Sherry Ortner Paul and Robert A. Paul. 56p $3.25; pa $1.25 Humanities press

390 Anthropology [68-73855]

This is the inaugural lecture given by the author as holder of the chair of social anthropology, Collège de France, in 1960. "In this address . . . [he] looks back to his work on kinship, forward to his research on myths, and defines anthropology both as a philosophy and as a method." (Publisher's note) Translated from the French Léon inaugurale.

"Let the title not mislead anyone! . . . The book consists of a long lecture [in which the author] . . . considers anthropology as knowledge growing out of an anthropologist's trans-actional involvement with a primitive way of life. Studying another culture is to study meanings or signs . . . Probably the general reader or undergraduate will quickly be left behind while trying to follow Lévi-Strauss as he ponders technical problems associated with discovering and translating exotic meanings and acknowledges his debt to earlier French scholars."

Choice 5:1231 N '68 100w

"[Lévi-Strauss] sees no break between the savage and the civilized mind; the savage is really performing intellectual operations comparable to those of civilized man, only the elements being manipulated are different. . . . [In this book Lévi-Strauss is] occupied with showing that the immediate task he has set himself is the interpretation of mythic systems as varying symbolic expressions of the same mental patterns. . . . [He] is, at bottom, a French universalist; he would like to feel that the human mind is the same the world over, and might eventually be elucidated at the Collège de France. At the same time, he cannot be said to underestimate the difficulties of the task."

TLS p960 O 12 '67 650w

LEVICK, BARBARA MARY. Roman colonies in Southern Asia Minor. 256p pl maps $11.20 Oxford

939 Asia Minor—Antiquities [67-89233]

This history of the Pisidian colonies of Augustus is confined to Antioch, Parlais, Cremna, Olbasa, Comama and Lystra. Bibliography.

"Until now Miss Levick's study . . . has been available only in the form of an Oxford University doctoral dissertation. It is agreeable to signal here the publication of a substantially amplified version. Miss Levick's travels in Turkey impart authority to her topographical remarks. . . . She has equipped the book with an adequate map of Pisidia . . . and she has provided photographs which are [helpful]. Her view that the colonies served to civilize Pisidia as well as to garrison it may be questioned on her own evidence. . . . However, Miss Levick's book is important for Roman historians, especially in her argument for a foundation-date of c.25 B.C. for Cremna and Lystra, as well as for Antioch." G. W. Bowersock

Class World 61:162 D '67 320w

"Miss Levick has pieced together all that can be found out about [the colonies'] history, which is naturally rather bitty. There are some monuments, some series of coins and occasional references in history. . . . She is extraordinarily thorough and she knows the ground. But the story remains fairly conjectural, particularly on the key point of how far and how long the Latin-speaking tradition lasted."

TLS p991 O 19 '67 340w

LEVIEUX, ELEANOR, jt. auth. Cassell's Beyond the dictionary in French. See Levieux, M.

LEVIEUX, MICHEL. Cassell's Beyond the dictionary in French, by Michel Levieux and Eleanor Levieux [Eng title: Beyond the dictionary in French]. 156p $2.95 Funk

443 French language—Dictionaries—English [67-94064]

In addition to the main French-English vocabulary this volume contains a section on pronunciation and "special vocabularies on Banking, False Friends, Courtesy Formulas, Informal French, Housing, Franglais, Genders, etc." (Mod Lang J) English-French index.

"[This] will definitely be of great help to those who already know their basic French but wish to dig deeper into the refinements, intricacies, and mysteries of the language. The Levieux can be used with immense profit as a reference book. . . . It is a guide, a companion for vocabulary enrichment and for correct usage. . . . [The] commentary is a kind of urbane, informative and witty tour of France and the French as seen through the language. . . . The keys to [this] success are several: everything in the book is presented in meaningful context; the authors understand thoroughly the relationships between French and English; . . . there is abundant use of cross-references; . . . [and] the authors shun the dry cataloguing of mechanical definitions in favor of compact discussions of meanings and applications." Edwin Jahiel

Mod Lang J 52:382 O '68 1300w

"These are the words that you really need in everyday living. Particularly helpful are the distinctions among synonyms, and the warnings on what words not to use." D. M. Glixon

Sat R 50:40 N 18 '67 60w

LEVIN, DAVID. In defense of historical literature; essays on American history, autobiography, drama, and fiction. 144p $3.95 Hill & Wang

810.9 American literature—History and criticism. Literature and history. Historiography 67-14651

A professor of English at Stanford University seeks to demonstrate "some of the advantages of examining history and biography with the eye of a literary critic; fiction and drama, with an interest in historical theory and fact." . . . Apart from the title essay, the volume consists largely of previously published analyses of individual authors and books. . . . An essay on Cotton Mather criticizes historians for distorting evidence to fit their [preconceptions of Mather]. . . . Another draws a distinction between Benjamin Franklin as he was and the way he represents himself in his Autobiography. . . . [There are also] articles on plays and fiction dealing with the Salem witchcraft trials and with Hawthorne and Faulkner." (J Am Hist)

"The first point to make about the 'essays' in this book is that they truly are essays: composed, stylish, venturesome and inquisitive, witty at intervals, and always personally engaged. Mr. Levin has a capacity indispensable to the literary critic who would call attention to the function of language and compositional form in achieving historical understanding. . . . It is that he can write. . . . A long opening essay, 'The Literary Criticism of History,' moves forward with a patient awareness of possible misconception and a meticulous care to disarm common doubts and objections. . . . A warmly appreciative study of Franklin's Autobiography emphasizes the consistent logic—the author's conception of his own life as an experiment—that makes this book at once a literary classic and a singularly bold and original work of historical synthesis. . . . Two essays of more conventional literary criticism, on Hawthorne's Puritan romances and [W.] Faulkner's Absalom, Absalom!, [BRD 1936], close the book, and they are both excellent."

Am Lit 39:563 Ja '68 600w

"[The author] chides historians for regarding the literary qualities of their work as ornamental and reminds them of their dependence on literary techniques and of the inevitability of serious literary problems in historical writing. These are not new ideas, but they are worth repeating, especially with the clarity and force which the author commands. . . . The methodological implications of the alliance between history and literature have been neglected. Historians should be grateful for Levin's incisive reminder." Donald Sheehan

J Am Hist 54:622 D '67 360w

"Examines closely the relationship between history and literature. . . . [Levin] comes to the conclusion that there is no basis for conflict between history and literature, but that for history to be good literature, it must also be good history. . . . Recommended for college and public history and literature collections." E. D. Johnson

Library J 92:772 F 15 '67 120w

LEVIN, MEYER. Gore and Igor; an extravaganza. 315p $5.95 Simon & Schuster

68-11013

A satire about "two heroes: Gore the California boy, Igor the toast of Moscow—both poe[n]iks, peaceniks, loverniks. Both fugitives from injustice—Gore from the CIA, Igor from the OGPU. Both finding refuge in Israel, trucking salt from Sodom, roaring through adventures, orgies, general sturm and drang, evading their pursuers. . . . surviving to become the most joyous fighters in the Israeli War. Also involved: Miriam [Christ]; . . . Mimette the Movie Queen; . . . Chava the lady bartender; Leyla the Kibbutz Guide and her Hadassah tourist ladies—plus a cast of assorted Israelis, Arabs, Frenchmen, Africans, Mexicans, Russians, Americans." (Publisher's note)

Reviewed by J. K. Hutchens

Book World p12 Ap 7 '68 320w

Reviewed by S. L. Mott

Library J 93:572 F 1 '68 190w

"[The plot] keeps moving most of the time, although there are slow sex patches. . . . But it has its moments—and the author's obvious enjoyment of his own extravagances is somewhat infectious. . . . Although Mr. Levin is best known for such grim works as 'Compulsion' [BRD 1959], he has obviously long been harboring a comedy sense. It erupts with horny gaiety in 'Gore and Igor.' I wish the book were tighter, and that the inventions were more sustained. (The last section about the war tends to Get Serious, and seems tacked-on, though it is vividly written. Mr. Levin creates a war for us—or at least a segment—but his characters are not really involved in it.) A fairly funny book, but some might prefer to save their $5.95 until it hits the nabes." R. R. Lingeman

N Y Times Bk R p46 F 18 '68 700w

Newsweek 71:100B F 12 '68 370w

"The action, which is almost always riotous, involves unremitting fornication, Reichian orgone boxes, a flight to Israel, freedom songs, potash trucks on the Sodom Road, and the 1967 six-day war. Whimsically, one supposes, the novel concludes with a reference to the coming of the Messiah. Only here, and in the battle scenes, does Levin lapse from slapdash bombast and mindless smut into readable and respectable prose. To put the best construction on the matter, this orgiastic 'extravaganza' written in graffiti style must have some artistic or psychological or sociological meaning beyond the literal one, which staggers the imagination and outrages the digestive system." S. I. Bellman

Sat R 51:44 F 24 '68 380w

"Beneath the hilarity, the political implications are a bit sour and one wonders how aware of them Mr. Levin actually is. On the surface, the joke is decrepit long before it dies. If Mr. Levin had thought more of his readers' stamina. . . . this rather leaden 'extravaganza' would have been quite a joy at half the length."

TLS p569 Je 6 '68 330w

LEVIN, N. GORDON. Woodrow Wilson and world politics; America's response to war and revolution [by] N. Gordon Levin, Jr. 340p $7.50 Oxford

327.73 U.S.—Foreign relations. Wilson, Woodrow 68-15893

"It is Levin's thesis that to this day the U.S. role in international affairs is shaped by the Wilsonian approach, which was determined by our entry into World War I and the Bolshevik Revolution. In consequence, from 1917 on, he argues, our relationships with the outside world have been determined by an 'effort to construct a stable world order of liberal-capitalist internationalism,' safe from the 'imperialism of the Right' and the danger of 'revolution on the Left.'" (American) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by V. S. Kearney

America 118:610 My 4 '68 110w

"Levin's argument about Wilson 'liberal-capitalist internationalism' is not as new as he suggests. W. Diamond made much the same point in The Economic Thought of Woodrow Wilson [BRD 1944]. What is new is the jargon of the New Left and the value judgment that this purpose was a BAD thing. But Levin has done a formidable amount of digging in the manuscript sources, and the book does constitute a provocative contribution to Wilson studies that deserves to be on the shelves of all college libraries."

Choice 5:1214 N '68 180w

Reviewed by J. A. Giddens

J Am Hist 55:671 D '68 460w

"Mr. Levin, in this sophisticated and complex, but unfailingly interesting study. . . . is not interested in the man Wilson, but in the philosophical roots of liberal internationalism which structured American diplomacy for succeeding generations. The only criticism the reviewer has is that a good editor could have polished the literary style. This is an extremely important study." G. M. Gressley

Library J 93:2861 Ag '68 180w

"[The author] has produced his own historical synthesis based upon far-ranging research in original and secondary sources. Better still, [he] has described brilliantly and perceptively both the dynamics and the long-range purposes of Wilson's foreign policies. . . . [and] has rightly understood the Burkeian foundations of Wilson's political thought. . . . Mr. Levin has such respect for the evidence that he never distorts the record or uses it merely to prove his point. In fact, he deals just as responsibly with evidence that does not support his point of view. What else can one say about the result except that it is judicious, balanced, and as detached as it is humanly possible to be? No book is perfect, and this one has some shortcomings." A. S. Link

N Y Times Bk R p40 Ap 28 '68 1050w

Va Q R 44:cxiii summer '68 160w

LEVIN, NORA. The holocaust; the destruction of European Jewry, 1933-1945. 768p 11 maps $10 Crowell

943.086 Germany—History—1933-1945. Jews in Europe. World War, 1939-1945—Jews. Jews—Persecutions 67-23676

A former librarian who is "currently a history instructor in Philadelphia. . . . [gives an] account of how six million Jews were slaughtered during World War II by premeditated official plan. . . . The book is divided into two major sections, the first concerning the preparations for the holocaust, the second devoted to the deportations. . . . Special chapters cover the year 1938, Eichmann in Austria, Munich, the struggle of Jews to leave Europe, the invasion of Poland, and World War II. Part II recounts how every European nation reached in terms of its own history, its attitude toward the Jews, the changing tide of war, and the strength of Germany's military presence." (Sat R) Index.

Reviewed by C. L. Hohl

America 119:566 N 30 '68 30w

"[A] well written, comprehensive, popular work [which] . . . provides a much more readable account than [R.] Hilberg's The Destruction of the European Jews [BRD 1962] and is also less tendentious. . . . The focus is largely on the human beings involved—both destroyers and victims—though structures and statistics are not neglected."

Choice 5:1029 O '68 150w

Christian Century 85:268 F 28 '68 50w

Reviewed by Edwin Tetlow

Christian Science Monitor p9 Mr 13 '68 380w

"[The author] presents a comprehensive account of the tragedy of European Jewry under Hitler. Her well-written book is based partly on testimony at the Nuremberg war crimes trials, and on a variety of other reliable sources. . . . Readers who lived through World War II and its aftermath with eyes open, will not find too much that is new in Miss Levin's account, but younger people will be deeply impressed by this tale of unending horror and degradation of humanity. The pictorial material is especially well chosen for the purpose. Recommended for public and college libraries; suitable also for better high school libraries." F. E. Hirsch

Library J 93:993 Mr 1 '68 170w

Reviewed by Gerald Reitlinger

N Y Times Bk R p3 Mr 3 '68 1100w

LEVIN, NORA—Continued

"[This] is the first book written by Nora Levin. . . . It is the story of how a great nation descended from the plane of anti-Semitic ideology to genocide. There are no frills, no literary tricks. Detailed, almost encyclopedic, it follows Leopold von Ranke's simple dictum: What happened? This is the way history should be written—carefully planned, painstakingly researched, skillfully organized, written with clarity, and documented. It should remain a standard work." L. L. Snyder

Sat R 51:34 Mr 9 '68 1000w

"Ever since Hannah Arendt's provocative study on the Eichmann case [in Eichmann in Jerusalem, BRD 1963, 1964] there has been no end of speculation along the lines of her major thesis: that the Nazis could not have succeeded in their slaughter of the Jews without the almost lamblike acquiescence of their victims. [In this book] Levin maintains that the Jews resisted physically much more than is generally known, and under conditions that are scarcely credible. . . . [She] ranges skillfully through Berlin ministries, where Nazi bureaucrats enthusiastically pursued their policy of Endlösung ('final solution') for the Jews, to Warsaw's Umschlagplatz, a transfer point to Treblinka. . . . [This book] documents a hitherto unheralded record of resistance, even beyond the suicidal stand in the Warsaw ghetto and the sporadic concentration-camp rebellions."

Time 91:86 Mr 1 '68 450w

LEVIN, SAMUEL R., Jr. ed. Essays on the language of literature. See Chatman, S.

LEVINE, A. L. Industrial retardation in Britain, 1880-1914. 201p $6.95 Basic bks.

338.4 Great Britain—Industries. Great Britain—Economic conditions 67-21085

Maintaining that "the British manufacturing industry of sixty years ago displayed a measure of technological and organizational backwardness relative to that of the two other great industrial powers—the United States and Germany. . . . [the author examines] reasons for their relative technical lag. [He concludes that] backwardness in British industry stemmed, above all, from the reactions of British entrepreneurship to innovations in industry—reactions which were grounded in social and social psychological phenomena such as amateurism, nepotism, social immobility and a relative neglect of education." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by Marvin Frankel

Am Econ R 58:572 Je '68 800w

"[A] brief but important monograph. . . . The information [supplied by Levine] is derived mainly from governmental and trade-union reports, articles in economic and technical journals, and other publications of qualified contemporary observers. In Part III, the longest and most valuable section of this volume, Levine critically appraises the complaints directed by previous writers against the quality of British industrial entrepreneurship and against the attitude of the trade-unions and the working classes generally toward mechanization and other management innovations. . . . [and] analyzes the large variety of more narrowly economic reasons that have been suggested to explain Britain's relative retardation. . . . [An] excellent and thought-provoking study." S. H. Zebel

Am Hist R 73:823 F '68 380w

Choice 5:530 Je '68 200w

"Levine [is] Associate Professor of Economics at the University of New Brunswick. [his book] contains a fairly small compass [his book] contains a large amount of interesting information and several ideas presented in a thoughtful and intelligent fashion. It is not, however, an altogether satisfactory book. . . . Sometimes what [the author] says is original and revealing, particularly, for example, what he writes about the trade unions and technological change. Sometimes, as on the more strictly economic explanations, he is inclined to be brief and inconclusive. . . . Mr Levine himself does, it is true, make his choice. . . . But [his] conclusion rests primarily only on general reasoning, and anyone who wishes to back some other horse will not find in this book any conclusive reason why he should not do so."

Economist 225:634 N 11 '67 650w

LEVINE, EDWIN B., comp. Follett world-wide Latin dictionary. See Follett world-wide Latin dictionary

LEVINE, GEORGE, ed. The art of Victorian prose; ed. by George Levine & William Madden. 378p $8; pa $3.95 Oxford

823 English literature—History and criticism 68-15896

"This collection of new scholarly essays about the theory and practice of Victorian prose includes studies of such writers as Mill, Arnold, Carlyle, Ruskin, Macaulay, Darwin, and Pater. The editors attempt to find critical tools for the nonfiction prose of the period as precise as those used on fiction and poetry." (Library J) Index.

"Most of [the essays] are well disciplined without being overly technical, so as to be of use to students interested in the writers concerned as well as to those who would like to see the various ways that stylistic analyses can be carried out. Because the book is authoritative, well done, and very much in tune with present trends, it is sure to be influential."

Choice 5:778 S '68 150w

"The editors can only feebly protest that 'the initial case for Victorian prose as an art form . . . has been made.' The real value of the book is found in the best of the individual essays. Several of the others seem like refugees from mathematics texts. It is good to see attention turned to this neglected area of Victorian literature, but the collection is of interest mainly to specialists." Keith Cushman

Library J 93:2652 J1 '68 130w

"This [is a] handsomely produced but unequal and in the end rather dispiriting volume. . . . To be plain, [it] is not a book from which the common reader is likely to receive much benefit. For him a straightforward anthology of critical essays on Victorian writers of 'prose nonfiction' would have been more enlightening. . . . Here the most useful essays tend to be the least fancy. . . . The most intelligent essay in the book is probably 'Victorian Philosophical Prose: J. S. Mill and F. H. Bradley,' by Alan Donagan. . . . Equally free of jargon . . . is 'Darwin's Vision in On the Origin of Species,' by Walter F. Cannon. . . . Some of the others, notably essays on Ruskin, Pater, and the use of classical rhetoric in studying Victorian prose, are sadly disappointing."

TLS p895 Ag 22 '68 1050w

LEVINE, GEORGE, ed. The emergence of Victorian consciousness; the spirit of the age. 440p $7.95; pa $3.95 Free press

914.2 Great Britain—History—19th century. Great Britain—Civilization. English prose literature. England—Social life and customs 66-24458

An anthology of pamphlet and periodical material published during the pre-Victorian era "from 1824, when Byron died . . . to 1837, when Victoria came to the throne. Between those years England clearly changed directions. . . . My central concern has been to give a cross section of the intellectual, spiritual, and social currents of the time. . . . [The essays have been arranged to show] the spirit of the age, . . . attitudes toward the increased diffusion of knowledge . . . [and] problems of social growth, particularly the problems of reform, material progress, crime, and the labor movement. . . . The final two sections deal with religion and the arts." (Intro) Among the periodicals from which selections have been taken are The Edinburgh Review, The Penny Magazine, Quarterly Review, Examiner, Englishman's Magazine, and The Westminster Review. Bibliography. Index.

"The value of this book to teachers and libraries depends largely on their needs. Levine has chosen selections written between 1824-37 because, as he argues, in this period England changed directions and found ways of accommodating a new society, 'ways that would be developed through the reign of Victoria. . . . For those who do not accept Levine's assumption, there will not be much point to the collection; for those that do, it will be an aid in teaching. The selections are grouped by subject matter (e.g. The March of Mind, Society and Reform), and Levine has written an introduction. Libraries will not need to buy this unless their 19th-century holdings are poor."

Choice 4:1306 Ja '68 110w

"Levine's anthology of [the Victorians'] periodical literature shows them on the whole dignified, tenacious and admirable in their self-questioning. . . . One theme that runs, in varying forms, through most of the serious essays in the book is the attempt to reconcile the values of the Romantic concept of personality . . . with the results not only of scientific intellectual discovery and machinery but of the depersonalising effects of the mass education and liberal ideals." A. S. Byatt
New Statesman 73:689 My 19 '67 500w

LEVINE, I. E. Oliver Cromwell. 191p $3.25; lib bdg $3.19 Messner
B or 92 Cromwell, Oliver—Juvenile literature 66-14006

The author presents Cromwell "as one who sought freedom and religious tolerance for England and was frequently prevented by a fanatic opposition from realizing his ideals. [Bibliography. Index.] Grades ten to twelve." (Library J)

"In tune with modern reassessments, the author presents a sympathetic picture of Cromwell. . . . This is an engrossing story of a dedicated and humble man. There is no suggestion of the dull and joyless Puritanism usually attributed to his regime. Mr. Levine has succeeded in presenting to young people the inherent drama in the exercise of government." Betty Henderson
Library J 91:3268 Je 15 '66 80w

"The conflict between Cromwell's principles and the practical demands of good government comes through well in a book which is strictly for older children with good eyesight; a contemporary print or two would have helped to break up the formidable mass of small type." TLS p1160 N 30 '67 70w

LEVINE, JOSEPH, jr. auth. The Africans knew. See Pine, T. S.

LEVINE, ROBERT A. Dreams and deeds; achievement motivation in Nigeria [by] Robert A. Levine, with the assistance of Eugene Strangman and Leonard Unterberger. 123p $3.95 Univ. of Chicago press
155.8 National characteristics, Nigerian. Motivation (Psychology). Nigeria—Social life and customs 66-20580

"The authors present a comparative analysis of achievement motivation amongst Nigeria's three major tribal groups: the Ibo, Yoruba, and Hausa. . . . According to their analysis, the status mobility system of the [groups differ and they] predict that the largest proportion of individuals with high achievement motivation will occur among the Ibo, the lowest among the Hausa, with the Yoruba in between. Their predictions are supported by research which includes a content analysis of written reports of dreams made by school boys in the fifth and sixth forms, and adult responses to questions on a survey." (Am Pol Sci R)

Reviewed by Seymour Parker
Am Anthropol 69:757 D '67 480w

"A carefully done and fully reported piece of research on a macrosociological problem: 'Are there objectively measurable differences in personality between culturally differing populations?' . . . The basic hypothesis is that . . . ethnic variations in achievement motivation are ultimately explained, not . . . by differences in their 'religious world view,' but rather by differences in their 'status mobility system,' meaning the behavior for which the rewards of upward mobility are allocated. . . . Throughout Levine specifies his concepts, reports his measurement procedures, and examines the reliability and validity of his data with admirable correctness, always careful to point up possible alternative explanations. [He] ends by suggesting some of the social and political consequences of the group differences, thereby reformulating in his terms the political history of Nigeria since independence." Immanuel Wallerstein
Am J Soc 72:692 My '67 410w

"The title of this book suggests a large dose of Freud and a whiff of McClelland. The study, in fact, does not use psychoanalytic techniques, but it does borrow heavily from David C. McClelland in both theory and method. . . . The book is short and deals with a limited topic, but it is a model of excellent reporting on research. Rather than simply presenting a theory and testing it, the authors systematically evaluate a wide range of rival theories which might also explain their findings. In the same spirit, they use several sources of data quite different from their own, arguing that if the same results emerge from many different methods, the findings must be accurate." T. M. Lucas

Am Pol Sci R 61:1167 D '67 600w

"Research focused on frequencies of (1) achievement scores in dreams; and (2) obedience and achievement themes in essays. The validity of the results was tested against an independent public opinion survey and occupational mobility research. The dream assessment is based on The Meaning of Dreams by C. S. Hall [BRD 1953]. The interdisciplinary approach with cross cultural depth, takes this research beyond previous general work. . . . Despite the controversialism of the hypothesis and method, the study enhances the fields of culture, personality, and psychological anthropology. Two appendices give specific explanations, methods, and techniques. Recommended for advanced graduate level."

Choice 4:1182 D '67 160w

Reviewed by D. C. McClelland
Pol Sci Q 83:157 Mr '68 650w

LEVINGER, JOSEPH S. Secrets of the nucleus: student activities by George L. Carr; advisory group: Samuel C. Dickieson [and others] produced by the Nat. science teachers association. 127p il $2.95 McGraw

539.7 Nuclear physics—Juvenile literature 64-24592

The author discusses the atomic nucleus, nuclear reactions and their measurement, fusion, fission, methods of nuclear research, and unsolved problems. Student activities include both theoretical and experimental projects. Bibliography. "Grade ten and up." (Best Sell)

"Although there is some claim that the book has been tested for young readers it appears to this reviewer that a good deal of guidance and some background will be necessary for the reader to profit from [it]. The activities suggested at the end, as well as the bibliography, will make the volume particularly valuable for the teacher of physics."

Best Sell 27:466 Mr 1 '68 70w

"This slim book gives a lucid explanation of the nature of atomic structure, radioactive series, and half-lives. Numerous diagrams illustrate such phenomena as the time-of-flight of ions and the Coulomb hill. Venturesome readers are given explicit instructions for making their own spinthariscopes, cloud chambers, and Geiger counters." B. B. Lane

Library J 93:1813 Ap 15 '68 60w

LEVITAS, GLORIA B., ed. Culture and consciousness; perspectives in the social sciences; ed. with introductions by Gloria B. Levitas. 340p $7.50 Braziller

301 Social sciences—History 67-24209

"This is an anthology of selections from the works of 31 authors . . . [dealing] with major theories and issues of sociology and anthropology from Auguste Comte's time to the present. Such men as Freud, Marx, Herbert Spencer, Durkheim, Weber, Mannheim, MacIver, Lorenz, Parsons, and other lesser-known men are represented. Included are discussions of the characteristics of society and examinations of the nature of the social sciences." (Library J) Index.

"Shows that advances in both natural and social sciences have accelerated the pace of social change to such a degree as to make the social future far less predictable than Comte had envisaged. . . . In the concluding section, such well-known contributors as Lundberg, Northrup, and Lévi-Strauss present various positions and issues under discussion in contemporary social science. The introduction by Levitas is informative and interestingly written. Although the selections omit such notable developments as the New Sociology of Mills and the cross-cultural correlational studies of Murdock and Whiting, they are generally well chosen."

Choice 5:688 Jl '68 150w

LEVITAS, G. B.—Continued

"This book probably will be of primary use as supplemental reading for college students, although laymen interested in the subject might want to dip into it. Recommended for academic and large public libraries." David Cooley
Library J 92:3434 O 1 '67 160w

LEVY, ALAN. The culture vultures; or, What-ever became of the emperor's new clothes?
380p $6.95 Putnam

917.3 U.S.—Civilization. U.S.—Intellectual life 68-15513

This "book is an analysis of American mass culture . . . through such recent phenomena as book and record clubs, theater parties, writer-training correspondence courses, educational television, commercial lecture bureaus, and tourist agencies." (Library J) Index.

Reviewed by Roderick Nordell

Christian Science Monitor p11 S 12 '68 650w

"Mr. Levy has gathered the crumbs left behind at Vance Packard's banquet table and predictably, we Americans are found to be hopeless vulgarians and materialists. Most of his findings are such common knowledge as to be simply not that interesting, and Mr. Levy's personal pique, as in the chapter on National Education Television, amounts often to ax-grinding. . . . The book may appeal to informed laymen and general readers." R. J. Thompson

Library J 93:2633 J1 '68 130w

"Long and sometimes far from factual . . . [this] is nevertheless a readable and frequently funny chronicle of what passes for culture in America. . . . [Levy's belief is] that 'cultural explosion has come to mean cultural leveling toward the blandest common denominator.' . . . Levy's marathon through mass culture contains . . . choice episodes—some to which perhaps only the late Nathanael West could have done justice. Unfortunately, Levy's enjoyable, establishment-be-damned reportage is marred by breezy unevenness and downright inaccuracies. . . . Cavils aside, the basic problem of Levy's book is that—like many others—it proscribes but does not prescribe. . . . A serious chapter on what can be done is lacking." Elisabeth Stevens

Sat R 51:34 S 21 '68 550w

LÉVY, JEAN-PHILIPPE. The economic life of the ancient world; tr. by John G. Biram, 147p $5 Univ. of Chicago press

330.93 Economic conditions 67-20575

"This book traces the evolution of man's economic activity from the Greco-Oriental cultures before Alexander to the Fall of Rome. For each of the periods covered—pre-Alexandrian, including the early Egyptian, Phoenician, and Classical Greek cultures; Hellenistic, including the Carthaginian and Etruscan cultures; Early Roman; and Late Roman—Professor Lévy describes the pre-monetary states, the advent of money, the growth of commerce, and the social consequences of commercial activity. Among topics discussed in relation to economic development are agriculture and industry, transportation, legal systems, foreign trade, state regulation of the economy, and the growth of corporate organizations." (Publisher's note) Chronology. Annotated bibliography. Index. Originally published in France in 1964 as L'économie antique.

"Lévy is neither primarily an economist nor a historian. Nevertheless, in this short volume he attempts to sketch the economic history from roughly 3,000 B.C. to the Middle Ages. That would be a most difficult task in a much larger work; in such a short volume Lévy was forced to presume a certain familiarity with the sources on the part of the reader. Lévy's bibliography is quite good though certainly far from complete. . . . While the translation is adequate, it lacks the stylistic force of the original French text."

Choice 5:392 My '68 120w

"[Lévy's] arguments, expressed with a Gallic clarity worthy of Montaigne, often make the reader feel he is reading a legal brief. At his best when most economic, Lévy gives us discussions of money less amateurish than we are used to. . . . We need and have long needed this book. . . . What a shame, then, to let good economics be marred with numerous bad bloopers." P. N. Lockhart

Class World 61:336 Ap '68 300w

"On such a [small] scale, it is impossible to do justice to those important but complicated subjects, such as slavery and pseudo-voluntary contributions by the rich, which need quantitative treatment but lack adequate data; and the author's views on disputed subjects are apt to be set down unshaded (which occasionally causes the translator to gasp in a footnote). Nevertheless, the book . . . is readable and provided that it is not taken as gospel, it forms a useful short introduction to the subject."

Economist 227:50 Je 29 '68 130w

"Apparently it was the purpose of Mr. Lévy, professor of law and economic sciences at the University of Paris, to write a simplified, basic account of ancient economic life—unfortunately he has succeeded. Whether the original text contains the same short direct, unadorned statements or whether these result from the translation, this reviewer is unable to say. There is hardly a paragraph that does not contain some terse reference that leaves the reader wondering either where more information can be found, or about the correctness of the statement itself. . . . The bibliography is far too complex and contains too many non-English works for the intended audience. This book cannot be recommended to any reader or library." F. M. Lauritsen

Library J 92:2763 Ag '67 160w

LEVY, JUDITH A., ed. Formulas for painters. See Massey, R.

LEVY, JULIEN. Arshile Gorky. See Gorky, A.

LEVY, LEONARD W., jt. ed. Freedom and reform. See Hyman, H. M.

LEVY, LEONARD W. Origins of the Fifth amendment; the right against self-incrimination. 561p $12.50 Oxford

347.9 Self-incrimination 68-15894

Beginning with the thirteenth century, the author investigates the historical background of the clause in the American Constitution on the right against self-incrimination. Appendix: Talmudic law. Bibliography. Index.

Choice 5:1042 O '68 210w

"The Fifth amendment to the U.S. Constitution was not a casual afterthought or a conspirators' dream to frustrate future witch-hunters. It has deep, deep roots in English history. Levy exposes these roots in a masterful way."

Christian Century 85:654 My 15 '68 40w

"[This] is a sound, thorough, scholarly work written in a lucid, absorbing manner. . . . Levy recounts the events surrounding several of England's and America's best-known criminal trials. . . . But in the retelling of the familiar, something new has been added. [The author] focuses on the self-incrimination aspect of each trial and each episode. Pulling these threads together and weaving them into a single fabric enables him to make an original contribution to Anglo-American constitutional history. . . . Yet, good as it is [the book] is primarily a history of words, not of events and their social and political consequences. It is a history of what people said about self-incrimination, and not how the principle was applied. To this extent, the book will not satisfy legal history readers. . . . [Nevertheless the author] succeeds in creating an atmosphere and in fostering sentiments that will make his modern readers sensitive to the costs—in terms of human dignity—to the society which refuses to preserve the right against self-incrimination. For a legal historian, this is a significant contribution." E. A. Mearns

Va Q R 44:485 summer '68 900w

LEVY, LESTER S. Grace notes in American history: popular sheet music from 1820 to 1900. 410p 11 col pl $12.50 Univ. of Okla. press

784.8 Music, Popular (Songs, etc.). Music. American—History and criticism 67-24623

This book "provides samples of American sheet music of the nineteenth century which deal with the manners and history of the times. A group of songs prompted by Uncle Tom's Cabin constitutes one of the nine sections on 'Mores.' Under the bracket 'History' appear selections dealing with such topics as the Cabernet, Indians, transportation, and the Civil War." (Am Lit) Bibliography. Index.

Am Lit 40:270 My '68 100w

"[Levy] has taken from his vast collection of sheet music many examples of musical Americana to write this unique study, which shows that American history was popularized around the piano. . . . He discusses at length the origins of the songs and gives a thoroughly researched history of the subjects covered. For example with 'That Game of Poker' he includes a history of the game (not easily found). Other facets he treats similarly; in all this is a brilliant idea that he excellently and entertainingly carries out. The book is a quarto and contains almost 100 illustrations of sheet music covers; most show melodic lines and several verses. . . . Needed in all but poorly endowed public libraries, in academic and music libraries, and in school libraries." P. W. Filby

Library J 92:4159 N 15 '67 190w

"A delightful and fascinating study of popular American sheet music of the last century. There is as much of America—in the broad cultural sense—in this collection as in any anthology of folksongs twice its size. The nation is reflected and projected here: the Civil War, the kidnapping of Charlie Ross, Custer's Last Stand, and Dan Emmett's blackface songs. The book is profusely illustrated with broadsheet replicas and much of the music itself. The social historian will want to study it; the folklorist will value it; and all others will be delighted. Levy's editing is intelligent and his comments are often sensitive."

Va Q R 44:cxxx summer '68 130w

LEVY, WILLIAM TURNER. Affectionately, T. S. Eliot; the story of a friendship: 1947-1965, by William Turner Levy and Victor Scherle. 148p $4.95 Lippincott

B or 92 Eliot, Thomas Stearns. Levy, William Turner 68-29732

A "memoir of [the author's] acquaintance with T. S. Eliot from 1947 onward, and of the development of that acquaintance through letters and personal visits into an affecting kind of uncle-nephew friendship by the time of the poet's death in 1965." (Library J) Index.

"'Sir,' roared Dr. Johnson one day to the sedulous Boswell, 'you have but two topics, yourself and me. I am sick of both.' . . . It is clear that Father Levy (he is now an Episcopal priest) had two topics—himself and Mr. Eliot. . . . [This] is Boswellism with a modern wrinkle: for while Boswell plotted laboriously to be presented properly to Dr. Johnson, Mr. Levy just walked in. The resulting memoir, lacking Boswellian amplitude, is more in the category of hagiography than biography. . . . If you are interested in knowing that he drank his bourbon somewhat 'lighter' than Father Levy's, it's on page 20. . . . This is the kind of gossipy book one reads greedily—with shameful enthusiasm." E. M. Yoder

Book World p10 S 29 '68 750w

Christian Century 85:1245 O 2 '68 40w

"The book renders the minor service of, on the one hand, getting on the record various scraps of biographical data that will be welcomed by future students of Eliot—for instance, Eliot's extreme political conservatism and his strong disavowal of his supposed anti-Semitism—and, on the other, revealing Eliot's personal likeableness, thoughtfulness, intense religiosity, and feline charm. It does both, thinly but honestly." R. J. Thompson

Library J 93:2999 S 1 '68 120w

LEWANSKI, RICHARD C., comp. The literatures of the world in English translation; a bibliography; v2, The Slavic literatures; comp. by Richard C. Lewanski; assisted by Lucia G. Lewanski and Maya Deriugin. 630p $18.50 N.Y. public lib.

016.8917 Slavic literature—Bibliography 65-23122

"The present listing of Slavic literatures in English translation attempts to register all translations of belles lettres from any Slavic language into English, whether published separately or printed in anthologies or periodicals. A few mimeographed and typewritten copies in the collection of the Slavonic Division of The New York Public Library have also been included. The term belles lettres is interpreted broadly to comprise fiction, poetry, drama, juvenilia, folk tales, sermons, and proverbs. Further, scholarly, philosophical, political, and journalistic writings have been included when felt to possess definite literary value or when completeness of the literary silhouette of an author would suffer from their exclusion." (Pref) Indexes of authors and individual titles and of anthologies and compilers.

"This has been a vast and impressive undertaking. . . . [Lewanski] employs the term belles-lettres rather flexibly; . . . oddly enough literary criticism and history do not qualify. . . . [He] uses several eminently helpful approaches to the material he has compiled. In the first section, 'General Anthologies,' he performs a great service by analyzing collections of translations from more than one language. Subsequently, he analyzes anthologies and lists individual authors and works and anonymous works under the language heading. This treasure house can be entered by means of [indexes]. . . . A fairly elaborate system of cross-references link up variants in the English version of titles or spelling of authors' names. This work should serve well in academic and other large literature collections. The cutoff date is unfortunate for medium-sized and smaller libraries which might better profit from comprehensive or annotated listings of the many new translations which have become available since 1960." V. D. Newman

Library J 93:175 Ja 15 '68 330w

"The older period has been covered extremely well. Only for the late 1950's did I find missing titles. . . . My impression is that the year 1960 has been covered incompletely, as even works by major authors fail to show up. . . . [The compilers] have chosen to refer to the original titles under any circumstances. . . . [This becomes] a problem whenever the same work appears under several [English] titles. . . . The problem of transliterating Cyrillic names and titles has been solved very well. . . . Translators are not listed in the Index—a pity, for there are illustrious names among them and legitimate subjects of scholarship in their own right. Excerpts (rather than complete translations) are not always identified as such. . . . This bibliography will be an invaluable and permanent aid to many and a useful source of reliable information to many more." Victor Terras

Library Q 38:115 Ja '68 1300w

LEWIN, LEONARD C., ed. Report from Iron Mountain on the possibility and desirability of peace. See Report from Iron Mountain on the possibility and desirability of peace

LEWIS, BERNARD. The Assassins; a radical sect in Islam. 166p pl $4.95 Basic bks.

297 Assassins (Ismailites) 68-10967

Professor of history of the Near and Middle East at the University of London, the author discusses a branch of the Ismailis, a Muslim religious sect that came to be known as the Assassins. He attempts to disentangle truth from legend and to make clear "that Ismailism was not, as its enemies alleged, a tangle of irrational beliefs and immoral practices, but (at least in its early stages) a system of doctrine and ethics to which men of distinguished mind and elevated character could adhere. While admitting that the Assassins did practise assassination, and claiming that they invented terrorism, he [aims to] show that they did not kill without discrimination." (Economist) Index.

Choice 5:1025 O '68 150w

"[A] brief, learned, lucid and elegant book. . . . The first European scholars to study the Assassins used only sources written by their enemies, but, later, material from Ismaili sources began to come to light. . . . Thirty years ago, Professor Lewis wrote a famous thesis on their origins, and now at the height of his power as a historian he summarises the present state of the question. . . . But perhaps in some ways he makes the picture clearer than the evidence warrants."

Economist 226:35 Ja 6 '68 750w

"[Mr. Lewis] traces with an easy, almost conversational scholarship the emergence, triumph, and sudden demise of the Ismaili faith."

New Yorker 44:158 Mr 23 '68 150w

LEWIS, BERNARD—Continued

"Professor Lewis's notes on all the important commentaries and sources available are not the least among the merits of his short volume. . . . [He] has succeeded with his usual carefulness, probity and skill, and with an admirable clearness, first in describing what the Imamate essentially is, and secondly in disentangling its various and occasionally interrupted development. . . . One might indeed criticize this book for its neglect of the romantic theme. . . . As a book for reference, however, Professor Lewis has done a piece of work excellently accurate apart from a detail or two of topography. . . . In his last pages, relaxing historical reserve for a moment, the author shows his awareness of dramatic implications in a record whose human interest is so unusually vivid and, though now peaceful, is still active today."

TLS p336 Ap 4 '68 1050w

LEWIS, C. S. Letters to an American lady; ed. by Clyde S. Kilby. 121p $3.95 Eerdmans

B or 92

67-30853

"When C. S. Lewis wrote the first letter in the following collection he was 51 years old and long established at Magdalen College, Oxford, as university lecturer and tutor. . . . [The letters] pretty well identify the events in Lewis's life after 1950. . . . The obvious thrust of these letters is spiritual encouragement and guidance and it is chiefly here that they have their value. . . . But they are not without glimpses of Lewis the man, lover of cats and dogs, of the first cuckoo and the first crocus of spring." (Pref)

"There is much of value in this collection written to an unseen correspondent across the ocean. First, there is ample evidence of a vast and strangely patient charity in spite of what must have been a monumental daily workload. . . . Throughout the entire collection there is little evidence of humor, but much of humanity. Perhaps the lady needed something more than a smile. But there are interesting glimpses into the character of a man who was recognized as a scholarly Christian as well as a writer of children's books." Rita Anton

America 118:162 F 3 '68 430w

"I am unsure what a reader who is not, like me, a bit of a Lewis fanatic will make of this book. He may think that the lady of the title—whom Lewis never met, but whom he counseled and prayed for from 1952 till his death in 1963—was a nuisance of the first order, or at least a querulous, unattractive sort of a person. And, so thinking, he will find very little here besides an answer to querulousness. One can see how he might come to this conclusion, inaccurate though it is. These letters are almost solely letters of counsel, and are therefore centered on what has gone wrong. . . . What this book triumphantly is, is an example of Christian life in action, a welcoming of the duty of counsel, a remarkable demonstration of Lewis's belief in the Way of Exchange." J. C. Lobdell

Nat R 20:815 Ag 13 '68 190w

LEWIS, C. S. Spenser's images of life; ed. by Alastair Fowler. 144p $3.95 Cambridge

821 Spenser, Edmund

67-21961

The editor "has taken Professor Lewis' notes for his course of lectures on Spenser—notes which Lewis himself had intended to make into a book—and expanded them into . . . [an] approximation of the book Lewis would have written had he lived. . . . [Lewis argues that] The Faerie Queene . . . is to be read not only as a straightforward narrative, . . . but also as an iconographic or emblematic pageant or series of pageants, polyphonically interwoven and depending for their response both on a liking for pageants . . . and on a knowledge of the emblems and iconography involved." (Nat R) Index.

"Even though the book shows a lifelong acquaintance with Renaissance poetry, Lewis' approach will not convince many readers that The Faerie Queene imaginatively embodies all the ideas he finds in it. . . . One feels that he is projecting his own reactions to life into the poem. . . . There are, nonetheless, so many curiously brilliant observations in this book by one of the great literary historians of the century, that every library should have it, if not for its comments on Spenser, at least for its reflections on Lewis himself."

Choice 5:1308 D '68 170w

"If [this] lacks some of the style of [Lewis'] finished work . . . it nonetheless should serve to set critics of Spenser on a new and profitable track. . . . It is, admittedly, doubtful whether even the brilliance of C. S. Lewis can restore reading Spenser as a popular pastime in our current counter-romantic age, but this book should restore a measure of understanding to those who do read him, and that in itself is no small valediction." J. C. Lobdell

Nat 20:1027 O 8 '68 370w

"[This] is a set of lecture notes in the first stages of moving toward a book; Alastair Fowler has arranged, supplemented, and on occasion gently corrected them, but the wide vision and direct responses of the master sign every line with his personality. . . . The argument is sometimes over-schematic, the urbane qualifications and softening sidelights remain to be added; but the commentary is, as always, lucid and alive. . . . Mr. Lewis was able, alas, only to sketch in some of the possibilities here; and his little book will therefore serve chiefly as a student's introduction to the topic, a vade mecum which doesn't pretend to penetrate very deeply into the Spenserian wilderness." R. M. Adams

N Y Rev of Books 10:32 Je 6 '68 1050w

LEWIS, CLAUDIA. Poems of earth and space; il. by Symeon Shimin. 48p $3.75; lib bdg $3.71 Dutton

811

67-7822

A collection of poems. "Grades four to six." (Library J)

"There are splendidly airborne illustrations, but the poet seems to be straining to find material that has guaranteed child-appeal. Miss Lewis is more pedestrian than astronaut in most of these verses, yet when she turns to an experience of her own, she is charming; her enthusiasm is infectious." Eve Merriam

Book World p10 D 24 '67 90w

"The first half of this collection of poems deals with earth and space. To attempt to find the poetic qualities of the universe in contemporary scientific knowledge and terminology is an interesting idea but in the application most of these selections seem like instructional ditties . . . or else they become pedestrian presentations of classic themes (loneliness: 'Go, go/You rocket men/. . . In all of space/You'll never see/A man's face.') The result is a self-conscious attempt to bring poetry within the scope of those who tend to find it irrelevant. The second half of the collection is much more successful albeit more conventional. These poems are built on direct observations of small yet significant aspects of nature which reveal the poet's enthusiasm for the outdoors." E. S. Cullen

Library J 93:293 Ja 15 '68 180w

LEWIS, GOGO, jt. ed. High adventure. See Manley, S.

LEWIS, MARVIN, ed. The mining frontier; contemporary accounts from the American West in the nineteenth century; coll. and ed. by Marvin Lewis. 231p il $4.95 Univ. of Okla. press

917.8 Mines and mineral resources—The West. Frontier and pioneer life—The West 67-15581

The editor has "drawn together from various newspapers a collection of journalistic accounts of activities on the mining frontier . . . in poetry, song, and journalistic prose." (Choice) Index.

"The everyday life of the mining camp comes alive with all its color, violence, humor, tenderness, and passion. Here is the mining frontier as reported by those on the scene in a rough, tough, flamboyant language that expresses a rare journalistic independence and vitality. Humorous contemporary drawings and plates add flavor and accent to the accounts. Recommended for all who would like an authentic account of the Western miner at work or play."

Choice 5:864 S '68 100w

"The title of this book is misleading, for it is far broader than the contents. The editor . . . explores mining camp journalism, and almost exclusively the journalism of California, Colorado, and Nevada. . . . The most satisfactory parts of the book are those in which the mountain satirists and tall tale-telling wits speak for themselves; these selections include some of the best—Mark Twain, Dan de Quille, and Joaquin Miller. . . . Because of its limitations, the book is recommended only for the broadest collections on journalism and mining history." J. D. Filipiak

Library J 92:4416 D 1 '67 170w

LEWIS, MARY CHRISTIANNA (MILNE). See Brand, C.

LEWIS, NORMAN. Every man's brother. 253p $4.95 Morrow

68-18585

"Bron Owen, with a history of epilepsy and unremembered crimes, emerges from a five-year prison sentence and moves in on his guilt-ridden brother and his wife [on their farm in Wales.] Both Bron and his brother's surly hired hand are strongly attracted to the wife. One day the brother disappears, leaving bloodstains here and there—and Bron, whose world is part dream and part real with no clear line between, submits unresistingly to a charge of murder." (N Y Times Bk R)

"[When Evan and Cathy offer Bron a partnership in the farm,] fact and fantasy merge so that the reader is hard put to separate them. Does Bron really rape his sister-in-law? Did Owen see this or does he disappear because the Chapel has decided to excommunicate him? Did Bron only imagine that he spent the night of his brother's disappearance with Miss Frost? . . . The first part of the book is haunting and suspenseful. Places and people and things communicate an almost unbearable sense of foreboding. At the point where fact and fantasy are mixed, the reader becomes puzzled not only by the questions mentioned above but about the author's intention. Is he just telling a story or creating a mood or is he trying to say something about crime, responsibility and society? In short, the book does not jell." T. M. G.
Best Sell 28:89 My 15 '68 300w

"A psychological study as well as a tale of vengeance and retribution. . . this suspense novel is a quiet illumination of Welsh folkways, of British prison life, and of family tragedy." M. K. Grant

Library J 93:1506 Ap 1 '68 80w

Reviewed by A. J. Hubin

N Y Times Bk R p43 Je 30 '68 120w

"Moving subterraneously through [this novel] are the serious and related themes of crime and individual responsibility, external reality and private hallucination, but the story . . . does no more than glance at the problems it raises. In spite of its occasionally portentous tone and the liberal sprinklings of psychological and medical terminology, the book is no more than a fairly good suspense novel with an unusual setting. . . . The end is predictable, vaguely and unwarrantably optimistic for Bron's future. Some of the writing is good, particularly the impressions from inside Bron's sick mind when the reader is drawn uneasily into a strange, discordant yet not unreal world, but the dialogue, surprisingly from such a practised professional author, is wildly off target."

TLS p1005 O 26 '67 280w

LEWIS, R. W. B. The poetry of Hart Crane; a critical study. 426p $10 Princeton univ. press
811 Crane, Hart 67-14411

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by Brom Weber

Am Lit 40:252 My '68 650w

Reviewed by W. K. Bortorff

Library J 93:753 F 15 '68 120w

TLS p415 Ap 25 '68 1200w

Reviewed by H. H. Waggoner

Va Q R 44:323 spring '68 1600w

Reviewed by John Unterecker

Yale R 57:455 Mr '68 550w

LEWIS, RICHARD, ed. Out of the earth I sing: poetry and songs of primitive peoples of the world. 144p il $3.95; lib bdg $3.69 Norton

808.81 Poetry—Collections—Juvenile literature 67-18679

These poems have been selected from North American and South American Indian, African,

Asian, Pacific, and arctic cultures, expressing man's reactions to earth, sky, and the elements and to living creatures, children, love and death. Index of first lines. "Age eight and up." (Sat R)

Reviewed by John Greenway

Book World p4 (children's issue) My 5 '68 180w

"[The poems] all express the people's close relationship to and reverence for the physical world. . . . Adding to the uniqueness of the book are the well-selected black-and-white photographs of primitive works of art. The appearance on the same page of a poem and a photograph not representing the same culture can hardly be considered a fault, since they harmonize beautifully in subject matter and spirit." M. M.

Horn Bk 44:187 Ap '68 180w

Reviewed by Julia Losinski

Library J 93:883 F 15 '68 90w

Reviewed by Jerome Rothenberg

Nation 207:56 Jl 22 '68 650w

Reviewed by C. H. Simonds

Nat R 20:1281 D 17 '68 20w

"It's all very well to put forth a book like this and say it's poetry so why worry about scientific accuracy. But the book is not just poetry. . . . Actually, the book's appeal is less literary than visual. It is almost a picture book of primitive art. The pictures are remarkably fresh. However, while each poem has an accompanying attribution, no mention is made of the pictured objects, their tribal or geographic source, except in the awkwardly arranged credits at the back of the book. . . . An Eskimo picture illustrates a Navajo song; a Mojave doll from Arizona illustrates an Eskimo song. . . . There is no need to misspell Leonard W. Doob as Doop. . . . Poets should not assume a license to be careless." Harry Behn

N Y Times Bk R p30 F 18 '68 240w

"This book would be worth having solely for its stunning reproductions of primitive art. . . . The verse, too, can stand alone; the poems are about the elemental things: songs of love, chants in praise of a new day, prayers for the harvest, poems that pierce with their clarity and vigor." Zena Sutherland

Sat R 51:39 Mr 16 '68 100w

LEWIS, RICHARD, comp. The wind and the rain; children's poems; coll; phot. by Helen Butfield. 44p $3.95; lib bdg $3.79 Simon & Schuster

808.81 Nature in poetry—Juvenile literature. Poetry—Collections—Juvenile literature. Children as authors 68-18331

Some of the twenty-three poems and poetic impressions included in this collection are taken from the compiler's Miracles (BRD 1967), while others are published here for the first time. These writings by children explore the moods, sensations and ideas experienced in man's relationship with some aspects of the natural world. "Ages eight to ten." (Sat R)

"[This] is a handsome assemblage, perhaps a little overproduced, as if 10-year-old child prodigies were competing for the Emily Dickinson award. Still, if not taken in concentrate, the effects can be most pleasant." M. M.

Christian Science Monitor pB6 My 2 '68 90w

Horn Bk 44:433 Ag '68 110w

"Lewis has collected a memorable [group of poems]. (This book should not be confused with an excellent anthology with the same title, edited some years ago by John Hollander and Harold Bloom [BRD 1962]). The children in Mr. Lewis's collection, aged 8 to 13 and apparently many of them New Zealanders, utter hardly a sentimental syllable in the volume. . . . The poems are accompanied by some spectacular black-and-white photographs." Walker Gibson

N Y Times Bk ■ pt 2, p44 My 5 '68 180w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland

Sat R 51:33 Je 15 '68 100w

LEWIS, RICHARD S. Appointment on the moon; the inside story of America's space venture. 434p il $10 Viking

629.4 Astronautics—U.S.—History. U.S. National Aeronautics and Space Administration 68-22871

"This is the historical and scientific survey of America's efforts in the conquest of space

LEWIS, R. S.—Continued
and efforts to reach the moon." (Best Sell) Index.

"The amount of detail and some advanced scientific analyses will limit this book to the superior students who are interested in space exploration and have sufficient background. The detailed index, as well as many of the illustrations, will also make this volume a suitable reference tool for all high school libraries."

Best Sell 28:227 S 1 '68 80w [YA]

"Lewis, science editor of the Chicago Sun-Times, who observed the flights, is very successful in telling what each space shot accomplished. He has reconstructed each one with great detail even to the moods of the astronauts and the ground crews. . . . In a short section entitled 'The Influence Peddlers' he discusses the strange linkage of Bobby Baker with the Apollo's prime contractor. There have been many books retelling the story of America in space, but none have come up to this one. It is a monumental work that adds hope to the suspense created since the V-2 rockets were launched in 'Operation Backfire.' There are reference notes for each chapter in this book which is recommended for all readers." M. B. Wenger

Library J 93:2675 J1 '68 160w

"The emphasis is on people: the engineers, the program managers, the Congressional committees and, above all, the astronauts. Perhaps even somewhat too much about the astronauts. . . . The U.S. space program has two major parts, the N.A.S.A.-directed civilian program and the Air Force-operated military program. Only the first is considered here. Furthermore, the N.A.S.A. program itself has two phases: manned space flight and unmanned space probes. Lewis discusses the unmanned probes and the space applications but the discussions are comparatively brief; the technical utility and scientific results are summarized rather than explained and, more often than not, personalized. . . . Not that this personalization of the program is altogether a mistake. To a surprising degree personalities have modified the U.S. space program." F. A. Long

N Y Times Bk R p3 N 3 '68 470w

LEWIS, W. D. Mathematics makes sense; an introduction to propositional algebra. 234p $3.95 Arco

510 Mathematics. Logic, Symbolic and mathematical 66-21185

"The book begins with an examination of the mind at work—how we make decisions, judgments, and so on. It continues with a description of the language of mathematics and shows how it can be used in a variety of familiar situations. The reader is then introduced to the main topics of the new approach which is becoming widely known as 'Modern Mathematics.' The final section demonstrates how many of the ideas introduced earlier in the book are applied in [the computer]." (Publisher's note) Index.

"The purpose of this book seems to be the introduction of some of the concepts of 'modern mathematics' to people who 'never liked math.' What it is, in fact, is an elementary survey of what mathematics is about. It was written in England for upper high school level and probably is best suited to high school sophomores and juniors here, although it would be useful reading for a college freshman about to take a 'survey' course. Topics covered: logic, arithmetic notation, sets, functions, number radices, computers. . . . Well written and interesting, best suited for high school libraries."

Choice 4:872 O '67 110w [YA]

"There has been a profusion of books explaining all or part of the 'new math.' This is one of the better ones. It is written simply and has a host of useful examples, which illustrate the theory in a large variety of ways. It is meant for self-study and is easier to follow than most similar books. With over 1000 problems, the answers in the back are very helpful to the student. It does not attempt to cover too many topics. . . . The present volume should be of interest to any teacher of the 'new math' and to a great many students and their parents. Recommended for all libraries." A. J. Berman

Library J 92:1024 Mr 1 '67 200w [YA]

LEWIS, W. S., ed. Horace Walpole's correspondence with Sir Horace Mann, v7-8. See Walpole, H.

LEWIS, WILMARTH SHELDON. One man's education. 488p il $10 Knopf

B or 92 67-18624

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by August Heckscher
Am Scholar 37:352 spring '68 1350w
Va Q R 44:lxii spring '68 330w

Reviewed by R. W. Ketton-Cremer
Yale R 58:94 O '68 1250w

LEXAU, JOAN M. The rooftop mystery; pictures by Syd Hoff. 64p $2.50; lib & schools $2.57 Harper

68-16821

"Sam and Albert, helping Sam's family move, are embarrassed at having to carry a doll through the streets. Dumping it temporarily on a rooftop, they return to find it has disappeared and a search ensues. . . . Ages six to eight." (N Y Times Bk R)

"Not many suspense stories are as completely successful as [this] . . . written in language the 4-8's can read for themselves. . . . Somewhere in her few lines of simple text, Miss Lexau manages to . . . solve the mystery, and to make her children very real children. Of course, she and the reader are helped immensely by Syd Hoff's masterly cartoon-like drawings, full of humor, action, and individuality." P. M.

Christian Science Monitor pB14 N 7 '68 120w

Reviewed by Trevelyn Jones
Library J 93:4425 N 15 '68 60w

"This routine easy-reader rates 'A' for enterprise—in taking for granted the friendship between black Sam and white Albert and their families—and 'C' for the cartoon-style illustrations."

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p55 N 3 '68 50w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland
Sat R 51:36 S 21 '68 80w

LEXAU, JOAN M. Striped ice cream; il. by John Wilson. 95p $3.25; lib bdg $3.11 Lippincott

68-10774

"Mama had refused to go on welfare. She worked in a button factory and tried to augment a scanty income by outside cleaning. The older children helped with housework and odd jobs, but Becky, the youngest, feared that with Mama worrying about new school shoes for five children, she might not have chicken-spaghetti and striped ice cream (vanilla, strawberry and chocolate) for her eighth birthday. . . . Ages seven to ten." (Book World)

Book World p12 J1 7 '68 170w

"A convincing, disturbing interlude with one small ghetto child. . . . The loves and sorrows and harsh deprivations of Becky's life will communicate to the most insulated young readers. Her happy birthday may leave some of them in tears." M. L. Birmingham

Commonweal 88:306 My 24 '68 50w

Horn Bk 44:413 Ag '68 140w

"Mirrored in Rebecca Jane's hopeful eyes is her closely knit, loving family, three other sisters and a brother, meagerly supported by Mama. . . . The focus, however, is on Becky's struggles as the youngest to be included in older activities and problems, and to try and understand the feelings of others. Despite the upright tone and somber notes of realism that creep in, Miss Lexau has achieved an exceedingly warm and satisfying story of a city family that is true to childhood." R. R. Finne

N Y Times Bk ■ pt 2, p36 My 5 '68 160w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland
Sat R 51:37 My 11 '68 130w

LEY, WILLY. Dawn of zoology. 280p il $7.95 Prentice-Hall

591.09 Zoology—History. Naturalists 68-13648

An "analysis of the landmarks in the literature of zoology, beginning with early folklore and ending with the publication of the theories of Darwin and Spencer, [and] . . . giving background data on the authors and the conditions under which their books were written. . . . Each chapter reflects the change in man's attitude toward nature over the years." (Library J) Contents: Man the hunter; Man the thinker; Man the collector; Man the allegorizer; Man the cleric; Man the reformer; Man the systematizer; Man the digger; Man the explainer. Index.

Reviewed by R. J. Havlik

Library J 93:1492 Ap 1 '68 190w

Library J 93:4744 D 15 '68 20w [YA]

"Much of the subject matter . . . matches material in previous histories of biology and of science. The thoroughness of scholarship for which Willy Ley has become famous and respected shows through. . . . [The book] makes no attempt to trace the development of medicine. . . . Robert Hook earns a place for his posthumous remarks about the nature of fossils, but his microscope and the discoveries he made through it are omitted, as are his contemporaries Leeuwenhoek, Malpighi, and Swammerdam. On the other hand, Ley finds fascinating dissimilarities among the various editions and translations of the old classics, and suggests reasons for the cutting and trimming done to match audiences in diverse nations. . . . Woodcuts and other illustrations from old books add greatly to the flavor of [the book]." Lorus and Margery Milne

Natur Hist 77:75 O '68 900w

"Ley's eminently readable book . . . [gives] the appearance of a popularization, suitable as a Christmas gift but valueless to the scholar. That impression is revised quickly upon reading. . . . From the first page onward, the reader is conducted through a score of the most influential zoological texts ever written. The author, throughout, withstands the temptation to rationalize ancient zoomythology or to poke fun at the allegorical whimsicalities and teleological exaggerations of the Middle Ages. . . . Rather, the texts are examined against their contemporary intellectual background. The chapters on the allegorical and clerical attitudes to zoology are among the most valuable in the light of the fresh translations from early printed texts usually ignored by the textbook writer." Jerry Stannard

Science 163:64 Ja 3 '69 250w

LEY, WILLY. The discovery of the elements. 215p il $4.95 Delacorte press

546 Chemical elements—Juvenile literature 68-11568

The author "discusses the chronological discovery of the 104 known chemical elements, beginning with Antiquity and the Middle Ages and concluding with a discussion of radioactivity and the atomic age." (Publisher's note) Annotated bibliography. Index. "Grades nine to twelve." (Library J)

"Even the undedicated reader may be enthralled by the sweep of the historical background, the biographical details concerning men and women who developed the science, and the many anecdotes and odd bits of serendipity." Ethna Sheehan

America 119:658 D 21 '68 50w [YA]

"Ley mingles history with science as he goes into the discovery of the various chemical elements. Although . . . written for young people, it will take a serious student and one interested in science to get through the volume." Best Sell 28:173 Jl 15 '68 90w [YA]

"[This account] is, on the whole, rewarding reading for young teens without a formal background in chemistry. . . . The author's attempts to be thorough lead to some dull sections; the chief emphasis is on the discoveries, with less on their implications. An extensive annotated bibliography and two appendixes, one describing the origins of the names of the elements, and the other some of their physical properties, are useful. However, the book is not as interesting reading as [L.] Asimov's Search for the Elements [BRD 1963]." Paul Goldstein

Library J 93:2548 Je 15 '68 160w [YA]

LEY, WILLY. Rockets, missiles, and men in space. 557p il $10.95 Viking

629.42 Rocketry. Space flight 67-20676

This is a revision and expansion of Rockets, Missiles and Space Travel (BRD 1958). "It retains all the historical material [of the earlier volume] and relates . . . the story of the manned space program [to date]." (Publisher's note) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"A classic and definitive history of space flight. . . . Its only near equal is History of Rocketry and Space Travel by [W.] Von Braun and [F.] Ordway [BRD 1967]. Much new material has been added on space exploration since 1961, and future developments are discussed. Three appendices contain a wealth of information, the bibliography is extensive and up to date, indexing is excellent, and illustrations are profuse. Ley's writing style is readable and lucid. A must for undergraduate libraries."

Choice 5:984 O '68 60w

"The book contains three appendixes which can be read apart from the text. 'Appendix 1—Rocket Airplanes and Rocket Assisted Take Off'—a history; 'Appendix 2—The International Situation' which includes space travel, international law, international cooperation, and so on. The last appendix includes notes and tables which are addenda to the various chapters in the book. This is a truly monumental work of the complete record of rocketry and its place in today's world. Mr. Ley's book contains all the wonder, the excitement, the challenges of this growing field. The subject so lights the imagination that the reader will find himself pouring over every bit of discussion and detail." M. B. Wenger

Library J 93:90 Ja 1 '68 350w

Library J 93:2553 Je 15 '68 20w [YA]

"[This provides a] much-needed historical perspective upon the recent past and for considering the future of space exploration and exploitation. . . . To cover in one volume the thousand years of gunpowder rocketry, and man's reflections on his extraterrestrial environment . . . as well as the achievements of space science and technology the past ten years—this indicates both the severe constraints on and the useful perspective offered by Ley's volume. His tracings from antiquity to the 20th century remain superb. . . . One need not look, however, for a detailing of the pioneering labors of the Clark University physicist Robert H. Goddard . . . or of the Caltech group under Theodore von Kármán. Nor will one find adequate treatment of the highly sensitive ballistic missile development in the U.S. and the U.S.S.R. . . . Ley does succeed in cramming facts and technical explanations into a coherent treatment of the past decade." E. M. Emme

Science 161:874 Ag 30 '68 550w

LEY-PISCATOR, MARIA. The Piscator experiment; the political theatre. 336p $8.50 Heinemann

792 Theater—Germany. Theater—U.S. Piscator, Erwin 67-11682

This book describes the work of the theatre producer and director who, with the author, was director of the Studio Theater of the New School for Social Research (1939-1951). Bibliography. Index.

"[The author] completed this book with her husband's collaboration before his death in 1966. She presents a virtual encyclopedia of the accomplishments and 'impossible dreams' of Erwin Piscator, the genius of Epic and the political theater, although she has a tendency to philosophize and theorize too much, as if all she says is accepted fact. This is especially true in her attempt to trace theater as a 'social and moral institution.' Nonetheless, Piscator's lifetime experiment in Europe and America for 'Total Theatre,' a political and artistic cohabitation reflected at the end of his career as at the beginning in such productions as The Deputy and The Investigation, is excellently presented. . . . Also included are an excellent bibliography . . . and a short biography summarizing Piscator's career. One would wish for accompanying illustrations of Piscator's productions. A must for all college libraries."

Choice 5:213 Ap '68 170w

Reviewed by Annette Hirsch

Library J 93:206 Ja 15 '68 270w

LEYMARIE, JEAN. The Jerusalem windows. See Chagall, M.

LEYMARIE, JEAN. Picasso drawings. See Picasso, P.

LIBERTY, MARGOT, jt. auth. Cheyenne memories. See Stands in Timber, J.

LICHT, FRED. Sculpture, 19th & 20th centuries. (Hist. of Western sculpture) 352p il col il $12.50 N.Y. graphic

724 Sculpture—History 67-11106

This volume "covers the period from Canova and Thorvaldsen to Picasso, Calder . . . and Rauschenberg." (Library J)

"Included are both the great and well-known, the important but less well-known, as well as representative examples of the pompier and academic. . . . Each photograph is reproduced a second time in miniature, with incisive historical and critical commentary. The brief text, while it traces in outline the major style changes of the period covered, focuses provocatively on more fundamental problems and issues raised by the secularization and democratization of society and the loss of stability of values which destroyed the viability of public monumental sculpture. The photographs are in general a little dark, the comments on post-World War II developments are excessively conventional; and there is an inexplicable omission of bibliography and of measurement on larger public monuments in general. Otherwise this is an exemplary and satisfying achievement. Strongly recommended."

Choice 4:658 S '67 180w

"[Professor Licht] philosophizes, not very convincingly, on the place of sculpture in an economically and politically unstable society or in a democracy. He emphasizes the significance of traditional academic sculpture as represented in the public places of France, Italy, England, and Germany. Because they lack clarity and dramatic lighting the illustrations, especially of the monochromes, are disappointing. Although [the] book gives a good pictorial survey of its period [it does not] make the works come alive. Less dark and fuzzy printing, perhaps on glossy paper, and a more skillful lighting would be more appealing to art lovers." J. L. Dewton

Library J 92:2391 Je 15 '67 100w

"The handsomely printed photographs raise high expectations, especially in the 19th-century section, for Mr. Licht appears to take a more comprehensive view of the historical terrain than is usually attempted. Unfortunately, it is only as a picture book that this volume proves useful. The text is not really a history at all, but only a series of oddly argued ruminations, and the grasp of 20th-century esthetics is often feeble. This, in turn, reminds us that while the discussion of 20th-century painting is nowadays well advanced, writing about modern sculpture remains somehow retarded." Hilton Kramer

N Y Times Bk R p6 Jl 23 '67 240w

TLS p776 Ag 31 '67 240w

LICHTHEIM, GEORGE. The concept of ideology, and other essays. 327p $5.95; pa $1.95 Random house

901 History—Philosophy. Europe—Intellectual life 67-14472

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by George Kateb

Am Pol Sci R 62:600 Je '68 950w

Reviewed by Norman Birnbaum

Commentary 45:96 Ap '68 2450w

Reviewed by Maurice Cranston

Encounter 31:70 O '68 3900w

Reviewed by Alasdair MacIntyre

N Y Rev of Books 10:26 My 9 '68 1750w

LIDZ, THEODORE. The person; his development throughout the life cycle. 574p $10 Basic bks.

155.2 Personality. Psychology 68-9443

The "professor and chairman of the department of psychiatry, Yale University School of Medicine, here describes the psychodynamics of personality growth from birth to death. He states . . . at what points he concurs with and diverges from Freud, but has no stated interest in starting a 'new school.' The book contains 21 chapters dealing with such topics as human endowment, the family, infancy, adolescence, marital choice, old age, and the therapeutic relationship." (Library J) Chapter bibliographies. Index.

"The material is well-marked by Dr. Lidz's years of clinical experience and we are not given the barebones of highly abstract material. This is a very comprehensive and careful presentation which should be of great value to the student of psychiatry and the related fields and to the fairly sophisticated general reader. It is highly recommended for pertinent collections." Louis DeKosis

Library J 93:3148 S 15 '68 120w

"[This volume] will probably enjoy a success with the general reading public far beyond the author's expectations. It speaks not only to the medical students but to husbands and wives who are trying to understand themselves and their marriages, and to parents who are puzzled by their relationships with their children. . . . [It] is, for the most part, free of professional jargon and narrow doctrinaire thinking. . . . To comment on any particular portion . . . is an arbitrary act in a book as comprehensive and excellent as this one. . . . A reviewer might quibble—he might, for instance, wish for a more profound treatment of the nature of ambivalence, which is mentioned only peripherally. . . . But measured against the towering stature of this work such matters dwindle into insignificance." George Krupp

Sat R 51:48 N 16 '68 1400w

LIEBAN, RICHARD W. Cebuano sorcery; malign magic in the Philippines. 163p il $5 Univ. of Calif. press

133.4 Witchcraft 67-10461

An associate professor of anthropology at the University of North Carolina presents a study "of sorcery among lowland Christian Filipinos of the Cebuano area. . . . Mr. Lieban provides data on sorcery situations from the varying points of view of alleged victims, shamanistic diagnosticians of sorcery, clients of sorcerers, and sorcerers themselves. . . . He discusses sorcery cases in two contrasting social contexts: first in a rural municipality and then in Cebu City. . . . His data indicate that significant differences distinguish the pattern of sorcery cases in Cebu City from those in less developed communities." (Publisher's note) Index.

"Although not quite up to the level of theoretical subtlety of the work on sorcery by British social anthropologists, this small book is, nevertheless, an important addition to the literature. . . and probably should be in the library of any college with an anthropology department or a serious interest in the field. Abundant evidence [is] drawn at first hand and elaborated upon in an appendix which adds further information about methods of sorcerers. Such theory as there is, is compressed into a short, highly readable final chapter. . . . The book seems overpriced."

Choice 5:130 Mr '68 90w

"The focus is on sorcerers and witches who are distinguished by named practices and by rituals in the local language, as well as by the utilization of a variety of different animals and objects. Healers are set apart with reference to their attitude and intention, and the concepts of justice involved in the act of curing. The section of the book dealing with these concepts, and differentiating between types of practitioners and practice, is confusing, for the distinction in this context does not emerge at all clearly to the reader. . . . The content of the beliefs and practices involved are described well and in considerable detail, and are frequently illustrated with case studies. . . . The author's particular contribution to the understanding of sorcery and witchcraft beliefs and practices lies in his analysis of the relation between these and modern medicine. Curing and 'bewitching' practices are set against a background of both folk and modern medicine, demonstrating usefully the relationship between the two and the effect of one upon the other." H. E. Jacobson

Pacific Affairs 41:118 spring '68 400w

LIEBER, JOEL. Move! 236p $4.95 McKay

68-19924

"A young man in fantasyland or the modern scene as viewed darkly by a dog-walker, almost playwright, apostate Jew turned Zoroastrian. Hiram Jaffe has a weak hold on reality. He has eschewed responsibility; his marriage is almost on the brink. Why must he move? Anyhow, he has set the wheels in motion by packing and calling a mover. The latter, obviously a sinister figure whom he never sees (the Great Mover above or below?), eludes Hiram, taunting him over the phone with riddles, tempting him with a gorgeous blonde." (Library J)

Reviewed by J. J. Murray

Best Sell 28:130 Je 15 '68 350w

Reviewed by Earl Tannenbaum

Library J 93:2021 My 15 '68 150w

"The author depends a bit too much on standard film-script New York types, and forgets to really develop his hero, though he does become, at the end, a turned-on citizen of the world." Sara Blackburn Nation 207:58 J1 22 '68 110w

"Having read Joel Lieber's first novel, 'How the Fishes Live' [BRD 1967], a nauseous pseudo-Dostoevskian melodrama about crime and punishment, I prudently laid in a good supply of Tums before taking him on a second time. For 'Move!', however, I would have done better to stock up on Librium to bring me down from a laughing high. . . . Was the Mover . . . the god of evil or the god of good of the Zoroastrians? Well, whichever he was, he was too pat a solution, producing an overly sanguine, overly symbolic, overly obvious conclusion. . . . But it doesn't really matter, because it's not Jaffe's deliverance, but his predicaments, the burdens of the schlemiel, that are the hilarious substance of the book." Stephanie Harrington
N Y Times Bk R p35 J1 14 '68 900w

"[This] belongs with some of the fiction of Saul Bellow, Bruce Jay Friedman, and other, lesser known writers who throw a psychedelic spotlight on what one author called 'the hero in stasis' stumbling across what another called 'the landscape of nightmare'. . . . Already sold to a major Hollywood studio, it will likely take on added meaning when brought to the screen. In book form it reads well, suggesting a feverish desire on the author's part to show that the 'superfluous man' of the 1960s can be redeemed to a more significant life if he stops questioning and agonizing, and lets the cosmic forces take over the management of his affairs." S. I. Bellman
Sat R 51:24 My 25 '68 1050w

LIEBERG, OWEN S. Wonders of magnets and magnetism; il. with phot. and with diagrams by the author. 64p lib bdg $3.25 Dodd

538 Magnetism—Juvenile literature. Magnets—Juvenile literature 67-22193

The author discusses the history of the discovery of magnetism, "attraction and repulsion, magnetic compasses, terrestrial magnetism, the numerous uses of magnets, electromagnetism, induction, degaussing, and . . . the electromagnetic submarine." (Publisher's note) Index. "Grades five to seven." (Library J)

"An interesting job on a subject that could easily be tedious. Mr. Lieberg weaves plenty of historical background into his book and relates it well to his subject." J. C. Waugh
Christian Science Monitor pB8 N 2 '67 60w

"Will attract older readers as well. . . . [For] school libraries." R. J. Havlik
Library J 93:1312 Mr 15 '68 70w

LIFE (periodical). Drugs. See Modell, W.

LIFE (periodical). Food and nutrition. See Sebrell, W. H.

LIFTON, BETTY JEAN. The many lives of Chio and Goro; il. by Yasuo Segawa. unp $3.75; lib bdg $3.54 Norton
Animals—Stories 68-1786

Story set in rural old Japan, which tells how "at her death, forgetful old Chio does not recall that she and her husband Goro have agreed to be foxes in their next life and becomes a chicken. Goro, as a hungry fox, recognizes Chio, dies of shame at his failure to catch a chicken and joins her as rooster. At last, the pair, convinced that man's lot is better than that of animals, are reborn as humans. . . . Kindergarten to grade two." (Library J)

"A tale—not retold but authentic in tenor—of transmigration. . . . Not just one transmigration, but several. Don't be put off by this; young children won't be. It is a wry story, told with good taste and humor about a slightly dizzy couple who keep meeting in life after life. There are some appropriately amusing illustrations." Elinore Standard
Book World p16 (children's issue) My 11 '68 60w

Reviewed by Virginia Haviland
Horn Bk 44:409 Ag '68 120w

"The artist's effort to illustrate transmigration, picturing it as a series of tadpole-like developments, is particularly likely to attract the attention of the inquisitive young. Concealing a serious, difficult concept beneath a humorous surface, this story with its strong, consistent characterization, smooth read-aloud rhythm, and very pleasing refrain, can be read on several levels. Most children will be uncritically amused by Chio . . . but a few may be puzzled by the doctrine of transmigration which is central to its plot and which is not adequately explained. Some adults, too, may question the suitability of this subject, as here treated, for this age." Elva Harmon
Library J 93:1790 Ap 15 '68 240w

Reviewed by S. G. Lanes

N Y Times Bk R p30 Mr 17 '68 90w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland
Sat R 51:50 F 24 '68 150w

LIFTON, BETTY JEAN. The one-legged ghost; il. by Fuku Akino. unp $4.50 Atheneum pubs.

398.2 Folklore—Japan—Juvenile literature 68-18450

The retelling of an old Japanese folk-tale. "What has a round body, one bamboo leg, strong brown paper, and forty wooden bones? The sun, the moon, a bird, a flying squirrel, or a ghost? Neither Yoshi, the boy who found it, nor any of the other people in the remote Japanese village really knew what it was, but at last the wise man said that it was a god, so they built a shrine for it. One rainy day, Yoshi took shelter in the shrine and the round god flew outside on a sudden gust of wind. Lo and behold, the ground underneath the god was not getting wet and Yoshi perceived that it was not a god but a 'water-stopping thing'. . . . Grades two to four." (Library J)

Reviewed by Polly Goodwin

Book World p14 O 20 '68 100w

Horn Bk 44:684 D '68 120w

"This gently humorous folktale cum riddle, accompanied by primitive-styled, wistfully soft watercolors, is a joy to read or to tell." M. I. Purucker

Library J 93:4396 N 15 '68 100w

"A mystery with a delightful ending. [The warm] colors by Fuku Akino unfold the truth gradually, along with the text." Jerome Beatty

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p67 N 3 '68 80w

"Fresh and imaginative, the story is told in bland style with sly humor; the illustrations, chiefly black and white, combine strong lines and delicate shadings to charming effect." Zena Sutherland

Sat R 51:36 O 19 '68 100w

LIFTON, ROBERT JAY. Death in life; survivors of Hiroshima. 594p $10 Random house 155.9 Hiroshima—Bombardment, 1945. Survival. Adjustment (Psychology). Atomic bomb—Psychological effect 67-22658

An "analysis and description in psychological and social terms of the immediate and long-term effects on the survivors of the Hiroshima atom bomb . . . [based on the author's interviews with 75] survivors. . . . 33 randomly chosen, 42 selected because of their prominence in atom bomb affairs. Dr. Lifton is a psychiatrist who had worked in Japan for several years prior to 1962 when he began this work. . . . He has woven [the survivors'] bomb-and-after stories into general themes covering reactions to the cataclysm itself, its immediate physical and emotional effects on them, their views of others who happened not to be victims, and their attitudes toward foreigners, especially Americans." (Library J)

Reviewed by A. Kardiner

Am J Soc 74:316 N '68 260w

Reviewed by Oscar Handlin

Atlantic 221:133 Mr '68 220w

Reviewed by Josh Greenfeld

Book World p6 Mr 24 '68 1400w

Choice 5:1176 N '68 240w

Christian Century 85:146 Ja 31 '68 80w

Reviewed by Henrietta Buckmaster

Christian Science Monitor p5 F 29 '68 1100w

Reviewed by Mary Ellmann

Commentary 45:84 My '68 1650w

LIFTON, R. J.—Continued

"As a social-psychological-historical study this book is a major contribution; but its greatest value is as an ultimate plea for sanity in world affairs. Essential for public libraries and subject collections." George Adelman
Library J 93:196 Ja 15 '68 250w

Reviewed by Kenneth Lamott
Nation 206:604 My 6 '68 1100w

"The evidence is clear that the experience [at Hiroshima] was religious, metaphysical. . . . [This book] is itself a theological treatise, a meditation on how 'to master death.' But the strategy of Dr. Lifton is to rob the elect of Hiroshima of their metaphysical experience in order to argue his own, and incidentally to denigrate any insight and discourage any action that they may have initiated from it. Put crudely, not in the always considerate style of the author, they are a bunch of neurotics and therefore cannot get out of their box. . . . Aggressive responses like revenge or political action are put down as mere spite or quite impractical (as well as sometimes being Communist-inspired). . . . [Nevertheless], within the limits of his own situation and character . . . the [author] is emphatic." Paul Goodman
N Y Rev of Books 10:15 Mr 28 '68 3450w

Reviewed by J. D. Frank
N Y Times Bk R p10 Mr 31 '68 1550w

Reviewed by George Steiner
New Yorker 44:76 Ag 3 '68 3000w

"Lifton found that upon completing his early interviews he was left 'profoundly shocked and emotionally spent.' So must the reader be. The book . . . is rackingly painful. It is also genuinely illuminating—both rigorous and imaginative. Like Bruno Bettelheim's classic study of concentration-camp survivors, 'The Informed Heart' [BRD 1961, it] is one of those rare works destined to bear witness and change the lives of those who read it, even if it does not deflect society's impulse toward suicide." S. M.

Newsweek 71:96 F 19 '68 600w

"It is no detraction from the book's basic value to say that it will prove of interest mainly to the author's fellow psychologists and to the relatively few readers having a special interest in the [survivors]. In section after section of this carefully composed study we learn about the life of the city prior to its destruction, about the annihilation-bombing of August 5, 1945, about the immediate reactions and the medium- and long-term psychological effects on a sampling of survivors. Dr. Lifton's story is told well and in great detail. Whether he makes a significant contribution to the records of other chroniclers . . . is possibly debatable, but he has rendered a service by reminding us of the dreadful fate of a large city under atomic attack." Ira Morris

Sat R 51:26 F 3 '68 950w

Sci Am 218:131 Je '68 4000w

"John Hersey's Hiroshima [BRD 1946] . . . told the story of six people who . . . had survived the biggest unnatural disaster in history. . . . Yet the damage report was not complete, as Yale Research Psychiatrist Lifton shows in this compassionate and important study of the malaise that still pollutes the spirits of many survivors. They are known as hibakusha (pronounced hi-bak-sha), which literally means 'explosion-affected persons.' To the Japanese the word incorporates the chill of such terms as zombie and leper. Hibakusha, who number about 90,000 . . . are often refused employment on the grounds that they tire easily, lack drive or are prone to fatal malignancies. They are frequently shunned as mates for fear that they carry radiation-tainted genes. In general, Lifton discovered, hibakusha hold themselves in lower esteem than do other Japanese. . . . In its breadth and richness, [this book] has the potential of becoming a treasured experience. It only needs people willing and patient enough to confront it—which is to say, people willing to confront themselves."

Time 91:94 F 16 '68 750w

TLS p1253 N 7 '68 750w

LIGHTFOOT, CLAUDE M. Ghetto rebellion to black liberation. 192p $5.95 Int. pubs.

301.451 Negroes. U.S.—Race relations

68-27397

An Afro-American Communist maintains that black liberation cannot be attained in the United States without changing the nation's economic and political system. He presents his views on "the black revolt against racism. . . .

[He criticizes] black separatist trends, . . . [probes] the nature of white racism, . . . and supports the right of black people to armed self-defense. At the same time, he considers suicidal the emphasis on 'guerrilla warfare.' . . . A major section of the book is based on observations during the author's recent trips to Ghana, Mali, the Soviet Union and Cuba, where he sought to learn how similar problems were solved." (Publisher's note)

"A fervent admirer of the Communism he has seen in countries he recently visited, . . . Lightfoot manifests a naive faith in the ability of blacks in their present rebellion and oppressed whites to unite and overthrow the American capitalist system. Unfortunately, in his preachments [he] fails to develop the method by which the revolution, peaceful or otherwise, is to occur. The book is difficult to digest and its conclusions are hard to subscribe to, but it is recommended for those readers who are as yet unfamiliar with the dissidence of a miniscule black Communist minority."

Choice 5:1042 O '68 180w

"[This book is characterized by a] relatively calm plausibility, bristly with facts and quotations carefully selected from official or non-Communist as well as Communist sources. . . . Lightfoot summarizes the Communist lessons for blacks he believes he has learned as a result of extensive trips. . . . He brushes aside or belittles allegations of anti-Negro and anti-Jewish developments in the Soviet Union. . . . [He] does not reject either the use of armed force or collaboration with whites. . . . [This] tract represents the extremes to which our black population will be driven if the now popular courses chartered by the psychologist Kenneth B. Clark, the late Reverend Martin Luther King, Jr., Whitney Young of the Urban League, and Roy Wilkins of the NAACP are inadequate or are compromised into futility." A. M. Lee

Sat R 51:20 Ag 3 '68 460w

LIGHTNER, ALICE M. See Hopf, A. L.

LIKERT, RENSIS. The human organization: its management and value. 258p $7.95 McGraw 658 Management 67-16931

"This book is intended for persons interested in applying the results of quantitative research to improve the management of human resources in an enterprise. The central theme presents a science based management theory of participation." (Choice) Bibliography. Name index. Subject index.

"[This book illustrates] how social science can be used in the service of making myths. . . . The myth making centers around the hopes of equalizing power in organizations. . . . Likert's book, essentially a restatement of an earlier work [New Patterns of Management] . . . seeks to equalize power in the relations of management and workers. . . . [He] invokes for his purposes 'System 4,' an elaborate statement of belief and value much in keeping with the human relations and group-dynamics schools, which propose a new form of organization as a consequence of adopting the belief that people are good." Abraham Zaleznik

Am J Soc 73:775 My '68 310w

"The premise is that success throughout any organization will be assured by encouraging interaction between superior and subordinate in all relationships regardless of the level of work performed. Not designed as a textbook, rather it is a preliminary study useful to the practitioner in the art-science of management in developing the human resources within an organization."

Choice 5:99 Mr '68 140w

"[This] work should be taken as a tentative diagram. The evidence supporting many of the notions is rather slight or open to serious methodological criticisms. . . . The work tends to be atomistic, in that the focus remains largely on small-group interaction. . . . The attention of these studies is largely centered on management. . . . One wonders whether those supervised share [the same] feelings and perceptions. . . . [However] the work of Likert and his colleagues should provide one suggestive base out of which may come a sound blueprint for the liberation of men within their organizations and society." Andrew Effrat

Science 162:1260 D 13 '68 750w

LILEY, H. M. I. Modern motherhood; pregnancy, childbirth & the newborn baby, by H. M. I. Liley with Beth Day; foreword by Virginia Apgar. 2d ptg 239p $4.95 Random house

618 Pregnancy. Childbirth. Infants 66-21494

A New Zealand pediatrician who is the mother of five presents this "book about life before, during and after birth, written from the viewpoint of the fetologist, medicine's newest specialist. Much of her material is based on the work of her obstetrician husband, A. William Liley, known for his pioneering work in blood transfusions for the unborn. The author explains what pregnancy is like for the fetus, how the infant feels during the process of birth and what it wants and needs after emerging from inner space." (N Y Times Bk R)

"The best portions of this book are those which deal with the growth of the fetus and the ways in which the newborn baby adapts to the world outside the womb. Otherwise, Dr. Liley's discussion of infant care is brief and adds little that is not easily available elsewhere. This book is recommended for the informed layman and for additional purchase." A. M. Fasick
Library J 92:2936 S 1 '67 120w

"Professionals may object that the state of the science of fetology has moved on in the interval between manuscript and publication and that some of the material is already outdated. For example, Dr. Liley's statement that we do not yet know how to control premature labor is contrary to the experience of Fritz Fuchs, chief obstetrician of New York Hospital-Cornell Medical Center. . . . But this should not diminish the fascination of this book for anyone with an interest in the beginnings of life."

N Y Times Bk R p40 Ap 21 '68 300w

LILIENFELD, ABRAHAM M. Cancer epidemiology: methods of study, by Abraham M. Lilienfeld, Einar Pedersen, and John E. Dowd. 165p $6.50 Johns Hopkins press

616.9 Cancer 67-25072

"An introduction to the methods of the epidemiologist: the comparisons, the corrections for age and improved diagnosis, the controls, the studies to follow up a hunch, and the careful double-blind studies to test a subtle theory. . . . Half of the book is a . . . guide to the statistical methods used, and it also contains a World Health Organization classification of neoplasms." (Sci Am) Bibliography. Index.

"This is a most useful book, designed primarily for clinicians, pathologists and other workers in the cancer field. . . . The number of such people is increasing and the book will serve them well. It not only gives a systematic review of relevant methodology in simple terms, but in passing manages to convey an over-all impression of the state of the art in the field and to highlight some of the challenging problems of the moment. Since international variations in cancer rates are among the most provocative of these, it is fortunate that the book was written by an international group and that its content reflects this. . . . Professionals of any field can browse through this book and find interesting facts and observations about cancer which they had forgotten or never knew." B. MacMahon

Am J Pub Health 58:1302 J1 '68 190w

"This brief and clear book . . . is written for readers interested in cancer but untrained in these methods. . . . This is detective work with a real mission. The data shown are fascinating, and they present still-open cases, such as the rising mortality from the leukemias seen nearly worldwide. . . . There are two eloquent graphs [on] . . . the death rate from lung cancer."

Sci Am 218:138 Ap '68 380w

LILLOW, IRA. Introducing machine embroidery. 72p il col il $5.95 Watson-Guptill

746.4 Embroidery [68-10066]

The author "demonstrates how [this] skill can be learned . . . by the embroiderer who has never before ventured to do free embroidery on the machine." (Publisher's note)

"[The author presents her subject] with imagination and clarity . . . by means of clear diagrams and line drawings, well-chosen photographs of actual examples, and brief explanatory text notes. The results, though practical enough for the novice to follow, still offer stimulation to the craftsman or teacher." R. R.

J Home Econ 60:679 O '68 20w

"[This book is] recommended for art teachers, students, crafts leaders, and the libraries which serve them." Delores McColm
Library J 93:2474 Je 15 '68 20w

LILLY, JOHN CUNNINGHAM. The mind of the dolphin; a nonhuman intelligence. 310p il $5.95 Doubleday

599 Dolphins. Animal intelligence. Animal communication 67-10417

"This book is a record of an attempt to express some ideas, some formulations, and some experiments in communication research. The main ideas and formulations are a theory to scientifically penetrate into the area of at least one nonhuman mind, that of the bottlenose dolphin. . . . Experiments are recounted in which a [woman, Margaret Howe and a] . . . young male dolphin live together for a period of a year. This book contains [an] account of the problems and the results of living together in water. The mutual learning and teaching that were exchanged is given." (Pref) Bibliography.

"Learning another language teaches us a lot about our own; attempting to communicate with a nonhuman intelligence casts a great deal of light upon our knowledge of ourselves and mankind as a whole. Lilly's most recent book on dolphins, if for this reason alone, merits the serious attention of intelligent humans. . . . This is a highly interdisciplinary study involving: communication science, physics, mathematics, psychology, information science, physiology, philosophy, and zoology. . . . Recommended reading in colleges, universities, and public libraries." Choice 5:986 O '68 200w

"Much of the book is not about the mind of the dolphin at all, but about the mind of man. . . . Despite its repetitiousness, it is fascinating as any brush with the unknown is bound to be. The Mind of the Dolphin may after all be crucial someday if we should encounter another species somewhere in space." A. L. Fessler

Library J 92:4168 N 15 '67 250w

Reviewed by C. L. Teft

Library J 92:4639 D 15 '67 100w [YA]

"After six wet and thoughtful years [since Man and Dolphin, BRD 1961] we have a second book by our envoy among the dolphins. Most of the new book is a sober, possibly somewhat shallow but everywhere honest effort by Lilly to search out the nature of the human mind . . . an indispensable preface to the ultimate arrival at a meeting of minds with our distant cousin. . . . The most explicit report is of an experiment in joint living. The dolphin was met halfway. . . . Miss Howe's journal is fascinating to read. . . . The game they played with counting colors and languages, however, remained uncertain, enigmatic and obscure. If the large brain of Tursiops houses a great mind, we have not yet made contact with it."

Sci Am 218:144 Ap '68 360w

LIN, YUTANG, comp. The Chinese theory of art; tr. from the masters of Chinese art. 244p pl $5.95 Putnam

709.51 Art. Chinese 67-21121

"This book consists of translations from writings by Chinese artists and art critics on problems and techniques, style and taste. The writings are chronologically arranged and cover the historical development of Chinese art from the time of Confucius (551-479 B.C.) to the 18th Century." (Library J) Table of dynasties. List of artists. Index.

"Major changes in painting are illustrated by appropriate examples. Charts picture the influences, development, and derivations of the various schools and styles. Many of the quotations appear for the first time in English. This is an extremely valuable source book for the study of Chinese art craft, history, and aesthetics." Richard Doi

Library J 93:538 F 1 '68 100w

"Dr. Lin Yutang's anthology, a triumph of his clean English style . . . is rather a selection from the table talk and the kind though firm advice of China's artists than a complete statement of theory, which perhaps even China has not accomplished. [His] introduction is largely historical, and for conciseness with so wide and varied a field to cover it is indeed laudable. This handbook also is duly illustrated in colour and black-and-white. The editor often makes his own comments."

TLS p1079 N 16 '67 140w

LINCOLN, C. ERIC. Sounds of the struggle: persons and perspectives in civil rights. 252p $5 Morrow

323.4 Negroes—Civil rights 67-29822

A collection of eighteen pieces, all of which have appeared in various journals. Index.

Reviewed by W. L. Lucey
America 118:611 My 4 '68 40w

Reviewed by Murray Polner
Christian Century 85:267 F 28 '68 190w

"The several essays regarding the Black Muslims are the most original, based as they are on original research and investigation. Other essays interpret various aspects of the civil rights struggle in terms of Christian faith and theology. Valuable in that it brings together essays which originally appeared in publications not generally available, this book is somewhat uneven and repetitious. . . . Suggested for the public library and any collection supporting a special interest in civil rights or the Black Muslims." J. M. Elrod

Library J 92:3434 O 1 '67 120w

"Lincoln, a member of the Union Theological Seminary faculty, writes dispassionately and from the inside about where the Negro stands and what he hopes for today. There are views here of . . . the Negro minister as the key man in the South, the meaning of Malcolm X, the Negro's middleclass dream, the absent father in the Negro family, the effects of black nationalism on the Christian conscience, the British experience with Negro prejudice. . . . In sum [these chapters] trace the struggle during the past seven years." Herbert Mitgang
Sat R 51:32 Ja 27 '68 240w

LINCOLN, EVELYN. Kennedy and Johnson. 207p $4.95 Holt

B or 92 Kennedy, John Fitzgerald. Johnson, Lyndon Baines. U.S.—Politics and government—1961- 68-14927

Written by the late President Kennedy's personal secretary, author of My Twelve Years With John F. Kennedy (BRD 1965), this book is a record of Mrs. Lincoln's observations of the two men, taken from her daily diary and other sources. "Mrs. Lincoln's thesis seems to be that what came between the two men was Mr. Johnson's personality, his life style, which contrasted sharply with Mr. Kennedy's." (Book World)

Reviewed by R. H. Miller
America 118:447 Ap 6 '68 500w

"[Mrs. Lincoln's] book is a welcome relief from the heavy standard works on the period. . . . It's good to have a political book which discusses, without embarrassment, personalities instead of issues. . . . And her thin collection of marginal impressions and political hearsay makes good light reading for anyone at home nursing a bad back or a grudge against Mr. Johnson. . . . Not even Richard Nixon would stoop to the kind of ad hominem attacks [against Johnson] Mrs. Lincoln records in her diary. . . . Although she never admits this, it seems obvious to the reader that at the root of Mr. Johnson's personality problem with Mrs. Lincoln (and others in the Kennedy inner circle) was the poor manners LBJ displayed in accepting second place on the Kennedy ticket in 1960. . . . The trouble with Mrs. Lincoln's partisan book is that the reader frequently finds himself in the uncomfortable position of defending Mr. Johnson's behavior, even though he wouldn't want his son to grow up to be a President like him." Marvin Kitman

Book World p5 Mr 10 '68 1200w
Choice 5:1360 D '68 80w

"This memoir adds to the growing fund of knowledge concerning the Kennedy administration and, if used judiciously, has historical value." F. H. Schapsmeier
J Am Hist 55:433 S '68 280w

"[This book] fails to make a case for its relevance in 1968 or in any other year. . . . [Libraries] may safely ignore it unless committed to collecting the total Kennedy corpus." A. S. Ricketts

Library J 93:1999 My 15 '68 90w

"[Mrs. Lincoln] wastes little love on J.F.K.'s successor. Her book's opening description of L.B.J. in Florida at their first meeting after the 1960 election, speaks of him as 'Heavy. Heavy footsteps. Heavy body. Heavy, slow-moving motions. He walked strangely with his body bent slightly to the right.' A few weeks later, at their second meeting, Lyndon Johnson swiped Jack Kennedy's unopened New York Times. In Mrs. Lincoln's rear view—highly partisan, not to say catty and rather naive—Johnson comes off as a shambling, loudmouthed oaf from Texas."

Time 91:22 F 23 '68 600w

LINCOLN, JOHN. One man's Mexico; a record of travels and encounters. 238p $5.75 Harcourt 917.2 Mexico—Description and travel 68-12580

An Englishman records his experiences while travelling through Mexico between 1958 and 1964. "Mr. Lincoln sweated in the tropical decay of the Pacific coast, visited the mountain villages of the high plateau, got locked up . . . in Mexico City, ventured along jungle paths in search of birds or Maya ruins, tried the two natural varieties of hallucinogenic drugs, and spent half a night with a hermaphrodite after an . . . encounter with the Seri Indians (once renowned for their ferocity)." (TLS)

Reviewed by C. W. Casewit
Book World p20 Je 9 '68 100w

Reviewed by J. N. Goodsell
Christian Science Monitor p9 Je 15 '68 600w

Reviewed by F. L. Cinquemani
Library J 93:1141 Mr 15 '68 130w

"Lincoln gives the reader a brief account of the country's history, with a breakdown of the Mexican character, which will be useful for those who are planning to attend the forthcoming Olympic Games. . . . [His] book is a pleasantly lackadaisical account of his wandering in the country. . . . An intrepid traveller, he tastes rare fruits, including 'the mushrooms of superior reason,' which are eaten by the Indians for spiritual enlightenment, and have now been taken up by American hippies. . . . Lincoln now claims that the mushrooms 'taught me more than it was healthy for me to know of what it is like to be mad and die.' People looking for kicks and considering taking a trip on LSD would be well advised to read these passages before deciding to do so." Martin Green

New Statesman 74:780 D 1 '67 500w
"Mr. Lincoln has done his homework and essential supplementary reading; further, he possesses an insatiable curiosity to see for himself what lies at the end of the road or inside the walled ruin and an ability to take the reader with him. He is also a born bird-and-people watcher, with a poet's instinct for reporting, he has the historian's knack for tracing trends and ferreting out root causes as evidenced by his first chapter, which is the best exposition of Mexico's past and present predicament ever to come to this reviewer's attention. . . . [This] is a book worth knowing for anybody contemplating a trip south of the border." James Kelly

N Y Times Bk R p28 My 5 '68 550w
"[The author's accounts] are set in perspective by an introduction which, if it contains one or two curious historical judgments, well conveys the mood of modern Mexicans towards foreigners and their own past. Nine probes into Mexican life follow. . . . Some of these probes are better described than others. . . . But the accounts of travel along the coast or in the jungle are brilliantly done, and recreate with charm and skill the special quality both of the Mexicans themselves—their humour, sick or otherwise, their sympathy, inconsequence, affection and individuality—and of the extraordinarily contrasted country in which they live. The beauty, vitality, yet indifference of the landscape have seldom been better evoked. . . . Mr. Lincoln's vision is sharp, almost too sharp. He relishes the macabre and throws away too many lines to impress. He is always an observer, never a participant. . . . It is as if rarefying his perception, set him somehow and painfully apart. He has nevertheless made an excellent book of it."

TLS p1192 D 7 '67 500w

LINDE, GUNNEL. The white stone; tr. from the Swedish by Richard and Clara Winston; ill. by Imero Gobbato. 185p $3.25 Harcourt

66-7421
"Fia lived with her pretty widowed mother, a piano teacher, in an apartment at the back of the Judge's house. To her small-town, provincial schoolmates she was Fia-plink-plonk Peters; to the Judge's shrewish housekeeper (the aproned witch) she was an unmitigated nuisance. Across the street was the boy Hampus, an orphan, living in sordidness and poverty with his uncle and a big, quarreling family. Befriended by the wise and realistic Judge the children began to see their problems resolved and the world in proper perspective." (Horn Bk) "Grades five to seven. (Library J)

"[This story] is cheerfully blatant in its patronage of adulthood. . . . Mrs. Linde is under no illusions as to how a nine- or ten-year-old views that pitiable condition whose sufferers are so enmeshed in mundane, daily putterings that they fail to take note of life's true miracles; the magical powers of 'a smooth white comforting stone' or the obvious bewitchment of two children under its spell. A fantasy that never leaves reality too far behind. . . . The funny bones of its readers will doubtless vibrate to the two children's wondrous feats of derring-do. . . . A well-plotted, fast-moving tale, pleasantly illustrated, it is likely to please any 8-11-year-old with a twinkle in his (or her) eye and a small horde of healthy hostility nestling in his heart of hearts." S. G. Lanes

Book Week p16 Mr 26 '67 330w

Horn Bk 42:717 D '66 170w

"An interesting and unusual story of the friendship of two lonely, special children. . . . A quiet book, with illustrations that fit the mood—both humorous and sad—of the text. Originally published in Sweden, this is a very smooth translation." Janet Hellerich

Library J 91:5232 O 15 '66 80w

"This story, which won the Nils Holgerson Prize in Sweden for the best children's book of 1964, is a real winner. . . . The white stone is not an amulet or magic stone. It is a perfectly ordinary pebble which becomes a token as it is passed from the lonely boy to the lonely girl, as they dare each other to carry out difficult tasks. . . . To each other they take on different personalities and names, and the whole complex game is beautifully worked out until they are at last able to return to their own everyday selves. . . . Never dull, it should have wide appeal."

TLS p263 Mr 14 '68 200w

LINDEMANN, EDWARD. Water animals for your microscope; il. by Christine Sapieha. 119p $3.95; lib bdg $3.74 Crowell-Collier

591.92 Microscope and microscopy—Juvenile literature. Marine biology—Juvenile literature 67-10577

This book "begins with an explanation of the importance of microscopic water animals. A list of tools and materials, most inexpensive or handmade, needed for studying the animals is followed by a discussion of the techniques of using the microscope. The author then describes various fresh water animals (protozoa, worms, rotifers, and larger organisms), tells how to collect them, and suggests experiments. There is a final chapter on salt-water animals. A list of biological supply houses is included. [Glossary. Bibliography. Index.] Grades six to nine." (Library J)

"[A] well-written, easy-to-understand book. . . . The black-and-white illustrations on every page clearly depict the animals being discussed." Marilyn Van Winkle

Library J 92:3201 S 15 '67 100w

"Young experimenters who have learned how to use a pretty good microscope and are looking for new views will find this an excellent guide to a whole microworld of the life of fresh water and ocean, with many experiments on the behavior of the animals they can grow and watch." Philip and Phyllis Morrison

Sci Am 217:146 D '67 50w

LINDENFELD, FRANK, ed. Reader in political sociology. 611p $6.95; pa $2.95 Funk

320 Political science. Sociology 67-28159

Authors of the papers collected in this volume include C. Wright Mills, Irving Horowitz, Alexis de Tocqueville, Karl Marx, and Paul Goodman. "The book is divided into four parts: social bases of political systems, social class and power in the West, politics and social change, and the contemporary relevance of ideology." (Library J) All the articles were previously published in sociological or political science books and journals.

"Uniquely different, Lindenfeld's reader examines the more ideological aspects of political sociology in the classical tradition, but in selecting articles from contemporary scholars he has chosen those whose 'finding have an obvious relevance in the lives of men living in a real world.' . . . He admits a bias towards anarchy, apparent in his choice of selections. . . . The selections are excellent in being sophisticated and representative of the various authors, and refreshing in that none are included just for the sake of representing another point of view. They are also in adequate depth and few enough in number to make this book excellent for classroom use, if his particular bias is taken into account."

Choice 5:1176 N '68 150w

"The chief virtue of this book is that it provides an introduction to political sociology. . . . This reviewer found the following essays particularly stimulating: William Kornhauser's 'Power Elite or Veto Groups'; Samuel P. Huntington's 'Political Developments and Decay'; Seymour M. Lipset's 'Some Social Requisites of Democracy'; and Daniel Bell's 'The End of Ideology in the West.' This book will make profitable reading for the interested citizen and undergraduate student. Recommended for public and college libraries." S. D. Nerbo

Library J 93:88 Ja 1 '68 140w

LINDER, STAFFAN BURENSTAM. See Burenstam Linder, S.

LINDERMAN, FRANK B. Montana adventure; the recollections of Frank B. Linderman; ed. by H. G. Merriam. 224p il $5.95 Univ. of Neb. press

B or 92

67-19162

This autobiographical account tells of Linderman's "life as a trapper, . . . an assayer, a newspaper proprietor and publisher, an insurance district manager, and a legislator, . . . [and] of his Indian friends. . . . The account, which was originally titled 'My Camp-Kettle Career,' covers Linderman's life up to 1930. Appendixes supplied by the editor fill in details of Linderman's career and writings." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

Choice 5:864 S '68 110w

"[These reminiscences] lack the verve and pleasure in expression of [Linderman's] other writings; however, they do give glimpses of an exciting era and an exceptional man. . . . This memoir whets one's appetite for a full-length biography. . . . [The book] is suitable for larger collections." William Newman

Library J 93:2857 Ag '68 170w

"[This] is a warm human document (best in its nostalgia for the wilderness), but on balance [it] is a perfunctory and superficial chronology, lacking in perspective and drama." Oliver Knight

Sat R 51:62 Je 22 '68 400w

LINDOP, EDMUND. The first book of elections; il. by Gustave E. Nebel. 63p $2.65 Watts, F.

324.73 Elections—U.S.—Juvenile literature 68-10435

This "exposition of the varied American electoral processes is accompanied by cartoons. . . . Topics covered include the concept of representation, voter qualifications, the conduct of elections, the function of political parties and nominating conventions. Idioms such as 'jumping on the bandwagon' and 'throwing your hat in the ring' are explained. [Index.] Grades four to six." (Library J)

"[This book covers the ground] in thorough, factual fashion. But . . . politics and government are best served when they are written about in the least textbookish style. [This] book uses imaginative cartooning to brighten the way." R. C. Nelson

Christian Science Monitor pB6 My 2 '68 230w

Reviewed by M. R. Sive

Library J 93:1312 Mr 15 '68 80w

Reviewed by Martin Kitman

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p4 My 5 '68 240w

"Cartoon-style drawings add little that is informative, but give some glimpses of familiar scenes that enliven the . . . approach of this timely book. The process of electing a President is covered in detail; the author also discusses political parties, universal suffrage, civil rights legislation, the election of state and municipal candidates, and the mechanics of the voting process itself." Zena Sutherland

Sat R 51:41 My 11 '68 70w

LINDSAY JOHN V. Journey into politics; some informal observations. 152p $4 Dodd 320.973 U.S.—Politics and government
67-16222
For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Choice 5:264 Ap '68 300w
Reviewed by N. B. Freeman
Nat R 20:150 F 13 '68 200w
Reviewed by Raymond Fletcher
New Statesman 76:320 S 13 '68 350w
Reviewed by Kenneth Goodall
Reporter 38:50 Je 13 '68 700w
Reviewed by Paul Kresh
Sat R 51:24 Ja 20 '68 1600w
TLS p1099 O 3 '68 320w

LINDSTROM, THAIS S. A concise history of Russian literature; v 1, From the beginnings to Chekhov. 233p $6; pa $2.25 N.Y. univ. press
891.7 Russian literature—History and criticism
66-22218

The author "has attempted primarily to establish a running connection between Russian literature and its historical environment, and has emphasized this purpose beyond that of textual literary analysis. Her chronicle begins in Kievan Rus, following the development of the folk epic to the emergence of 'modern' forms in the 18th century and giving most attention to the . . . 19th century, from Pushkin and Gogol to Turgenev, Tolstoy, Dostoevsky, Leskov, and Chekhov." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"[This] text is designed to give lower level undergraduates a rudimentary knowledge of the major figures and works of Russian literature and to provide some general background for the earlier periods. Most directly comparable in length and intent to M. L. Slonim's An Outline of Russian Literature [BRD 1958], the present work devotes more attention to the earlier period but is weaker in its treatment of the 19th century. . . . Bibliography of translated literary works is helpful, but that for literary history and criticism is inadequate."

Choice 4:1121 D '67 120w
"[Dr. Lindstrom's] style is sometimes marred by clichés and unwieldy metaphors, but she has a firm command of her subject matter. The section on Tolstoy . . . is especially pertinent. This substantial work is recommended for both public and academic collections." Rosemary Neiswender

Library J 91:3730 Ag '66 130w

LINE, MAURICE B. Library surveys; an introduction to their use, planning, procedure and presentation. 146p $5.50 Archon books 021 Library surveys
67-6378

The deputy librarian of the University of Newcastle-upon-Tyne discusses methods and procedures for conducting library surveys. "There are guidelines for constructing surveys, as well as examples for formulae for analyzing the data which are gathered. The appendix, 'Some practical examples,' gives 'examples that illustrate the way in which one might obtain information or tackle a particular problem by survey techniques.'" (Special Libraries)

"The author uses both British and American sources in his presentation, which should give it a wider audience. In an Appendix, he suggests several practical examples of studies that could be made, with some direction as to factors involved, as well as methods of collecting data. A useful index makes it possible to locate specific topics included in this work, which should be helpful to surveyors and surveyed alike." M. F. Tauber

Col & Res Lib 29:235 My '68 800w

"Reading Mr. Line's book, one is reminded (sometimes to one's own chagrin) of how superficial many library surveys are and of how exactly we collect our information. Directly and by inference, he suggests the reasons for continued effort at development and standardization of data collecting practices, among other things. On the negative side, Mr. Line sometimes uses illustrations too sparingly and occasionally British terms and examples do get slightly in the way. However, in sum, this is a valuable book. It is to be hoped that it may be followed by a more extended treatment of the same general subject." Ralph Blasingame

Library J 92:4485 D 15 '67 320w

"The clarity of [the author's] writing greatly aids in making his material understandable to various levels of experience. . . . Mr. Line reminds the reader of the dangers of a poorly conducted survey; the necessity of proper analysis of the data; and the importance of keeping a watchful eye on the costs. Having lived with industrial engineers, surveys, and statistics gathering for many years, I recommend [this book] to anyone who is anticipating such an undertaking as well as those who may have lived through such exercises in the past." M. N. Sloane

Special Libraries 59:116 F '68 350w

LININGTON, ELIZABETH. Policeman's lot. 232p $4.95 Harper
68-28232

When Harry Arthur, a reliable gas station attendant, and Dr. Grantby, a hospital resident, turn up missing, "Sergeant Maddox and associates, LAPD, do not expect the worst but are ready for it." (Sat R)

"Expertly done, with some reservations about motivation."

Best Sell 28:265 O 1 '68 100w

Reviewed by M. K. Grant
Library J 93:2900 Ag '68 60w

"A Policeman's Lot may not always be a happy one, but in Elizabeth Linington's hand the game seems worth the candle. . . . The Queen of the Procedurals has never been better." A. J. Hubin

N Y Times Bk R p60 O 20 '68 80w

Reviewed by Sergeant Cuff
Sat R 51:45 O 26 '68 40w

LININGTON, ELIZABETH. Something wrong. 183p $4.95 Harper
67-22519

This novel "starts off with a mystery involving the theft of a baby of six months from a Los Angeles apartment complex and involves the death of a teen-ager from quinidine, a gun-crazy hoodlum on the loose, several other minor felonies and winds up with all but the most minor being solved, with Sergeant Ivor Maddox and his colleagues in the Wilcox Street precinct involved, including policewoman Sue Carstairs who has an eye for Maddox." (Best Sell)

"Excellent police procedure technique but full of the unfinished sentence gambit in dialogue. Good but annoying, just the same." Henry Erhart

Best Sell 27:232 S 15 '67 130w

Reviewed by M. K. Grant
Library J 92:2608 J1 '67 40w

"In cold fact, the reasons for nine out of ten homicides are stupidly inadequate, if not downright silly. The pretexts (one can hardly say motives) for killing in Linington's novels resemble those of life; and if this goes against everything you learned in that course on The Art of the Novel, it makes her several police-procedural series unusually substantial and real. . . . [The story] opens with speculation as to whether 'more harm is caused by pure evil or just plain stupidity.' In the several cases here combined, stupidity wins hands down; but the single example of 'pure evil' is a genuine chiller. This is a beautifully constructed novel, one of the finest American books of its school, in which storytelling and thesis march hand in hand." Anthony Boucher

N Y Times Bk R p46 S 17 '67 200w

Reviewed by Sergeant Cuff
Sat R 50:37 O 28 '67 40w

LINK, ARTHUR S., ed. Woodrow Wilson; a profile. 197p $5.95 Hill & Wang
B or 92 Wilson, Woodrow 68-14783

A collection of writings intended to reveal the personality of Wilson the man, the teacher, the governor, the President. The book includes "selections by Ray Stannard Baker, Samuel G. Blythe, Cary T. Grayson, William Bayard Hale, John L. Heaton, Burton J. Hendrick, James Kerney, Arthur S. Link, William Starr Myers, Herbert G. Nicholas, Archibald W. Patterson, Bliss Perry, Carl F. Price, Charles Seymour, [and] Woodrow Wilson." (Publisher's note) Bibliography.

"Link, author of the definitive biography of Woodrow Wilson and editor of the Papers of Woodrow Wilson [v1, BRD 1966 and 1967; v2, BRD 1967; v3, BRD 1968], has here selected 17 pieces from the substantial body of Wilson material. He follows a chronological order, and the pieces present a reasonably clear view of our 28th president. This reviewer felt that the omission of a selection covering the war years caused an unfortunate hiatus in the work. Mr. Link's introductory essay sketches a superb framework for the biography, but the selections which follow are not adequate to the structure he posits. . . . [Nevertheless] the book is highly satisfactory and libraries which are not going to purchase Professor Link's more basic Woodrow Wilson [v1, BRD 1947; v2, BRD 1957; v3, BRD 1961; v4 and v5 both in BRD 1965], and need additional material should consider it. As always, librarians should not confuse range with depth." F. W. Summers

Library J 93:986 Mr 1 '68 170w

"Although [Wilson] was at first not a very willing recruit to the teaching of the academic world, he was an extremely effective teacher. There is overwhelming evidence of this in Professor Link's Profile. . . . [The brief biography] at the beginning of the Profile is itself a masterly summing up of the Wilson question and problem."
TLS p933 S 5 '68 750w

LINKLATER, ERIC. Scotland; introd. by Eric Linklater; phot. by Edwin Smith; notes on the plates by Olive Cook. (Studio bk) 224p $12.50 Viking

914.1 Scotland—Description and travel 68-19326

This pictorial history is presented in four parts. "Edinburgh and Glasgow form Part I; Part II covers the Lowlands and Part III Central Scotland. The Highlands and the Islands are . . . pictured and described in Part IV." (Library J)

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams
Atlantic 222:134 S '68 20w

"The photographs show variety in landscapes and buildings and, while color pictures are few, the photogravures are exquisitely done. The country . . . has never been presented so beautifully and completely in so small a way. . . . In so short a 'history' there is much omitted but the chosen words will send the interested reader on to fuller works. Younger readers will find this stimulating history. Collections, generally, will buy it." K. T. Willis
Library J 93:3135 S 15 '68 130w

Reviewed by Caskie Stinnett
N Y Times Bk R p99 D 1 '68 70w

"Linklater's introduction is truly an introduction to Scotland, but he makes no effort to be comprehensive. . . . [The photographs] are always satisfactory and sometimes . . . superb. There are four maps scattered through the text, but a single endpaper map would have been more useful."
New Yorker 44:120 Ag 24 '68 210w

"With Scotland it is possible to achieve portraiture in some depth with 134 plates and a skilful commentary. . . . [Regions] through which the traveller too often hurries . . . are given their due. . . . But of modern Scotland, apart from the new Forth Bridge, there is little. One may lament too, without detracting from the excellence of the book, the concentration on landscape and architecture. . . . This portraiture is of an uninhabited land. After all, Queen Victoria herself remarked, when travelling in the Highlands one frequently meets with the Highlanders."
TLS p947 S 5 '68 280w

LINKLATER, ERIC. The survival of Scotland: a new history of Scotland from Roman times to the present day. 376p $6.95 Doubleday

941 Scotland—History 68-11190

The author of The Conquest of England (BRD 1966) presents this volume in The Mainstream of the Modern World Series. The focus of the series is on people and events. Contents: The emergent kingdom; The war of independence; The royal Stewarts; Robert II to James IV; The later Stewarts; The wasted century; The revival of reason. Glossary. Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams
Atlantic 221:124 Je '68 30w

Reviewed by Sister Mary William
Best Sell 28:52 My 1 '68 490w

"[Linklater, who] is one of Scotland's . . . most prolific writers, uses his novelist's skill to good effect in telling of the internecine border raids, racking clan and family feuds, and large-scale conflicts that threatened constantly to tear Scotland apart. . . . [He] shows that survival was never easy, and that it happened was due more to the Scottish temperament and character than to anything else. He includes a notable section on Bannockburn, in which he reconstructs the battle with the help of recent findings, and in which he examines the relative merits of Wallace and the Bruce—to Wallace's disadvantage. Also notable is his fine, gentlemanly, and extended defense of Mary Queen of Scots. Unfortunately, he seems to think that Scottish history ended about the time of the Young Pretender. Certainly he crams everything that follows into a mere 50 pages. . . . He brings to the writing of history the clarity, elegance, and wit of a Churchill or a Trevelyan. Highly recommended for specialists, informed, and general readers." Peter Gellatly

Library J 93:1137 Mr 15 '68 270w

"Mr. Eric Linklater's personal survey of the story of Scotland does not quite qualify as a one-volume history. It is clearly and at times beautifully written, based on careful and fairly wide reading. . . . and coloured by a wider knowledge of the world than many academic historians possess. But the work of an amateur of history rather than an historian inevitably shows weaknesses to balance its merits. Some inaccuracies of detail—not all peculiar to Mr. Linklater—require correction. . . . More serious are the narrative's vagaries of emphasis and proportion. . . . Mr. Linklater's interest in Scottish history seems to wane as its affinity to drama increases."
TLS p452 My 2 '68 450w

LINKLETTER, ART. Oops! or, Life's awful moments; il. by Phil Interlandi. 151p $3.95 Doubleday

817 66-24321

The author "uses his experience on day-time radio and TV shows and letters from . . . fans to recount embarrassing moments which occur in the day-to-day life of every man or woman. He divides his 'Oops' into ten chapters." (Best Sell)

Best Sell 27:236 S 15 '67 110w

"The quantity of juvenile and adult corn . . . is a bit tiring, but this reviewer smiled and even snickered as he read it. Linkletter fans will ask for this book." W. H. Matthews
Library J 92:2574 Jl '67 80w

LINSCHOTEN, HANS. On the way toward a phenomenological psychology; the psychology of William James; ed. by Amedeo Giorgi. 319p $9.50 Duquesne univ. press

150.19 Phenomenology. Psychology. James. William 68-20279

"Conceding that 'there exists an inner dissension in the psychology of James,' Linschoten reviews systematically James's account of the basic elements of experience and insists that before the invention of the term 'phenomenology' James's psychology was already phenomenological." (Sat R) Translated from the Dutch edition of 1959.

"[This] is an extremely clear, readable, orderly and substantial contribution to American psychology and phenomenology. . . . [Linschoten] brings into intelligible order the often unsystematically arranged ideas of Jamesian psychology. Because James's ideas are still contemporary and relevant, this book provides a first-rate introduction not only to Jamesian psychology but also to methodological problems not yet solved by modern psychology. It also serves as a primer on phenomenology."
W. A. Sadler

Christian Century 85:1175 S 18 '68 1050w

"Especially striking, in the author's claim for the contemporary relevance of James, is his analysis of the relationship between the psychologist's incipient phenomenology and Sartre's description of nausea-towards-existence. . . . Stylistically Linschoten is no Hume, Ryle, or Ayer. There is a Kantian turgidity about his writing compounded by his often highly abstract and complicated subject matter. Thankfully, the translator only rarely obfuscates matters further. Occasionally the reconciliation in a higher phenomenological harmony of the apparently lower irreconcilabilities of James's psychology smacks of a medieval casuistic gloss on a contradictory text. Yet, notwithstanding that this is a psychologist writing for psychologists and his book is by no means a bedside reader, a certain freshness breaks through." A. W. Miller

LINSCHOTEN, HANS—Continued

Sat R 51:38 Ag 6 '68 600w

LINSCHOTEN, JOHANNES. See Linschoten, H.

LINTON, GEORGE E. Applied basic textiles; raw material, construction, color, and finish, fabric analysis, chemical and physical testing of textiles, spot and stain removal and care of clothing. 472p il $7.95 Duell

677 Textile industry and fabrics 65-23017

This book and its companion volume, Natural and Manmade Textile Fibers (BRD 1968) "replace Dr. Linton's earlier work, Applied Textiles. . . [Part I] includes discussion of raw materials; yarn manufacture; fabric constructions; color, design, and finishes (dyeing, printing, permanent press); and an analysis of floor covering, tufted fabrics, domestics, and factoring. Part II covers textile testing and care of clothing and textiles. . . [The subjects in a 60-page appendix] range from the Textile Fiber Products Identification Act to a history of costume, basic terms used in women's apparel, information sources on textiles, and names of better semitechnical and technical books for one's textile library. To assist the student in self-study, questions are included at the end of most units. There are also five comprehensive objective examinations covering several units." (J Home Econ) Bibliography.

"Linton has had many years of teaching experience along with an active career in close association with the leaders of textile technology. Some, depending on their degree of sophistication in the field, may not agree with all the definitions, interpretations, and conclusions. As a basic text, a wealth of textile information is found from raw material to finished fabric to serve student and professional alike as a valuable reference source. Although in textbook form with self-testing sections, its value to the professional lies in the extensive bibliography. By combining this with the author's companion volume, Natural and Manmade Textile Fibers, one can obtain a collection of more textile information that can be found in any other single source."
Choice 4:1260 Ja '68 100w

"The author brings impressive qualifications to his writings on applied basic textiles. . . His years of experience allow him to bring together . . . a vast amount of knowledge which will be valuable to both student and teacher. Especially useful are his illustrations and excellent explanations of basic textile terms. [Weaknesses are] the outdated bibliography, the failure to organize the material clearly, and the tendency to include much which has only tangential relation to the title. An example of an unexplained and seemingly unrelated inclusion is the outline and discussion on the history of costume." Emma Jordre
J Home Econ 60:63 Ja '68 340w

"This work will serve as an encyclopedia of fabrics in a general collection. . . The coverage is complete, up-to-the-minute, and extremely detailed. Not only the present but the past is discussed, with histories of each fabric, weave and process dotting the book. Indeed, it is hard to think of anything that is not covered, but if you should, it could be found through use of the bibliography which ends the book, one of the most comprehensive bibliographies on textiles available. This is a textbook, meant for study and reference, not casual reading, but it should be invaluable in any collection which needs complete, detailed, up-to-the-latest-synthetic-bond information in one volume." Janet Friedlander
Library J 91:242 Ja 15 '66 100w

LIONNI, LEO. The biggest house in the world. unsp col il lib bdg $3.95 Pantheon bks.

Snails—Stories 68-12646

"In this picture book, a small snail has a very large wish. He wants the largest house in the world. But by telling the youngster a story, his wise father helps him to see the impracticality of being encased in a magnificent monstrosity too big to move." (Book Week) "Ages three to seven." (Sat R)

Reviewed by Ethna Sheehan
America 119:655 D 21 '68 40w

"In the style of fine picture books, the illustrations extend the story so the reader experiences both the wonder and excitement of watching the enormous shell grow, and later the relief and joy of the small snail as he explores his own world. The translucent color of the pictures and the simplicity of the text make a perfect combination." Anne Izard
Book World p4 (children's issue)
My 5 '68 130w

Christian Science Monitor p11 Jl 3 '68 130w

Reviewed by M. L. Birmingham
Commonweal 88:301 My 24 '68 40w

"This honor-winning book elicits special praise from the art critic. As it was being considered for a spring book prize, juror Roger Duvoisin commented on Lionni's 'bold designs, richness of color, good use of white space, and dramatic and witty picturing' of a growing cabbage and a growing snail shell in a treatment characterized by an over-all simplicity and striking clarity." Virginia Haviland

Horn Bk 44:409 Ag '68 110w

Reviewed by M. H. Scott
Library J 93:2533 Je 15 '68 120w

"If the picture book is a new visual art form in our time, Leo Lionni is certain to be judged a master of the genre. His books stretch the sensibilities and make us, adult and child, more aware of the world beneath our feet and just beyond the garden fence. [This book] zooms in on the snail's small, cabbage-leaf habitat with a naturalist's delight. At midpoint, Mr. Lionni fabricates a multi-turreted giant shell for his snail with hubris that fills our wondering eyes with a new vision of fairyland. A thoughtful child will return to his graphic magic again and again." S. G. Lanes
N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p54 My 5 '68 150w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland
Sat R 51:36 My 11 '68 160w

LIPPARD, LUCY R. The graphic work of Philip Evergood. See Evergood, P.

LIPSET, SEYMOUR M., ed. Party systems and voter alignments: cross-national perspectives; ed. by Seymour M. Lipset and Stein Rokkan. 554p $9.95 Free press

329 Political parties. Elections 67-25332

This work, the final volume of the International Yearbook of Political Behavior Research, consists of eleven contributions divided into four sections: The English-speaking democracies; Continental Europe; Northern Europe; and The emerging nations. It presents "data on the ways in which major political tendencies have evolved in the contemporary world. Throughout, special emphasis is placed on the comparative analysis of party systems and the interaction of political parties with the broader, social, economic, and cultural climate." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Systematic index. Index.

"[In the] essay ('Cleavage Structures, Party Systems, and Voter Alignments') with which they introduce this book, [the editors] have made an impressive and exceptionally important contribution to the comparative study of political parties. Their introduction, perhaps more important than the book itself, synthesizes and systematizes much of what is known about the relations between social stratification and competitive party politics. . . [The] essays that follow, written without guidance from the Lipset-Rokkan typologies or models, can themselves be located on the functional and territorial axes, some of them stressing class and others stressing regional factors in voting and partisanship." R. C. Fried

Am Pol Sci R 62:960 S '68 1100w

"Like previous volumes, this one collects a series of original article length contributions, all of which deal very generally with the same themes and problems but not from any common frame of reference. . . While inevitably uneven, most of the articles are good and some excellent. In the latter category are included articles by Juan Linz on Spain and Germany, Robert Alford on the correlation between class and party in the Anglo-American democracies, . . . and McKenzie and Silver on working-class Tories in England. . . . The editors contribute a lengthy, labored, but useful typological essay on the significance for political systems of the sequence in which sociopolitical conflicts arise and are resolved. . . . Short, inadequate bibliography. In balance this book, like its predecessors in the series, belongs in all but the smallest political science collections."

Choice 5:123 Mr '68 220w

"This volume is a major contribution to cross-national research and theory. Its relevance to current broad political tendencies is immediate and direct. Any library serving an alert, informed, and curious readership will want to add it to its collection." H. J. Steck

Library J 93:758 F 15 '68 180w

LIPSET, SEYMOUR MARTIN, ed. Elites in Latin America; ed. by Seymour Martin Lipset and Aldo Solari. 531p $9.50; pa $2.95 Oxford 309.18 Latin America. Education—Latin America. Leadership 67-11759

"Fifteen social scientists from the United States and various parts of Latin America [discuss] . . . the problems of development and modernization in Latin America. . . . The authors, by examining . . . the elite groups, are able to isolate the factors that have inhibited Latin American growth, as well as those that may contribute to its development in the future. . . . While the essays focus mainly on the significant types of elite groups (political, working class, cultural, religious, peasant, military, and the like), much of the study is concerned with education. The ways in which the secondary and university systems affect the competence, orientation, and composition of future elites, and the ways in which economic advancement and industrial activity are linked to literacy and education are explored." (Publisher's note) Chapter bibliographies. Name index. Subject index.

Reviewed by J. A. Silva Michelena

Am Pol Sci R 61:1163 D '67 1350w

"The book is not particularly well-knit, being a mixed bag of styles and points of view, yet it achieves a measure of integration in its major theme: the recruitment, socialization, and performance of Latin American elites viewed in the context of the relationship of value systems to political, social, and, especially, economic development. . . . [However] the book contains much that is useful not just for the social scientist interested in Latin America, but for anyone interested in studying whole societies, elites, value systems and change. If the authors haven't given us definitive answers, they have chosen to grapple with the big questions." Wendell Bell

Am Soc R 33:313 Ap '68 650w

"In the chapter on cultural elites, Frank Bonilla will probably create some thought and considerable discussion with his conclusion that 'it seems difficult to build a convincing case for the primacy of cultural values—concern with creativity or free expression—as a distinctive mark of Latin American society. . . . Although the chapter on peasant movements is an interesting one, it seems curious that the tremendous impact of Mexico's agrarian reform programs are not even mentioned. . . . The chapter on the university by Darcy Ribeiro is especially good and provides a great deal of insight into the functioning of the Latin-American university. . . . This is an important work and will be of interest not only to scholars but also to laymen interested in understanding more fully our southern neighbors." N. L. Whetten

Ann Am Acad 374:234 N '67 550w

Christian Century 84:627 My 10 '67 40w

Reviewed by H. A. Spalding

Library J 92:2426 Je 15 '67 150w

"[This] is a doubly disappointing volume. Both the range of problems posed by the title and the renown of many of the contributors promise a valuable addition to the study of Latin America. . . . The book turns out to be no more than a series of routine seminar papers united only by the fact that they were given at a conference in Montevideo in 1965. . . . In a compendium supposedly devoted to élites there is a study of 'Contemporary Peasant Movements', but no study of the large landowners who have so often provided the social basis of the 'oligarchy' in Latin America. . . . Any adequate sociology of the continent today would have to start off by examining an historical problem: namely, how it is that the various oligarchies have been able to retain their supremacy for so long. [This book] only addresses itself to this problem from a very limited vantage point. . . . A weakness is the absence of any study of the role of US policy makers." Robin Blackburn

New Statesman 74:882 D 22 '67 500w

LIPSET, SEYMOUR MARTIN. Revolution and counterrevolution; change and persistence in social structures. 466p $10 Basic bks.

320.01 Social change. Sociology. North America—Social conditions. North America—Politics 68-16875

"This book is composed of various essays I have written during the past five years that deal either in a substantive or theoretical way with the problems of analyzing from a historical-structural perspective the character of changing societies and politics. The revolution which is referred to in the title is the American Revolution, and the counterrevolution is the preservation of British rule and monarchical and elitist institutions in Canada. I have attempted to make manifest the extent to which key historical events and factors continue to affect the behavior of nations and institutions for generations and centuries afterward." (Pref) General index. Name index.

"[This] will be as distinguished and significant a contribution as the remainder of [Lipset's] prolific work. . . . Excellent subject and name index. Recommended for all college and junior college libraries."

Choice 5:1042 O '68 180w

"The volume is divided into four parts: an introductory essay on method; an analysis of value differences in Canada, Latin America, and the United States; a comparison of political cleavage in underdeveloped and developed nations; and a study of three pioneering social scientists. Mr. Lipset has provided a unique interpretive effort which establishes a significant theoretical starting point for further analysis. The essays on Harriet Martineau, Moisei Ostrogorski, and Robert Michels clearly indicate that the proposed methodology has a long and successful intellectual history. Recommended for the college library." S. D. Nerbo

Library J 93:1150 Mr 15 '68 140w

"There is more here than a collection of essays in search of a title. For a central problem emerges from these dozen chapters, despite (or perhaps because of) the fact that each faces in a different direction. It is the problem indicated by the sober subtitle—the problem of change and persistence in society. . . . Lipset's manner of argument is not to build his case by a cumulative presentation of evidence, but through a barrage of statistics and research, no part of which is particularly stressed over any other. The method has its strengths and its weaknesses. . . . [The work] bristles with interesting findings, insightful comparisons and unexpected similarities. At the same time, the fact that the case is constructed from a multiplicity of detail gives it a fragmented and impressionistic cast and blurs or obscures the core of principal contentions." R. L. Heilbroner

New Repub 159:26 J1 13 '68 1700w

LIPSET, SEYMOUR MARTIN, ed. Student politics. 403p $8.95 Basic bks.

301.15 Students—Political activity 67-23817

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by J. D. May

Am J Soc 73:631 Mr '68 1850w

Reviewed by Richard Flacks

Am Soc R 33:664 Ag '68 1000w

Reviewed by Henrietta Buckmaster

Christian Science Monitor p11 J1 22 '68

320w

LIPSET, SEYMOUR MARTIN, jt. ed. Turner and the sociology of the frontier. See Hofstadter, R.

LIPSKI, JÓZEF. Diplomat in Berlin, 1933-1939; papers and memoirs of Józef Lipski, Ambassador of Poland; ed. by Wacław Jędrzejewicz. 679p $17.50 Columbia univ. press
327.43 Poland—Foreign relations—Germany. Germany—Foreign relations—Poland 67-25871

This volume "contains documents from the files of the late Józef Lipski, the Polish ambassador in Berlin during the years 1933 to 1939. . . . Arranged chronologically [they cover] . . . conversations with Hitler, Goering, Neurath, and Ribbentrop. . . . [There are also] documents on the negotiation of the Polish-German nonaggression pact, the quarrel over Danzig, the Anschluss, the Czechoslovak crisis, and the outbreak of war." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

Choice 5:1207 N '68 190w

"[This] is a source book, the editor assuming in his brief linking commentaries that the reader is familiar with the international situation at the time and with at least the main outline of the development of the Polish-German relations. To our knowledge of that development Lipski's documents . . . can add little at this stage. . . . But Lipski was an able ambassador and a shrewd observer, and this volume, as well as advancing the process of getting the scattered Polish archives into print in translation, will be useful to specialists who work on the origins of the second world war and interesting to any who are concerned to understand or recapture the atmosphere in the Berlin of those days."

Economist 228:47 Ag 31 '68 280w

"There are 163 documents [in this book], chiefly dispatches from Lipski to Józef Beck, the Polish foreign minister; some of Beck's instructions to Lipski; articles by Lipski published originally in Polish between 1947 and 1951; and some of his handwritten notes regarding Polish-German relations. . . . These documents provide an excellent new source for the study of Polish-German relations. . . . The editing is first-rate; the book includes references to documents in other printed collections that deal with Polish-German relations." Keith Eubank

Library J 93:1621 Ap 15 '68 200w

"Occasionally, a book enables us to . . . understand how things really happened before the war. Enlightenment of this kind is provided by the voluminous papers and records that Lipski left. . . . He was, as diplomats go, a skilled observer and certainly a self-confident one. His book tells the story of a policy that failed. . . . The policy was that of reconciliation, or even partnership, between Poland and Germany—a repeat performance in the East of the partnership between Germany and Italy in the West, which in the long run proved equally ruinous." A. J. P. Taylor

N Y Rev of Books 10:12 Je ■ '68 1700w
TLS p934 S 5 '68 900w

LISS, HOWARD. The mighty Mekong. 112p il $3.95 Hawthorn bks.

915.9 Mekong Valley—Juvenile literature
67-24001

"Sketching the course of the Mekong River from the mountains of Tibet to South Vietnam and the sea, Liss . . . describes terrain, animal life, rural and urban environments, agriculture, transport and customs in diet and clothing, also touching upon religion and history [Bibliography. Index.] Grades six to eight." (Library J)

Best Sell 28:18 Ap 1 '68 90w

"Clear reporting makes smooth reading, but the hypothetical approach to the journey ('Suppose we could take a trip down the Mekong. . .') lessens its impact. Effects of the war in Vietnam are mentioned but not dwelt upon; orientation is to the area as a whole with emphasis on hope for future development rather than present problems. A map and informative photographs are included." P. A. McKenzie

Library J 93:308 Ja 15 '68 100w

"[Liss] conducts a graphic voyage downriver. From the Himalayan Mountains in Tibet the Mekong runs through six countries—China, Laos, Burma, Thailand, Cambodia and South Vietnam—before it reaches the South China Sea. [He] . . . stops off in each country to tell a little bit about the people and their history. 'The Mighty Mekong' provides a good fishing ground for facts." Harold Faber

N Y Times Bk R p60 N 19 '67 150w

LISS, HOWARD. Soccer, international game; foreword by Sir Stanley Rous [il. by Harry Rosenbaum]. 96p $3.50 Funk

796.33 Soccer 67-26042

"The history and fundamentals of [the game]. . . . Included are anecdotes of the sport's more unusual characters. . . . The author also describes the best ways to execute kicking, dribbling, passing, tackling, and heading. A generalized explanation of soccer rules lists field dimensions, equipment, starting play, misconduct, and penalty kicks." (Publisher's note) Glossary of soccer terms.

"[A] lucid account. . . . Photographs of soccer in action, sketches of techniques, diagrams of the field and the positions of the players, including a well-planned fold-out illustrating some strategic plays make this a recommended addition to the High School library and will be helpful, too, in the collegiate library."

Best Sell 27:466 Mr 1 '68 100w

"Throughout [Liss] makes his points by reference to American football, basketball, and baseball—games much better known to his readers than soccer. The result is a lucid, concise introduction which can be recommended for Young Adult collections with only two minor reservations: the choice of photographs could have been better for illustrating particular points in the text, and foldouts with diagrams of tactics with the note 'To remove, fold and detach along dotted line' might be a temptation to some library readers." Norman Horrocks

Library J 93:1914 My 1 '68 170w [YA]

Library J 93:2130 My 15 '68 60w

LISS, SHELDON B. The canal; aspects of United States-Panamanian relations. 310p maps $5.95 Univ. of Notre Dame press

327.73 U.S.—Foreign relations—Panama. Panama—Foreign relations—U.S. 67-22147

A history of the relations of the two nations from 1903 to 1966. Emphasis is placed on the "post-World War II years, which includes an analysis of Communism in the Isthmian Republic, the ramifications of the Castro Revolution, and the Kennedy and Johnson Administrations, both of which were involved with the break in U.S.-Panamanian relations in 1964." (Choice) Bibliography.

"No other publication encompasses the material included by Liss: all citizens of the U.S. would benefit from reading this volume, even though it is not an unbiased, definitive study. That, as yet, has not been written. Throughout, U.S. chauvinism prevails in spite of the author's efforts to prevent it. More footnotes would improve the quality. Recommended for all levels."

Choice 5:1018 O '68 120w

"It is to Mr. Liss's credit that he unravels the complexities [of the relationship between the U.S. and Panama], avoids partiality, and dares to present the unpleasanties. The concluding chapter, entitled 'Portents,' is a model of judicious prognostication. Associate professor of history at the University of Akron, Mr. Liss thoroughly substantiates his work by notes and a bibliography. . . . The title is obscure and, in this reviewer's opinion, misleading. However, the book is highly recommended for academic and larger public libraries." R. D. Harlan

Library J 93:73 Ja 1 '68 190w

LISTER, FLORENCE C. Chihuahua, storehouse of storms [by] Florence C. Lister & Robert H. Lister. 360p il maps $6.50 Univ. of N.Mex. press

972 Chihuahua, Mexico (State) 66-21935

A history of the Mexican state from prehistoric times to the present. Bibliography. Index.

"Despite a few factual mistakes and an occasional prejudiced view, the Listers fulfill their purpose very well, since it is stated in the foreword that reliance on source material was 'placed upon the works of others' rather than doing the spadework themselves and, rather than being an originally researched work, that the volume is intended to bring together all known facts and events into a meaningful history of Chihuahua. There is no published work comparable. . . . A tremendous amount of synthesizing [results] in frequently sketchy coverage. Recommended for all persons interested in the history of the state of Chihuahua, but a good knowledge of Mexican history would make the work more meaningful."

Choice 4: 1169 D '67 150w

"This scholarly but readable history of Chihuahua was written by a professor of archaeology at the University of Colorado and his wife. The first section, on the prehistoric period, draws some interesting comparisons between Chihuahua and our Southwest, since its later history is intertwined with our own. Along the way are some familiar and some fabled characters . . . [who] enliven the narrative. The final section deals briefly with modern developments in social atmosphere and economics. Although primarily for the scholar, . . . this book is written with enough skill and interest to attract the informed layman as well. For research and large public libraries." L. R. Huish
Library J 92:1007 Mr 1 '67 150w

LISTER, FLORENCE C. Earl Morris & Southwestern archaeology [by] Florence C. Lister & Robert H. Lister. 204p pl $7.95 Univ. of N. Mex. press

970.4 Morris, Earl Halstead. Pueblo Indians—Antiquities. Southwest, New—Antiquities 68-19737

Biography of an American archaeologist and of his work exploring "Indian ruins in New Mexico, Arizona, Utah, and Colorado." (Library J) Bibliography. Bibliography of Earl H. Morris. Index.

"[Morris] was partly responsible for developing historic dating by counting tree rings. The Listers give not only a firsthand account of his work in the field but also a wealth of information on prehistoric man in the Southwest. A specialized study, it is recommended for subject and regional collections." H. E. Smith
Library J 93:3551 O 1 '68 100w

Reviewed by Edward Abbey
N Y Times Bk R p38 O 27 '68 60w

LISTER, RAYMOND. Great works of craftsmanship. 206p il $5 Barnes, A.S.
700 Art objects 68-14406

The author takes twelve examples of craftsmanship ranging from "the Throne of Tutankhamen [to] the Palladian Bridge at Wilton House and the Penny Black postage stamp—and talks about them, their origin, use, meaning (if any), relationship to their age and more particularly the technical methods used in their creation." (TLS) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"Mr. Lister's style is somewhat discursive, this permits him to include not only techniques but also history and traditions, and to quote from contemporary authors, even poets. [This book is] recommended for public libraries." Paul von Khrum
Library J 93:2850 Ag '68 90w [YA]

"The book is filled with out-of-the-way knowledge, the result obviously of wide reading, and is all the more stimulating because the pleasure the author derives from each of the fine things he illustrates is obvious on every page. The illustrations are adequate with the exception of the two coins of Syracuse by Euainetos and Kimon." TLS p572 Je 29 '67 290w

LISTER, ROBERT H., jt. auth. Chihuahua, storehouse of storms. See Lister, F. C.

LISTER, ROBERT H., jt. auth. Earl Morris & Southwestern archaeology. See Lister, F. C.

LISTON, ROBERT A. Downtown; our challenging urban problems. 173p il $4.50 Delacorte press bk.

301.3 Sociology, Urban. Cities and towns—U.S. 68-10231

In this survey of the problems of urban living, "the author attempts to present the problems, some solutions that have developed, and the possibilities for the future of the country." (Best Sell) Bibliography. Index.

"Informative as well as interesting. Young people will be quickly caught up in the account and will want to look to future solutions that will involve themselves. The clear presentation of the problems is enough that suggest this book should find a place in the school library." Best Sell 28:114 Je 1 '68 90w

Reviewed by S. D. Long
Horn Bk 44:439 Ag '68 170w

"As the author points out, cities are where the action and excitement are, where the future lies. He brings an easy-to-stick-with journalistic style and upbeat enthusiasm to the idea that municipal messes are subject to solution. Another factor that lifts the book above and beyond the dead-levels of textbooks on civics is Liston's confrontation of corruption and neglect in the Now, not just the Boss Tweed era scandals. The unobtrusive marshalling of figures from recent urban studies supports the chapter essays. . . . Well organized for information retention, well argued for discussion." L. N. Gerhardt

Library J 93:2124 My 15 '68 140w [YA]

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland
Sat R 51:37 S 21 '68 100w [YA]

LITTLE, JEAN. When the pie was opened; poems. 83p $3.75 Little 68-11112

A collection of poems about "nature, love, dogs, introspection, parents and children. . . . Grades seven to ten." (Library J)

"This anthology of poetry should be appealing to young readers because the compiler deemed it best to speak these particular messages through verse. Some of her favorite lyrics will be favorites also among her readers, for they are an expression of her many feelings and delights, shared by many who have felt the same but felt inadequate and incapable of expressing themselves thus." Best Sell 27:466 Mr 1 '68 70w

"Primarily ballads, often with forced rhymes, only some [of these poems] demonstrate effective imagery and awareness but these few don't justify the purchase of the book." Julia Losinski
Library J 93:2124 My 15 '68 40w

LITTLE, TOM. South Arabia; arena of conflict. 196p maps $5 Praeger

953 Arabia, Southern—Politics. Aden 68-19644

An "account of the formation and dissolution of the Federation of South Arabia, and of the personalities, parties, and policies involved." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"[This] book is relatively easy to read, although it is not Little's best work. Useful for high school students as well as undergraduates. Its lack of documentation makes its usefulness restrictive to background reading." Choice 5:1025 O '68 150w

"Mr Little provides a straightforward account of what happened between 1914 and 1967. Though marred by an occasional misprint and sometimes a little too compressed for clarity [his] book gives a factual, unemotional and generally lucid story, and he seldom permits himself to make a judgment. When he does it is sensible and always charitable. His main conclusion, that the fundamental error of British policy was to become deeply involved in the tribal states, will surely be endorsed by history." Economist 226:53 Mr 30 '68 340w

Reviewed by David Shavit
Library J 93:2652 Jl '68 110w

"[The author] has written, with his usual clarity, a piece of work that is less a book than a factual memorandum. Beginning with some particulars about the fortuitous extension of British protection to the hinterland, the casual British alienation of Yemen, and the efficient complacency with which British colonial servants spent exiguous funds, he lets the facts speak for themselves. . . . Mr. Little says in his preface that he 'may have given too much detail about the merger of Aden with the Federation of the Amirates of the South. If so, I can only say that it was the crucial turning point, when all the difficulties to come were manifest'. Just so. . . . This book deserves the attention of all great-power crusaders who may be thinking of trying to sell their way of life to alien continents." TLS p336 Ap 4 '68 750w

A LITTLE prayer; with pictures by Barbara Cooney. unp $1.25; lib bdg $2.25 Hastings house

242 Prayers—Juvenile literature 67-27101

"For an old Provencal prayer the artist has drawn . . . all the many creatures mentioned

A LITTLE prayer—Continued

in its cadenced lines." (Horn Bk) "Ages three to six." (Book World)

"A charming old French prayer . . . into which Barbara Cooney has breathed new life with captivating pictures of philosophical fishermen, patient spinner and carefree drummer boy, of cheerful pigeon, meek lamb and impulsive rooster." Polly Goodwin

Book World p12 D 17 '67 60w

"[This] is expressed with a deep religious faith and the charm of a true poem." V. H. Horn Bk 44:73 F '68 100w

"Although the format is that of a small (5½" x 5") picture book, interest in this artist's illustrations and especially, in the prayer, will extend beyond the intended audience of small children." M. H. Scott

Library J 92:4604 D 15 '67 60w

LITTLE Tuppen; an old tale; Paul Galdone drew the pictures. unsp $3.50 Seabury

398.2 Folklore—Scandinavia—Juvenile literature. Poultry—Stories 67-1646

"A cumulative nursery tale. . . . In this version, a hen, distressed because her chick is choking on a seed, unsuccessfully seeks aid from a spring, an oak tree, a boy, a shoemaker, a cow, a farmer, and a blacksmith. Finally, she reaches some dwarfs, who come to her rescue and set off the action in reverse by giving her a heap of iron for the blacksmith and sending her back along the rescue line with something to trade for aid. . . . Preschool to grade one." (Library J)

"The story does not match the quality of the illustrations. It is based on an old—rather tedious—Scandinavian nursery tale." K. G. Burt Christian Science Monitor pB3 My 4 '67 90w

"A fresh variant of the cumulative folk-tale pattern, illustrated with cheerful, bright-colored pictures to attract the very youngest." E. L. H. Horn Bk 43:339 Je '67 90w

Reviewed by B. S. Miller

Library J 92:2014 My 15 '67 100w

TLS p587 Je 6 '68 30w

LIU, JAMES J. Y. The Chinese knight-errant. 242p $5.50 Univ. of Chicago press

895.1 Knights and knighthood 66-14112

Through "references to 'knightly' personages from Chinese history, poetry, fiction, and drama . . . [the author seeks to] demonstrate the importance in traditional China of a figure quite set apart from those segments of Chinese with which we have been familiar: the bureaucratic Confucian, the humble peasant, the career army officer, the merchant. The Chinese 'knight' was romantically nonconformist in his rugged disregard of family ties. He was a freelance: impetuous, violent, ever in search of wrongs to redress and injustices to avenge." (Choice) Glossary. Bibliography. Index.

"The main body of Liu's work is pleasantly readable, scholarly apparatus (notes, bibliography, source references, glossary, and index) having all been placed at the end of the volume."

Choice 5:613 J1 '68 130w

"[There are] two chapters devoted to poetry, one to lyric descriptions of the knight-errant, and one to the poetic drama in which the knight-errant is set in motion. . . . Among the poems translated are some by Li Po, himself once a knight-errant. . . . [The] poems by Li Po, and poems by other poets, are skillfully translated. Professor Liu has made a valuable contribution to comparative studies, showing relationships to Chinese philosophic and social theories as well as to history, and similarities to and differences from the western knight-errant. This is of importance in considering the role of the knight-errant in the theatre. Unfortunately, as the nature of the book demands, the author has emphasized plot and characterization above dramatic and poetic qualities. However, there are several translated passages of interest not only in themselves but also in showing the range of tone and style between the alternating prose and poetic lines." R. E. Teele

Poetry 112:283 J1 '68 360w

LIU, JO-YÜ. See Liu, James J. Y.

LIU, WILLIAM T., ed. Chinese society under communism: a reader. 496p $8.50; pa $5.50 Wiley

309.151 China (People's Republic of China)—Social conditions 66-29625

A collection of writings intended to show "social patterns in modern China. . . . The selections [attempt to] provide a new perspective for interpreting Chinese society and Communist policies in China. Patterns of social control in traditional, transitional, and Communist China are traced and analyzed . . . to show the historical development of social structures and underlying ideologies." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"The principles according to which the selection of the articles has been made are obscure to me. Why is an article by Mao Tse-tung (no. 14) taken from the New York Times Magazine and not from the original Chinese source? Why are other articles taken from secondary translations, without reference to the original edition, year, and place of publication? And why is another article (no. 40) taken from the China News Analysis, a useful but unscholarly digest of Communist publications? Unfortunately, this is not all. I have the impression that something might have happened to the manuscript in the press: titles seem to have been mixed up. . . . Proof-reading also has been quite negligent. . . . [The China Reader, edited by F. Schurman, BRD 1967] is much more reliable than the book under review." Wolfram Eberhard

Am Soc R 32:838 O '67 1100w

"A most useful book which, though primarily a reader for classroom use, should be in every college library. Liu, in selecting and organizing his sources, devises a conceptual framework that is structural-functional as well as open-ended. To show continuity and changes as well as to point out what is traditional and what is Communist in Chinese society, Liu uses historical materials selectively and meaningfully. The main body of the selections, nevertheless, deals with the process of social control—its apparatus, objectives, and institutional consequences—under Communist rule. Because of the dearth of empirical data on Communism's impact on the personality development of the Chinese, the sections on 'Values and Ethics' and 'Literature and Arts' are weak and inconclusive."

Choice 4:1317 Ja '68 180w

"Liu has drawn from the writings of Mao Tse-tung, and publications by the American government, as well as articles and monographs by authorities in the West. About one fifth of his text is devoted to such key institutions in China before Communism as the family, the clan, the gentry, and law. But the bulk of the volume is concerned with a variety of aspects relating to China since 1949: the destruction of the traditional family, the roles of the Chinese Communist Party and the military, the population problem, urban and agrarian conditions, health, education, youth, and literature. . . . Liu's concerns and training as a sociologist naturally influenced his selections. . . . [There is] relatively little on the factions and individuals in the governing elite, or on Communist China's world view [but the] volume is a solid collection representing a variety of sometimes conflicting opinions on the social revolution in modern China." W. R. Blaisted

Social Studies 59:227 O '68 420w

LIVESEY, HERBERT B. Guide to American graduate schools. by Herbert B. Livesey and Gene A. Robbins. 357p $8.50; pa $3.95 Viking 378.73 Colleges and universities—U.S.—Directories 67-20675

"The programs of more than 600 accredited graduate institutions are described, with only independent divinity schools and seminaries omitted. Included are data describing the academic programs, admission and degree requirements, enrollment and faculty figures, tuition charges, financial aids, and housing information. The arrangement is alphabetically by the name of the school." (Library J) Bibliography. Indexes.

"[This book] updates in part the older A.C.E. [American Council on Education. A Guide to Graduate Study; Programs Leading to the Ph.D. Degree. It] . . . offers advice, and lists pertinent, uncritical information. It has the advantage of including both master's and doctor's programs for academic and professional (dentistry) graduate study [but] falls down when compared to A.C.E.'s information and indices, e.g. its 'Index to Selected Fields of Study' hardly satisfies as a subject approach. . . . If a supportive volume is needed, [this] would contribute."

Choice 5:27 Mr '68 250w

"This is a very useful guide . . . designed to provide the student with the information he needs to select his school wisely. . . . From the user's point of view, a preferable arrangement would probably have been by academic discipline, the procedure followed by the recently published Random House Guide to Graduate Study in the Arts and Sciences [by E. R. Wasserman, BRD 1968], a similar volume, but of more limited scope. Nevertheless, this is a useful and timely volume and is recommended for prospective graduate students, admissions and counseling officers, and all others concerned with graduate education, as well as for libraries." Jim Ranz

Library J 93:742 F 15 '68 190w

LIVINGSTON, M. STANLEY. Particle physics; the high-energy frontier. 230p $5.50 McGraw 539.7 Nuclear physics 68-11615

"This volume, which grew out of a series of lectures given to undergraduates at M.I.T. is a survey of the present status of knowledge and research in the field of particle physics. Starting with the historical development of classical and atomic physics, Mr. Livingston, professor of physics at M.I.T. and associate director of the new National Accelerator Laboratory at Weston, Illinois, describes the significance of new concepts in particle physics and the experiments which have led to, and justify, these concepts." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

Choice 5:832 S '68 160w

"This is a difficult subject and although this book is not written for the specialist, some familiarity with the terminology of modern physics is required. It is, however, a clear, concise, and fascinating synthesis of the current scene in particle physics and is highly recommended for college and university, and larger public libraries." J. K. Luckner

Library J 93:2672 J1 '68 210w

LIVINGSTON, MYRA COHN, ed. A tune beyond us; a collection of poetry; II. by James J. Spanfeller. 280p $5.75 Harcourt

808.81 Poetry—Collections—Juvenile literature 68-11502

"Poems that were written in other languages appear here in the original—Latin, Chinese, Japanese, Russian, Spanish, Italian, German, French—as well as in English translation, so those who read other languages may enjoy the music of the originals. The poems range in time from eighth-century China to the present. . . . Well-known poets are represented, usually with their lesser known works, and the work of little-known authors is also included." (Publisher's note) Index of authors. Index of titles. Index of translators. "Grade six and up." (Library J)

"[This collection] is bold in its demands upon young readers. Quotes from Wallace Stevens and T. S. Eliot grace the frontispiece of an anthology that ranges from eighth-century Japanese poetry to songs from 'The Hobbit.' The emphasis is international with representation—in the original and translated—from Yevtushenko, Lorca, Brecht, and Li Po. Don't be intimidated. There are a good many playful moments." Melvin Maddocks

Christian Science Monitor pB9 My 2 '68 100w

"Guaranteed to banish youthful grumblings about 'dull' poetry is this fresh, unusual anthology which never compromises its excellence with banality. The work of Whitman, . . . Brecht, Lorca, Auden, Pushkin, Roethke, and many others are . . . presented in graceful translations as well as the language of their original writing. . . . Dialogues, medieval Latin songs, free verse, and the whole range of traditional meters, all have been collected with one purpose in view—to provide enjoyment as well as insight into skilled poetic blending of the unique and the universal. Three cheers for Mrs. Livingston, her infallible eyes and ears!" M. A. Dorsey

Library J 93:2124 My 15 '68 120w

"Mrs. Livingston is introducing poetry to young people or, at least, one supposes her to be, from the opening sentences of her prefatory note. . . . The condescending tone is immediately disconcerting. . . . Even the most uninformed young reader will suspect that something is wrong. And indeed it is: Mrs. Livingston often includes bad translations of good poems beside worthless English originals that sound like translations from some unknown tongue. She excerpts at random: a stanza from Gerard Manley Hopkins's 'The Wreck of the Deutschland,' four prose passages from Dylan Thomas's 'Conversation About Christmas.' These bits and pieces, like Christmas goodies, are scattered through pointless sections whose headings are more frivolous than suggestive." W. J. Smith

N Y Times Bk R p30 Ap 28 '68 350w

LLEWELLYN, RICHARD. The end of the rug. 328p $5.95 Doubleday

67-12863

"Edmund Trothe is Number 2 man in the small but important government department energetically working in Geneva to keep up to date on every move anywhere made by the six nations of the Common Market so that when admitted, Britain will be on top of the problems, with little to learn and few growing pains. Unfortunately, a trip to London sucks Trothe back into his old security role, and sends him again to Germany to do what he can about the resurgent Nazi movement. As the plot unfolds, it involves Trothe's wife and children, his loves, his colleagues, and the Minister they work for." (Library J)

Best Sell 28:220 S 1 '68 140w

"Since the memorable, tilting How Green Was My Valley [BRD 1940], the career of Richard Llewellyn has been checkered. . . . Here, he puts his hand to international intrigue, and it has proved a trap. The prose is a stiff-upper-lip British (and it occurs to me that one emotion most readily expressed in that mode is embarrassment). Llewellyn seems unable to decide whether the book is to be a partial spoof in the manner of Ian Fleming, or whether his hero, Edmund Trothe, is to follow in the serious Le Carré tradition. The materials themselves are what you would expect in any espionage novel. . . . If I could, I would go back to the Valley." Lucy Rosenthal

Book World p10 J1 21 '68 380w

"Slightly above the usual mystery level. There is horror, but it depends less on vivid, violent description than on the intimacy built up between the reader and Edmund Trothe, a modern disillusioned-type-spy. Besides Mr. Llewellyn has something to say about drugs and about insensitivity—the corrupting effect of the first, the drugging effect of the second." Pamela Marsh

Christian Science Monitor p11 J1 22 '68 80w

"[Llewellyn] gives an unusually believable example of the mixed-up school of espionage, and a vivid picture of the changing values in European life. . . . The ending is one blazing and hilarious climax." M. K. Grant

Library J 93:3022 S 1 '68 130w

Reviewed by A. J. Hubin

N Y Times Bk R p25 Ag 11 '68 170w

LLOYD, A. L. Folk song in England. 433p $10 Int. pubs.

784.4 Folk songs, English—History and criticism 68-359

The author "approaches folk song as living reality, as relevant to our present as to our past. Himself a man of the 'people', he's been sheepfarmer in Australia, labourer in an Antarctic whaling fleet and, more recently, a freelance journalist and . . . explorer of exotic musics in various parts of the world." (New Statesman)

"Books about folk music are . . . best left to the people who sing them. A. L. Lloyd is certainly in this category. Well known as one of today's finest singers of English, Australian, and seamen's songs, he demonstrates in his book that he is a knowledgeable folklorist and competent writer. His thesis, that folk music is best understood in terms of class struggle, may seem a bit shopworn in America. Nevertheless his ideas are interesting and worth the time of the general reader and scholar alike." Joseph Bosson

Library J 93:2501 Je 15 '68 90w

LLOYD, A. L.—Continued

"Lloyd is especially good on the transition from the old rural to the newer industrial cultures; in particular, his chapter on sea shanties offers insight into the haunting wildness of these songs that hadn't occurred to me. His book can be and should be read alongside the sound of some of the music. . . . Lloyd's valuable book seems to me to oversimplify the issues involved in the uneasy marriage between folk and pop which, despite an occasional grudging tribute, he considers inimical. This may have something to do with class bias as well as with musical instinct, for I'm not as convinced as he is that folk music is necessarily the creation of the underprivileged." Wilfred Mellers

New Statesman 75:84 Ja 19 '68 350w

"Mr. Lloyd's distinctive contribution to the [folk song] revival is that he has explored among the industrial proletariat the equivalent to, and in some cases the successor of, the rural folk-music of two generations ago and has linked that first revival with the recent spread of an enthusiasm for folk music among the young generation. . . . [A] further merit of Mr. Lloyd's book is that his knowledge is not limited to our own music: he has himself worked in the Balkans as well as the north of England; he knows the literature of the international scene; he is a scholar, though apt to sneer at scholarship; and in spite of his preoccupation with folk-lore, texts—how erotic are English folk-songs?—and economic determinism, he does not forget the tunes, of which he quotes nearly a hundred. He is thus in a position to employ the comparative method, which in the present stage of ethnomusicology is becoming increasingly important."

TLS p159 F 15 '68 650w

LLOYD, NOEL, jt. auth. Archaeology A-Z. See Palmer, G.

LLOYD, PETER J. International trade problems of small nations. 140p $6 Duke univ. press

382 States, Small. Commerce 67-28850

This volume studies "the trade characteristics of selected technologically developed countries with small populations that range in territorial size from . . . Australia to . . . Israel. . . . [The author] compares and contrasts 15 selected nations . . . [and finds] there is no one theory to encompass and explain the trade patterns of small countries." (Library J) Index.

"[Lloyd] finds that, contrary to conventional wisdom, country size is a rather unimportant factor influencing either the relative importance of international trade in domestic product or the degree of commodity concentration in export trade. He makes little attempt to explain these surprising results or to find alternative determinants of international trade characteristics. Most of the book is devoted to reviewing and evaluating those theories of international trade pertaining to small countries. . . . Readership probably will be confined to graduate students in advanced international trade courses."

Choice 5:1010 O '68 210w

Reviewed by H. S. Camenson
Library J 93:2234 Je 1 '68 160w

LLOYD, SETON. Early highland peoples of Anatolia. 144p il col il $5.50 McGraw

913.39 Asia Minor—Civilization. Asia Minor—Antiquities 67-25811

The "professor of Western Asiatic archaeology at the University of London here summarizes the latest archaeological finds in the land of the Hittites, the Hattians, and the Urartians from the Early Bronze Age to the 8th Century B.C." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"The illustrations, 146 in number, are an important part of the book, and a map of Anatolia showing the ancient sites which have been excavated is useful. . . . Dr. Lloyd achieves his purpose admirably: to emphasize our improved understanding of Anatolian antiquity and of the part played by this miniature continent in the creation of Near Eastern civilization." This semi-popular book by an authority in this complex field should find a welcome place in medium-sized public and academic libraries."

E. P. Stickney

Library J 93:2495 Je 15 '68 170w

"This volume is an elaboration of the chapter entitled 'Melting Pot of Peoples—the Early Settlements of Anatolia' which the author contributed to The Dawn of Civilisation (edited by S. Piggott, BRD 1961). . . . Though the new text remains short, it covers all the more important aspects of the subject and provides an admirable introduction to a region which acquires greater cultural importance with each new major excavation carried out in Anatolia."

TLS p506 My 16 '68 700w

LLOYD, TREVOR. The general election of 1880. 175p $6.75 Oxford

324.42 Elections—Great Britain. Great Britain—Politics and government

[68-88709]

This work studies a nineteenth-century election in England. "The Conservatives had unexpectedly dissolved in March; the result of the election was equally unexpected for they were trounced by the Liberals and Gladstone. The explanation for this result is the theme of Mr. Lloyd's book. . . . He holds that economic forces really destroyed Disraeli's government in 1880 and indeed Gladstone's in 1874; he argues that the electorate was not interested in politics but viewed the election as a sporting contest." (TLS)

"This work, an 'investigation . . . along the lines of the Nuffield accounts of elections in Britain since 1945,' is based on a wide variety of sources, and it contains a great deal of information on the elections. There are chapters on the Liberal victory, issues, organization, the campaign, and the result. Unfortunately, however, it has several weaknesses which militate against its being much use in undergraduate teaching. Lloyd gives a 'general theory of electoral behaviour' and a specific theory about the 1880 election which are not adequately tested in the rest of the work. . . . [He] is frequently vague, allusive, and cryptic [and] the work contains far too many speculations as to the possible consequences of lines of action which could have been taken by Gladstone and his contemporaries."

Choice 5:207 N '68 200w

"A most readable book. . . . useful to the historian and interesting to anybody concerned with political behaviour. Needless to say, that election was quite unlike some more recent ones. No votes for women at all; no votes for three-quarters of the adult men. No party demarcation lines approaching modern rigidity; no party election addresses; no broadcasting."

Economist 226:39 Mr 2 '68 470w

Reviewed by Asa Briggs

New Statesman 75:487 Ap 12 '68 440w

"The election of 1880 does not, at first sight, seem a promising subject for a book. . . . [but Lloyd] is to be commended for tackling it with careful argument, zeal, and wit. This election marked a great advance for party and organization over the result, and it was one of the few elections in history where foreign affairs took precedence over home affairs. But in spite of that Mr. Lloyd will carry some conviction when he argues that although Conservative platforms rang with denunciations of the Russian boogey it was the bad harvest and economic forces which actually governed the marks on the ballot-papers. . . . The author has some revealing passages on election finance . . . [and presents] many amusing sidelights on electioneering habits nearly ninety years ago."

TLS p619 Je 13 '68 750w

LOCKE, DON. Perception and our knowledge of the external world. (Muirhead lib. of philosophy) 243p $6.75 Humanities press

121 Perception. Knowledge, Theory of. Senses and sensation 66-28126

"The first part of the book canvasses Idealist, Causal, and Realist theories of perception, and concludes that the Realist theory is preferable although it cannot be conclusively proved. [The second part] develops a conception of sense-data derived from G. A. Paul according to which sense-data are not objects at all and therefore neither physical nor mental, public or private. Knowledge of the external world is based not on constructions from incorrigible data but on our right to be sure that conditions implicit in our concept of knowledge are satisfied." (Choice)

"Extends the philosophical analysis of perception and perceptual knowledge deriving particularly from G. E. Moore and Bertrand Russell. . . . [The second part of the book is the] more original. . . . The author has little of his eminent namesake's confusion, but none of his charm. For advanced undergraduate majors only."

Choice 5:354 My '68 210w

"More than one philosopher has tried recently to defend the notion of sense-data against earlier attacks. But Mr. Locke's attempt is more in the grand tradition than most. . . . [However, even he] has to maintain that those since G. E. Moore who have used the notion of sense-data, have been their own worst enemies. . . . Mr. Locke recognizes the old-fashioned character of his project. He even asserts that some will think it disreputable. That it is not; it is a most thorough and complex piece of argument from which there is much to learn. . . . His criticisms of fashionable panaceas are especially worth having. At the same time there is a certain flatness in his argument."

TLS p371 Ap 11 '68 250w

LOCKHART, R. H. BRUCE. The two revolutions; an eye-witness study of Russia, 1917; with a foreword and postscript The achievements of the Russian revolution by John Keep. 144p $3.50 Dufour

947.084 Russia—History—Revolution, 1917-1921 67-24887

A picture of the Russian revolution and its antecedents by the then British Consul-General in Moscow. Bibliography.

"A short book designed for self-education, and succeeding in its purpose very well. Half of the work is devoted to background, beginning with the Razin revolt and concentrating on the 20th century. The history of the revolution itself is told briefly, but clearly; its balanced point of view compensates for lack of subtlety in interpretation. There is no discussion of ideology, however. . . . While the book serves its own purposes well, it is questionable whether university libraries need it."

Choice 5:539 Je '68 160w

"The present volume has a somewhat misleading title in that Sir Robert was not an eye-witness of the Bolsheviks' seizure of power (the second revolution), since he left Russia at the time of the Kornilov revolt, and almost half the book is in any case devoted to the historical background. This first part of the book is the least satisfactory. There are several dubious statements . . . and one or two cases of confusion. . . . But when Sir Robert deals with the first world war and the events of 1917, particularly in Moscow where he followed developments closely, he writes with vigour and formulates his opinions clearly and succinctly. His assessments of the members of the Provisional Government, of Kornilov and of the Bolshevik leaders are invariably interesting. Dr Keep contributes a foreword and a postscript. . . . The latter is an admirably lucid and judicious little essay on developments since 1917."

Economist 222:938 Mr 11 '67 460w

LOCKHART, ROBIN BRUCE. Ace of spies. 192p il $5.95 Stein & Day

B or 92 Reilly, Sidney George. Secret service 68-16038

This is the biography of a British Secret Service agent during World War I and the early 1920's who attempted to overthrow the Bolshevik regime. Index.

"Much of Mr. Lockhart's narrative is probably authentic, but he provides virtually no documentation except for a few photographs and facsimiles. A large part of the story is romance in the current TV tradition of secret agents, and there is far too much speculation by Mr. Lockhart, himself a member of the British intelligence service during World War II." L. S. Thompson

Library J 93:548 F 1 '68 90w

Reviewed by Dorothy English
Library J 93:2133 My 15 '68 110w [YA]

Reviewed by Alexander Cockburn
New Statesman 74:596 N 3 '67 360w

TLS p102 F 1 '68 900w

LOCKRIDGE, ERNEST H., ed. Twentieth century interpretations of The great Gatsby; a collection of critical essays. 119p $3.95; pa $1.25 Prentice-Hall

813 Fitzgerald, Francis Scott Key—The great Gatsby 68-15490

A "collection of critical essays on F. Scott Fitzgerald's most widely admired novel. In addition to the editor's introduction, it includes sixteen contributions in two sections: 'Interpretations' and 'Viewpoints.' They span the forty years since the novel's appearance in 1925, and include the appraisals by Lionel Trilling, Maxwell Perkins, Edith Wharton, Conrad Aiken, and Fitzgerald himself." (Va Q R) Chronology of important dates. Annotated bibliography.

"Could be useful for local libraries with serious readers or for smaller college libraries. Larger college libraries, university libraries, and large city libraries will not need it."

Elaine Bender
Library J 93:1634 Ap 15 '68 50w
"[This collection] should prove both useful and interesting."

VA Q R 44:cxii summer '68 70w

LOCSIN, CECILIA, jt. auth. Oriental ceramics discovered in the Philippines. See Locsin, L.

LOCSIN, LEANDRO. Oriental ceramics discovered in the Philippines, by Leandro and Cecilia Locsin. 249p il col il $22.50 Tuttle

738 Pottery, Chinese 67-17128

The authors "discovered a burial site in the Santa Ana district of Manila in 1961. From more than 200 graves they have recovered over 1500 pieces of Chinese pottery which were traded in the area between the 11th Century and the 14th Century; over 200 are illustrated here. This is an account of the development of a personal collection." (Library J) Glossary. Bibliography. Index.

"This handsome book, certain to engage the specialist, should be considered for purchase only by those libraries of universities with programs in Far Eastern studies. . . . A scholarly, well-written, interesting study, but definitely limited in its appeal."

Choice 5:766 S '68 170w

"Because of the superior reproduction of the photographs and the exactness of the descriptions of the individual pieces, [this] will assist collectors in assigning dates to similar pieces which have been found in many other islands in this area. Recommended for collections in the field of Chinese art." Paul von Khrum

Library J 93:67 Ja 1 '68 100w

LOEHR, MAX. Chinese landscape woodcuts; from an imperial commentary to the tenth-century printed edition of the Buddhist canon. 114p $15 Belknap press of Harvard univ. press

761 Wood engraving. Landscape painting. Art, Chinese 67-22868

This "treatise is concerned with a set of four woodblock prints which illustrate a fragmentary scroll. [Mr. Loehr] has established the authenticity and the approximate date of the prints which are in the Fogg Museum. In doing so, he has also presented the background of early printing in China and an interpretation of composition and landscape details as they appear in art at this period." (Library J) Glossary of Chinese characters for Chinese, Japanese, and Korean words. Bibliography. Index.

"A very highly specialized but original piece of research by the present Curator of the collection of Far Eastern Art of the Fogg Art Museum and professor of Oriental art (Harvard). . . . The reading audience for such a work obviously cannot be large, but the style is clear and the critique such an excellent illustration of careful and patient research that it would be an important acquisition for any collection in which Chinese landscape painting is already included."

Choice 5:1124 N '68 180w

Reviewed by Paul von Khrum
Library J 93:2474 Je 15 '68 120w

Va Q R 44:clxxviii autumn '68 90w

LOEN, ARNOLD E. Secularization: science without God? tr. by Margaret Kohl. 213p $4.95 Westminster press

211 Secularism 67-21794

"Loen searches into the origin of secularization as it applies to nature, psychology, history, philosophy, and theology. An alternative is presented in each of these areas." (Choice) Index.

"The book definitely leans to the conservative side of Christianity. There seems to be more of a presentation of a security for a faith as the final answer rather than an 'in-depth' investigation of the truth of that faith. It is not easy reading, especially the chapter on Propositional Logic."

Choice 5:186 Ap '68 130w

"Loen, a Dutch engineer-turned-theologian, has written an apparently backward-looking (Barthian?) book which may just possibly be ahead of the pack; that is, he is not content with some of the facile definitions of secularization in vogue among with-it theologians of the 1960s, and he is trying to point to features of revelation and human analysis which might serve to shape theology in the future."

Christian Century 84:1466 N 15 '67 70w

LOEWE, MICHAEL. Everyday life in early Imperial China; during the Han period 202 BC-AD 220; drawings by Elva Wilson. 208p il $3.75 Putnam

913.31 China—Civilization 68-104442

The author discusses "the features of governmental or personal life which remain to us from records. These facts are . . . arranged under appropriate headings—such as 'Life in the cities,' 'The officials,' 'Industry and technology'—and supplemented by many drawings of Han artifacts and buildings." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"[The book's] weakness lies in not conveying a sense of the dynamic energy which characterizes the Han compared to the more pacific dynasties of later China. This feeling could have best been conveyed if the people of the age had been allowed to speak for themselves. However, original source material is not wholly ignored, and the book might well serve as an introduction to the numerous Han writings that have been translated." E. T. Morris

Library J 93:3318 S 15 '68 220w

"Work like that being done by Michael Loewe is of capital importance in linking up history in Asia with world history farther west. . . . [His book is] to be read by people who are not specialists, but based on a scholarship that commends the respect of specialists. It is excellent of its kind. . . . From it there emerges an outline of what we know most about and what we know least about in Han China."

TLS p872 Ag 15 '68 1400w

LOEWE, MICHAEL. Records of Han administration. (Cambridge, Univ. Oriental publications) 2v 212:481p il v 1 $8.50; v2 $19.50 Cambridge

354.31 China—History [67-28684]

This is a "study of about 700 documents on wood selected from some ten thousand pieces (many fragmentary) found in Chü-yen or Edsen-gol by the Sino-Swedish Expeditions from 1927 to 1934. The Chü-yen documents . . . come from the military agricultural colonies set up by the Han dynasty. . . . Volume One, addressed to general students of Chinese history, is divided into five chapters: the strips and fragments of Chü-yen and their value; written communications and their delivery; the expansion of Chinese authority; the organization of the Han service; and the life and work of Han servicemen. Volume Two, presenting 710 pieces grouped according to site and nature, is intended for Han specialists." (Pacific Affairs) Bibliography. Index.

"A careful study, based largely on the author's doctoral dissertation. . . . Building upon the work of a generation of Chinese and Japanese scholars, Loewe has produced a series of fascinating glimpses into military life on the Han frontier. . . . The work is largely, of course, a scholarly tool of reference: texts, lists, indices, bibliography, and notes predominate, but Volume I will interest anyone in the field of traditional Chinese history and some sections will intrigue the general reader as well."

Choice 5:668 Jl '68 110w

"[This work] is one of the most recent publications on these materials and also one of the best. . . . In presenting his materials, [Dr. Loewe] has exercised meticulous care, refrained from speculation, and left many problems open. Specialists may find places where they wish to supplement or disagree with the author. Such technical points, however, do not materially affect the value of the book as a sound and convenient introduction to the study of Han documents on wood." L.-S. Yang

Pacific Affairs 41:277 summer '68 550w
TLS p872 Ag 15 '68 1400w

LOFTING, HUGH. Doctor Dolittle: a treasury. 246p il $4.95 Lippincott

67-19279

This collection contains excerpts from "eight volumes in the series, with the original illustrations, plus 27 Lofting drawings which have never appeared before." (Book World) "Grades four to six." (Library J)

Book World pt 2, p4 (children's issue)
N 5 '67 1000w

"Each incident is complete in itself, and continuity is preserved by the presence of John Dolittle and the appearance and re-appearance of animal and human characters."

"This volume will be welcome for reading aloud in home and classroom and will spur the interest of children in the individual books of the Dr. Dolittle series." Jessica McDaniel

Library J 92:3852 O 15 '67 90w

Reviewed by R. A. Sokolov
Newsweek 71:58 Ja 1 '68 900w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland
Sat R 51:50 F 24 '68 80w
TLS p256 Mr 14 '68 60w

LOFTIS, JOHN, ed. The works of John Dryden. v9. See Dryden, J.

LOGAN, DANIEL. The reluctant prophet. 238p $4.95 Doubleday

133 Clairvoyance. Extrasensory perception 68-18087

The author "tells how it feels to be a psychic. He records his first psychic experiences—how he developed his psychic powers through meditation, his beliefs on life-after-death, and the effect his gift has had upon himself and upon those who have sought his aid." (Publisher's note)

"Since some of [Logan's] prophecies about the future are as sensational as those made by Jeanne Dixon,—e.g. that New York will be devastated by a horrendous hurricane, unless the people there change their way of thinking in . . . —this is almost certain to attract readers in large numbers."

Best Sell 28:193 Ag 1 '68 200w

"An engaging, if self-bemused, account of [the author's] contacts with the world of mediumism and with the higher strata of some of the public media. . . . [this] seems to be an attempt to cash in on the market for books on this subject which is growing more popular as a result of serious ESP research." C. D. Lee

Library J 93:2648 Jl '68 160w

LOGAN, RAYFORD W. Haiti and the Dominican Republic; issued under the auspices of the Royal Inst. of int. affairs. 220p $6 Oxford

972.93 Haiti—History. Dominican Republic—History 68-20358

This volume "reviews the history as well as social and economic conditions in the two countries, from their colonial origins . . . up to the present. . . . The countries' history, which occupies the major part of the volume, emphasizes contemporary political events and trends. . . . The comparison of economic, social, and cultural affairs includes a description of religion and voodoo, and geographical and demographical information." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"An up-to-1967 manual, written in a brief, highly readable, and very highly informative manner. . . . The book is scholarly but so readable . . . that it should attract the kind of travellers who want at least to read something true about the places they visit. It fills the gap that Leyburn's The Haitian People [BRD 1941] can no longer fill. . . . It avoids the journalistic flavor of many recent books about the Dominican Republic, and should be read as background to them. It satisfies curiosity as well as provides a departure point for professional persons commencing a serious study of Hispaniola."

Choice 5:860 S '68 180w

"[This] book is by no means as smoothly written as Mr. Fagg's [Cuba, Haiti and the Dominican Republic, BRD 1966], but it is obviously based on far more original material and attempts a fuller and more balanced coverage. Mr. Logan is concerned very much with diplomatic history, which some readers may find a bit wearisome. Yet he offers a good deal of instructive information on social and economic history. . . . Logan is far from lyrical on American intervention in both countries. . . . [His errors] are rare. In sum, his book is a solid contribution to the field; it is highly recommended for history collections." J. A. Borome
Library J 93:2237 Je 1 '68 220w

LOHF, KENNETH A., comp. The literary manuscripts of Hart Crane. (Calendars of Am. lit. mss) 151p $6.50 Ohio state univ. press
016.818 Crane, Hart—Bibliography 67-63029

This work consists of a "description of Hart Crane's manuscripts, detailed picturing of the content, date, and all other data not fully supplied in previous manuscript listings. . . . Documented are 278 Crane literary manuscripts, 805 letters by Crane, and 455 to him. The manuscripts are arranged in groups concerning White Buildings, The Bridge, and Key West; there are sections for minor, uncollected, unpublished poems, prose manuscripts, and letters." (Library J) Index to names and titles. Index to repositories and collections.

"Mr Lohf of Columbia University Libraries has begun the new 'Calendars of American Literary Manuscript Series' with an excellent volume. . . . The contribution is significant. . . . Such works ■■■ this will save scholars and critics weeks of investigation. Academic and public libraries should collect this series." W. K. Bottorff

Library J 93:753 F 15 '68 120w

TLS p415 Ap 25 '68 130w

Reviewed by John Unterecker

Yale R 57:455 Mr '68 550w

LOKOS, LIONEL. Hysteria 1964; the fear campaign against Barry Goldwater. 208p $4 Arlington house

329.6 Goldwater, Barry Morris. Presidents—U.S.—Election 67-12382

The author, "a Goldwater supporter, claims that his candidate was the subject of a campaign of personal vilification. He reviews each of the major issues (extremism, the threat of nuclear war, social security, and civil rights), documents the charges made against Goldwater (many of them admittedly unfair), and attempts to refute these charges with the Senator's own words." (Choice) Index.

"Though there is definitely a researchable topic on this general subject, Lokos is much too committed to Goldwater to provide an objective analysis of the campaign tactics used during the 1964 campaign. Not recommended for libraries with limited budgets."

Choice 5:264 Ap '68 110w

"Unfortunately, Mr. Lokos is guilty of the very intemperance and slanted interpretations that he condemns. The ground covered here has already been treated more authoritatively by Karl Hess, a principal in the fight [in a Cause That Will Triumph, BRD 1967]." R. W. Schwarz

Library J 92:1483 Ap 1 '67 130w

N Y Times Bk R p20 Ap ■ '67 230w

LOMASK, MILTON. Beauty and the traitor; the story of Mrs Benedict Arnold. 171p $3.75 Macrae Smith co.

B or 92 Arnold, Margaret (Shippen) (Mrs. Benedict Arnold)—Juvenile literature. Arnold, Benedict—Juvenile literature 67-15062

This biography of the wife of Benedict Arnold presents an account of the events leading up to and subsequent to his treason. Bibliography. "Grades seven to ten." (Library J)

"In spite of its rather self-conscious title, this biography . . . is accurate, engaging, and suspenseful. Working from primary sources, Lomask presents a well-documented account of the events leading up to and following the treason of Benedict Arnold and disputes some of the old myths surrounding the plot. While Arnold remains an unsympathetic figure, the author achieves a good portrayal of Peggy Arnold's growth from a beautiful, fun-seeking flirt to a mature, brave woman. Extremely useful as the only available juvenile biography of Peggy Arnold, with added value as a concise account of her husband's treason, of which the author believes she was well aware." Elizabeth Guiney

Library J 92:2030 My 15 '67 90w

"As Mr. Lomask points out, historians for many years assumed Peggy was a lovely, wide-eyed innocent who didn't know what her husband was up to. After the letters between Arnold and British headquarters were finally decoded, what seems to be proof of her full guilt came out. I say 'seems to be proof' because my one strong objection to Mr. Lomask's fascinating book is that he doesn't quote any of the decisive passages. But he does show convincingly that everything in Peggy's rather Tory background and her hungry ambitions made her a natural-born partner in such a plot." Hildegard Dolson

N Y Times Bk R p26 Ap 23 '67 200w

LOMAX, ALAN, comp. Hard-hitting songs for hard-hit people; notes on the songs by Woody Guthrie; music transcribed and ed. by Pete Seeger. 368p il $12.50 Oak publications

734.4 Folk songs—U.S. Ballads, American 66-19058

"This collection of about 200 songs reflects and transmits the . . . misery, poverty, and anger of the Depression years, as well as the hope in the unions and the New Deal." (Library J)

Am Lit 39:593 Ja '68 40w

"There is no real equivalent to this book . . . [which] is invaluable as a social document of the depression of the 1930's. . . . Pete Seeger's transcriptions are impeccable. The foreword by [John] Steinbeck is apparently garbled, and the notes by . . . Guthrie are often (purposely?) only semiliterate. . . . Some of the best songs of the era . . . are not even mentioned; and the book has been padded with trivia. All in all, the book is a typical Oak hodge-podge; but in spite of the things obviously wrong with the work, it still must be purchased by every library in the country."

Choice 4:1124 D '67 180w

"The illustrations, all taken in the 1930's, are grim. The songs themselves . . . speak honestly of an era; they are simple in melody and arrangement and are intensely singable. . . . Highly recommended." G. M. Collier

Library J 92:1494 Ap 1 '67 240w

LOMAX, LOUIS E. Thailand: the war that is, the war that will be. 175p $4.95 Random house

959.3 Thailand—Politics and government. U.S.—Foreign relations—Thailand. Communism—Thailand 67-25075

A description of American involvement in Thailand by "a lecturer, free-lance writer, and one time sociology professor [who] bases this book on personal observations during a visit to Thailand [in 1966 and on] interviews with selected American and Thai officials in Thailand and with a number of unidentified persons, some of whom are associated with insurgent underground organizations." (Choice)

"A critical debunking and rather one-sided appraisal of American military and political involvement in Thailand. . . . The style is journalistic and highly readable. According to Lomax, Thailand is another Viet-Nam in the making. . . . The book is of current interest to the layman or general reader, of marginal value to the undergraduate student of Southeast Asian history or politics. appended documents."

Choice 4:1445 F '68 180w

Christian Century 84:1440 N 8 '67 40w

LOMAX, L. E.—Continued

"Vietnam is just the prologue; Thailand will be the first act. Two-thirds of the bombing of North Vietnam and Laos originates from American air bases in Thailand, and Communist-trained peasant groups are already facing the Green Berets in the northeast. . . . Meanwhile, the people of Thailand complain that the United States is taking over their country, and they look hopefully to Pridi Phanomyong, an exiled political leader waiting in China. . . . [The author] warns that we must now ask those questions about Thailand that we failed to ask about Vietnam five years ago. A disturbing book." Collin Clark

Library J 92:3648 O 15 '67 160w

Reviewed by N. J. Gallo
Nation 206:614 My 6 '68 90w

Reviewed by F. J. Johnson
Nat R 20:146 F 13 '68 500w

"Since Lomax frankly states that he is writing for the general reader, his book must not be evaluated as a contribution to the specialist literature. . . . More often than not [he] is apt to view Thailand and Southeast Asia in terms of black or white, neglecting the shades in between. His writing is frequently emotional. . . . Errors have crept in, some of them minor: Ho Chi Minh's current title is President, not Premier. Others are more serious. . . . The book does, however call attention to the growing American engagement in Thailand. Lomax is certainly entitled to his own negative evaluation of the developing situation." R. H. Fifield

Sat R 51:33 F 17 '68 600w

Va Q R 44:1xxiv spring '68 260w

LOMMEL, ANDREAS. Shamanism; the beginnings of art (tr. from the German by Michael Bullock; Eng title: The world of the early hunters). 175p il pl col pl $12 McGraw

291.6 Shamanism. Art and religion. 66-24886

This "study of the nature of shamanism . . . [by the] director of the National Museum of Ethnology, Munich, links magico-religious phenomena as found among hunting and gathering societies with the genesis of art in its various forms." (Library J) Bibliography. Originally published in German under the title Die Welt der frühen Jäger, Medizinnänner, Schamanen, Künstler.

Choice 5:1124 N '68 170w

"Lommel, in spite of overwhelming reliance upon European sources, seems not to have included the more recent Leroi-Ghouran interpretations of Franco-Cantabrian cave art. In spite of this apparent oversight, and the limited sample (Tungus, Eskimo, northwest coast,) of descriptive material, the central theme of shamanic influence on art forms appears to be validly applied to a larger cross-cultural sample. Universal criteria aid in differentiating the shaman from the medicine man—psychic, artistic, and functional—and in explaining zoomorphic and X-ray art styles over a wide geographic area. This book is necessary reading for the student of art and of religion." Harold Blau

Library J 93:2642 J1 '68 150w

"An intriguing, provocative, entertaining work. . . . Lommel's effort to penetrate the thought processes that permitted shamanism to develop, by assessing them in terms of modern and recorded shamanism, is worthy of applause. . . . I'd quarrel with some of his assertions. . . . I doubt there was much influence of shamanism on classical art. I am not convinced that central Asian X-ray drawing styles were influential in Indonesian art. . . . One aspect of the presentation that annoyed me was that the illustrations were simply pictures, interesting and instructive, perhaps, but not supplementary to the text except in the most remote way. On the other hand, the commentary in the list of plates is excellent. So is the bibliography. The book is worth knowing." J. L. Swauger

Natur Hist 77:76 O '68 270w

Reviewed by Rackstraw Downes
N Y Times Bk R p97 D 1 '68 60w

"Working in an intense and exalted trance, using mime, drum, song, dance, painting and sculpture, the shaman transmits to the few dozen or at most the 300 or so persons who form his community a new vision of the deepest images of their mythology. . . . It is certain, and the evidence lies before one in the color plates and carmine marginal drawings of this handsome book, that the art of the shaman, like his face (we see that here too), has a brooding intensity. Often the art, like the masked and robed dancer, presents images in which man and animal somehow fuse. . . . Lommel nowhere refers to the use of psychedelic drugs, although others have remarked on the relation of such drugs to shamanism. . . . The publisher has given us a beautiful book, although at a rather high price; he ought to accept the blame for the absence on an index to this important work."

Sci Am 219:120 Ag '68 700w

"Not all of the forty-four plates, fifty-one illustrations in text, and 394 bibliographical references, nor all of Mr. Michael Bullock's skill as a translator, can make [this book] a useful contribution to the understanding of shamanism. . . . When Findeisen (Shamanism) and Eliade (Shamanism) [BRD 1964] have compiled reliable, comprehensive, and indispensable accounts of the institution, it is hard to imagine what special ambition prompted [the author] to put together this incoherent and portentous disquisition."

TLS p700 J1 4 '68 280w

LONDON, KURT, ed. Eastern Europe in transition. See International conference on world politics, 5th, Noordwijk, Netherlands, 1965

LONDON Bridge is falling down! il. by Peter Spier. unnp $3.95 Doubleday

398.8 Nursery rhymes 67-17695

This picture book illustrated with scenes of eighteenth-century London presents the traditional verses of the nursery rhyme. The musical score is included, as well as a historical sketch of London Bridge through the centuries. "Ages five to eight." (Sat R)

"Spier's special gift is his capacity for making a virtue out of an obsessive love for detail. His all-inclusive landscape of things and events will keep any child involved and engrossed, page after page. [The book] is a real tour de force. Spier erects, demolishes, re-erects and re-demolishes that old bridge until one just prays that nothing else of a calamitous nature will befall it. And he sets down everything accurately. . . . Stylistically, it seems that Spier has drawn inspiration from Hogarth's marvelously effulgent drawings." John Gruen

Book World pt 2, p3 (children's issue)

N 5 '67 90w

Christian Science Monitor pB3 N 2 '67 90w

Horn Bk 43:743 D '67 100w

Reviewed by Della Thomas

Library J 92:3341 O 15 '67 90w

Reviewed by G. A. Woods

N Y Times Bk R p42 O 29 '67 80w

"For the child who enjoys big pictures filled with small details, this version of the familiar verses should be a small treasure. Each illustration is a double-page spread teeming with action. The colors are subdued save for a bright red-orange, and the pages are crowded with scenes containing authentic details (in costume, architecture, signs, etc.) as well as amusing caricatures." Zena Sutherland

Sat R 50:41 N 11 '67 80w

LONG, A. A. Language and thought in Sophocles: a study of abstract nouns and poetic technique. 220p $8.80 Oxford

882 Sophocles

[68-90040]

"After a review of scholarship and an historical survey of the development of abstract nouns, . . . [the author] analyzes the range of abstract diction, in terms of chronology and inventiveness, in the extant plays . . . [and relates the] abstract diction to the meaning of the plays." (Class World)

"[This study reflects] scholarship and finesse of investigation and presentation. . . . Long's sources are superior. His use of previous studies on Sophocles reveals a deep understanding and appreciation of their limited contribution. . . . Long has achieved his aim by a study as exact and exhaustive as possible. . . . The result is a convincing demonstration that 'from the language and thought of his predecessors and contemporaries, Sophocles developed a style which is completely his own.'"

Choice 5:946 O '68 180w

"A valuable contribution to the study of [Sophocles]. . . . Long's ample analyses of specific passages . . . will occupy serious students." W. H. Owen
Class World 62:24 S '68 340w

LONG, EDWARD LEROY. A survey of Christian ethics [by] Edward LeRoy Long, Jr. 342p $6.50; text ed $4.75 Oxford

241 Christian ethics

67-12388

A "study of both historical and contemporary thinking about Christian moral obligation. . . . In the first part a . . . discussion of the nature and varieties of ethical discourse sets Christian ethics into the wider context of philosophical and sociological thinking. Then the major attention turns to two issues: How do Christians formulate ethical norms? How do they implement ethical decisions? . . . The author has devised three motifs for identifying the basic options that appear with recurring regularity throughout Christian thinking. Many trends that are popular today, such as situational ethics and the development of cell groups, are seen in perspective as variations of perennial patterns. A final section of analysis and evaluation shows the dangers in narrow approaches and pleads for a comprehensive mode of doing Christian ethics." (Publisher's note) Index.

"Excellent as both an historical survey and a typology of Christian ethics. Designed as a textbook, it will be valuable in a variety of ways. . . . Views of other writers are presented clearly but briefly. The book is more comprehensive than Richard Niebuhr's Christ and Culture [BRD 1951], more compact and recent than Troeltsch's The Social Teachings of the Christian Churches. Recommended." Choice 5:360 My '68 210w

"Prof. Long's volume is far reaching in the scope of literature discussed, sharp in exposing the salient features of others' writings, incisive in evaluating both the distinctive contribution of a given work and in assessing its place in the larger body of knowledge. . . . Twenty pages of notes citing the primary sources enhance its value as a tool for academic craftsmen. . . . Long deals with implementation of ethical decisions under three rubrics: the institutional, the operational and the intentional. . . . It is this section of Long's book that is most likely to give its productive academic longevity." T. A. Bland

Christian Century 84:1399 N 1 '67 300w

LONG, JOHN H., ed. Music in English renaissance drama. 184p $7.50 Univ. of Ky. press 780.942 Music, English—History and criticism, English drama 68-12969

"In seven essays ranging from 'Music in the English Mystery Plays' to 'The Music for the Lyrics in Early Seventeenth-Century English Drama: A Bibliography of the Primary Sources,' literature of the [period] . . . is related to the music with which it was originally presented." (Library J) Index.

"These fine essays by . . . acknowledged experts break much new ground and constitute a valuable collection for musicologists and theater historians. Their theme is constant: music was an integral, essential, and functional part of English dramaturgy from the medieval mystery cycles through the elaborate country entertainments mounted for Elizabeth and James (those at Elvetham, 1591, and Brougham Castle, 1617, are analyzed) to Comus and the plays of Fletcher and Cartwright. . . . Duckles' splendid bibliography of primary and secondary sources for the music of lyrics in English dramas, 1603-42, conveniently combines material now widely scattered. . . . A provocative book which should suggest many theses to advanced students with considerable background." Choice 5:1154 N '68 200w

"Although Shakespeare's use of music is not discussed in these essays, a considerable amount of general background information is presented in a short introduction by Mr. Long, professor of English in Greensboro College, North Carolina. Much of the material on entertainments for the court is helpful to the literary scholar, who may at times forget the close relationship of music and literature, and to the music historian, who may at times forget the setting for musical performance." Walter Waring

Library J 93:3790 O 15 '68 110w

LONG, WELLINGTON. The new Nazis of Germany. 254p pl $5.95 Chilton co.

943.087 National socialism. National democratic party (Germany [Federal Republic]) 68-30862

This volume "traces the development of the Nationaldemokratische Partei Deutschlands (NPD), its organization and internal disputes, the growth of other extremist political parties, and the careers of the leaders of the radical right from the collapse of 1945 to the affluence of 1968. It also examines the effects of the Cold War and the continuing trials of Third Reich Nazis on the popular appeal of the new fascist movements, the current strength of anti-semitism and xenophobia in the modern Federal Republic." (Publisher's note) Index.

"[This] is the first adequate treatment of rightist movement in post-War Germany. Written in a fast moving journalistic style, it can be read in a few sittings by the avid reader. Although well illustrated with pertinent photographs and sufficiently indexed, it lacks a bibliography which, of course, would aid those interested in further research on this topic. Nonetheless, Mr. Long has done a very commendable job on a very important and timely subject." M. D. De Michele

Best Sell 28:189 Ag 1 '68 460w

"We are tempted to call this story . . . sensational, for author Long cannot resist the temptation to make much of some of the little of postwar German rightism. On the other hand, the precedent of the 1920s and early 1930s teaches us that one cannot be too careful. Forewarning." Christian Century 85:945 J1 24 '68 50w

"Long is intimately familiar with the German political scene of the postwar era, having served in Bonn first as correspondent for Newsweek and more recently as bureau chief for United Press International. . . . Particularly significant is his report on the rise of the National Democratic Party and the personality of its leader Adolf von Thadden, who must be considered an important figure after his recent election victory in Baden-Württemberg. Mr. Long is an astute observer, but he does not always dig deeply enough in his research; however, he has interviewed many participants. The book fills a need today and will be useful in larger public libraries." F. E. Hirsch

Library J 93:2886 Ag '68 140w

Reviewed by A. H. Friedlander
Sat R 51:50 N 16 '68 500w

LONGAKER, JOHN MARK. Ernest Dowson. 3d ed 308p $7.50 Univ. of Pa. press
B or 92 Dowson, Ernest

The text of this biography follows that of the second edition, 1945. It includes "in an appendix a clutch of letters from Dowson to Conal O'Riordan." (TIS) Bibliography. For the first edition see BRD 1944.

"Updates the bibliography, adds a few footnotes that make the text more timely, and includes 23 letters printed for the first time. . . . Other than that, this edition retains the virtues and the shortcomings of the first two. Longaker writes with sympathy and understanding of Dowson's limitations both as a writer and as a person. He admires Dowson's poems but does not overrate them; and since he intends a biography, he refrains from undue comment of the poems and from pressing his own evaluations of them on the reader. . . . Recommended for libraries that do not have the previous editions." Choice 5:196 Ap '68 210w

"A distinctly qualified welcome . . . must be given to this third edition. . . . [The] letters from Dowson to Conal O'Riordan add something to our knowledge of the poet's last few years. These letters, however, with many others previously unpublished, are available in the collection edited last year by Dr. Desmond Flower and Mr. Henry Maas (Letters of Ernest Dowson, BRD 1968). Over the past twenty years information about Dowson and his associates has steadily increased and it is irritating that Professor Longaker has failed to take the opportunity of revision, the more so as the student of Dowson will still find it necessary to consult his work. . . . Letters from Dowson to Herbert Horne were published in Notes and Queries as far back as 1962: Professor Longaker nowhere alludes to them. We are informed on the dust jacket that the letters from Oscar Wilde to Dowson are published here for the first time. That was true in 1945; it is misleading in 1968." TLS p636 Je 20 '68 330w

LONGAKER, J. M.—Continued

LONGMAN, HAROLD. Watch out! how to be safe and not sorry: pictures by Franklin Luke. unp $3.50; lib bdg $3 Parents mag. press

614.8 Accidents—Prevention—Juvenile literature. Safety education—Juvenile literature 68-11661

"A series of cautionary tales, told in humorous rhymes and pictures. . . . Examples on which the rhymes are based are those considered most important by the National Safety Council and other organizations interested in promoting safety for children." (Publisher's note) "Grades one to three." (Library J)

"Comparison is inevitable with another book of the same title, Watch Out! by Norah Smaridge . . . [which has] the advantages of a more sophisticated text and Susan Perl's humorous pictures of careful and careless children, much superior in technique and more plausible in their roles than the lumpy, fuzzy animals in this book." Della Thomas Library J 93:2533 Je 15 '68 160w

"[Mr. Longman] shows how many common situations can turn into potential danger spots—swimming alone, running with scissors, tipping chairs, etc. Then he gives a succinct safety rule, reminiscent of the little morals after the Fables of La Fontaine—"Toys on the stair/shouldn't be there," "Chairs you tip/may make you flip." Various animals with cuts, burns, and bruises help illustrate the point. These tumbles, troubles and warnings, all told in rhyme, will amuse children and hopefully serve as an ounce of prevention." N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p52 My 5 '68 120w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland
Sat R 51:30 Jl 20 '68 80w

LONGMAN, HAROLD. Would you put your money in a sand bank? il. by Abner Graboff. (Fun with words) 48p $2.95; lib bdg $3.08 Rand McNally

793.7 Word games—Juvenile literature. English language—Homonyms—Juvenile literature 68-11649

In this book of homonyms, the author "uses, for the most part, homonyms that are in every young person's vocabulary (with a few less familiar to provide a challenge) and turns them into riddles, silly questions, questions with answers, nonsense conversations, and silly poems." (Publisher's note) "Grades four to six." (Library J)

Reviewed by Roderick Nordell
Christian Science Monitor pB4 (children's issue) My 2 '68 120w

"[These homonyms] provide zany amusement and increase, with almost effortless ease, word appreciation and language skill." Horn Bk 44:442 Ag '68 30w

"As the title suggests, this book deals with plays on words. Homonyms and homophones are utilized to perplex, puzzle and delight. Riddles and assorted nonsense alert readers to the flexibility of the English language, its inexhaustible range of meanings. After an explanatory introduction, each blue or brown page contains several silly questions or other nonsense, plus cartoon-like lumpy figures who act out situations illustrating the usage of the terms." Steve Rybicki

Library J 93:2540 Je 15 '68 120w

LONGMORE, DONALD. Spare-part surgery; the surgical practice of the future; ed. and il. by M. Ross-Macdonald. 192p $5.95 Doubleday

617 Transplantation of organs, tissues, etc. [68-112006]

"An English surgeon begins with an . . . account of the immune reaction and the problems it can cause. He then discusses . . . extracorporeal machines: heart-lung, artificial kidney. He describes the . . . work of the British and Russians on prosthetic limbs, covering both simple and complex homografts. The final chapter presents some of the ethical and legal problems related to these spare parts." (Library J)

"Dr. Longmore has worked for several years with both the experimental and clinical aspects of the heart-lung machine and the artificial kidney. This experience enlivens the text considerably. [This] is a current, well-written, and vividly illustrated book that should be in public and college libraries." W. K. Beatty Library J 93:4276 N 15 '68 110w

TLS p686 Je 27 '68 340w

LOORY, STUART H., jt. auth. The secret search for peace in Vietnam. See Kraslow, D.

LOOSJES, TH. P. On documentation of scientific literature; tr. by A. J. Dickson. (Archon bk) 165p il $8.50 Shoe String

029.7 Information storage and retrieval systems 67-31826

Prepared by the "Director of Library, Agricultural University, Holland [this is a] review and commentary on practices in documentation services up to the latter part of 1965." (Choice) It is an English translation of the German edition which appeared under the title Dokumentation Wissenschaftlicher Literatur. Index.

"In a relatively small number of pages, this book gives a detailed account of the development of documentation, techniques used, search methods, retrieval systems, and considerations that must be made in the choice of a particular system. A small index plus a detailed table of contents make the information readily accessible which, strangely enough, is not true of all books dealing with this subject. The book is heavily documented with references at the chapter ends." Choice 4:1213 Ja '68 120w

"Although Douglas Foskett in his Foreword says that Mr. Loosjes has 'brought the new edition up to date by including several recent references,' such references are few and far between. The entire documentation activity prosecuted so vigorously for so many years by the National Library of Medicine is taken care of by a one-sentence reference to an early (1961) article by Dr. Rogers which described pre-MEDLARS routines long since altered or abandoned. The pioneering work in the documentation of metallurgical literature supported by the American Society for Metals and the National Science Foundation might as well never have existed. . . . Some major individuals in the field of documentation and information retrieval are represented only by reference to early or preliminary work. . . . Many individuals—and this group includes most of those whose contribution would be categorized as information science—are either absent or inadequately represented. . . . The slighting or omission of these . . . names is not so important in itself, perhaps, as is the disproportionate amount of space given to obsolete and/or exotic testimony." A. J. Goldwyn

Library J 93:965 Mr 1 '68 480w

LOPSHIRE, ROBERT. A beginner's guide to building and flying model airplanes. 128p il $4.95; to libs & schools $4.43 Harper

629.133 Airplanes—Models—Juvenile literature 66-12885

The author, a member of the Academy of Model Aeronautics, who has designed and built radio-controlled model planes, "discusses the assembling of parts, the tools and materials needed; he advises on technique, supplies, and operation. The book concludes with sources of information. [Index.] Ages ten to twelve." (Sat R)

Horn Bk 44:79 F '68 20w

Reviewed by O. V. Fortier
Library J 93:871 F 15 '68 130w

"This book, a landmark of lucidity, should be hailed by every airplane buff at all levels. It is comprehensive, carefully organized, and clearly illustrated; the instructions are simple and straightforward; moreover, adequate information is always provided." Zena Sutherland Sat R 51:35 Ja 27 '68 60w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland
Sat R 51:36 O 19 '68 50w

"With a comic-book format, here used cheerfully but quite seriously, the reader is led into this craft much as though he had an experienced friend at his side. Glue, balsa wood from Ecuador, piano wire and razor blades are the stuff of this exacting work." Philip and Phyllis Morrison

Sci Am 217:151 D '67 50w

LORD, BEMAN. A monster's visit; pictures by Don Bolognese. unp $3.75 Walck, H.Z.

67-5172

"One night Tim hears a noise in his closet and discovers a people-shy monster, which has come out of the woods to satisfy its sweet tooth. With gentle coaxing from Tim and sister Amy, the monster is soon doing tricks and playing games. It is even persuaded to come back another night, perhaps on Tim's birthday, when there will be a good supply of candy under the mattress." (Horn bk) "Preschool to grade two." (Library J)

"Using strikingly vivid patterns and amorphous forms, the illustrator shows the monster as he assumes weird and whirling shapes. It is all inventive play with the bedclothes, which may help little children to see their imagined nighttime visitors for what they really are." P. L. M.

Horn Bk 43:455 Ag '67 120w

"In recent years, monsters have come into their own in books, and some of the results have been splendid. However good pictures have never been able to make a weak story interesting despite the sure-fire fascination of monsters. Here is a case in point. Blazing full-color illustrations captivate the reader with a vitality that surprises and delights with the turn of every page, but this flimsy story . . . provides no entertaining substance for the fine illustrations." M. A. Dorsey

Library J 92:2016 My 15 '67 100w

Reviewed by John Coleman

New Statesman 75:696 My 24 '68 130w

TLS p260 Mr 14 '68 100w

LORD, WALTER. Incredible victory. 331p pl $5.95 Harper

940.54 Midway, Battle of, 1942 67-13687

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by T. V. Tuleja

Am Hist R 73:1481 Je '68 600w

Reviewed by Ernest Andrade

J Am Hist 54:924 Mr '68 550w

Reviewed by C. H. Simonds

Nat R 20:255 Mr 12 '68 130w

TLS p1012 S 12 '68 240w

LOSEY, JOSEPH. Losey on Losey; ed. and introduced by Tom Milne. 192p $4.95; pa $2.95 Doubleday

791.43 Moving pictures—Production and direction 68-12993

This book is based on "a series of long, taped interviews . . . conducted by [the associate editor of Sight and Sound, the Journal of the British Film Institute], and aims to present in a coherent form [Losey's] own thoughts on and judgments of his films, together with . . . background information about the genesis of the films, the circumstances in which they were made, and the ones that got away—the projects which never came to anything, the ideas which had to be scrapped. . . ." [Losey also discusses] production difficulties." (TLS) Filmography.

Reviewed by J. J. Quinn

Best Sell 27:422 F 1 '68 100w

"[The volume] has some merit. . . . Losey's own view of himself seems, in fact, a good deal sounder than that of his admirers. . . . Unfortunately, the interviewer is no good at following points through to their ultimate clarification, so that when Losey comes out with the suggestive statement that film is both the most abstract and the most realistic art form, no elaboration and elucidation follows." John Simon

Book World p7 My 26 '68 470w

Reviewed by G. D. McDonald

Library J 93:1650 Ap 15 '68 100w

"Milne has had the very sensible idea of getting Joseph Losey to talk about himself, taping the man during 'a fairly concentrated period of about 10 days'. This neatly obviates the awkwardness of a critical book about a director whose reputation might need its deflations, while allowing full rein to reminiscence about particular occasions. The result is extremely interesting—Mr Losey has always been concerned to articulate in his own cause." John Coleman

New Statesman 75:46 Ja 12 '68 80w

"There is always a certain danger in this sort of book, since if everyone is not very careful the shift of focus away from the film itself, as it arrives on the screen, may lead to a distortion of the critical judgment; a film is what it is no matter why and how it got that way. . . . [However, this is not] an excuse-book; indeed, Mr. Losey is often rather harder on his own films than the average outsider would be. And the whole thing, as well as illuminating [his] personal progress as a filmmaker, provides a lot of fascinating incidental documentation on the situation of the Hollywood director in . . . the 1940s and early 1950s, and of the critically acclaimed 'art' director in the status-obsessed international cinema of today."

TLS p16 Ja 4 '68 200w

"[This] volume in what we hope will be a long and useful series on film directors [Cinema World Series] . . . is perhaps the best from the standpoint of the reader who wants to understand the difficulties—impossibilities is a better word—of making a movie. The enormous problems are discussed frankly by Losey and are fascinating."

Va Q R 44:lxviii spring '68 60w

The LOST legions; three Italian war novels, by Renzo Biasion, Mario Tobino, and Mario Rigoni Stern; tr. from the Italian by Archibald Colquhoun and Antonia Cowan. 412p $7.95 Knopf

67-11148

"In the first novel [originally published 1954 as] Sagapò (Meaning 'I love you,' and translated here as The Army of Love), . . . Renzo Biasion recalls the love that grew up between the Italian men and Greek women before the Germans moved in. In the second [originally published 1955 as] Il deserto della Libia (The Deserts of Libya), Mario Tobino writes of the stupidity and demoralization of the Italian army campaign in North Africa, creating a portrait of a mad captain. In [the third, originally published 1953 as] Il sergente nella neve (The Sergeant in the Snow), Mario Rigoni Stern captures the mounting horror when the ill-led, shoddy armies of Mussolini received vengeance at the hands of [the Russian army]." (Publisher's note)

"That the Italian army was not the most valorous or reliable of fighting forces during World War II is well known. But courage and skill are needed to write convincingly of defeat. These three 'novels' . . . meet the prerequisites. Connecting these tales are Italian sensuousness and sensibility, a love of country but not Fascism, and the eternal plights of any soldiery. The writing is good and these tales would supplement collections of World War II or modern Italian literature. The dustjacket says the stories 'add up to a shattering indictment of war', this and more, they also indict defeatism and regret by hindsight."

Choice 4:1120 D '67 150w

Reviewed by John Demos

Library J 92:2601 Jl '67 140w

Reviewed by Stanley Kauffmann

New Repub 157:22 S 30 '67 700w

"The book is a publisher's package rather than a writer's creation. . . . Of the three forcibly gathered here, one (Renzo Biasion) is an art critic who writes like one: another (Mario Tobino) is a psychiatrist, and makes no bones about it; and the third (Mario Rigoni Stern) works closer to the vein of descriptive memoir than that of fiction. And none of the works, despite the confident assertion on the jacket, is a novel. . . . Each is writing of an altogether different order; and each is too slight to stand alone. . . . In all three stories the scenes are set where the sands ran out. . . . What fiction could have been made of this! But there is no ideology, no politics in any of these tales, apart from some rare, obligatory taunting of the strutting, puffed-up Fascists safe at home. There is no sense that the war was about anything, could somehow be given meaning or value. A single note is sounded: No one wanted to fight." Saul Maloff

NY Times Bk p68 O 29 '67 800w

LOUGHHEAD, R. E., jt. auth. The solar granulation. See Bray, R. J.

LOUIS, WILLIAM ROGER. Great Britain and Germany's lost colonies, 1914-1919. 167p maps $4.80 Oxford

940.3 European War, 1914-1918—Territorial questions. Germany—Colonies. Great Britain—Foreign relations [67-94502]

The author "analyzes the origins of Britain's policy and opinion regarding Germany's colonies by surveying Anglo-German interests in Africa and the Far East, summarizing the British Empire's military campaigns in these areas, and explaining how and why Great Britain accepted the mandate system as the most feasible plan to administer Germany's colonies. His thesis is that Great Britain did manage to satisfy the idealism of President Wilson, rebuff the claims of the Russian Bolsheviks, and, at the same time, assure security for her empire in supporting the mandate program." (Choice)

"The general outlines of this work are already familiar to students of imperial and European history, and Professor Louis does not alter significantly the accepted version of the background of the mandates system. But he has contributed substantially to our understanding of the British Commonwealth's war objectives and the thinking of individual statesmen. . . . [He] has done an excellent job of research, and, contrary to a suggestion in his preface, his narrative is far from dull." J. S. Galbraith

Am Hist R 73:1157 Ap '68 390w

"Louis, a recognized scholar in European colonial relations . . . has utilized the most recently available collection of private papers and diplomatic documents and has supported his argument with extensive citations of primary and secondary sources. This book will enlighten the general reader who appreciates a well written, informative work and the student of colonialism."

Choice 4:1306 Ja '68 130w

"The virtue of Mr. Louis's short but illuminating study is its underlining of the fact that, far from ending in the 1890s, the scramble to put colour on the map breasted the tapes only at the Paris peace talks of 1919. This book is the true epitaph of colonial acquisition. Founded on wide and judicious reading; dispassionate (barring one or two questionable conclusions) to the point of dislodging dug-in pundits from positions previously thought untakable, it will quickly become a must for all those interested in the birth of Mandates and the later antics of the 'Twenty Four'. . . . One may query some of Mr. Louis's final assertions, such as Hitlerian indifference to regaining a foothold in Africa. But these are minor quibbles viewed against the value of this admirable analysis of Germany's brief colonial rise and fall."

TLS p917 S 28 '67 600w

LOURIA, DONALD B. The drug scene. 215p $5.95 McGraw

301.47 Narcotic habit 68-27509

This is an "account of the use and abuse of drugs—primarily marihuana, LSD, and opiates—in the United States, England, and Sweden. . . . [The author] stresses the need for firm and fair laws. . . . [He argues] that a change in the drug scene in the United States can be accomplished effectively only by a complete reorientation of society's attitude." (Library J) Glossary. Bibliography.

Reviewed by W. K. Beatty

Library J 93:2637 Jl '68 220w

"This speaks clearly and simply about drug abuse, addiction, treatment, and other problems. Dr. Louria agrees that marijuana is not an addictive drug, but warns that its use can be dangerous. . . . Without resorting to scare tactics, he outlines the dangers to mind and body that may result from [drug] use. . . . [This is] a thoughtful, objective discussion to balance some of the more subjective titles like John Rosevear's Pot [BRD 1967]." Regina Minudri

Library J 93:[3339] S 15 '68 160w [YA]

"The author is at his best when discussing the more technical medical aspects of the possible consequences of drug abuse. . . . While [he] shows concern over the extraordinary severity of present penalties for possession [of marijuana] . . . he appears indifferent to the implications of making criminals of millions of persons simply because they have undesirable personal habits. The inconsistency of his position is pointed up by his apparent acceptance of the consequences of alcohol abuse. . . . Considering the author's heavy reliance on punishment, it is not surprising that he has only good things to say about the Federal Bureau of Narcotics. . . . A basic weakness in Louria's work [is] relative unfamiliarity with the realities and the history of this branch of law enforcement." A. R. Lindesmith

Sat R 51:38 S 14 '68 950w

LOVEDAY, P. Parliament factions and parties; the first thirty years of responsible government in New South Wales, 1856-1889 [by] P. Loveday [and] A. W. Martin. 207p $10.50 Cambridge

329.9944 Political parties. New South Wales, Australia—Politics and government 66-13036

"The authors discuss the liberal-conservative division of the 1850s, and trace the subsequent emergence of the faction system, [whose] main feature . . . was the struggle of rival faction leaders for power. Small, tightly-knit groups of followers provided these leaders with the nuclei of larger parliamentary formations—the factions—around which they constructed majorities. The authors describe the rapid development of collective cabinet responsibility despite the absence of formal, clearly-defined parties. They offer an explanation of a changed economic and social order for the breakdown of the faction system and the emergence of political parties, well before the eruption of the labour movement into politics." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Name index. General index.

"Well-written, lucid, and significant pioneer study. . . . The authors admit the speculative nature of some conclusions and at times define and categorize too confidently, when the study in reality is breaking ground in a difficult area." S. C. McCulloch

Am Hist R 73:893 F '68 380w

Reviewed by John Orbell

Am Pol Sci R 62:1000 S '68 600w

"An important, tightly constructed analysis of the origins of responsible government in the colony. . . . For over 30 years, the government of New South Wales was conducted by shifting majorities organized around factions in parliament; yet the authors demonstrate that absence of parties did not prevent responsible government and that cabinet solidarity was as important to ministries reliant on factions as to those dependent on parties. The last chapter is a remarkably succinct summary of all the major aspects. Clean style; excellent control of material. Highly recommended."

Choice 5:250 Ap '68 160w

LOVEJOY, WALLACE F. Economic aspects of oil conservation regulation, by Wallace F. Lovejoy and Paul T. Homan; pub. for Resources for the future, inc. 295p $8.50 Johns Hopkins press

338.2 Petroleum industry and trade 67-20283

"The present study originated as a background paper distributed . . . [at a] seminar-conference convened by the Department of Economics at Southern Methodist University under a grant from Resources for the Future, Inc. The participants included representatives of oil companies, large and small, representatives of state regulatory agencies, university economists and lawyers, and independent experts. . . . The purpose of the seminar was to provide an exchange of views among persons who saw the problems of regulation from different angles and to stimulate thinking about the means to constructive improvement in the regulatory process and in the economic performance of the industry." (Pref) Index.

"The book's outstanding virtue is its unusual wealth of institutional detail, enriched with insight into the extraordinary complexity of the practices and interests in the industry and their deep historical roots. . . . [However] the economic analysis suffers from looseness of construction, ambiguity, and fragmentation. . . . Moreover, the positions taken by the authors on oil conservation policy do not seem to rest entirely on economic considerations, even though the final statements of policy declare in favor of economic efficiency. . . . The task of the economist is to offer the contribution of his discipline to analysis and evaluation of policy, not to attempt to wear the hats of all interested parties. Economic analysis in this book is often obscured by such considerations." J. W. McKie

Am Econ R 58:1032 S '68 650w

"[This study] is one of the best books on resources policy this reviewer has read in a long time! Its first chapter ('An Approach to Conservation') by itself makes the book worth buying. In that chapter and throughout the book the authors clearly distinguish the variety of points of view which shape approaches to and concepts of conservation. Particularly effective is the handling of the economists' interest in studying 'efficiency'—the avowed central theme of the book—as contrasted with promoters and business interests, and the interests of policy-makers." Norman Wengert

Ann Am Acad 378:206 J1 '68 380w

LOVELACE, EARL. The schoolmaster. 224p $4.95 Regnery

68-31462

The arrival of schoolmaster Winston Warrick in the Trinidad village of Kumaca started "a chain of events which at first appeared to benefit the villagers, but which swiftly [led] to tragedy for Dandrade, his daughter, Christiana, her fiancé, Pedro Assivero, and others among the . . . inhabitants." (Library J)

"The charm of this novel consists in the atypical conversation—it is as though a student (not too bright) is translating the words of the characters into rather simple English, keeping the Spanish idiom. It is a device that indirectly gives insight into the characters. . . . The book is worth reading, and the reader will be charmed with poetic passages." Sr. M. Marguerite

Best Sell 28:235 S 15 '68 300w

Reviewed by S. L. Hopkinson

Library J 93:3799 O 15 '68 170w

Reviewed by A. S. Byatt

New Statesman 75:15 Ja 5 '68 180w

Reviewed by Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p68 N 24 '68 160w

"The sacrifice of innocence on the altar of knowledge is hardly an original subject. However, Earl Lovelace . . . manages to avoid the tempting error of making the innocent too ingenuous and the knowledgeable too dastardly. . . . Events move towards [a tragic] end with an inevitability which is reflected in the fatalism of the people themselves, their grave pessimism and their solemn yet colourful speech which seems, at times, to fall into unintentional self-parody. Mr. Lovelace tells his story in a curious and sometimes irritating mixture of the villagers' pidgin English and a vivid, staccato prose, which merge occasionally to produce passages as florid as the scenery they describe."

TLS p29 Ja 11 '68 200w

LOVELL, SIR BERNARD. The story of Jodrell Bank. 265p il $5.95 Harper

522 Astronomical instruments. Astronomical observatories 68-17043

"The creator and director of Jodrell Bank, the world's largest radio telescope, here tells the . . . story of how the huge telescope was built . . . fraught with mishaps and frustrations—financial, political and other . . . [and] documents the complex conflicts among scientists, bureaucrats, and politicians." (Publisher's note) Index.

"[This] book is a saga of scholarly persistence, interesting even if one understands only a fraction of the astronomical and engineering vocabulary involved. The money row is perfectly clear and mournfully familiar." Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 222:96 Ag '68 80w

"In addition to an agonizing account of Lovell's travails in the construction of the telescope . . . the book is studded with anecdotal gems and charming insights into British scientific life. . . . [It] makes fascinating reading. Autobiographical, painfully candid, it is a kind of British counterpart to [James Watson's] The Double Helix [BRD 1968]. It is an account of the triumph of creativity over inertia." Carl Sagan

Book World p5 S 1 '68 750w

Economist 228:47 J1 13 '68 1000w

Reviewed by Norbert Bernstein

Library J 93:2889 Ag '68 170w

Reviewed by H. C. Gardner

N Y Times Bk R p32 N 24 '68 300w

Reviewed by G. C. McVittie

Science 162:886 N 22 '68 800w

Sci Am 219:140 O '68 400w

"Sir Bernard's lively account of the . . . realization of his dream is drawn largely from ■ diary, so that he is able to give vivid details of the anxieties and emotions of those early days. He is more than frank about his own inexperience, his contretemps with the press and with inflexible officialdom. . . . It is ironical to reflect that the project owes its freedom from debt almost entirely to popular interest in space flights, yet the tracking of satellites and probes has occupied only about 1 per cent of observing time. The other revolutionary discoveries that have been made in the field of cosmology are given only brief mention in this book. . . . No writer could be in a better position to tell this story so well, and Sir Bernard pays many well-deserved tributes to his staff, to the engineers and to the university and others who were willing to support an entirely new venture. . . . Yet this book is above all the story of a man with original ideas, and with the abundant enthusiasm and drive needed to complete an immense undertaking."

TLS p682 Je 27 '68 900w

LOVETT, GABRIEL H., jt. auth. Encyclopedia of Latin-American history. See Martin, M. R.

LOVITZ, GENE, jt. auth. Carl Sandburg. See Haas, J.

LOWE, JEANNE R. Cities in a race with time; progress and poverty in America's renewing cities. 601p il maps $10 Random house

309.2 Urban renewal. Cities and towns—Civic improvement. City planning—U.S. 66-21478

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by V. L. Morando

Am Pol Sci R 62:620 Je '68 370w

Choice 5:525 Je '68 200w

Reviewed by Christopher Nichols

Nat R 20:94 Ja 30 '68 800w

Reviewed by Blake McKelvey

Social Studies 59:182 Ap '68 340w

LOWELL, ROBERT, ed. Randall Jarrell 1914-1965; ed. by Robert Lowell, Peter Taylor & Robert Penn Warren. 307p pl $6.50 Farrar, Straus

811 Jarrell, Randall 67-13414

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by Chad Walsh

Book World p4 Mr 3 '68 300w

Reviewed by Katherine Hoskins

Poetry 112:118 My '68 300w

Reviewed by J. C. Levenson

Va Q R 44:318 spring '68 2100w

LOWENSTEIN, RALPH L., jt. ed. Race and the news media. See Fisher, P. L.

LOWRY, MALCOLM. Dark as the grave wherein my friend is laid; ed. by Douglas Day & Margerie Lowry. 255p $5.95 New Am. lib.

68-26029

This novel was edited from seven hundred pages of notes and drafts by Lowry's widow and biographer. It is based upon incidents in the author's life when he was attempting to secure the publication of Under the Volcano (BRD 1947). In this book "Sigbjørn Wilderness (Lowry), a writer, takes his wife, Primrose (Margerie), on a trip to Mexico, retracing the steps of an earlier visit from which evolved his novel, 'The Valley of the Shadow of Death' ('Under the Volcano'). Addicted to alcohol, Sigbjørn is beset by fear: fear of people, fear of fire, fear of his novel's being rejected (it is) and mostly, fear of himself." (Publishers' Weekly)

"[This new book] is rather open in texture compared with most of Lowry's work. It is full of movement; it begins with a long airplane flight and goes on to include several bus journeys through wild Mexican country, alternately uplifting and terrifying, all of which is described very well. This constant change of locale is needed to balance the fact that from another point of view it is an entirely stationary book, immovably fixed in one spot: the consciousness of the hero. . . . [However,] Lowry's mind, to put it bluntly, was persistently ordinary . . . [and] having none of the essential novelist's gift of invention, he was terribly limited in his subject matter. He wrote about nothing, but absolutely nothing, that had not happened to him. . . . [Nevertheless, the book] makes its essential points, and presents a credible picture both of the central character and of the relationship which he clings to and finds sustaining and saving. It is human and open." John Wain

LOWRY, MALCOLM—Continued

Atlantic 222:84 Ag '68 2600w

Reviewed by J. J. Murray
Best Sell 28:182 Ag 1 '68 650w

Reviewed by David Markson
Book World p8 Je 30 '68 500w

Reviewed by Robert Kiely
Christian Science Monitor p5 Ag 1 '68 750w

Reviewed by Michael O'Malley
Critic 27:95 O '68 1150w

"[In this work, the protagonist] searches for his Mexican friend, meets the nemesis of his early period, reaches the nadir of his existence as he fears his literary creation is swallowing him up and as he finds out about [the death of] his friend; and finally experiences a catharsis. It will be forever impossible to say precisely at what point the fictional Sigbjørn Wilderness leaves off and Malcolm Lowry begins—where fiction merges with fact. . . . Passages and incidents from Mr. Lowry's other works and from his letters crop up in this novel. The editors have . . . cut out repetitious passages, and left the result as is, with its rambling clutter, its carelessness, its humor and tragedy, its passages of spiritual revelation, and its genius. Libraries of any stature will want this addition to the Lowry canon for its particular appeal to the sophisticated reader." L. W. Griffin

Library J 93:2691 J1 '68 230w

Reviewed by R. H. Costa
Nation 207:188 S 2 '68 1250w

Reviewed by Howard Kaye
New Repub 159:38 O 12 '68 1550w

"Twenty-one years have not aged 'Under the Volcano.' They have merely matured it. . . . [The present book] is a kind of gloss on the earlier novel, but it doesn't lose by being so. Each reinforces the other, and though 'Dark As the Grave' will either be read by those who already know 'Under the Volcano,' or else will turn its readers to that work, it is in itself an astounding performance. Events take on a halo of mysterious meaning—comic, terrifying, or both at once. Symbols loom, and Wilderness/Lowry struggles to hold them together in a comprehensible pattern, for if he does not, they will whirl him into madness. The whole book is a voyage along the knife edge of paranoia, but a voyage made by a sharply observant mind. . . . Lowry's ex-ecutors have been careful to add nothing to the material he left, and the end of the book, though clear, is sketchy. . . . The richness of the early sections . . . is there only in bits and pieces as the book draws to a close." Elizabeth Janeway

N Y Times Bk R p4 Ag 4 '68 1050w

Reviewed by Granville Hicks
Sat 51:19 J1 6 '68 1800w

Time 91:84 Je 28 '68 650w

Va Q R 44:cxlii autumn '68 130w

LUARD, NICHOLAS. The warm and golden war. 222p $4.95 Pantheon bks.

67-13319

In this novel Sear, a "down-at-heel London cameraman, accepts [a] tricky mission to Austro-Hungarian border on behalf of [David Roan, a] tycoon who briefs him in Spain; refugee Magyars figure importantly." (Sat R)

"The Warm and Golden War' holds no promise of peace at all. It does not even keep the promise of its early chapters which suggest we are in for a rousing adventure tale. The failure is certainly not in Mr. Luard's craft—his story . . . is remorselessly gripping. But half way through his book, Mr. Luard apparently reminds himself of the James Bond recipe for quick success and suspense degenerates into horror." Pamela Marsh

Christian Science Monitor p9 F 14 '68 80w

Reviewed by M. K. Grant
Library J 93:1022 Mr 1 '68 100w

"[This is a] good story, in the cynical Le Carré vein . . . but the attenuated telling takes a long time to get around to the story."

Anthony Boucher
N Y Times Bk R p41 F 11 '68 60w

Reviewed by Sergeant Cuff
Sat R 51:52 F 24 '68 30w

LUBAC, HENRI DE. The mystery of the supernatural; tr. by Rosemary Sheed. 321p $6.50 Herder & Herder

201 Supernatural 68-1423

A French theologian "reformulates and develops further his critique of the 'state of pure nature' hypothesis. His initial presentation of this critique (Le Surnaturel) [published in 1947] was one of the objects of Pius XII's censure in his encyclical Humani Generis (1950). . . . [In this book, Lubac] tries to demonstrate that the 'state of pure nature' hypothesis is both untraditional and impractical; untraditional insofar as it is based largely upon Cajetan's inadequate understanding of Aquinas, and impractical insofar as it has failed to lead men to a realization of the gratuitousness of God's goodness to them." (Choice) Index. Originally published in 1965 as Le Mystère du Surnaturel.

"A high quality theological discussion carried on by a giant among theologians. The translation reads reasonably well, although frequent Latin intrusion will undoubtedly prove bothersome to a reader not proficient in Latin. Copious footnotes. . . . Recommended for all theological libraries."

Choice 5:360 My '68 180w

"There is no reason why anyone interested in theology should read [this book]. . . . Whether [the author] has finally proved what he wants to prove, whatever that may be, I haven't the vaguest idea. . . . I want to be deadily clear. This book is not theology. It does not do what theology should be doing. . . . The argument de Lubac is embroiled in is whether there is a 'natural order' in addition to the supernatural, or whether these two should be conceived as existentially one; and whether man is ordered to some natural earthly happiness, or whether he has an innate ordination toward God as his end. . . . Rahner (Karl) also writes on it, and is actually easier to construe than de Lubac. . . . [The] book has little value except for the sociologist or psychopathologist of religion." Anselm Atkins

Commonweal 88:211 My 3 '68 1250w

"In this profound and scholarly work de Lubac, France's foremost Catholic dogmatic theologian, returns to the interpretation of Thomism which, in its preliminary statement, the famous Surnaturel, earned for its eminent author vigorous applause and an even more vehement condemnation. . . . There are pages [here] which could have been written by Paul Tillich. Attempts to reduce Augustinian insights to Thomism are common; it is fascinating to observe the process in reverse. But it is not clear how the act-potency ontology of Thomism can support this sort of hermeneutic." D. J. Keefe

Library J 92:4506 D 15 '67 130w

"Father de Lubac's . . . present concern is to consolidate his position, showing that a return to the sources—above all to Aquinas, Augustine, and beyond them the Greek Fathers—makes the late scholastic distinction between a 'natural' beatitude (which man seeks in a state of 'pure nature'), and a 'supernatural' beatitude that depends totally on divine grace, unreal, and in the last analysis unnecessary. . . . [His thesis is] patiently argued and resolutely pursued. . . . So far from rejecting tradition in support of his arguments, Father de Lubac is at pains to marshal an impressive array of patristic authorities—and some of much more recent date—in order to strip the fundamental truth of the subtleties and refinements which have surrounded it. . . . The book, it hardly needs saying, is not intended for casual reading, and its difficulties have been well served by a sensitive translator."

TLS p322 Mr 28 '68 650w

LUBELL, CECIL, jr. auth. In a running brook. See Lubell, W.

LUBELL, WINIFRED. In a running brook [by] Winifred and Cecil Lubell. 63p $3.95; lib bdg $3.79 Rand McNally

574.92 Nature study—Juvenile literature.
Fresh-water biology—Juvenile literature
68-11644

The authors of Green Is For Growing (BRD 1964) have based this book on their year-round observation of a mountain brook and its inhabitants. "After describing the brook itself, the authors tell about frogs, salamanders, stone flies, mayflies, algae, sponges, plumatella, caddis insects, crayfish, planaria, water pennies, liverwort, and many other [local] creatures and plants." (Publisher's note) "Grades four to six." (Library J)

"For collecting you need—first of all—a running brook and an inquiring eye." . . . [The authors] back up their statement by supplying the nearest thing to that flowing stream in their latest book. . . . The text is quite detailed for 6-9's, but lively enough to keep their interest. The emphasis is on observing the myriad forms of insect, fish, and plant life to be found in the waters of one small stream. Enthusiastic collectors are also advised of the best ways to look after that cherished tank of tadpoles or jam jar of water snails." Gillian Charters

Christian Science Monitor pB8 My 2 '68
130w

"A book to heighten awareness of nature in all ages."

Horn Bk 44:443 Ag '68 50w

Reviewed by Helen Armstrong

Library J 93:2114 My 15 '68 110w

LUBOVE, ROY, ed. Social welfare in transition; selected English documents, 1834-1909; introd. essays by John Duffy and Samuel Mencher. 334p $8 Univ. of Pittsburgh press

361.6 Public welfare. Great Britain—Social conditions
66-12679

This volume is "based on four documents—Edwin Chadwick's 1842 report on The Sanitary Conditions of the Labouring Population of England; the 1834 Report of the Royal Poor Law Commission; and the majority and minority Reports of the Royal Poor Law Commission of 1909." (Choice)

"The introductions to the documents are brief but well written, placing the papers in clear historical perspective and showing the developmental trends which they reflect. The organization of the book is good, especially in placing the Poor Law reports of 1834 and 1909 together so that changes in thinking can be perceived clearly. Changes in both the ideological and administrative stances are apparent, especially in the minority report of 1909. The recommendations of this report are what form the backbone of present-day welfare policy. A valuable resource book."

Choice 4:1056 N '67 170w

"The documents, apart from the 1909 Majority and Minority Reports, which occupy nearly two-thirds of the volume, are too brief, annotation is non-existent and even the original footnotes have been excised, it is not made clear where the extracts begin and end or where the breaks occur in the text, and there is not even an index to help the student find his way about. The introductory essays, by John Duffy and Samuel Mencher, are too brief and jejune to offer any new or illuminating insight into the historical background or significance of the documents, and, indeed, are full of discordant notes which make the reader doubt their authors' familiarity with their periods. . . . It is a relief to turn from . . . turgid, obfuscating non-explanations to the crisp, direct, translucent prose of the documents themselves which, gift-wrapped so unbecomingly, are still a gift worth buying." Harold Perkin

Engl Hist R 83:207 Ja '68 500w

LUBOVE, ROY. The struggle for social security, 1900-1935. (Harvard univ. Center for the study of the hist. of liberty in America. Publication). 276p $6.95 Harvard univ. press

368.4 Insurance, Social 68-14265

"This book recounts the debates over the founding of major income-maintenance programs, including workmen's compensation for industrial accidents, health insurance (not enacted), widows' pensions, old-age assistance and insurance, and unemployment insurance. . . . [The author] focuses on influences and the course of events." (J Am Hist) Index.

"The historical sequence that emerges is clear and much strengthens the presentation of particular issues—a presentation which is admirably succinct [and] readable. . . . The notion of voluntarism allows Lubove to interpret events in their specifically American context and also to avoid the moralizing of much political history. . . . The general interpretation is thoughtful but not convincing in its present form. Lubove does not relate the ideology of voluntarism to an analysis of the social structure; . . . he ignores changing public opinion; . . . he plays down constitutional difficulties and, curiously, pays little attention to the history of the Social Security Act. Nevertheless, he does yeoman service in laying out the facts and brings out a new dimension of their significance for general history." James Leiby

J Am Hist 55:421 S '68 360w

"[In this] well-documented and timely inquiry. . . . Mr. Lubove emphasizes the personalities and conflicting objectives of the leading sponsors of social security legislation. . . . This is an absorbing account of the history of developing social institutions that has relevancy to current problems. Recommended for college and university libraries." William Gibelman

Library J 93:1153 Mr 15 '68 200w

"[The author] tells us that his terminus is the Social Security Act of 1935, but . . . he frequently carries the story in outline down to Medicare and the year 1965. . . . He is candid about the rigidities which dominated voluntary social work practice. . . . He is excellent on the . . . [belief that social welfare is a threat to] the 'virility' of the Americans. The interplay of the voluntary associations, the states and the federal government was and is complex, but Professor Lubove makes their relations admirably clear. What is more surprising, he makes them interesting. . . . To deal with all this without jargon in 180 pages is no small task, but here it has been done. The eighty pages of notes are . . . literate, suggestive, thorough and entertaining."

TLS p916 Ag 29 '68 650w

Va Q R 44:clxviii autumn '68 100w

LUCAS, CATHERINE, jr. auth. Occupational costume in England, from the eleventh century to 1914. See Cunningham, P.

LUCID, ROBERT F., ed. The journal of Richard Henry Dana. See Dana, R. H.

LUCY, BRIAN FAIRFAX. See Fairfax-Lucy, B.

LUDWIG, JACK. Above ground; ■ novel. 364p $6.95 Little

67-28227

A novel about a young man named "Joshua, who was invalidated out of life during his childhood, becomes furiously of age to find the world full of women, all of whom seem beautiful to him, although his deepest (and dutifully half-neglected) love remains with his blood relatives." (New Yorker)

"[This] is one of the most difficult novels I have ever had to review because after two readings I'm still not certain what it is all about. Josh is the eternal lover. He is in love with love. . . . His world is made up of a passing parade of beautiful females, the latest of whom takes precedence over the others. The novel has many beautiful passages and also many that are completely incomprehensible. The average reader will not like it at all, but the rare reader looking for quality is sure to be completely delighted with it. The librarian should examine this one personally before deciding on purchase." O. A. Hagen

Library J 93:1916 My 1 '68 110w

"For a novel about survival [this book] has a curiously lifeless quality. . . . [It] pulls itself out of a new stylistic swamp on every page. . . . It is a book that yearns after a sense of language and, pursuing it, ends tangled in clumsy word constructions, strained metaphors, and images weighted with echoes from other, better writers. . . . [The hero-narrator] goes to New York and falls in love with Mavra,

LUDWIG, JACK—Continued

who is one of those poignant nymphomaniacs. Mavra goes around mouthing scatological, literary puns and making hysterical, literary demands and, like all poignant nymphomaniacs, serves as the vehicle through which the hero reaches his final, literary self-confrontation. 'Above Ground' does contain a few good things. . . . Mavra is actually as well-drawn as most Sally Bowles figures. But in general it is hard to tell the characters apart." Sally Kempton

N Y Times Bk R p4 J1 28 '68 600w

New Yorker 44:64 J1 6 '68 170w

Reviewed by R. E. Long

Sat R 51:42 Je 1 '68 280w

Va Q R 44:xcvii summer '68 90w

LUKACS, JOHN. Historical consciousness; or, The remembered past. 373p $7.95 Harper

901 History—Philosophy 67-28809

The author "discusses the evolution of historical consciousness since its first emergence. . . . He treats such diverse subjects as the endurance of national characteristics, . . . the problem of religious history, memory and time, history and physics, the history of 'facts,' motives and causes, [and] the end of the Modern Age." (Publisher's note) Index.

"[Lukacs] possesses more knowledge, culture and insight than most of his academic colleagues. Nevertheless, after reading his book I want to return to more prosaic writing, above all to books better organized. . . . [This] is long-winded and confusing. . . . [Lukacs has] the maddening habit of going back to Adam and Eve for every little point he makes. . . . After reading Lukacs' book, [a history student] might turn, dazzled but disappointed, to a more 'scientific' writer, in search of an exit from confusion, but also from historical consciousness." Thomas Molnar

Book World p22 N 10 '68 550w

Choice 5:1348 D '68 210w

"This, with the exception of a short postscript, is a fascinating and important work which will enlarge the reader's ability to perceive historical problems and will give valuable clues in understanding the present. The book is highly recommended for public and academic libraries." W. S. Debenham

Library J 93:2651 J1 '68 290w

Reviewed by J. P. McCarthy

Nat R 20:1123 N 5 '68 1150w

"The tendency of Lukacs' thought, though in many respects far from clear, can only be called conservative. . . . Lukacs rejects not merely professionalism, but the scientific view of the world from which it springs. . . . What does Lukacs offer as a substitute for what he considers outworn positivistic notions like cause and effect? Mainly correspondences, striking analogies, coincidences in names and dates. . . . [This book] shows wide if not always judicious reading, and calls attention to a host of problems of great interest to historians. . . . It is likely though, that the value of these inquiries is going to be overshadowed by the very obvious defects of the book." Peter Gay

New Repub 159:19 N 16 '68 2200w

LUKONIN, VLADIMIR G. Persia II; tr. from the Russian by James Hogarth. (Archaeologia mundi ser. v7) 232p il col il $10 World pub.

913.35 Iran—Antiquities. Iran—History

This volume is a continuation of the study of the art and archeology of Iran begun in Persia I, by J.-L. Huot (BRD 1966). It covers "the period from the death of Alexander the Great to the Arab conquest, i.e., the millennium corresponding to the reigns of the Seleucid, (Graeco-Macedonian) Parthian and Sassanian dynasties. . . . Lukonin, the Head of the Hermitage Museum Oriental Art Section . . . [seeks to show] how numismatics, epigraphy, excavation, the study of engravings, of gold and silver work and rock sculptures can . . . throw light on some areas of history that had remained obscure because they left no written sources." (Publisher's note) Chronological table. Bibliography. Index.

"The identification of the 217 illustrations, mostly of artifacts now in the Hermitage Museum (Leningrad) . . . is placed awkwardly toward the end of the book, necessitating a flipping back and forth, sometimes even though the text . . . will obviously describe adjacent plates. . . . The reproduction of the plates, a great many of which are in color, is excellent. The text is knowledgeable and well divided into historical background, with major emphasis on the archaeological sites and the archaeologists who excavated them. There is much valuable information on the study of coins and seals, on the amazing rock carvings, and on the impact of the various religions on the art of Persia."

Best Sell 27:202 Ag 15 '67 240w

Choice 5:247 Ap '68 140w

Reviewed by S. I. Oost

Class World 61:403 J1 22 '68 210w

LUNACHARSKY, ANATOLY VASILIEVICH.

Revolutionary silhouettes; tr. from the Russian and ed. by Michael Glenny; with an intro. by Isaac Deutscher. 155p il $5 Hill & Wang

920 Communists. Russia—History—Revolution. 1917-1921—Personal narratives 68-30764

This book of profiles of the author's fellow Bolsheviks, written in the twenties, contains sketches "of personalities Lunacharsky knew, worked with, conspired and fought with. . . . figures like Lenin and Trotsky, . . . Zinoviev, Sverdlov, and Volodarsky, and the Menshevik leader Martov." (Publisher's note) Bibliography.

"The first Bolshevik commissar of education and undoubtedly the most culturally sophisticated of the revolutionary leaders, [the author] was well equipped to write these discerning character sketches. He wrote during the relative freedom of the early 1920's when it was still possible to comment on both the strengths and weaknesses of a leader. Thus Lenin, Trotsky, Martov, Plekhanov, and the six other men included here, although covered with more praise than criticism, appear as believable personalities. The book, suppressed during the Stalin era, is still available only in fragments in the USSR. This new English translation should be in every library interested in Soviet history. Not only the specialist but the informed layman will find it interesting reading. The introduction and notes are excellent." R. W. Schwarz

Library J 93:3784 O 15 '68 140w

Reviewed by Clarence Brown

New Repub 159:26 N 9 '68 1200w

"The absence of Stalin is the first striking feature of Lunacharsky's book. The second is the implicit comparison between Lenin and Trotsky. . . . Another striking feature . . . is the number of pieces . . . which are, in effect, obituaries. Some, like Lenin and Sverdlov, died naturally though in part because of overstrain; others, like Volodarsky and Uritsky, were assassinated. . . . Neither psychology nor sociology yet has the instruments (or even the data) for making useful observations on people as complex as Lenin or Trotsky. We must still rely on the old-fashioned techniques which Lunacharsky brilliantly exemplifies." Peter Wollen

New Statesman 74:408 S 29 '67 600w

Reviewed by J. H. Plumb

Sat R 51:36 O 26 '68 750w

"[These] are almost the only published profiles of Lenin and Trotsky—not to mention minor figures—not couched in terms either of denigration or of fulsome adulation. Both Lenin and Trotsky are dealt with in terms of critical sympathy. Most of the sketch of Lenin was done in 1918, and makes it clear that Lunacharsky, though deeply attracted to Lenin, had not recognized in him before 1917 the qualities of a great revolutionary leader. . . . The third major portrait is of Plekhanov, 'the father of Russian Marxism', about whom he writes attractively but conventionally. . . . The sketches of Uritsky, Volodarsky, and Sverdlov are informative on minor figures. . . . Deutscher's introduction to this—the first-English translation of the Silhouettes, provides full information on Lunacharsky's career, and does rather more than justice to his talents and qualities."

TLS p956 O 12 '67 600w

LUND, MORTEN. Skiers' paradise; 100 best ski runs in North America, by Morten Lund and Bob Laurie. 223p il $8.95 Putnam

796.9 Skis and skiing

67-21215

A "guide to the 100 best ski runs in North America—from Alaska and Canada to the Carolina Smokies, from Camelback, Pennsylvania, to Sante Fe, New Mexico. Some of the trails are famous, while others are known only locally. . . . The best trails, or combination of trails, on each mountain are graded for beginner, intermediate, or expert skiers and are described in detail. . . . [The authors also give] information on trails, lifts, facilities, hotels, instructors, transportation, night life." (Publisher's note)

"In the end the authors ran out of ski spas, and included obscure ski nooks like Gad Valley, Utah; Okemo, Vermont and Lassen Park, California, plus the less than 500-foot vertical drop of a Michigan Coney Island. The photographs do not match the quality of the colorful text. Still, a nice reference work for the jet set." C. W. Casewit

Book World p12 Ja 7 '68 100w

"For the price, it would be hard to go wrong with this book. It will fascinate any skier or would-be skier. . . . [The authors have selected] ski trails, from beginner slope to expert run, which they have preferred in ski areas throughout the United States and Canada. However, before they discuss each trail, they give a good capsule survey of the resort at which the trail is located. Herein lies the value of the book; the skier can quickly get information on possible ski areas when planning his next winter weekend or vacation. The black-and-white photography is superb, and will interest even those who have never seen a pair of skis." S. M. Mott

Library J 92:4430 D 1 '67 160w [YA]

LUND, RICHARD E., jt. auth. Application of an input-output framework to a community economic system. See Harmston, F. K.

LUNDBERG, FERDINAND. The rich and the super-rich; a study in the power of money today. 812p $10 Stuart, L.

301.44 Capitalists and financiers. Wealth

67-10015

The author "paints a picture of a pervasive American Establishment, a relatively few wealthy Americans who hold corporate control and so control the U.S. economic system and also manipulate the leading strings of politicians. This . . . is a survey of the 'extent and concentration of American wealth.' . . . The author has gleaned some . . . facts and theories about the acquisition and use of wealth in the U.S. . . . [Some of the chapters discuss] how the very rich live, . . . how they get away with relatively light taxes, and how few of the fortunes are new." (Publishers' Weekly) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by Asher Lans

Am Scholar 38:160 winter '68 1850w

"Economists have taken Mr. Lundberg to task for statements made in a rather Procrustean manner and there is every reason to think that broad statements and even broader generalizations will also be challenged. On the positive side, the book contains a mine of factual material relating to individuals and corporations which is most fascinating to the reader. . . . For most libraries." Sylvia Mechanic

Library J 93:2991 S 1 '68 170w

"As a researcher who has just written a book that covers the same ground and comes to much the same conclusion (but who still learned a lot from this one), and as a reader who enjoys in others bombast, sarcasm and polemic, I very much liked Lundberg's belated second book on America's big rich, and I heartily recommend it to anyone with the time, patience and disposition to make it through 812 pages of raw data, biting humor and purple prose. For those lacking one of these requisites, the first and last chapters will suffice: the book could have been shorter and better organized. . . . [Lundberg] has titillated the believers and perhaps shocked the innocents, but he probably has not won us any new converts from among the skeptics. This is not merely because of the inevitable minor errors and questionable historical interpretations that they will gleefully pounce upon. It is also because they will want more discussion of the 'nature' of 'power,' and more detail on how the corporate rich supposedly control the government." G. W. Domhoff

Nation 207:121 Ag 9 '68 1600w

Reviewed by Isidore Silver

New Repub 159:41 O 12 '68 1900w

Reviewed by K. E. Boulding

N Y Rev of Books 11:40 S 12 '68 1500w

"Where a serious writer would conserve his radicalism for the few crucial issues, Lundberg gives free rein to wild conjectures, irresponsible innuendoes, and frequent expression of irrelevant crochets. . . . The writing is discursive, slangy, repetitive, often amusing, . . . and usually boring. Lundberg . . . concentrates attention on corporate wealth, to the neglect of real estate, insurance equities, savings accounts, etc., and by coolly ignoring the fact that the capital value of labor earnings (which are not concentrated in a few hands) is approximately four times as large as the tangible capital over which Lundberg dwells. He dismisses income (in contrast to capital) with an irrelevant phrase. . . . Indiscriminate charges obscure Lundberg's valid criticisms of the American business and political communities." G. J. Stigler

N Y Times Bk R p14 J1 28 '68 1050w

New Yorker 44:95 Ag 10 '68 100w

"Lundberg tells us nothing that is new, much that is old, and much that simply is not true. [His] creed is derived largely from old public records, old newspapers, old magazines, and old books—including two of his own, America's Sixty Families [BRD 1937] and Imperial Hearst [BRD 1936]. He discusses at great length a 1957 Fortune study of the richest Americans, which found that oilmen and heirs did indeed predominate. He . . . apparently has no qualms about drawing current conclusions from this and other superannuated material. . . . Had he stepped for a while into the modern world Lundberg might have discovered that some of the conclusions he reached in the archives do not stand the test of time. The 1957 Fortune study of the super-rich, for example, was updated in the issue of this past May, too late for Lundberg to incorporate the results. Fortune found that both oil production and inheritance have been declining as sources of great wealth. . . . [The] book is sprinkled with gaffes." A. M. Louis

Sat R 51:30 J1 13 '68 800w

LURIA, A. R. The mind of a mnemonist; a little book about a vast memory; tr. from the Russian by Lynn Solotaroff; with a foreword by Jerome S. Bruner. 160p $4.95 Basic bks.

153.1 Memory

68-15918

Description of the life and personality of a man with a phenomenal memory. The author, a professor of psychology at the University of Moscow, gives examples of experiments and extracts from conversations with "S" over a period of thirty years. This is a "study not only of memory organization but also of the manner in which memory is imbedded in a pattern of life." (Foreword)

"It all started in the 1920s when at the suggestion of his editor a newspaper reporter, S, came to the psychologist's laboratory. . . . Luria soon abandoned his interest in measuring what S could do and turned his attention to the personality of this incredible man. Accordingly, this book first provides us the facts, with a description of all that S could manage to remember, and then—far more interesting—it tells us what happens to a man who cannot forget, who is a curiosity, an envied, suspect man, a terribly unusual one. . . . What we can appreciate today is the almost Kafka-like quality to this particular 'psycho-biography' as we—but not Luria—would call it. . . . I don't know what Luria's Russian is like, but this book's translator makes one enjoy his every sentence." Robert Coles

Book World p4 Mr 10 '68 1000w

Choice 5:1049 O '68 160w

"A work such as this may provide clues for furthering research to more astute and widely cognizant workers in the field. Recommended for special collections in psychology, psychiatry, and related fields." Louis DeRosier

Library J 93:2511 Je 15 '68 200w

"Luria's reporting is marred by some omissions of factual detail and occasional inconsistencies and contradictions. Even in experimental work Russian psychological reporting has been less meticulous than that of the Americans and British. But although the deficiencies are a reminder of the usefulness of stricter discipline, they detract only in a minor way from the value of the record. The interest of the study lies less in the precise length of lists and dates of recall than in an exploration of the mind and personality of which this freak memory formed part, and in the sidelights thrown, often by contrast, on ordinary mental functioning." D. W. Harding

N Y Rev of Books 10:10 My 9 '68 2450w

LURIA, A. R.—Continued

"A distinguished Soviet psychologist's study . . . [of a] young man who was discovered to have a literally limitless memory and eventually became a professional mnemonist. Experiments and interviews over the years showed that his memory was based on synesthesia (turning sounds into vivid visual imagery), that he could forget anything only by an act of will, that he solved problems in a peculiar crablike fashion that worked, and that he was handicapped intellectually because he could not make discriminations, and because every abstraction and idea immediately dissolved into an image for him. It is all fascinating and delightful."

New Yorker 44:175 Ap 27 '68 130w

Reviewed by Gardner Murphy
Science 161:349 J1 26 '68 1100w
Sci Am 219:143 O '68 350w

LUSTGARTEN, EDGAR. The business of murder. 218p $5.95 Scribner

364.15 Murder 68-12500

The author "a member of the English bar and for several years narrator of the film series 'Scotland Yard,' recounts the major details of the crimes and trials of six . . . [mass] murderers of the century." (Library J)

Best Sell 28:94 My 15 '68 140w

"A pseudo-scientific journalistic presentation. . . . Contrary to Lustgarten's claim that the six cases committed their crimes habitually without personal pathology and as a routine activity, the psychiatric problems read more like Krafft-Ebing than professional crime. Included are a sadistic pervert, a fetishist, and a necrophile. The frankly unsympathetic treatment of the subjects is not unlike that of a pulp crime story magazine. While each of the characters could have been examined in depth, as did [Truman] Capote's In Cold Blood [BRD 1966], this book achieves only a glib sensationalism. Not recommended."

Choice 5:1231 N '68 120w

"The accounts have a common theme in that in each case the legal sanity of the murderer, determined by the criteria of the McNaghten rule, was probably beyond question. Yet, a psychiatrist would probably diagnose all six of them as psychopathic. Mr. Lustgarten, however, seems to prefer a genetic explanation when he refers to 'fundamental evil,' stating that 'some persons exist . . . who can indifferently discard the lives of others'; he also refers to 'the German bad blood.' In latter instance, and in his depiction of French criminal procedure in contrast to British 'reverence for law,' his ethnocentrism shows badly. His purpose in writing the book can, perhaps, be surmised from this statement: 'I support capital punishment as an act of retribution in appropriate cases for the dreadful crime of murder.' In all of the cases he discusses, the offender was executed, much to Mr. Lustgarten's satisfaction." M. A. Forslund

Library J 93:1157 Mr 15 '68 190w

"Some of [the murderers considered] are recent and familiar, but Lustgarten's treatment is always fresh and perceptive. . . . This is disquieting but illuminating reading." A. J. Hubin
N Y Times Bk R p43 Je 30 '68 90w

Reviewed by Sergeant Cuff
Sat R 51:33 My 25 '68 30w

LUTNICK, SOLOMON. The American Revolution and the British press, 1775-1783. 249p $6 Univ. of Mo. press

973:31 U.S.—History—Revolution 67-15812

This examination of newspapers and magazines published in London and the provinces during the American revolution is an "attempt to explain the Revolution—and British reaction to it—as viewed by a press three thousand miles and over six weeks distant from the major scene of action." (Pref) Bibliography. Index.

"Lutnick summarizes the attitudes of the leading English newspapers . . . and comments upon the relationship of the press to British politics. He warns that the papers frequently distorted the truth, consciously or unconsciously, but concludes that the editors viewed the British as 'a free people desperately trying to salvage on the field of honor the laurels their leaders on both sides of the Atlantic were needlessly throwing away. Lutnick fails to come to terms with the significance of newspaper opinion in forming public opinion, and he overrates the influence of the papers upon the Crown, the Ministry, and Parliament. An interesting but decidedly minor book, which research libraries will want to purchase."

Choice 5:760 S '68 140w

"A chronological extension of F. J. Hinkhouse's Preliminaries of the American Revolution as Seen in the British Press [BRD 1926], Lutnick enables the modern reader to sample all shades of opinion. His reading in the newspapers is extensive, and his selection is eminently representative. He fairly captures the spirit of the times, but that is sometimes more, and sometimes less, than the whole truth of history. . . . Neither the history of the press nor the details of the American war is the author's primary concern, however, but rather the recounting of rumor, opinion, and propaganda. . . . Lutnick has composed a useful and entertaining overview of the American Revolution according to the public prints, but there is yet much to be said about the impact of that struggle upon the British press." R. R. Rea

J Am Hist 55:118 Je '68 450w

LUTYENS, MARY. Millais and the Ruskins. 296p pl $8.50 Vanguard

B or 92 Millais, Sir John Everett, Bart. Ruskin, John. Ruskin, Euphemia Chalmers 68-8086; [67-78706]

A sequel to Young Mrs Ruskin in Venice, by E. C. Ruskin (BRD 1967). "This second volume of letters deals with the details of the . . . triangular relation between the painter John Ruskin, his protégé John Everett Millais, and Ruskin's wife Euphemia Gray." (Library J) Much of this book is concerned with the holiday spent at Glenfinlas in the Highlands, where Millais began his portrait of John Ruskin. Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams
Atlantic 222:144 N '68 30w

"[Miss Lutyens prints many of Effie's letters] and gives almost all of them in their entirety. . . . She also adds much more unpublished material, such as letters to and from Ruskin and his parents and others by Millais himself. The new material is all of it interesting, some important; and the volume as a whole, thanks to the skill with which it has been put together, makes as absorbing an excursion into the Victorian past as the most jaundiced reader could demand. Mary Lutyens plays the role of editor with wit, sophistication, industry, grace and modesty; and her editorial asides (along with footnotes and illustrations) contribute suspense as well as useful information to this extraordinary story." Ellen Moers

Book World p5 N 24 '68 1850w

Reviewed by K. G. Jackson
Harper 237:161 N '68 240w

"For the first time the reader has a plausible explanation for the failure of Ruskin to consummate his marriage, and, in the brutal details of the annulment proceedings, a rare insight into the operation of the Victorian machinery of divorce and remarriage. As in the companion volume, there is much here of interest to students of both 19th-Century British art and the social history of Victorian England. Recommended for college and university libraries." L. S. Fallis

Library J 93:4133 N 1 '68 120w

Reviewed by V. S. Pritchett
New Statesman 73:153 F 3 '67 1250w
Time 92:62 D 27 '68 1100w

"Ruskin, it must be allowed, is so magnificent a subject for the biographer that it seems legitimate to consider him simply as a human being and, when the interest in his sexual misadventures produces works such as [this] it would be churlish to complain, for this is not only an entertaining but also a most serious and valuable contribution to our knowledge of three eminent Victorians. . . . The Ruskin quarrel is not entirely dead. . . . The evidence of this book, much of which is entirely new, will be serviceable to neither party. . . . Miss Lutyens has found a good deal of relevant material with which to illustrate her book, including the celebrated portrait of Ruskin (which is one of her main themes), the Glenfinlas sketches and a charming study of Effie." TLS p212 Mr 16 '67 400w

LYNCH, HOLLIS R. Edward Wilmot Blyden: Pan-Negro patriot, 1832-1912. 272p pl $6.70 Oxford

B or 92 Blyden, Edward Wilmot 67-106354

A biography of the nineteenth century Negro teacher, politician and colonial official whose

"life took him from a free childhood in Saint Thomas to the United States where, still a boy in 1850, he was fired by the idea of colonization. In succeeding years he became an outstanding agent, propagandist, and directing force in Liberia and a philosopher of Negro nationalism and capacities." (Am Hist R)

"Professor Lynch conscientiously records Blyden's weaknesses as an organizer and thinker, but concludes that his long service and dedication entitle him to be honored and remembered. Many of the events and personalities discussed are far from earth shaking; it would be a disservice to pretend that they are. But they constitute beginnings of Negro and African enterprise, and Lynch has given them clear and forthright treatment. They merit appreciation and integration with relevant studies at home and abroad." Louis Filler

Am Hist R 73:1216 Ap '68 480w

"One of the merits of Dr Lynch's careful and competent biography is that he enables one to see how many of the key ideas of modern Pan-Africanism (and Pan-Negrism—the two themes are inextricably interwoven in Blyden's thought) can be traced back to this 19th-century African Narodnik. Among these the concept of 'African personality' (a term which Blyden seems himself to have invented) is pivotal, involving an emphasis, retrospectively, on what are conceived to be the essentially communal institutions and values of traditional African society, and prospectively on the necessity for constructing new, more comprehensive, African systems. Blyden emerges as an intellectual ancestor of Nkrumah, Nyerere and Sékou Touré." Thomas Hodgkin

New Statesman 74:910 D 29 '67 400w

"Dr. Lynch has written a useful, well-documented study, which will stand for some time to come. One could wish that he had worked rather more on the West African historical and social context. It would have been helpful if people and places that come into the story (sometimes in almost unrecognizable forms) could have been more adequately identified. One would have welcomed also less attention at times to relatively trivial biographical detail and more critical discussion of the genesis, development, and influence of Blyden's profoundly interesting ideas."

TLS p1238 D 21 '67 2800w

LYND, STAUGHTON. Class conflict, slavery, and the United States Constitution; ten essays. 288p $7.50 Bobbs

973 U.S.—Politics and government—1783-1809. U.S.—Politics and government—Revolution 67-21400

"For the most part, this is a collection of essays which have appeared in scholarly journals. . . . In four essays [Mr. Lynd] discusses class conflict in New York State, emphasizing the domestic struggle for power accompanying the War for Independence and the establishment of the Constitution in which class dominance played a key role. In three essays he discusses the role of slavery and the compromise on this question which emasculated the Declaration of Independence's assertion that all men are equal. The last two essays deal with 'The Economic Origins of Jeffersonian Historiography.'" (Library J) Index.

"Most significant is Lynd's critique of Charles A. Beard and Frederick Jackson Turner. Lynd is himself a Beardian, but a sophisticated one who has completely destroyed any interpretation based on the simplistic division between reality and personality. He has carried the dispute of Beard, Forrest McDonald, Jackson T. Main, Robert E. Brown, et al. into new and fertile grounds. Also contained in the book are Lynd's writings on New York in the Revolution. No library should be without this vital and significant collection of essays."

Choice 5:676 Jl '68 190w

"[The author] seeks to contribute to a new kind of history. He writes: 'The new (perhaps New Left) American history emphasizes economic causes while avoiding the caricature that limits "the economic factor" to conscious pursuit of pecuniary advantage.' . . . As the title indicates, Mr. Lynd discusses class conflict and slavery and their impact on the establishment of the Constitution. He contends that C. A. Beard's version of the nature of strife in this constitutional period requires revision. Rather than a conflict between capitalists and farmers, Mr. Lynd argues, the conflict was between commercial and noncommercial interests. . . . An interesting and well-written book. Recommended for specialists and informed readers." T. J. Michalak

Library J 93:1627 Ap 15 '68 240w

"As a contribution to American radical historiography, Lynd's work must be evaluated as part of the present effort of recent scholars . . . to establish an ideological foundation for their political movement. . . . It is ironic that even historians who do not consider themselves Marxists are steadily building a genuine American version of Marxism by the very act of destroying the caricature to which they fell heir. Lynd speaks as part of this current, but, as [his] books reveal, he might more properly be placed in the tradition being overthrown. . . . [This collection] contains excellent empirical work on a number of important questions, but also reveals much methodological and philosophical confusion. Its value lies in its painstaking analyses of local responses to the political and social crises of the Revolutionary and Constitutional eras." E. D. Genovese

N Y Rev of Books 11:69 S 26 '68 2350w

"In assembling in book form a number of previously published fugitive papers Staughton Lynd has performed a useful service both to the historian and the general public. Those who would rashly assume that so stalwart an exponent of the New Left as Lynd must necessarily adhere to some Marxist-Leninist-Maoist line are in for a number of surprises. In fact, what is especially interesting about the book is its ambivalent character. Some parts sound like an updated and perceptive brand of neo-conservatism; elsewhere we are given a rather unsophisticated abolitionist view of early American constitutional history." R. B. Morris

N Y Times Bk R p10 My 26 '68 1450w

LYND, STAUGHTON. Intellectual origins of American radicalism. 184p $4.95 Pantheon bks.

320.5 Radicals and radicalism. Political science. U.S.—Intellectual life 68-12934

The author of Class Conflict, Slavery, and the United States Constitution (BRD 1968) offers "a radical interpretation of some currents of American 18th and 19th century thought. Tracing revolutionary impulses in American political life back to the influence on Americans of a group of English radicals, mostly Non-Conformists, in the quarter-century preceding the Declaration of Independence, and then through the abolitionists, the author finds early instances of expression of the philosophy of civil disobedience." (Publishers' Weekly) Chapter bibliographies. Index.

"This modest book is an extraordinary contribution to our understanding of American history and sociopolitical philosophy. With brilliance and scholarly accuracy (in very readable style), it details the principles behind protest in America from 1750 to the present. . . . Profound and stimulating, filled with pride and sympathy for the best achievements of American political history, this book should be in every college library."

Choice 5:1334 D '68 190w

"Of all the New Left historians, only Staughton Lynd appears able to combine the techniques of historical scholarship with the commitment to social reform. His [book] shows how exceedingly fruitful such a marriage can be. Though brief, this is a major work in American intellectual history. . . . The great contribution of [Mr. Lynd's] book is to demonstrate that there has been a strong and continuous stream of Anglo-American radical thought down to the Civil War era. Boldly challenging the views of Carl L. Becker, Bernard Bailyn, and Clinton Rossiter, he shows that spokesmen of this dissenting tradition from the very beginning raised fundamental questions 'which threatened private property and the authority of the state.' Persuasively he puts this radicalism into a broader perspective."

This subtle and scholarly book . . . will abundantly satisfy any serious student of American thought." David Donald

Commentary 45:78 Ag '68 950w

Reviewed by C. A. Barker

J Am Hist 55:633 D '68 500w

"Mr. Lynd discusses the writings of Richard Price, Joseph Priestley, Granville Sharp, John Cartwright, and Tom Paine and their influence on the Declaration of Independence and on radical abolitionists who later returned to these same English theorists to justify law-breaking, tax refusal, and other tactics. He also explores common intellectual themes which Marxism and native American radicalism share. This is a difficult book because of the subject matter, but well written and documented, and recommended for larger collections." T. J. Michalak

LYND, STAUGHTON—Continued

Library J 93:2248 Je 1 '68 150w

Reviewed by Robert Middlekauff
New Repub 159:36 Jl 20 '68 650w

"The claims of the book rest on Lynd's interpretation or, rather, on his assumption, that moral absolutism is what the radical tradition has to offer radicals today. . . . Lynd seeks to prove that the essence of radicalism is something akin to obscurantism. The counter-tendencies and opposing views of the Left are ignored; the book is therefore a travesty of history. . . . Lynd's view leads him to do violence to almost every historical question he touches. . . . [He] presents himself as a spokesman for the New Left, but he has only the right to present himself as a spokesman for a particular tendency of it. If there is a 'New' Left, it is a many-sided movement, and it deserves to be called new principally for its insistence on bypassing old factional quarrels and for its unwillingness to submit to the discipline of one or another of the older organizations, most of which have discredited themselves by pronounced totalitarianism." E. D. Genovese

N Y Rev of Books 11:69 S 26 '68 2350w

Reviewed by J. H. Plumb
Sat R 51:23 Je 29 '68 180w

"[This] is a kind of historical guide and handbook for the gentleman rebel—Emerson-cum-Marx rather than Rap Brown-cum-Mao. I am less interested in 18th century radicalism than in 20th century radicalism," Lynd admits, and at times he makes American history read like one long protest march in which Jefferson, Thoreau and Staughton Lynd are fraternity brothers linked arm in arm. Lynd writes as a scholar as well as a proselyter, and his slim volume valuably documents the American tradition of dissent. But it must be read with the proper skepticism due any partisan credo. . . . Seeing less the tangled events than the abstracted issues, Lynd has composed not so much a position paper as a posture paper for the New Left. This is the politics of righteousness, or moral style. . . . With his transcendental interpretation of history, his uncompromising rectitude, and his wobbly ambivalence in the face of actuality, Lynd seems like a 19th century Brook Farm utopian who has wandered nobly but by mistake into the 20th century."

Time 92:67 Jl 5 '68 850w
Va Q R 44:clxix autumn '68 170w

LYNE, ARTHUR GORDON. See Lyne, G.

LYNE, GORDON. Marsupials and monotremes of Australia. 72p il $5.95 Taplinger

599 Mammals 68-2810

"The first section on the monotremes is relatively short, there being only the platypus and the echidnas in this group. The many and varied marsupials occupy the greater part of the book, with a brief discussion as to how they have reached Australia from their site of origin. A drawing of each animal is accompanied by . . . [an] account of its morphology, range, habitats, feeding and breeding habits, and other characteristics." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"[This] resembles somewhat Buffon's classic volumes, while it is better written and arranged than others dealing with a limited group. . . . Concludes with a bibliography chiefly but not exclusively of Australian publications [and a] strong plea for conservation. . . . Of value to the taxonomist, zoologist, and those interested in natural history and conservation. Recommended."

Choice 5:986 O '68 180w

"The book is recommended for public library natural history collections—enjoyable and most informative for the layman and those pursuing natural history studies." D. I. Kalk

Library J 93:2679 Jl '68 180w

"[The author] is a distinguished Australian mammalogist; even more, he has a keen eye and a loving and able hand with words and pictures. This book is a straightforward account, superbly illustrated mostly with large, detailed drawings by its author, of the living animals of these orders. It is a sober, grown-up reference work, but it is never solemn or obscure, and it should be a joy to children in many libraries." Philip Morrison

Sci Am 219:127 D '68 50w

LYON, BRYCE. Medieval finance; a comparison of financial institutions in northwestern Europe [by] Bryce Lyon and A. E. Verhulst. 99p $5 Brown univ. press

354 Finance. Middle Ages—History 67-19657

This "book is partly an outcome of [a colloquium] in Spa where one of the authors, Professor Verhulst of the University of Ghent, presented a paper on the early financial administration in Flanders, Normandy, and the royal domain of France. The book contains a revision of this paper and an original essay by Professor Lyon [of Brown University] on the English system during the twelfth and thirteenth centuries. The introduction and conclusion are also by Lyon." (Am Hist R) Index.

"Lyon's chapters are the more readable because they contain less technical details and emphasize the broad outlines of the financial administration. This very useful little work should be called to the attention of all teachers of medieval history." Raymond de Roover

Am Hist R 73:1493 Je '68 380w

"An important, fresh approach to the study of medieval government institutions. Lyon and Verhulst rightly complain that in the past most works dealing with medieval political institutions have been too narrowly national in scope, focusing on the development of particular states. Their study, on the contrary, cuts across national lines. . . . This is a valuable study that draws upon the best research of the last generation while presenting the insights of two leading authorities in the field. Recommended for undergraduate collections."

Choice 5:234 Ap '68 160w

LYON, PETER. To hell in a day coach; an exasperated look at American railroads. 324p $5.95 Lippincott

385 Railroads 68-10619

The author discusses the rise and fall of railway systems in the United States. He presents "portraits of railroad personalities: Gould, Vanderbilt, Morgan, Hill . . . [and] analyzes such headaches as commuter systems and passenger traffic and such promising developments as high-speed railways and the modernization of freight equipment." (Publisher's note) Annotated bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by Louis Kronenberger

Atlantic 222:85 Jl '68 3050w

"The book is marred by its emotionalism and sweeping generalities. Much of what Lyon says is true, but there is a tendency to use the half-truth. What he says has been repeatedly said in other corners."

Choice 5:839 S '68 160w

Christian Century 85:172 F 7 '68 30w

"The book will be read quite generally. . . . Mr. Lyon has depended on history, and on official records for much of the book's detail. His short sketches of men who made themselves famous—or infamous—in railway history are priceless, done in his freest style. In spite of his sharp criticism, this is a thoughtful book. For general library collections." K. T. Willis

Library J 92:4412 D 1 '67 100w

Reviewed by George Zabriskie

Nation 206:799 Je 17 '68 1350w

"In this lively and argumentative study—occasionally as exasperating as it is exasperated—[Lyon] maintains that the answers [to the condition of the railroads] lie in the greed, incompetence and lack of vision of the men who ran the railroads in the past and of those who run them in the present, and suggests that the root cause of the trouble is and has been the stubborn American attempt to treat railroading as free enterprise . . . rather than as a public necessity existing primarily to serve the national welfare. . . . Hardly a new thesis, but one seldom put forward at once so readably and with so much documentation. In dealing with . . . the present, this author fuses his freshest material (and his best writing, suddenly free of the overuse of colloquial language). . . . Mr. Lyon's central argument is that the railroads want to get rid of passengers, and have wanted to almost from their beginnings. . . . Unfortunately, at this point [his] argument seems to become circular." John Brooks

N Y Times Bk R p8 F 11 '68 1150w

LYONS, J., ed. Psycholinguistics papers. See Edinburgh university conference on psycholinguistics, 1966

LYONS, NATHAN. ed. Toward a social landscape. 67p $4.95 Horizon press

779 Photography—Exhibitions. Photography, Artistic 66-30698

"This volume presents a collection of work by the five contemporary photographers represented in the exhibition, 'Toward A Social Landscape,' which opened . . . at the George Eastman House [in Rochester, New York in December 1966]." (Publisher's note) The photographers are: Bruce Davidson, Lee Friedlander, Danny Lyon, Duane Michals and Garry Winogrand.

"The landscape does not consist of trees, rivers, and mountains, but rather 'people and people things'—man living in his fabricated and mainly urban environment. The photographs attempt to give significance to the truisms of everyday life through the combination of realistic subject matter and individual photographic representation. The 50 black-and-white photographs are, for the most part, hard and brilliant in execution, but contain subtleties which are felt rather than seen. Essentially this book is for the photographic collection that must have everything in the field." R. L. Enequest

Library J 92:1920 My 15 '67 130w

"The typical relationships in the new social landscape seen by these young photographers are fragmented, disconnected, obscure. . . . Perspective is rarely defined as a clear position, either physical or moral, outside the subject; they propose, with very rapid cameras, to present a view of the city from within. There is no effort to judge but instead to express. . . . On the whole this is brilliant work, but deeply disturbing and disengaging. . . . Many of these pictures can be read as illustrations to the themes of alienation and debasement of popular culture, discussion of which passed for our most serious social analysis until recently. For this reason the photography of the new social landscape runs a risk of triteness, of overstatement to the point of cliché. But many of these works seem, like Pop art, to embrace the cliché. They seem mordant celebrations of a plastic environment." Alan Trachtenberg

Nation 206:766 Je 10 '68 1050w

M

MA, NANCY CHIH. Mrs Ma's favorite Chinese recipes. 145p il col il $5.95 Kodansha 641.59 Cookery, Chinese 68-13739

"The recipes in these pages have all been carefully pretested. The specified measurements and cooking times are precise. . . . For the cook who never quite likes to follow a recipe to the letter, I have provided general suggestions about substitutes and variations, about the nature of Chinese food and what makes a good dish." (Pref) Glossary. Index.

Reviewed by Gloria Levitas

Book World p3 D 15 '68 30w

"For the epicure and sophisticated cook [this] includes 150 completely new recipes ranging from Stuffed Carrot Rolls to Beggar's Chicken—stuffed chicken wrapped in lotus leaves and baked in a clay coating. For the less sophisticated there are wonderful sections on basics, wine, tea, and table settings. For the art lover there are 150 black-and-white and 25 exquisite full-color photographs. An outstanding cookbook, this is highly recommended for both school and public library collections." Marvin Kohl

Library J 93:2656 J1 '68 100w

"A matter-of-fact book, with photographic illustrations of the finished dish and detailed techniques. Mrs. Ma writes clear, simple recipes for food that is not too exotic to frighten people away from trying to cook Chinese." Nika Hazelton

N Y Times Bk R p24 Je 2 '68 40w

MA, PO-CH'ANG CH'IH. See Ma, N. C.

MABBUTT, J. A., jr. ed. Landform studies from Australia and New Guinea. See Jennings, J. N.

MCALLEVY, HENRY. Black flags in Vietnam: the story of a Chinese intervention. 296p il maps $6.95 Macmillan (N Y)

959.7 Vietnam—History. Vietnam—Foreign relations—China. China—Foreign relations—Vietnam. French in Indochina 68-17518

History of the nineteenth century conflict between China and France for possession of Vietnam. "The book begins with a description of the birth pangs of Vietnam and continues through the French invasion to China's renunciation of her ancient suzerainty over Vietnam by the treaty of July 1885 [concluding The Tonkin War of 1884-1885]. The 'black flags' of the title were the ensign and totem of a handful of Chinese banded under the chieftainship of [Liu Yung-fu]." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"At times Mr. McAlevy, senior lecturer in Oriental studies, University of London, enlivens the book with excellent narratives of interesting events; again, he does nothing more than say who did what to whom, how, and when. Except for the fact that Vietnam makes front page news nowadays, this book would probably not be of interest to most people. Libraries should buy according to their needs for books in this subject area." Wen Chao Chen

Library J 93:2491 Je 15 '68 150w

"Basing himself on the very boring memoirs that Liu [Yung-fu] dictated in his old age as well as on many other Chinese and French sources, Mr. McAlevy brings admirably to life the atmosphere of the time and the mutual incomprehension between French, Vietnamese and Chinese. These separate strands are neatly woven together in this account. . . . Other points that emerge from [the] narrative are relevant to the present relations between China and Vietnam. . . . Most of the leading actors in this drama come over pungently. The history is recounted with assurance, the background adequately studied. . . . [The author] writes for the general reader."

TLS p1158 O 10 '68 600w

MCALMON, ROBERT. Being geniuses together, 1920-1930; rev. and with suppl. chapters by Kay Boyle. 392p pl $6.95 Doubleday

B or 92 Boyle, Kay. Paris—Intellectual life 68-11759

McAlmon's memoir was originally published in London in 1938. Kay Boyle has revised the text and interspersed chapters of her own autobiography covering the same period when she was learning to be a writer. The book presents a picture of the avant-garde literary world of American and English "expatriates in France in the 1920's. Robert McAlmon was then publishing some of his friends' books. . . . Both were part of the talented literary and artistic circles which included James Joyce, F. Scott Fitzgerald, Ezra Pound, [Hemingway, Gertrude Stein], and many others. [These reminiscences bring back] a bohemian time that was to become legendary." (Publishers' Weekly) Index.

"On his side of the dual autobiography (an interesting device which works very well here) McAlmon tells fascinating stories about the great men of our literature before they became great. . . . [His] best story is how he typed the last 50 pages of Ulysses. . . . If this story could be proved true, Joyce scholars by the thousands would have to cut their throats. Despite the fact that he rates Hemingway and Fitzgerald far too low, many of McAlmon's critical remarks are acute, and he is always honestly direct. You like the man and you like the book and it is simply one of those painful ironies that you cannot believe that McAlmon was a genuinely talented artist. On the other side, Kay Boyle is a delightful writer with a style that can be dazzling, yet strong as steel. . . . It is Miss Boyle who gives us the airy magic of Camelot-Paris simply by telling us the story of her hopelessly romantic life."

Mario Puzo

Book World p1 Je 9 '68 800w

Reviewed by G. O. Carey

Library J 93:1998 My 15 '68 200w

MCALMON, ROBERT—Continued

"[Miss Boyle] revised and shortened the text (McAlmon's work always cries for emendation); she consulted the original typescript and restored some passages deleted by the English publisher. . . . At the same time Miss Boyle's chapters reveal by contrast, and without her intending them to do so, the fact that McAlmon never mastered the craft of writing. Miss Boyle, on the other hand, was bound to the craft like a medieval apprentice. . . . I have to report that this collaboration—posthumous in McAlmon's case—has proved amazingly successful. It gives us pictures of two lives—and many surrounding lives—from different angles. . . . Thereby it gives us an impression of depth and substantiality that have been lacking in other memoirs of Paris in the 1920's, and notably in McAlmon's original story." Malcolm Cowley
N Y Times Bk ■ pl Je 9 '68 1700w

Reviewed by Saul Maloff
Newsweek 72:70 J1 8 '68 900w
Va Q R 44:clx autumn '68 230w

MCAVOY, THOMAS T. Father O'Hara of Notre Dame, the cardinal-archbishop of Philadelphia. 514p pl $7.50 Univ. of Notre Dame press

B or 92 O'Hara, John Francis, Cardinal
66-14627

"This biography of the late Cardinal Archbishop of Philadelphia has been compiled by a confrere long associated with the University of Notre Dame. . . . [It tells of] the youth of John O'Hara; his years as prefect of religion and then as President of Notre Dame; his work in the military ordinariate as auxiliary bishop to Cardinal Spellman; his service as Bishop of Buffalo; and his final years as head of the Archdiocese of Philadelphia." (America)

"Various chapters will appeal to varied groups—Notre Dame alumni, former military chaplains, the clergy and laity of the two dioceses the cardinal headed. Students of Church history will find the book crammed with details. But it is safe to say that few readers will have the fortitude to read the book from end to end, unless they are fascinated by interminable compilations of minutiae. Fr. McAvoy has done hard and careful spadework on the life of Cardinal O'Hara. Any future biographer will bless him." F. X. Curran
America 116:792 My 27 '67 240w

"Father McAvoy, professor of history in and archivist of the University of Notre Dame . . . obtained access to most of the pertinent sources and made judicious use of them, especially where persons still living are concerned; he also gathered the recollections of surviving contemporaries of his subject. Adroitly eschewing any explicit statement of his own opinion, McAvoy often simply quotes others to express criticism of O'Hara and lets the reader draw the conclusions for himself. In his objective presentation of the facts the writer adheres to . . . a strictly chronological order. . . . [He] has not attempted to determine the significance of O'Hara's life for the United States or for the American Catholic Church. . . . The book is useful, as documentation of a prominent case of episcopal conservatism before the Second Vatican Council." Robert Trisco
Am Hist R 73:936 F '68 700w

MACBEAN, ALASDAIR I. Export instability and economic development; foreword by Edward Mason; written under the auspices of the Center for int. affairs, Harvard university. 367p $6.95 Harvard univ. press 382 Commerce. Underdeveloped areas 67-1818

The author "concludes that the general importance of short-term export instability has probably been exaggerated and that there is little positive evidence that in general the economies of underdeveloped countries have been damaged by such instability. . . . [These conclusions] are derived from cross country and time series analyses of the only readily available evidence and are supported by more detailed case studies of five countries—Uganda, Tanganyika, Puerto Rico, Chile and Pakistan. In the second half of the book the author examines national and international policy proposals in the light of his conclusions about the relative unimportance of short-term export instability." (Economist) Bibliography. Index.

"MacBean's analysis has . . . a number of important limitations. . . . For many of the countries included in his regressions . . . articulation is not satisfactory. . . . A second statistical difficulty is created by including in the regressions every possible country for which data can be obtained or estimated. For a few countries, some of the variables appear so abnormal as to raise doubts about their accuracy; alternatively, if they are accurate, they would seem to constitute special cases which could reasonably be excluded. . . . [The] implicit assumption [is] that there is a single, unique, relationship between a given degree of fluctuation in exports and the resultant change in the growth rate of GNP for all countries. . . . For this reason, none of the regressions presented in this part of the book can be accepted as meaningful, and the author's conclusions are equally suspect. . . . [But the work] has exposed an important problem in applied economics and has laid the basis for a more systematic approach in the future." A. Maizels

Am Econ R 58:575 Je '68 2550w

"This book is a notable contribution to the literature on the subject of 'underdeveloped countries.' . . . MacBean's results represent a formidable statistical effort, and specialists will find the methods he used explained in more than one place. . . . A more detailed index would be helpful to students interested in some of the particular topics covered." Ida Greaves
Ann Am Acad 374:191 N '67 500w

"A professional, well documented analysis. The research is original, the viewpoint unique. In the burgeoning field of development literature, this volume stands out as stimulating and provocative."

Choice 5:99 Mr '68 200w

"Professor MacBean originally intended to . . . [compare] the merits of different policies for dealing with the effects of short-term export instability on underdeveloped countries. In his competent hands, the result would have been a useful contribution. But, in fact, by careful scepticism in face of orthodoxy, what he has achieved is much more valuable and an important advance. Finding the literature full of assertions but little or no evidence, he began his study by looking more closely into the nature of short-run export instability and of the adverse consequences that were supposed to follow. He expected that the assertions would be generally confirmed. He finds that they are not. . . . This is an important book, not only for its conclusions on its specific subject. It is also a good example of a modern economist's approach to a field in which casual empirical generalisations abound, and of the importance of rigorous research for policy purposes."

Economist 223:690 My 13 '67 850w

MACBETH, GEORGE. The colour of blood; poems. 82p $4.50; pa $1.95 Atheneum pubs.
821 67-14321

"This is the first book to be published in America by . . . the [British] author of two earlier books of poems, The Broken Places and A Doomsday Book." (Publisher's note) Most of these poems appeared in various literary periodicals such as Ambit, The New Yorker, and The Southern Review.

"In technique [this book] resembles the work of the so-called 'Movement' poets (Philip Larkin, John Wain, Thom Gunn, etc.) who rose in reaction against obscurity, looseness of form and bardic pretensions. . . . What sets MacBeth apart and makes him more enjoyable than most is a certain romping wit and vitality, a touch one imagines at times of the free-wheeling humor of his countryman, Robert Burns. And he has a wonderfully observant eye, which he uses with verve, as in 'A Ritual,' his account of giving blood." Chad Walsh
Book World p6 D 24 '67 250w

Choice 5:954 O '68 120w

"There is constant inventiveness in the poems with Arabian, Indian and Jewish backgrounds. [MacBeth's] eye for crisp, unnerving detail remains as sharp as ever; and his brisk technical flair continues to impress and surprise (as in a beautifully witty poem on metre). But some of the diction has an air of self-consciously glossy accomplishment, and there is some lapsing into stock properties when the tension fails. All this originality of vision and emotional pressure might now perhaps be given a freer personal rein. Passages in the most successful poems here (like 'The Ward' and 'An Elegy') point in that direction."

TLS p556 Je 22 '67 160w

"[This poet has] a language rich in metaphor and alive with sound. Dream poems and rituals, a bright and witty discourse on metre and even some amazing 'Chinese synopses,' all give this book a vitality and vibrancy that has so long been lacking in English poetry (although MacBeth is Scottish). Wit and violence, elegance and a grand lack of restraint, he has them all, can look at the blood that spills around us and find the strength and the wisdom to make his songs fly far and high."

Va Q R 44:xvi winter '68 140w

MACBRIDE, ROBERT. The automated state; computer systems as a new force in society. 407p $12.50 Chilton co.

301.2 Automation—Economic aspects. Automation—Social aspects. Public administration—Electronic data processing 67-22758

In Part I the author "covers the substance of computer systems; the conflicting views on the socioeconomic effects of computer automation; and the proposals for dealing with them. In Part II, he studies the consequences for individuals and for a representative democracy of further development of computer-based systems as devices for socioeconomic control." (Library J) Name index. Subject index.

"MacBride is well qualified and his book well written. He distinguishes between the short term technical and dislocational effects of computers and their implications for the development of a national information system. The use of this system to meet defense problems is described. He indicates how it could be vastly extended to attain social and economic objectives. The threat of such a system to privacy is explored and various methods of avoiding it are discussed in a technical and scholarly way. Roughly half the book is made up of four appendices consisting of reports and proposals on a national data network. These are public or quasi-public documents but their inclusion is justified by the importance and originality of the author's contribution. No other book has dealt with this subject and it is an essential complementary work to the recent books on the employment and industrial implications of computer technology."

Choice 4:1286 Ja '68 100w

"This is a well-balanced evaluation and appraisal of the social consequences of advancing computer technology. . . . Should the techniques and philosophy developed under military auspices be extensively applied to the expanding goals of economic planners, the author envisages a Federal establishment against which private individuals, organizations, and state and local governments are powerless. . . . This thought-provoking and disturbing book adds new dimensions to the controversy over the establishment of national and regional data centers. For college, university and large general libraries." William Gibelman

Library J 92:2595 Jl '67 200w

MCCABE, ROBERT KARR. Storm over Asia; China and Southeast Asia: thrust and response. 225p $5.50 New Am. lib.

327 Asia, Southeastern—History. Asia, Southeastern—Foreign relations—China (People's Republic of China). China (People's Republic of China)—Foreign relations—Asia, Southeastern 67-26241

This is a study "of the domestic and foreign policies of the Southeast Asian countries (the Philippines is omitted), with emphasis on 'the killing ground'—Vietnam, Cambodia, and Laos. The author presents his political analysis against a background of historical perspective." (Sat R) Bibliography. Index.

"[McCabe, former Newsweek Hong Kong bureau chief, has written] a current events book with a little history, a few incidents he 'couldn't' reveal before, and some degree of severe criticism of American policy. . . . His strongest comment is that the United States position is anti-Communist without a real understanding of Asian nationalism, a force more powerful than Communism. Somewhat useful, this is one of many acceptable books on Asian politics and war today." Collin Clark

Library J 92:2932 S 1 '67 100w

Reviewed by N. J. Gallo

Nation 206:614 My 6 '68 40w

"[This] is not a ringing indictment of American policy. On the whole, it is safe to say that the author regards the total U.S. effort as positive. He is an experienced realist on Asia and his views, as well as the book, deserve attention." J. J. Tierney

Pacific Affairs 41:274 summer '68 280w

"McCabe's characterizations of Southeast Asian leaders are colorful and frank. . . . Given the scope of his book, [he] writes at times in excessive detail about these men and their policies. . . . [His] conclusions will not be acceptable to most of the doves or to many of the hawks. He may place too much emphasis on the possibilities in the past for peace negotiations between Hanoi and Washington, and he may overstress the flexibility of the relations between Peking and Washington in the post-Mao era. But emphasis on the significance of Asian nationalism [is sound]. Also valid is his placing of the conflict in Southeast Asia in the context of the confrontation between Communist China and the United States." R. H. Fifield

Sat R 51:32 F 17 '68 400w

MCCAGUE, JAMES. The second rebellion: the story of the New York City draft riots of 1863. 210p pl $5.95 Dial press

974.71 Draft riot, 1863. New York (City)—History 68-18636

The author of Moguls and Iron Men (BRD 1964) describes how "what began as a protest against the new Federal Enrollment and Conscription Act . . . turned into uncontrolled rebellion, resulting in an estimated 1,200 deaths and millions of dollars of property damage. Thirteen regiments of regular troops were eventually required before the pillaging mobs could be subdued. . . . McCague recreates the day-by-day tragedy of the riots. He analyzes their causes in the events, personalities, and social attitudes of the time." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by C. L. Hohl

America 119:566 N 30 '68 40w

Choice 5:1214 N '68 170w

Reviewed by J. H. Smylie

Christian Century 85:1109 S 4 '68 550w

"The week of July 12 to 18, 1863 was a dark chapter in the history of New York City. Terrible riots against the draft caused widespread damage and loss of life. There were instances of great heroism and of ferocious cruelty. . . . Yet, at the conclusion no one had gained anything and the draft law which nominally inspired the outbreak was unchanged. . . . [The author] has told the story of this difficult week with impartial scholarship. . . . It is a fascinating, if frightening story, and one which should be read and pondered in the light of recent events. The book is recommended for public and academic libraries." T. E. Smith

Library J 93:2487 Je 15 '68 170w

"The many reasons for the rioting, the depredations of the mobs, the murders committed, the confusion of the authorities, and the fierce battles fought with the police and the military are brilliantly related by the author. His book is, among other things—since tracing the paths of mobs and reconstructing the exploits of individuals in a constantly shifting pattern of lawlessness is not easy—a splendid piece of detective work. Fortunately, Mr. McCague had at hand, as one of his main sources, the eyewitness account of an unusually heroic police-telegraph operator, Charles Loring Chapin. . . . the memoirs of tough, bearded police captain George Washington Walling. . . . [and] the note of Charles Dickens, who was shocked by the poverty and squalor he saw when he visited New York. He also made good use of the New York papers . . . whose reports and comment on the rioting were greatly influenced by their political leanings and attitudes toward the war. No mob member, as far as is known, got down his side of it." Rex Lardner

N Y Times Bk R p6 Ag 11 '68 1100w

Time 92:72 Jl 19 '68 900w

MCCARTHY, CORMAC. Outer dark. 242p $4.95 Random house

68-14496

This "novel is set in an unspecified part of the rural South. The time is also unspecified. . . . A woman bears her brother's child; he leaves it in the woods to die, telling her that it has died a natural death and that he has buried it. Having proved his lie, she sets forth alone to find her son. Alternating scenes relate the separate wanderings of the brother and the sister through a countryside which is being scourged by three terrifying men whom the inhabitants do not know and seldom see." (Publisher's note)

MCCARTHY, CORMAC—Continued

"This is a piece of very, very murky Gothic horror. . . . Everyone is grotesquely poor, ragged, sinful and dismal. They all speak in a thickly picturesque dialect. . . . Pages in this manner alternate with passages on which the shadow of Faulkner lies very dark—proving once again what a disastrous model for lesser men that writer is. Mr. McCarthy has got from him the interminable shapeless sentence and the trail of very literary epithets which look impressive unless you are unkind enough to ask what they really mean. . . . Words like camarine, claggy, . . . drayage, enliven his prose: if you look them up, you will find . . . that there is no real point to their strangeness." Patrick Crutwell

Book World p18 N 24 '68 450w

Reviewed by Barbara Pfrogner

Library J 93:3157 S 15 '68 130w

"[Appalachia] has found a new storyteller to depict the darkness of its heart and its futile defiance of its luck. . . . Though it pays its homage to Faulkner's rhetoric and imagery, [this] is not a Faulknerian novel. It is much leaner, closer in pace and sparseness of line to the Gothic masters Gertrud Le Fort and her disciple Isak Dinesen, and lacks Faulkner's sociological dimension. Mr. McCarthy is unashamedly an allegorist. . . . It is his style which compels admiration, a style compounded of Appalachian phrases as plain and as functional as an ax. In elegant counterpoint to this bare-bones English is a second diction taken from that rich store of English which is there in the dictionary to be used by those who can." Guy Davenport

N Y Times Bk R p4 S 29 '68 500w

Reviewed by Granville Hicks

Sat R 51:22 D 21 '68 400w

"McCarthy is one of those few writers who go on from a well-remarked first novel to write a superior second book. His first, The Orchard Keeper [BRD 1965], won him the William Faulkner Foundation Award for 1965. . . . His new work shows that the 35-year-old author from the backwoods of Tennessee, while still echoing the style of Faulkner, has developed into an exceptional talent on his own. . . . McCarthy's re-creation of the local dialect is surpassed by his poetic descriptions of the land and its people. His is an Irish singing voice imbued with Southern Biblical intonations. The result is an antiphony of speech and verse played against a landscape of penance. And, finely controlled as it is, his simple narrative with its suspenseful qualities becomes a profound parable that ultimately speaks to any society in any time."

Time 92:102 S 27 '68 370w

MCCARTHY, EUGENE J. The limits of power; America's role in the world. 246p $5.95 Holt

327.73 U.S.—Foreign relations. Power (Social sciences) 68-10052

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Choice 5:264 Ap '68 200w

Reviewed by Anthony Harrigan

Nat R 20:405 Ap 23 '68 1200w

Reviewed by Charles Gati

World Pol 21:133 O '68 1800w

MCCARTHY, HAROLD T. Henry James; the creative process. 172p $5 Fairleigh Dickinson univ. press

813 James, Henry

68-2129

Basing his essay upon "all of James's available writings: fiction, reviews, critical articles, biographies, letters, notebooks, autobiographical books, and other works extending through a period of over fifty years, [the author] attempts to indicate the evolution of James's ideas." (Publisher's note) Index.

"To follow through successfully on such an extravagant intention in such a brief study is probably beyond the realm of the possible, especially considering James's enormous importance and complexity. There is a lack of depth in Mr. McCarthy's discussion of the novelist's artistic concern and a lack of detailed analysis of James's fiction. . . . The study is not brilliant but it is sound, and soundness and simplicity make it a reasonable introduction to this aspect of James's career." Keith Cushman

Library J 93:2875 Ag '68 180w

"A rather brief discussion of the development of James's esthetic principles as shown both in his critical writings and in his novels and tales. The comments on some of the early work seem to me particularly interesting." Granville Hicks
Sat R 51:25 Je 22 '68 130w

MCCARTHY, JOHN, ed. The home book of Irish humor; sel. and ed. with commentaries. 370p $7.50 Dodd

827 Irish wit and humor

68-15417

"This is a miscellany of some 45 sketches, tales, short stories, and excerpts from longer works by 35 Anglo-Irish and Irish-American authors ranging from Oliver Goldsmith to Fred Allen, and chosen to illuminate the Irish comic genius in its varied aspects. To these John McCarthy has added his own introductions, commentaries, and many anecdotes, proverbs, ballads, and the like." (Library J)

"Mr. McCarthy's contributions, which in one form or another make up a substantial portion of the volume, are sometimes pointless, often tedious and banal, and are presented in a uniformly pedestrian journalistic style. He has a fondness for ethnic generalizations and for a kind of ethnic humor that will delight few contemporary readers. Since most of the anthologized pieces are available elsewhere, this book can safely be ignored by libraries." T. J. Galvin

Library J 93:2241 Je 1 '68 130w

"[The editor] has demonstrated both the range of Celtic wit and its vulnerability to time. Still, I think it is possible to extract from these pages the bloodlines of Irish humor. First, there is the dialect, or typographical, style that was most clearly enunciated by Finley Peter Dunne. . . . Second, there is the satirical humor of Swift, Charles Lever, Shaw, O'Casey, Joyce and as a raconteur, Gogarty. . . . Third, and lastly, there are the modern writers whose bite has been tempered, who have remained at home and made their peace without surrendering their independence. The late Frank O'Connor's contribution to this volume, a beautiful story called 'Peasants,' illustrates how amusing an Irishman can be when he is not trying to be funny." David Dempsey

N Y Times Bk R p14 Mr 17 '68 1400w

MCCARY, JAMES LESLIE. Human sexuality; physiological and psychological factors of sexual behavior. 374p il $9.75 Van Nostrand

612.6 Sex. Sexual hygiene

67-28290

The author "considers every aspect of sex from sex education, through conception, pregnancy, and birth—giving detailed material on sexual aberrations and disorders [and] a comprehensive section on the techniques of sexual intercourse." (Library J) Glossary. Bibliography. Index.

"[This book] is best described as the most valuable layman's version of Human Sexual Response [by W. H. Masters and V. E. Johnson, BRD 1966]. . . . In accurate, clear language [it] covers the gamut of sex: techniques, responses, social diseases, aberrations, myths, reproduction, birth control, attitudes, and the law. Illustrations are pertinent and authoritative. . . . The book is heavily, but unobtrusively, documented. . . . A book of commonsense and scholarship that all college and public libraries should have."

Choice 4:1216 Ja '68 130w

"This is a comprehensive, lucid, and extremely candid discussion of the basic role of sex in the lives of all human beings. Mr. McCary, a psychologist and psychotherapist, has meticulously researched his material and presents the facts in minute detail and with complete scientific objectivity. . . . The book will be a valuable aid to doctors, marriage counselors, and psychotherapists; however, I question its usefulness as a marriage manual for the average husband and wife. It takes considerable education, interest, and frankly, patience to read through the mass of technical detail. Recommended for pertinent collections." Lola Dudley

Library J 93:89 Ja 1 '68 120w

MCCLELLAN, JAMES, Jr. auth. The political principles of Robert A. Taft. See Kirk, R.

MCCLELLAN, JAMES E. Toward an effective critique of American education. 324p $5.95; college ed pa $2.45 Lippincott 370 Education—U.S.

68-15722

"Professor McClellan of Temple University attempts to initiate . . . discussion of educational policy for the America of the future. He believes that the philosophical and social forces which generated and buttressed the great public school movement that was American education in the past no longer apply, and that a new dialogue must begin. In most of the volume he makes an . . . analysis of five educational thinkers—James B. Conant, Theodore Brameld, Jacques Barzun, B. F. Skinner, and Paul Goodman—who have [attempted] . . . to provide the basis for a polity, a polity, however, which Professor McClellan finds inadequate . . . though stimulating enough to begin the new dialogue for which the book is a plea." (Library J) Index.

"[A] sometimes exasperating, sometimes stimulating, and always 'thoughtful' volume." J. A. Rycenga

Library J 93:4290 N 15 '68 110w

"A philosopher's spirited development of an important topic through critical commentary. . . . The author's conclusion—that as a nation, the United States is psychologically ready, politically unready, for an educational revolution—comes, however, as no simplistic clincher to a popular work. On the contrary, readers will need their philosophical wits about them to keep abreast of McClellan's close inspection of linguistic nuances and his careful attention to political, metaphysical, and axiological questions, raised in the discussion. For all its wit, here is no easy book; educators should come to grips with it, though."

Sat R 51:73 S 21 '68 100w

MCCLOSKEY, JOHN MARK. See McCloskey, M.

MCCLOSKEY, MARK. Goodbye, but listen; poems. 85p $4 Vanderbilt univ. press

811

68-17280

The poems in this volume "are arranged in four sections: 'Goodbye, but Listen,' 'From the Ground Up,' 'The Last Party,' and 'Finding Out.' . . . The first two sections . . . [trace] a love affair from its beginning to its conclusion. . . . The last two sections . . . [treat a] variety of topics and emotions." (Library J) Many of the poems were first published in literary magazines.

"Here is a poet who does what all poets should do—he experiments at the frontiers of language, he forges meanings, he dares words into new and beautiful alliances. . . . he has a vision to share. . . . By their subtlety and their abandon [the verses] insinuate themselves into consciousness so that the meanings are felt or sensed without having to be accounted for discursively." Samuel Hazo

Commonweal 89:226 N 8 '68 300w

Reviewed by Walter Waring

Library J 93:2246 Je 1 '68 150w

MCCLOSKEY, ROBERT GREEN, ed. The works of James Wilson. 2v. See Wilson, J.

MCCLUNG, ROBERT M. Black Jack; last of the big alligators; il. by Lloyd Sandford. 63p $2.95; lib bdg $2.94 Morrow

Alligators—Stories

67-20983

This story tells how alligators "hatch from their nests, forage for food in deep pools built by their mothers, struggle against animal and human enemies, fight others of their kind for their homes and their mates." (Book World) "Grades three to five." (Library J)

"[The author's intent is] to reveal the threat to alligators' survival because of illegal slaughter for commercial purposes and the importance of conservation. . . . [The story] is told and illustrated in a clear, direct manner that children will find absorbing reading." Polly Goodwin

Book World p16 F 25 '68 60w

Reviewed by Marian Sorenson

Christian Science Monitor pB11 N 2 '67 20w

"A fictionalized account of the life of an alligator in the Okefenokee Swamp. In an unspiced style of writing, biological details are mixed with Black Jack's wanderings through the swamp. The repetition of eating, sleeping, and mating patterns does not make exciting reading as presented here, despite attempts to personalize Black Jack, giving him memory, thoughts, and feeling. The threats of poachers and drought provide the more interesting episodes of the book." J. L. Sher

Library J 92:4253 N 15 '67 120w

Reviewed by Mel Watkins

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p52 N 5 '67 100w

MCCLUNG, ROBERT M. Redbird; the story of a cardinal; written and il. by Robert M. McClung. 47p $2.95; lib bdg $2.94 Morrow

598 Cardinals (Birds)—Juvenile literature

68-14805

"The author follows the activities of one particular cardinal family through the course of a year [explaining] the mating, nesting, and feeding habits of the species, and the way the fledglings are raised." (Publisher's note) "Grades two to four." (Library J)

Horn Bk 44:443 Ag '68 50w

"The life cycle of the redbird is told in narrative form. Style, format, and illustrations are similar to other carefully written, clearly explanatory nature books by this author." Helen Armstrong

Library J 93:2130 My 15 '68 30w

MCCONKEY, JAMES. Crossroads; an autobiographical novel. 188p $3.95 Dutton

B or 92

67-20558

This is an "autobiography, though limited to a short period of time. The parts of the tale were written as separate sketches published in journals such as Perspective, Sewanee Review, the New Yorker, and the Hudson Review. The book is thus an anthology of units of time, now strung into a pattern with some claim to a temporal sequence and order. Each segment is built around some real and many more impressionistic reactions of the author to his surroundings, his family, his way of life." (Library J)

Reviewed by J. W. Hattman

Best Sell 27:424 F 1 '68 230w

Choice 5:624 J1 '68 70w

"McConkey, by his own account, seems almost spectacularly ordinary. . . . Even his boredoms seem medium. And yet, just because of its flatness, its absence of melodrama, this 'autobiographical novel' is a remarkable document. For, traveling the middle road, Mr. McConkey has quietly come to certain impasses generally associated with more extreme courses of life. Underneath his careful cultivation of the sane and the normal, there lurk little subterranean fears which can break out, now and then, into panic. . . . 'We enjoy responsibilities we can meet,' he writes. But he is always going that one inch too far and broaching the margins of the unpredictable. He makes fetishes of certain images of serenity. . . . [and] cannot, by writing about it, close the distance between his external security and his internal insecurity. The cosmic jitters remain. But they limit rather than destroy his enjoyment of the alliances and pleasures his life does allow. He remains in tension, but he does not fall apart." Melvin Maddocks

Christian Science Monitor p11 Ja 4 '68 550w

Reviewed by Jerrold Orne

Library J 92:4524 D 15 '67 140w

"In 'Crossroads,' the callow and awkward components of childhood do not merely speak for themselves and vanish; they are reconstituted as part of an adult's uneasy tranquility, sharing their owner's life as though they had coalesced into an invisible member of his family. Like a man without his bifocals, the author gazes straight at the present and finds things blurred. Looking inward, he seizes the past with a terrible clarity, cherishing it for what it means to him now: life becomes a dé-tente between these recaptured incidents—the ghosts of 20 or 30 years ago—and the small terrors and satisfactions of the moment. . . . The saving grace—and grace is the word—is Mr. McConkey's presence in these stories, the way he sees rather than the what. . . . 'Crossroads' is one writer's attempt to build his own cathedral. In the scheme of literary edifices, perhaps it is no more than a chapel, but in it, he has succeeded in purifying his own life and in so doing he touches our deepest selves." David Dempsey

N Y Times Bk R p34 Ja 28 '68 650w

MCCONKEY, JAMES—Continued

"Crossroads is [McConkey's] first novel, and its right to be called a novel might be questioned. . . . But if McConkey chooses to call it a novel, specifically 'an autobiographical novel,' I for one am not going to quarrel with him. . . . In the course of the novel McConkey introduces incidents from his boyhood, from his military service in World War II, from his academic career [in a small Kentucky college and at Cornell] and from his experiences as husband, father, and householder. Much of his material would seem trivial in the hands of a less assured writer; but, through his wisdom as a human being and his always unobtrusive skill as a craftsman, he can make a disagreement with ■ son as dramatic ■ a battle to the death in somebody else's novel, and much richer in meaning." Granville Hicks

Sat R 51:19 Ja 20 '68 320w

Va Q R 44:lvi spring '68 90w

MCCONNELL, JAMES DOUGLAS RUTHERFORD. Eton—how it works. 213p pl $5 Humanities press

373.09 Eton College

[67-77024]

The author, who has taught for twenty years at the famous English school, concentrates on the daily operation of the school and the theories behind it.

"An interesting, readable description. . . . Somewhat smug and biased and only occasionally critical, McConnell glorifies practices like 'fagging' and 'phased liberty.' He punctures many myths about the school and indicates how recent reforms have altered traditional practices. . . . More interesting as a description of the internal workings of Eton than as a sociological analysis. Good chapters on living conditions, entrance requirements, the public image, and sports (totally unintelligible to most Americans, and non-Etonians). . . . Excellent photographs."

Choice 5:1344 D '68 120w

"Despite, or perhaps because of, its position in the British educational scene Eton has had its critics. They have usually been critical either of the concept of Eton as a school for the elite or privileged, or of its actual day-to-day workings. . . . Despite his close association with Eton [McConnell] does not hesitate to make his own suggestions for the school's improvement although he makes it abundantly clear that he favors the preservation of much that Eton has to offer. A bibliography listing other points of view would have been helpful but this present work can be recommended as a clear and well-written account of a much criticized institution. The general reader will be interested in it." Norman Horrocks

Library J 93:2651 J1 '68 200w

"[An] excellent, entertaining and informative book." Anthony Carson

New Statesman 73:331 Mr 10 '67 900w

TLS p314 Ap 13 '67 450w

MCCORD, DAVID. Every time I climb a tree; il. by Marc Simont. unp $3.95 Little 811

67-25611

This volume contains twenty-five poems "taken from the poet's earlier children's books, Far and Few [BRD 1952], Take Sky [BRD 1963] and All Day Long [BRD 1966]. . . . The poems themselves are about plants and animals and simple pleasures of childhood. . . . Grades one to three." (Library J)

"An utter delight to remeet . . . our old friend Ladybug and sister Sadiebug, the Grasshopper, the Glowworm, Jug and Mug, the Pickety Fence and—one could cite almost the entire table of contents. All the Simont drawings coincide happily with the McCord mentality: sassy, inventive, fresh. What can one say to such a collaboration except more, encore!" Eve Merriam

Book World pt 2, p26 (children's issue)
N 5 '67 110w

Horn Bk 44:73 F '68 130w

"The delightful drawings by prize winner Simont follow the mood of the rhymes which range from pure nonsense to quiet beauty. . . . A good purchase for McCord's fans." C. A. Hough

Library J 92:4604 D 15 '67 70w

"[This] is a representative selection and charmingly illustrated, but not everyone will be taken with it. Mr. McCord is intrigued by words, and while he can sometimes make them assume the flash and color of juggler's balls, too often the glitter conceals a tired subject. . . . One is only aware of the poet's talent when he abandons word-play for genuine feeling." Barbara Wersba

N Y Times Bk ■ p26 F 11 '68 190w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland

Sat R 51:35 Ja 27 '68 150w

MCCORMICK, E. H., ed. Narrative of a residence in New Zealand, [and] Journal of a residence in Tristan da Cunha. See Earle, A.MCCORMICK, THOMAS J. China market; America's quest for informal empire, 1893-1901. 241p, $6.50 Quadrangle bks.

382 U.S.—Commerce. China—Commerce

67-21637

The author argues that "the successive economic crises of the later 19th century, culminating in the 1893 panic, convinced a decisive combination of American elites that 'least-cost expansionism' in the Pacific was essential to their concept of national well-being. . . . After showing that the Cleveland and McKinley administrations had to abandon laissez faire and wed governmental and business interests in order to secure a more promising place in China, McCormick concludes that the Open Door Policy was designed to make possible an assumed inevitable American economic domination of the China market." (Choice) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"This is a most important volume. The clear presentation, the appropriate caution in applying the thesis to all that happened, and the valuable use of a wide variety of sources should recommend it to many readers. The book . . . provokes a series of questions worthy of investigation." P. A. Varg

Am Hist R 73:1662 Je '68 650w

Reviewed by D. L. Kemmerer

Ann Am Acad 337:197 My '68 550w

"A bibliographic note confirms the stimulating originality of a book which should be read by all interested in the role of the U.S. in modern Asia."

Choice 5:244 Ap '68 210w

Christian Century 84:1326 O 18 '67 30w

"This vigorous, clear-cut, and fully documented study is admittedly 'an economic interpretation,' though the author consciously tries to avoid a narrow 'pocketbook determinism.' . . . [His] thesis, documented by so many quotations, seems irrefutable. But it leaves one precisely halfway across the river. Either McCormick is belaboring the obvious in order to show that the American leadership, in the language of the day, believed in commercial expansion, or he has written a half-told tale, which leaves out any exploration of the other, and particularly the missionary, forms of American expansionism. . . . Plainly, American Expansionism in the 1890s was manifested in economic channels and in religious channels. How meaningful is it to look at one channel only and disregard the other? Had they something in common? . . . This volume seems not to probe below the self-image of the economic expansionists of the 1890s and so fails to put them in a larger context. Incidentally, it betrays only the skimpiest knowledge of China, but this of course is an old custom." J. K. Fairbank

J Am Hist 54:910 Mr '68 460w

Reviewed by E. R. May

Pol Sci Q 83:493 S '68 550w

MCCOY, DONALD R. Landon of Kansas. 607p il $8.50 Univ. of Neb. press

329.6 Landon, Alfred Mossman. Kansas—Politics and government 65-16190

The biography of the Governor of Kansas who was also the Republican party's candidate for the Presidency in 1936. The book describes "pre-1936 political life as well as his post-1936 years as Republican elder statesman." (J Am Hist) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by J. T. Patterson

Am Hist R 73:935 F '68 400w

"A scholarly and sympathetic study of the G.O.P. Presidential candidate. . . . The chapters detailing Landon's Kansas oriented, common-sense views on foreign policy, 1937-47, ■■■ especially rewarding. A most welcome addition to the comparatively small shelf of really solid American political biographies."

Choice 4:1172 D '67 80w

"For those who think Landon a tory . . . McCoy's book holds surprises. Landon welcomed federal relief, saw himself as labor's friend, and could claim an admirable civil-liberties record. But while a part of the record permits a sympathetic appraisal of this decent and not inflexible Kansan, the bulk of it demands judgments that McCoy did not make. . . . [Landon] never set down his political philosophy. McCoy's efforts to locate one are unconvincing. . . . A large part of the book is given over to an account of his efforts to think and speak about public affairs, neither of which he did very well. Apart from its interpretive aspect, the book is clear and thorough. It could not have been exciting, for Landon was prosaic." O. L. Graham

J Am Hist 54:705 D '67 600w

MCCOY, J. J. Swans; line drawings by Giulio Maestro. 160p $3.95; lib bdg $3.70 Lothrop

598 Swans—Juvenile literature 67-22595

The author describes each of "eight swan species at birth and in maturity—their habitats, migration patterns, nesting habits, diets, and appearance. . . . [Also included is a] chapter on swans as birds of legend and inspiration." (Publisher's note) Glossary. Bibliography. Index. "Grades five to seven." (Library J)

"A fascinating discussion of the different species of swans, their habits and characteristics; types found in various countries; swans in folklore, literature and the arts." Ethna Sheehan

America 117:520 N 4 '67 30w

Horn Bk 44:197 Ap '68 130w

"In this outstanding book . . . the life histories, historical significance, and morphological features of the seven known species of swans plus the questionable 'swoose,' are discussed in detail in a very pleasing style. The use of fables concerning swans is handled in such a way that fact is not confused with fiction." A. C. Haman

Library J 93:293 Ja 15 '68 60w

MCCREERY, CHARLES. Science, philosophy, and ESP; with a foreword by H. H. Price. (Archon bk) 199p $5 Shoe String

133.8 Extrasensory perception 68-1698

The author "a research officer of the Institute of Psychical Research, Oxford, discusses the scientific evidence for [psychical] phenomena, their psychology and physiological basis. . . . He also offers specific predictions about what may be found in physiological records of ESP and telekinetic phenomena. Although few empirical tests have been performed to date, Mr. McCreery offers the theory that a statistical correlation of the known variables of physiology and the unknown variable of psychical phenomena would provide scientific bases for proof, or at least more objective study, of ESP and PK, or psychokinesis, the ability to move objects through the power of the mind without aid of bodily movements." (Library J) Glossary. Bibliography. Index.

"Although the title might indicate that this book deals mainly with ESP, it is, rather, a thoughtful and scholarly presentation of all types of psychical phenomena. . . . [The book] will appeal to specialists and informed laymen." Patricia Schuman

Library J 93:2670 Jl '68 200w

"McCreery's is one of the most interesting studies of the psifunction to appear in recent years. In spite of its rather expansive title it is concerned primarily with the psychological and physiological states in which psi is most likely to come into action—but which are no more its cause than an incubator is the cause of the eggs hatched in it—and with those that may accompany it, once released. Mr. McCreery's tentative findings should even now enable those who plan experiments to establish conditions favourable to the emergence of ESP. They also point the way to further investigations."

TLS p966 O 12 '67 950w

MCCULLOCH, DEREK, ed. & tr. Heinrich Schütz. See Moser, H. J.

MCCULLOCH, ERNIE. Ski the champions way. 147p il $5.95 Harper

796.9 Skis and skiing

67-22546

"The editor of Ski magazine [and director of the Mont Tremblant ski school] demonstrates skiing techniques for beginners, intermediates, and experts with over 225 action photographs and . . . captions. A special section is devoted to tricks, skiing bumps and aerial turns." (Library J)

"Despite its ambitious title, McCulloch's manual has a down-to-earth approach to basic maneuvers like stemming, sideslipping and parallel skiing. A few jumps and a little slalom are thrown in for good measure, and some 200 sequence photographs by Paul Ryan back up the lessons. The pictures are as clear as the text."

Book World p12 Ja 7 '68 60w

Library J 92:4640 D 15 '67 40w [YA]

MCCULLOUGH, DAVID G. The Johnstown flood. 302p il $6.95 Simon & Schuster

974.8 Johnstown, Pennsylvania—Flood

68-12172

An account of the flood of May 31, 1889 which killed over 2000 people in Johnstown, Pennsylvania. Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by Paul Kiniery

Best Sell 28:52 My 1 '68 500w

"McCullough has resurrected the flood for a generation that may know it in name only. He proves the subject is still fresh and spectacular. . . . [He] has researched the flood thoroughly, while it was not quite too late to talk to survivors. . . . He has had the talent to make the most of it. He provides enough information about the flood to satisfy a strong appetite for it, and he paces his story about as well as anyone could. . . . So much happened to so many people in so short a time and under such confusing circumstances that no neat narrative line, centered on a dominant protagonist and with all ends neatly tucked in, is possible. . . . But McCullough has done what could be done. His book gives his readers a memorable vicarious experience and a significant understanding of the context and the causes for the dam's breaking." A. A. Ames

Book World p7 Ap 7 '68 600w

"Before the present study, only one scholarly analysis, Nathan D. Shappee's doctoral thesis, had appeared. Mr. McCullough, an editor of American Heritage Book Division, found that there was much old and new material to be examined and reevaluated for a new readable account of the disaster, its aftermath, and its repercussions. His major contribution is the use of a 'recently discovered' and previously unpublished 'transcription of testimony taken by the Pennsylvania Railroad during the summer of 1889.' Highly recommended for history collections." S. G. Heppell

Library J 93:750 F 15 '68 200w

Reviewed by Marian Trahan

Library J 93:1824 Ap 15 '68 80w [YA]

New Yorker 44:174 My 11 '68 160w

Time 91:84 Ap 19 '68 180w

MCCURDY, CHARLES, ed. Chinese and Japanese art. See Buhot, J.

MCDERMOTT, JOHN FRANCIS, ed. The frontier re-examined. 192p il $6.95 Univ. of Ill. press

917.8 The West—History. Frontier and pioneer life—The West 67-12990

"Papers presented [by a number of historians] at a conference sponsored by Southern Illinois University, Edwardsville, Nov. 11-12, 1965. . . . Using [Frederick Jackson] Turner as a springboard, the authors go on to examine new aspects of the frontier which Turner did not consider in his original thesis [The Frontier in American History, BRD 1920]." (Choice) Index.

Reviewed by R. A. Billington

Am Hist R 73:906 F '68 600w

"With few exceptions, the authors turn to good account their special knowledge and understanding of their chosen topics to present much solid material within a commendably brief compass. Most of the contributors succeed in raising new questions about old subjects. A few of them offer suggestions that possibly point the way to new insights and a better understanding of the form and meaning of the frontier experience. Taken as a whole, the collection will repay reading by anyone seriously interested in the history of the American West. In particular, lecturers, textbook writers, and directors of research in the field will do well to avail themselves of this book."

MCDERMOTT, J. F.—Continued

Ann Am Acad 375:208 Ja '68 750w

"Among the better papers are 'Fact and Fiction in the Documentary Art of the American West' which is enhanced by illustrative pictures; 'The Fur Trade as Seen from the Indian Point of View'; 'The American Entrada: A Spanish Point of View'; and 'The American Frontier in German Fiction'. . . . The varying styles of writing make for interesting reading, and this book should be of great interest to scholars and of much value to students."

Choice 4:1433 F '68 140w

"[These chapters] reveal the authors' widely varied backgrounds without constituting any reexamination of the frontier. . . . A few of the papers make modest advances or propose provocative questions. Herman Friis 'The Image of the American West at Mid-century (1840-60)' is an attractive introduction to some of the cartographic results of that period of scientific frontier exploration. . . . Apt illustrations emphasize the distinguished work of Charles Wilkes on the Columbia River, John Charles Frémont along the trail to Oregon, Lorenzo Sitgreaves on the Colorado Plateau, and of their contemporaries who systematically mapped the far western frontier. . . . Oliver Holmes [in] his 'Territorial Government and the Records of Its Administration'. . . [presents a] lively and genuinely stimulating treatment. . . . Other portions of the book are less original, less informative, some of only miniscule substance, and others little more than rephrasings of previously published findings." W. N. Bischoff

J Am Hist 54:654 D '67 500w

MCDERMOTT, JOHN J., ed. The writings of William James. See James, W.

MACDIARMID, HUGH. The company I've kept. 288p il $6 Univ. of Calif. press

B or 92 Grieve, Christopher Murray, Scotland—Civilization 67-22987

This autobiography of the Scottish poet and leader of the Scottish cultural revival includes chapters about his friends—"composers, artists, town planners, political theorists and activists, writers and critics—[which] are not so much personal recollections as a presentation of their ideas. . . . Mr. MacDiarmid gives place of honor to the composer Sorabji, saying that this neglected genius, and F. G. Scott, A. R. Orage, and Denis Saurat are the most remarkable men he has ever known. But he also writes about Sean O'Casey, Ezra Pound, James Bridge, George Davie, and a score of others." (Library J) Index.

"Mr. MacDiarmid's range of friendships and of ideas is wide. . . . The essays outdo Emerson in the use of quotation and when these go on and on, the reader is likely to forget and think he is reading the words of Hugh MacDiarmid." G. D. McDonald

Library J 93:181 Ja 15 '68 300w

"In his autobiography [Hugh MacDiarmid] takes on not only opponents in the field of literature but, at moments, the entire British Commonwealth. . . . He has produced a book that bursts with evidences of a life lived almost entirely on the exhibitionist level, and there is a decided division between his capacity for wit and his total lack of everyday humor. Yet his book outlines Scottish political and cultural history with such bristling clarity that he convinces us that he is telling, for the most part, important truths." Louise Bogan

New Yorker 43:133 Mr 30 '68 300w

MACDONALD, H. MALCOLM., ed. The intellectual in politics [by] Gunnar Heckscher [and others]; ed. with an introd. by H. Malcolm MacDonald from papers delivered [at a conf. held at the Univ. of Texas] in April 1965. 122p il $4.50 Univ. of Tex. press

329 Politics, Practical. Learning and scholarship 66-29160

These papers were originally published in the Texas Quarterly. Contributors include Representative John Brademas, and Senator Eugene J. McCarthy.

"A symposium . . . on a most important and timely subject. [The eminent authors] present diverse points of view and definitional distinctions. Each reflects the nature of his experience and his own political and cultural matrix. Cosío Villegas, Brogan, Fainosod, and Mehnert are particularly effective in their reflections on Mexico, Britain, the U.S.S.R., and Germany, respectively. The results are not a systematic treatment of this subject. . . . [but] pregnant insights abound. The paper by Miro Quesada has not been translated from the original Spanish. With the limitations taken into account, one may recommend this volume as an important addition to any liberal arts library."

Choice 4:1317 Ja '68 120w

TLS p799 S 7 '67 1300w

MACDONALD, JOHN D. No deadly drug. 656p $7.95 Doubleday

343 Coppolino, Carl Anthony. Trials. Murder 68-22622

"This book is more or less a transcript of the [1966] preliminary hearing, bail hearing, jury selection, and trial of Dr. Carl A. Coppolino for the murder of his mistress's husband, Col. William Farber. The elements of the case . . . [included] a comparatively young doctor, an aging, alleged hypnotically seduced woman member of [Alcoholics Anonymous, and] a supposedly telltaleless drug. . . . Mr. MacDonald laces the . . . transcript with commentary." (Library J)

"This book presupposes no legal expertise but it is written for intelligent thoughtful readers. Good taste prevails throughout; there is no sensationalism. The organization is chronological and businesslike. Now and then Mr. MacDonald is perhaps guilty of an overgeneralization about what 'people' do, but, on the whole, he knows the art of understatement. It is not his intention to say that Coppolino was or was not guilty. The book will probably reinforce opinions in both directions. . . . [It] is both entertaining and genuinely educational to those not closely acquainted with the world of jurisprudence. It was most carefully planned, thoroughly researched, and artfully written." R. B. Norberg

Best Sell 28:269 O 1 '68 650w

Reviewed by E. J. Bander

Library J 93:3151 S 15 '68 100w

"[The author] usually known for his crisp mystery fiction, has produced an impressive compilation. . . . Using primarily trial transcripts (skillfully edited and richly annotated), Mr. MacDonald makes No Deadly Drug a memorable account through most of its 656 pages. Only in cases of protracted cross-examination . . . does the book drag its feet, and even then there are revealing glimpses of sparkling legal strategies. This is a book that should be not so much read as studied. As the author indicates, his principal objective was to shed light on an important question: 'Does our system of criminal justice, particularly as it applies to cases given national publicity, need certain adjustments and changes?' " A. J. Hubin

N Y Times Bk R p35 S 22 '68 160w

Reviewed by Sergeant Cuff

Sat R 51:58 N 30 '68 50w

MACDONALD, ROSS. The instant enemy. 227p $4.50 Knopf

68-12667

In this novel by the author of The Far Side of the Moon (BRD 1965), "Lew Archer is hired by Keith Sebastian, a Los Angeles business executive, to find his daughter Sandy, a high-school senior who has run off with a homeless boy. . . . Archer finds the runaways easily enough, but before he can return Sandy to her parents, she has participated in a violent crime. Archer's efforts to save the girl from the consequences of her actions, and to understand those actions, involve him in a . . . plot twisting deep into the past." (Publisher's note)

Best Sell 27:453 Mr 1 '68 80w

"Excellent; better, I think, than Black Money [BRD 1966] and right up there with my two personal favorites, The Galton Case [BRD 1957] and The Zebra-Striped Hearse [BRD 1963]. . . . I know of no other writer who catches the spectrum of California life so succinctly, or who can deal with old sadness in such an immediate way. . . . You may feel, at first, that there is one death too many in the book. But I have a strong hunch that this is what [Macdonald] is getting at—there is always one death too many." Dick Adler

Book World p14 F 25 '68 180w

Christian Science Monitor p9 F 27 '68 700w

Reviewed by M. K. Grant

Library J 93:574 F 1 '68 70w

"[This book] is an extraordinary performance. . . . [Archer's search] leads him into situations which explore character and milieu powerfully and touchingly—and also into one of the most elaborate and intricate detectival plots of identities and motives that I have encountered in years. And, as is proper in a well-constructed work, you can't have one without the other; you will lose much of the force of the novel if you do not keep a firm finger on the complexities of the puzzle. Superb articulation of a skeleton plot, and equally superb fleshing out of the skeleton." Anthony Boucher

N Y Times Bk R p37 Mr 3 '68 230w

New Yorker 44:180 Ap 6 '68 60w

"Lew Archer runs into myriad complications and much ancient history, not to mention corpses. Usual pro job, but population is excessive." Sergeant Cuff

Sat R 51:52 F 24 '68 30w

TLS p108 S 26 '68 20w

MCDONALD, T. H., ed. Exploring the Northwest territory. See Mackenzie, A.

MCDONALD, WILLIAM A. Progress into the past; the rediscovery of Mycenaean civilization. 476p il maps $9.95 Macmillan (N Y)

913.38 Civilization, Mycenaean, Greece—Antiquities 67-19952

"A biographical and historical approach to the accumulating archeological evidence dealing with the Mycenaean civilization with the focus on the works of Schliemann, Evans, and Blegen. The reader is brought up to date on current theories and problems." (Natur Hist) Glossary. Chapter bibliographies. Index.

"Professor McDonald always attempts to give a fair and broad view of prevailing ideas in each generation, and to remind us of what was still unknown, to condition theories to be abandoned later with new discoveries. This historical perspective is indeed refreshing.

[He] combines broad, accurate knowledge with a fresh, pictorial lucidity of style to create a constantly interesting book. Tributes are paid to dozens of scholars, with straightforward, fair assessment of their work which emphasizes both the author's competence and his modesty, for if any work is slighted, it is his own in Messenia." Emily Vermeule

Class World 61:353 Ap '68 290w

"Professor McDonald, director of the University of Minnesota Messenian Expedition, represents the orthodox and generally accepted view: that a Greek-speaking people entered Greece around 2000 B.C.; that the language of the linear B tablets is Greek; and that the Min- oans, while having a great influence on the Mycenaeans, did not conquer the mainland and are a separate ethnic group. Mr. McDonald goes into much greater detail than Mr. [S.] Hood [The Home of the Heroes, BRD 1967] and gives a much broader survey of archaeological evidence and history of the excavation. His illustrations are new and original." F. M. Lauritsen

Library J 92:3416 O 1 '67 160w

Natur Hist 77:72 Ja '68 60w

MACEOIN, GARY, jt. auth. Synod '67. See Murphy, F. X.

MACFARQUHAR, RODERICK, ed. China under Mao: politics takes command. See The China quarterly

MCGAFFIN, WILLIAM. Anything but the truth: the credibility gap; how the news is managed in Washington, by William McGaffin and Erwin Knoll. 250p $5.95 Putnam

071 Journalism—Political aspects 68-15510

The authors "document a case against government misinformation on domestic and foreign affairs and decry its increase. Cases are cited, and the appendixes illustrate the trend with excerpts from Eisenhower, Kennedy, and Johnson news conferences." (Library J)

Reviewed by Sumika Yamashita

Library J 93:2552 Je 15 '68 140w [YA]

"This is another true story of the lies the government tells and how it . . . deceives the people for what it regards as good reason. . . . The excellent appendix provides good primary source material. . . . A most dismaying story, and yet a very readable and documented indictment; an important contribution to the democratic process." Allan Angoff

Library J 93:2872 Ag '68 240w

Reviewed by Mitchel Levitas

N Y Times Bk R p26 N 3 '68 200w

MC GEE, BARBARA, comp. Jump-rope rhymes; coll. and il. by Barbara McGee. unp $3.50; lib bdg $3.37 Viking

796.2 Singing games—Juvenile literature

68-27571

This is a "collection of 19 rhymes, most of them remembered from [the author's] own childhood, and including one by Edna St. Vincent Millay. Miss McGee has also contributed . . . illustrations of children skipping, leaping, running in rhythmical exhilaration. . . . Ages six to nine." (N Y Times Bk R)

Reviewed by M. B. King

Book World p28 (children's issue) N 3 '68 80w

"A lilting collection of familiar and not-so-familiar jump rope rhymes, in which no attempt is made to indicate their history, derivations, or (except once), their countries of origin. . . . The pictures, in sepia and blue, are flowing portraits of jumping girls, perpetually in motion, though their placid faces seem inappropriate. The book will be fun for individual or class poetry sessions, but especially for young girls to increase their own repertoire of jumping rhymes." Marjorie Lewis

Library J 93:3957 O 15 '68 90w

Reviewed by G. A. Woods

N Y Times Bk R p28 S 22 '68 170w

MC GEE, L. RANDOLPH. Income and employment in the Southeast; a study in cyclical behavior. 143p $6.50 Univ. of Ky. press

338.54 Southern States—Economic conditions. Business cycles 67-17849

This "analysis attempts to ascertain whether the Southeast leads or lags behind the rest of the nation, and to compare the amplitude of the various contraction and expansion phases of the Southeastern cycle with those of the rest of the country." (Library J) Index.

"McGee uses the well-known National Bureau of Economic Research method to measure the regional fluctuations, which he then compares with those of the entire U.S. He finds few, if any, differences. Although the work involved much tedious computation, there is a noticeable absence of either theoretical groundwork or economic analysis. Even McGee seems unsure of his results and their interpretation. Thus, the reader can gain very little insight into the economic behavior of the Southeastern U.S. It will have an appeal to those with a strong interest in that region or to those who want the abundant data which the author reports; all others may pass it up."

Choice 5:1183 N '68 130w

"This is primarily a regional study, useful for researchers, but not appealing to the general reader. Graduate school libraries will find it useful, as will business schools." R. W. Haseltine

Library J 92:2920 S 1 '67 100w

MCGIFFIN, LEE. Yankee Doodle dandles; eight generals of the American Revolution; il. by Donald Carrick. 160p $3.95; lib bdg $3.91 Dutton

920 Generals—Juvenile literature. U.S.—History—Revolution—Juvenile literature 67-20130

"Here is a collection of brief biographies of eight of the men who served as generals under Washington during the Revolution, viz. Henry Lee, John Glover, Anthony Wayne, Joshua

MCGIFFIN, LEE—Continued

Barney, Francis Marion, Nathanael Greene, Daniel Morgan, and Henry Knox." (Best Sell) Bibliography. Index. "Grades seven to nine." (Library J)

"Each [biography] is well-done. . . and will serve to introduce several deserving men who are frequently not met with in the history text books."

Best Sell 27:223 S 1 '67 86w

"The author highlights each man's career and his contributions in important battles, indicating failures as well as victories. Nevertheless, the overall tone is laudatory, and the short choppy sentences will limit the book's appeal and its possible usefulness as recreational reading or to stimulate interest in American history." E. M. Porteus

Library J 93:308 Ja 15 '68 70w

"[The biographees] were all men of spirit and imagination, who acted extraordinarily well in an emergency, and Mr. McGiffin does justice to them all." D. B. Chidsey

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p24 N 5 '67 240w

MCGILL, ARTHUR C., jr. ed. The many-faced argument. See Hick, J.

MCGILL, FREDERICK T. Channing of Concord; a life of William Ellery Channing II [by] Frederick T. McGill, Jr. 219p il $7.50 Rutgers univ. press

818 Channing, William Ellery 67-20389

A biography of the transcendentalist poet, "nephew of the Unitarian divine of the same name. . . Friend of Emerson, companion and biographer of Thoreau, he published nine volumes of verse and prose." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by R. E. Spiller

Am Hist R 73:1241 Ap '68 340w

"Many of us have been waiting anxiously for years for [this biography's] appearance. It is well worth the wait. Mr. McGill has presented in clear, straightforward English, touched as it should be, with a gentle sense of humor, a well-documented account of the life of Channing. He has turned up information in all sorts of obscure corners, most of it hitherto unpublished, and woven it into a convincing and sympathetic picture of a difficult individual. Modestly—perhaps too modestly—he does not play up his discoveries at all. . . . There are good evaluations of Channing's books, but more important are the evaluations of Channing's life. Mr. McGill's foreword and closing chapter are the first sensible weighings of Channing's strengths and weaknesses, personal and literary, that have appeared in print. The book also, quite incidentally, gives some good insights into the backgrounds of the Transcendentalist movement and of life among the Boston Brahmins." Walter Harding

Am Lit 40:88 Mr '68 430w

Choice 5:343 My '68 130w

"This is the first biography of [Channing] to appear, and it has been long needed. . . . [The] associate dean and professor of English at Newark College of Rutgers University has written this book as the result of a lifetime of study. It is a well-written portrait of Channing and his times, giving a good understanding not only of the reasons for Channing's failure but also of the lives of his fellow Transcendentalists." Walter Harding

Library J 92:4147 N 15 '67 130w

"Like its subject, the book is valuable in spite of crucial omissions and errors in strategy. Two decisive events gave substantial shape to Channing's mature life: his marriage to Ellen Fuller and his sponsorship as a poet by Emerson. Unfortunately more than half of McGill's short book is devoted to the consequences of the former, and less than a quarter to the latter. . . . Trivial as well as important questions remain unanswered even in the more circumstantial, less interesting section of the book. . . . But missing most conspicuously . . . is a sharp sense of Channing as a poet." Edwn Gittleman

New Eng Q 41:149 Mr '68 950w

MCGILL, V. J. The idea of happiness. (Inst. for philosophical res. Concepts in Western thought ser) 360p $6.95 Praeger

171 Happiness

67-22292

The author describes "theories of happiness put forward in the Western world [by writers of the past and of the present], analyzing the arguments that have been used to support them and the controversies they have provoked. He takes as his framework Aristotle's . . . definition of happiness . . . [and] against this background, he discusses Aquinas' concept of 'imperfect' happiness, theories concerning self-realization, and the contemporary theory of 'self-actualization.'" (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"This book can serve for either leisure reading or research reference and ought to find [its] way into libraries, classrooms and homes."

Christian Century 84:1381 O 25 '67 70w

Reviewed by William Gerber

Library J 92:2928 S 1 '67 50w

"[The author] creeps up on his problem historically; he takes Aristotle as the massive trunk, of which all later theories of happiness are the branches. . . . [and] shows how the most divergent of later theories of happiness—the mystical view of Plotinus, the pleasure theory of Mill, the self-realization theories of Bradley and Dewey—all grew from Aristotelian seeds. . . . [However] the most fashionable names in contemporary ethics, such as Ayer, Stevenson and Hare, find no place in Mr. McGill's discussion. . . . By quietly ignoring these revolutionaries, he implies that they have already failed of their end. I agree. Still, is it not a little early to count them out?" Brand Blanshard

N Y Times Bk R p36 F 25 '68 430w

MCGINLEY, PHYLLIS, comp. Wonders and surprises: a collection of poems chosen by Phyllis McGinley. 188p $3.95 Lippincott

821 Poetry—Collections—Juvenile literature 67-19271

A collection of over one hundred poems "on things that are strange, on animals, on love and kisses, gentlemen and ladies, trumpet sounds and war, curses and angry shouts, faraway places, the seasons of the years, on family and relatives [and some ballads and nonsense poems]." (Best Sell) Index. "Teenage." (N Y Times Bk R)

"The editor must have roamed wide through files and files—here are represented Shakespeare and Marlow, e. e. cummings and Dylan Thomas, Anonymous and A. E. Housman, Patience Eden and Ogden Nash, Rudyard Kipling and Langston Hughes, W. B. Yeats and E. B. White—and many, many more. And the poems selected have the great grace of being not well known. Excellent for all ages from six up."

Best Sell 28:325 N 1 '68 170w

Reviewed by Virginia Haviland

Book World p24 (children's issue) N 3 '68 40w

"[A] short, personal, inviting book." Muriel Rukeyser

N Y Times Bk R p38 N 10 '68 360w

Reviewed by Haskel Frankel

Sat R 51:50 N 30 '68 30w

MCGOVERN, GEORGE, ed. Agricultural thought in the twentieth century. 670p $7.50 Bobbs

338.1 Agriculture—U.S. Agriculture—Economic aspects. Agriculture and state. Agricultural administration 67-29211

Edited by the senator from South Dakota this is a "collection of basic documents that relate to agricultural evolution from 1900 to the present." (Library J) Chronology. Bibliography. Index.

"An extremely useful collection of readings for any agricultural or general economic policy course organized in a chronological manner. Excerpts are well chosen with interesting introductions. The introductory review chapter, chronology, and bibliographies make this work a useful starting point for any consideration of American agricultural policy. Some subjects have been omitted—most regional and commodity problems and issues related to agricultural and trade policy in the last three decades. A useful supplement to this anthology would be [O. B.] Jesness' Readings on Agricultural Policy [BRD 1950] which relies more heavily on academic sources than the McGovern book."

Choice 5:1184 N '68 100w

"These are primary sources taken from a distinguished corps of scholars and statesmen. Many of them mark the turning points in agricultural policy from the government point of view and from the farmer's standpoint. This book is recommended as a purchase for the medium-sized library. Larger libraries will have all of these documentary materials in one form or another." W. E. Osgood

Library J 92:4427 D 1 '67 130w

MCGOVERN, GEORGE. A time of war, a time of peace. 203p $5.95 Random house; pa $1.65 Vintage

327.73 U.S.—Military policy. U.S.—Foreign relations. U.S.—Defenses. U.S.—Social conditions 67-12747

Speeches delivered by the Democratic senator from South Dakota on the floor of the United States Senate beginning in 1963. To these the author has added introductory or concluding comments.

"[This book] presents the thinking of Senator McGovern on the major issues of the day. . . . He is a liberal with a deep concern for the individual and for the problems facing Americans at home and around the world. While the section on security and the arms race is repetitious, it shows both the development of the Senator's thinking and the necessity for men with minority views to speak out. . . . His advocacy of a new China policy, a new Southeast Asian policy, a new armaments policy, a widened war on hunger, and a fresher understanding of the role of dissent in society will not endear him to all, but his careful evaluation of the problems, and his arguments for the policies he supports, should have a hearing from all concerned citizens. Public and academic libraries will want to have this record of the views of a concerned American." D. W. Harrison

Library J 93:4126 N 1 '68 210w

"Senator McGovern's book is an odd mixture of something old and something new. It seems to have been rather hastily assembled . . . from the dim past of four or five years ago and more recent observations on the turbulent present. . . . The Senator's speech on Vietnam, delivered . . . in April 1967, tears into President Johnson and Secretary of State Rusk with gusto. . . . On the other hand, his failure to treat explicitly the massive Soviet role in the Vietnamese conflict, or the totality of the Soviet challenge to American influence in many areas of the world including the dangerous powder-keg of the Middle East, is a major deficiency of his analysis of American security in relation to the troubles we face." W. R. Kintner

Sat R 51:54 N 23 '68 1850w

MCGOVERN, JAMES. Martin Bormann. 237p il $5.95 Morrow

B or 92 Bormann, Martin. Germany—History—1933-1945. National socialism 68-19745

"A biography of the man who became Adolf Hitler's closest lieutenant after the flight of Rudolf Hess to England in May 1941. . . . Head of the National Socialist Party Chancery and the Fuehrer's secretary, [he] remained with Hitler to the latter's suicide in Berlin in May 1945. . . . [He then] disappeared in an attempt to escape the Russians. . . . Bormann's personal estate has been settled, yet he remains under sentence of death by the International Military Tribunal. . . . He has never been found. Mr. McGovern, who was employed by the CIA until 1954, [and was in charge of the search for Bormann,] presents the facts as he uncovered them in lengthy research. . . . He concludes that Bormann is dead, buried by the Russians in an unmarked grave." (Library J) Bibliography.

Reviewed by B. D. Williams

Best Sell 28:148 J1 1 '68 370w

"For those familiar with the history of the Nazi era, the book has little that is new, but the author presents a very good summary from different sources and a confrontation of opinions. He comes forward with his own views only on the conflicting versions of Bormann's escape and survival. . . . [McGovern] describes all the versions of Bormann's survival and escape. However, he is wrong in thinking that Bormann did not prepare for escape. After the publication of my book, The Murderers Among Us [BRD 1967], I came into possession of a new document, found among other papers by the Russians in the bunker of the chancellery. In it Bormann agrees to 'transfer overseas south' (Verlagerung Uebersee Süd—South America, in other words). Evidently Bormann intended to join Dönitz, to be his adviser, as he had been Hitler's. Failing that, he planned to flee." Simon Wiesenthal

Book World p5 Je 30 '68 600w

"This book attempts to determine what happened to Bormann as well as to provide his biography. It accomplishes both purposes well. . . . McGovern has done an impressive job of research, information assembly, and compressed presentation, most of it documented, of Bormann's career. . . . [He] also has given posterity a superb, succinct analysis of the Nazi apparatus with Bormann close to the center: how it rose from the ashes of World War I, the corrupt ways in which it derived political power, the ruthless means with which it conducted its policy of national expansion, the horrific methods it employed to destroy those millions of men, women, and children it believed to be its enemies." Roland Sawyer

Christian Science Monitor p5 J1 25 '68 850w

"An interesting and informative biography. . . . [The author's] account may not change the reader's personal theory as to the fate of Martin Bormann, but he does give readers evidence to think about when next the question is raised as to whether or not Martin Bormann escaped the holocaust of Berlin to remain in hiding to this day." R. M. Kennedy

Library J 93:1473 Ap 1 '68 210w

Reviewed by Sergeant Cuff

Sat R 51:45 O 26 '68 60w

TLS p1195 O 24 '68 400w

MCGRADY, PATRICK M. The youth doctors [by] Patrick M. McGrady, Jr. 352p pl $7.95 Coward-McCann

615 Therapeutics

68-14311

The author "examines some of the scientific work being done on aging as well as that of the quacks and off-beats." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"Though the author describes his work as non-technical, it has enough explanatory detail to be of lasting service to both students and professors of Gerontology, while the ordinary reader will find ample satisfaction in the revelation of human weaknesses, in the star-studded list of international VIP's that give these pages a familiar, even a domestic air. . . . The merit of Mr McGrady lies in his arrangement of the names and procedures in orderly succession and his appraisal of their significance. . . . Endless intriguing queries . . . start up from even browsing in this lively, original and often humorous study." Ambrose Agius

Best Sell 28:345 N 15 '68 1050w

"[This book] has a sense of humor. . . . It is also top-quality news reporting. The author has painstakingly talked to the entire range of dream-men and wishfulfillers who minister to the would be rejuvenated, then to the straight scientists about them. He has tackled their claims with an open mind (there might conceivably be something in eating pollen or in odor therapy) and above all he has let them talk—which is usually quite enough to convey their caliber. . . . Where the book falls down is in its concentration on these freaks, who appeal to McGrady's own offbeat manner and vision. Only one chapter deals with the straight research which may in fact give us some control over aging, and that chapter with its more offbeat exponents. . . . But as a study of the kind of fantasy-demand which our culture makes upon its wizards, and as a piece of knocking journalism, the result is both embarrassing and extremely funny." Alex Comfort

Book World p1 N 3 '68 650w

"In much of the book [McGrady] deals with Dr. Paul Niehans and cell therapy. He interviews 'le grand homme'—a feat in itself—and feels that Dr. Niehans's cell therapy has quite a lot to offer. He talked with young Peter Stephen in England. Mr. McGrady also discusses Ana Aslan and Gerovital in depth, recounts Max Wolf's attempts at rejuvenating Henry Wallace (with the aid of many Wallace letters); describes Cora Galenti and 'face peeling,' Herb Blackschleger and psychic energy, and the fabulous 'Dr. Z.'—a speed doctor—with the last two coming out on the negative side. Brinkley, and his goat glands, receive severe treatment. . . . This is a lively and informative book that will have a broad appeal." W. K. Beatty

MCGRADY, P. M.—Continued

Library J 93:3149 S 15 '68 190w

Reviewed by F. G. Slaughter

N Y Times Bk R p40 N 17 '68 370w

MCGRAW, ELOISE JARVIS. Greensleeves. 311p $4.75 Harcourt

68-25191

"Shannon Lightley, child of a broken marriage between two celebrities, in need of time and anonymity to reach a decision about her future, accepts a lawyer friend's offer of a 'detecting' job—to live in the Portland, Oregon, boarding house where old Mrs. Elizabeth Dunningham died, to meet the residents and neighbors who benefited from her eccentric will and to determine if she had been unduly influenced by them." (Library J) "Age twelve and up." (Book World)

"Emotions will be stirred by the author's comprehension for the young in this well-written novel."

Best Sell 28:377 D 1 '68 100w

Reviewed by Madeleine L'Engle

Book World p26 (children's issue) N 3 '68 200w

Christian Science Monitor pB11 N 7 '68 80w

"As a psychological story of a girl's finding herself and learning to understand and enjoy other people and as a love story, the book is superb; the realistic ending leaves the reader hopeful rather than satisfied. Of the author's several good, unusual books, Greensleeves is her most extraordinary achievement." R. H. V. Horn Bk 44:699 D '68 320w

"This traditional young adult boy-meets-girl story, despite the overlay of Shannon's search for identity, shares few of the concerns of contemporary youth. However, the acceptable characterizations and a plot that fairly rockets along should make it attractive to younger or less sophisticated girls with a taste for mild, bittersweet romance." Elva Harmon Library J 93:3984 O 15 '68 260w

MCGRAW, JAMES R., ed. The shadow that scares me. See Gregory, D.*MCGRAW-HILL directory and almanac of Canada, 1967. (V2) 835p maps $17.50 McGraw

317.1 Canada—Directories 66-14579

The first edition of this work was published in Canada, but not in the United States. This second edition contains a 'history and geography of Canada, lists the post offices, railway stations, airports, libraries, museums, art galleries, parks, and so on, and gives information on astronomy, transportation, customs and excise, postal regulations and rates, banks, societies, publishers, education, trade unions, sports, federal and provincial governments, as well as tables of weights, measures, and . . . other facts." (Library J)

"[Changes in the second edition include dropping] the legal directory [and the] section Celebrated Canadians. . . . Stock market information was expanded. . . . The lone bibliography is a brief well-chosen list on Canadian military history. A similar bibliography for the general summary of Canadian history would be a useful addition. . . . [This book] pulls together in one volume a substantial collection of Canadian directory material. Its value is lessened by careless editing, as in the listing of libraries; inadequate and inconsistent indexing as in the indexing of associations; and inadequate revision, as in the listing of secondary-school principals. With the foregoing reservations it is recommended to libraries, especially business libraries which require factual, directory-type information on Canadian subjects." Booklist and S B B 64:1005 My 1 '68 1300w

"Although much of the material duplicates that in the older and better known Canadian Almanac and Directory there is enough difference to justify purchase. . . . The book is clearly printed and well bound . . . and has a good index." N. T. Corley Library J 92:2752 Ag '67 160w

The MCGRAW-HILL encyclopedia of space; foreword by M. Scott Carpenter. 831p il col il maps $27.50 McGraw

629.403 Outer space—Exploration—Dictionaries. Space sciences—Dictionaries. Astro-nautics—Dictionaries 68-26673

The contributors are "an international team of 150 scientists, among them Sir Bernard Lovell, Wernher von Braun, Yuri Gagarin, and James Webb. While . . . the material is made accessible for reference via the . . . index, this is not an A-Z encyclopedia but a series of subdivided chapters beginning with the history of the rocket, going on to artificial satellites, space navigation, life in the universe, astronomy, conquest of the moon, and current astronautics." (Sat R) Index. Originally published in France under the title La Grande Adventure de l'Espace.

"There is probably no other single volume containing more general information than this one, on the international subject of space history and technology. . . . The terminology is definitely nontechnical and the layman will have no difficulty in understanding the text. . . . As with any work that depends upon contributing authors, there is bound to be some material that is not up to date. Another annoyance is that the articles are not signed nor referenced. These minor criticisms are outweighed by the broad coverage and readability of the articles. The book is a joint venture with a French and British publisher which is why British spelling prevails. . . . Recommended for any collection requiring general coverage of the space game." R. E. Swinburne Library J 93:4280 N 15 '68 180w

"[This] is exhaustive on one crucial subject. . . . The ninety-page astronomy chapter alone is a brilliant review of the subject, rendered more valuable by the 1,200 unusual color photos, diagrams, and charts, which make it a breathtaking adventure just to browse through the book. The one thing missing is a nice little first-stage rocket to get it off the shelf." D. M. Glixon

Sat R 51:68 N 16 '68 100w

Reviewed by F. C. Durant

Science 162:1259 D 13 '68 400w

MCGREGOR, CRAIG. The surfing life. See Farrelly, M.*MACGREGOR-HASTIE, ROY. Africa: background for today. 193p il $4 Criterion bks.

960 Africa—History

67-11917

This is "a history of the continent from the earliest known times, touching on the early Empire of Ghana . . . the great civilizations of Mali, Buganda and Zini . . . the history of the slave trade from the 15th to the 19th century, . . . the history of the European 'invasion,' the development of colonial empires . . . [and] the emergence of the new nations after 1945." (Best Sell) "Grades nine to twelve." (Library J)

"[This] book is an excellent introduction to African studies. . . . A 'must purchase' for every school and high school library."

Best Sell 28:195 Ag 1 '68 150w

"[The author] is particularly successful here in showing the interrelationship of many movements and events that have occurred in widely separated parts of Africa. This historical overview is a worthwhile addition to any collection on Africa, although the text deserves a better format. The illustrations, while appropriate, are poorly reproduced; the only map of modern Africa is on the dust jacket; the single map in the book itself, of interest because it shows the slave trade routes, is too small to read easily." Harold Lancour

Library J 93:3984 O 15 '68 120w [YA]

MCHARGUE, GEORGE. The beasts of never; a history natural & un-natural of monsters mythical & magical; il. by Frank Bozzo. 112p $4.50; lib bdg $6 Bobbs

398.4 Animals, Mythical—Juvenile literature 67-18651

This "book about imaginary creatures . . . describes them in all their varied species and, as much as possible, traces their evolution.

Some of these beasts are familiar: the dragon, the unicorn, the sea serpent. Others are less well known . . . the hippogriff, the Roc, the amphisbaena." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index. "Grades five to seven." (Library J)

"An oversize book (8 5/8" x 11 3/8") with full page illustration for each chapter and numerous smaller drawings within the text. . . . The author's direct but mature style, despite the book's format, directs this title to an older age level than the '8 up' given on the jacket. [G.] Soule's The Maybe Monsters [BRD 1963] and The Mystery Monsters are better suited to the 10- to 12-year-olds who want detailed information on strange or mythological animals, but this title . . . will be useful to libraries' hordes of monster fans." Clara Hulton Library J 93:2735 J1 '68 100w

"Dragons and unicorns once seemed as real as household pets, and it is the purpose of this fascinating book to find out why. [The author poses] the thesis that mythical beasts were the product of mortal longing—an attempt to explain, or exorcise, natural phenomena. The approach is both scholarly and entertaining: each beast is presented in terms of origin, the superstitions surrounding it, and its eventual demise. . . . Drawing from myth, folklore, the Bibles, early bestiaries and misguided naturalists, she proves that what does not exist can nevertheless seem real. All children know this, of course, but they will never find it more beautifully stated." Barbara Wersba

N Y Times Bk R p23 J1 28 '68 230w

MACHOL, LIBBY. Gianna. 197p maps $4.95
Beacon press

370.19 American Field Service. International education. Italians in the U.S. Bosco, Gianna 67-24892

"As part of a program arranged by the American Field Service, which brings foreign high-school students to the United States and sends American students abroad, 16-year-old Gianna Bosco of Milan became for a year a member of the Machol family of Teaneck, New Jersey." (N Y Times Bk R) Mrs. Machol gives an account here of the experiences and adjustments of that year.

"A delight from first page to last. . . . The student, Gianna, emerges as a captivating, amusing and warmly human girl. Mrs. Machol describes with rare perception . . . the sometimes frustrating attempts at mutual understanding. The book is a wonderful antidote for the bad press teen-agers have been receiving in recent years. In addition to being a highly readable and absorbing story, it is a tacit plea for better international understanding and a whole-hearted endorsement of the entire American Field Service program. On all three counts the book is required reading for just about everybody interested in fostering better international relationships. It is highly recommended." Lola Dudley

Library J 92:3414 O 1 '67 140w

Reviewed by Beverly Thiede

Library J 93:1824 Ap 15 '68 70w [YA]

"[Gianna's] year was a success, but this enthusiastic recounting by Libby Machol . . . is not. Although Gianna is exceptionally winning and the Machols an ideal family, the girl talk and the teen-age parties are tedious. And there are too many built-in puffs for A.F.S. So we have a rather dullish book that might have made an interesting magazine article."

N Y Times Bk R p24 D 10 '67 160w

"Not often does a book with a message have charm, but the engaging Gianna is so vividly described by her 'American mother' that her invasion of Teaneck, New Jersey, casts into shadow the rival attractions of the American Field Service International Scholarship Program. . . . The AFS program is discussed in detail, but it is a program worth propagandizing. The author writes well, and she has astutely realized that the benefits and joys of contributing to international understanding don't need to be labored but are implicit in the true story of Gianna's reaction to the United States." Zena Sutherland

Sat R 50:36 D 16 '67 140w [YA]

MCILWRAITH, MAUREEN MOLLIE HUNTER (MCVEIGH). See Hunter, M.

MCINERNY, RALPH. Jolly Rogerson. 261p
$4.95 Doubleday

67-19092

"Matthew Rogerson is a professor at a small liberal arts college in the Midwest. After teaching for about 20 years he believes that he is a failure in his career and in his home life. Having acknowledged this much, Rogerson decides that he might as well be a huge failure. As a consequence, some of his acts put the campus in turmoil and create animosity among the faculty and administration. In spite of his attempts to be a failure, his class attendance increases, he is voted the best teacher of the year, and he becomes somewhat of a success." (Library J)

Reviewed by V. J. Colimore

Best Sell 27:346 D 1 '67 380w

"Throughout the book there is a great deal of soul searching and personal recrimination. At times it is somewhat difficult to understand the sequences. This is largely a book for the public library although it may be of interest in academic circles." D. E. Thompson

Library J 92:3446 O 1 '67 150w

"McInerny's characterization of his protagonist, a mediocre humanities professor at a mediocre university, begins where most such portraits leave off. Unpopular, unhappy, filled with the 'sullen depression' of an arid middle age, Matt Rogerson decides to take an active hand in his own destruction. . . . However, Mr. McInerny is not content to invent a string of amusing paradoxes for their own sake. There is a vein of sadness in the slapstick, for the professor's absurdities illuminate the predicament of a reflective, mid-century man whose sensibilities are too finely tuned for comfort." Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p68 N 26 '67 180w

Va Q R 44:lvi spring '68 80w

MACINNES, HELEN. The Salzburg connection. 406p $5.95 Harcourt

68-24394

A chest buried in a lake of the Austrian Alps contains a list of men "who had secretly aided Hitler's cause, and who one day hence, when the time had ripened, could be blackmailed into doing so again. Photographer Richard Bryant learns of the chest [and is killed]. . . . Bill Mathieson, a young lawyer representing a New York publisher . . . stumbles into the chest intrigues . . . [becoming] a sort of amateur arm of the C.I.A. . . . The streets of Salzburg and Unterwald become thronged with agents of every stripe. The Russians want the chest destroyed: they have a copy of the list and would like to put it to the same use as the Nazis. The Allies (America, Britain and Austria are well represented) want the list to neutralize the Russian holding." (N Y Times Bk R)

Reviewed by W. B. Hill

America 119:564 N 30 '68 50w

"This is, possibly, the best thing [the author] has done. It has everything—authentic background . . . the Cold War operatives are dangerous and [there is a complicated plot]. . . . Miss MacInnes (Mrs. Gilbert Highet) has another block-buster best-seller to her credit and hurray for her! And hurray, also, for the reader who is bored to death with sick psychology and sick sex and stupid sociological case histories. This lady knows how to write superbly. And knowing how, she does it." Richard Conlin

Best Sell 28:236 S 15 '68 400w

Reviewed by Pamela Marsh

Christian Science Monitor p16 O 3 '68 250w

Harper 237:131 D '68 50w

Reviewed by Jane Manthorne

Horn Bk 44:715 D '68 160w [YA]

Reviewed by M. K. Grant

Library J 93:3023 S 1 '68 140w

Reviewed by Laurie May

Library J 93:4740 D 15 '68 120w [YA]

Reviewed by P. L. Buckley

Nat R 21:34 Ja 14 '69 230w

"A fascinating exercise in wide-screen spy-manship. . . . The appeal [of the author's books], I think, lies in [her] unflinching eye for vivid backgrounds; in her deft control of complex story-lines; in her clean-cut presentation of each important member of her casts. These combined qualities have given her fiction a kind of grandeur, a romantic overtone suggesting knights in mortal combat. Since 'Above Suspicion' [BRD 1941] she has won and deserved a far wider readership than the average whodunit carpenter, however expert." A. H. Hubin

MACINNES, HELEN—Continued

N Y Times Bk R p46 S 15 '68 420w

Reviewed by Sergeant Cuff

Sat R 51:43 S 28 '68 30w

MACINTOSH, ALEX, jt. auth. The principles and practice of aikido. See Yamada, S.

MCINTOSH, ANGUS. Patterns of language; papers in general, descriptive and applied linguistics [by] Angus McIntosh [and] M. A. K. Halliday. 199p $6 ind. univ. press

410 Language and languages 67-63010

"A collection, previously published in England in 1966, of 11 papers by the coauthors. McIntosh is Forbes Professor of English Language and General Linguistics at the University of Edinburgh, and Halliday is Professor of General Linguistics at the University of London. Several of the articles deal with linguistics applied to literary analysis. Others are on descriptive linguistics itself or on linguistics applied to language teaching, and one, by Halliday, deals with linguistics and machine translation. Only McIntosh's 'A Four-Letter Word in Lady Chatterley's Lover' (the word is 'know') has not heretofore been published." (Choice)

"In all the articles the concern is with the patterns, however complex, that underlie all language activity. Not as wide in scope as existing American linguistics readers, . . . the book appears to be more difficult reading, but for persons with the requisite background the articles should be stimulating as well as informative."

Choice 4:1113 D '67 180w

TLS p1102 N 24 '66 700w

MCINTOSH, KIM HAMILTON. See Aird, C.

MCINTYRE, W. DAVID. The imperial frontier in the tropics, 1865-75; a study of British colonial policy in West Africa, Malaya and the South Pacific in the age of Gladstone and Disraeli. 421p maps $11 St Martins

325.3 Great Britain—Colonies [67-194031]

The author's main concern in this study is with the question of "how decisions involving Britain in policies and acts of imperial expansion were actually made. To answer it he takes three case-studies—West Africa, the Malay States and Fiji." (New Statesman) Bibliography. Index.

"A successful example of the interrelating of regional case studies in order to examine hoary generalizations about the British Empire. . . . McIntyre's belief in multiple causation at times obscures the narrative for the unwary reader, but his sophisticated interpretation is surely closer to the truth than those of the monistic theorists of empire. . . . Recommended for libraries in schools with British Empire courses."

Choice 5:1020 O '68 190w

Reviewed by Thomas Hodgkin

New Statesman 75:271 Mr 1 '68 360w

"The virtue of this study . . . lies in the author's sympathetic and practical appreciation of how the current Commonwealth evolved. Understanding this in real terms, he has the more readily grasped the significance of certain lesser aspects of its growth. . . . All Imperiophiles must in turn lift their hats to Professor McIntyre. Not only has he saved them much hard labour. He has at the same time produced a book both erudite and readable."

TLS p147 F 15 '68 280w

Va Q 44:clxx autumn '68 130w

MACIVER, R. M. As a tale that is told; the autobiography of R. M. MacIver. 269p il $7.50 Univ. of Chicago press

B or 92

68-15632

A former president of the New School for Social Research, author of The Prevention and Control of Delinquency (BRD 1967) and professor of political science, describes his life and work in this biography written in his eighty-sixth year. Chronology. Index.

Reviewed by E. C. Hughes

Am J Soc 74:193 S '68 1100w

"The long, productive life and career of MacIver . . . author of Social Causation [BRD 1942], The Web of Government [BRD 1947], and numerous other publications—is recorded simply and with unaffected modesty in this autobiography. . . . The book's value lies in his trenchant comments on those subjects closest to his experience, such as teaching and modern education in the university, religion, and the development of modern social science. Concerning the latter, MacIver's views have always been controversial—and this book will do nothing to change that. . . . [A] readable, instructive, and humane memoir of special interest to students of social science."

Choice 5:1334 D '68 200w

"MacIver was always the maverick, and his autobiography is salty and individualistic."

Christian Century 85:487 Ap 17 '68 40w

"This autobiography by an eminent sociologist and political philosopher is really a personal prescription for living and not an intimate revelation about himself or his associates. . . . Mr. MacIver . . . shows that personal happiness can be obtained in spite of world wars, nuclear arms, and even Vietnam, for happiness is the result of hard work and commitment balanced with diversion, be it bridge, golf, or ice skating. When he mentions delicate personal relationships . . . he gives no details. The reader is warned, however, in the book's opening paragraph that 'everyone is a prejudiced witness of events that he participated in,' and not to expect any self justifications. Recommended to academic libraries, but only after Dr. MacIver's other works in print have been purchased." B. H. Holicky

Library J 93:1472 Ap 1 '68 150w

MACK, RAYMOND W., ed. Our children's burden; studies of desegregation in nine American communities; ed. and with an intro. by Raymond W. Mack. 473p $8.95 Random house

370.19 Segregation in education 67-14473

"In this collection of reports, which began as a project for the United States Civil Rights Commission, the authors examine just what happened in [nine] American cities when they decided to (or were forced to) respond to the Supreme Court decision. . . . [The authors have provided a] view into the ways in which community governments operate, the effectiveness of pressure groups, and in a number of cases, the courage and integrity of individuals, white and black." (Publisher's note) Index.

"How do the North and the South differ in methods and rates of desegregation? Expertly using the current 'impressionistic sociology' research technique, this well-conceived and stirring written volume gives an illuminating set of answers. . . . This is an outstanding book, essential for academic and large public libraries." E. M. Oboler

Library J 93:2485 Je 15 '68 90w

"Of uneven quality and widely differing styles, the informative reports are nonetheless proffered with the acknowledgement of relatively brief field work. Anecdotal for the most part, the sketches confirm Mack's conclusion that in asking, 'What does the Negro American want?' one need only rephrase by striking out the word 'Negro.'" John Calam

Sat R 51:121 N 16 '68 60w

MACK, RAYMOND W. Transforming America; patterns of social change; consulting ed: Charles H. Page. 199p $4.95; pa $2.95 Random house

309.173 U.S.—Social conditions. U.S.—Economic conditions—1945- 67-11696

The author attempts to show "how the pace of scientific advance has forced upon American society changes so vast—and so swift—that they challenge present arrangements for social survival. [He analyzes] the social problems posed by change in at least five basic areas that are vital to the continuation of any society: population replacement, education, the role of political power, the distribution of wealth, and the sense of purpose that binds the society together." (Publisher's note) Annotated bibliography. Name index. Subject index.

"Intended for the general reader, Mack . . . sums up in plain language some key social trends in American society. . . . The style is admirably clear yet concrete. The work exemplifies both strengths and weaknesses of American sociology, emphasizing many major changes, yet remaining parochial in certain respects. Only the chapter on population trends is set in a worldwide context. The significance of the domestic black revolt and of the intensifying confrontation with socialist revolutions abroad is underestimated. The book . . . probably is the best that academic sociology can produce at this time."

Choice 5:272 Ap '68 170w

"Somewhere along the line, Mr. Mack's digest of social developments becomes an oversimplified, hackneyed, personal commentary on a subject far beyond his purpose: whither America? The book is for readers who are not yet aware that the industrial and technological revolutions have radically changed our society, that there should be educational opportunities for all (including Negroes) . . . and that upward mobility (translated as 'the success ethic') dominates the American value system." K. F. Kister

Library J 92:2797 Ag '67 160w

Reviewed by Valeria Gregory

Library J 92:4276 N 15 '67 70w [YA]

MCKAY, ERNEST A. The Macmillan job guide to American corporations; for college graduates, graduate students, and junior executives. 374p $7.95; pa $3.95 Macmillan (N Y)

331.1 Corporations. Occupations 66-20820

This book contains profiles of more than 250 United States corporations, "giving for each a brief description of the company's products, facilities, and major activities. The company's general needs for scientific and professional degree holders are elaborated upon, with a brief description of fringe benefits. Types of companies included are manufacturing, merchandising, utilities, financial, and others." (Choice) Index to corporations. Index to companies by academic background. Geographical index of home offices.

"The companies listed seem to be a random sample, not necessarily the largest; in fact, some rather small companies. Therefore, this is not nearly as exhaustive and complete as the College Placement Annual. . . . [However] the Job Guide contains lengthier and more complete information about the companies listed."

Choice 4:1226 Ja '68 130w

"This work falls woefully short of its ambitious aims. . . . [It] hardly touches upon the realities of the various job categories. And the author has completely omitted any mention whatsoever of salary ranges for executives, or the differences therein at the companies mentioned. Prospective job-seekers will find little help in this 'guide.' Not for libraries without budgets for window dressing." Paul Sarnoff

Library J 91:5392 N 1 '66 140w

"The clear, concise treatment is useful not only to the student, but to guidance and placement officers. Recommended for college, university, public, and school libraries." B. A. Begg

Library J 92:1144 Mr 15 '67 120w

MACKAY, MARGARET. The violent friend; the story of Mrs Robert Louis Stevenson. 566p il $8.95 Doubleday

B or 92 Stevenson, Fanny (Van de Grift) Osbourne. Stevenson, Robert Louis 64-13369

A biography of the woman whose second husband was Robert Louis Stevenson. Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by Maurice Adelman

America 119:510 N 30 '68 70w

"If Margaret MacKay's feeling for her subject is not love it comes close to it. Fanny Stevenson emerges from this book as a remarkable individual, undimmed by her husband's shadow and without as much as a trace of the smell of dusty documents or closed-up attics. Not that Miss MacKay is dazzled. She recognizes that Fanny's fierce determination to preserve her husband's health at all costs was often resented by Stevenson and his friends and surely played a part in the spells of insanity that plagued her later years. . . . Miss MacKay devotes long pages to the South Sea Islands, to fascinating encounters with savage kings, to the constant building of home after primitive home. Best of all, there are constant revealing glimpses of the Stevensons themselves." Pamela Marsh

Christian Science Monitor p7 Je 20 '68 750w

"This book is a laudable attempt . . . to correct the unjust bias against Frances [Stevenson]. The author . . . succeeds in this by skillful writing supported by scholarly research. The reader is convinced of her objective and fair judgment, but does not sense her personal warmth or sympathy for her subject. Born and educated in the United States, the author, like Mrs. Stevenson, has lived and traveled much abroad and so writes knowingly of faraway places. In her time, Fanny Stevenson was considered daring and controversial; certainly her life was exciting and colorful. This book will be useful in any literary collection." M. S. Minnick

Library J 93:1473 Ap 1 '68 110w

"This captivating book is likely to remain the definitive biography of Fanny Stevenson for a long time to come. . . . Without a touch of pedantry or, on the other hand, without once attempting to novelize her biography, . . . [the author] allows the facts to speak for themselves. She has kept herself completely out of her book. Her meticulous scholarship has impelled her to read everything and see everything that might possibly touch upon her subject. What results is not only a sense of the richly lived lives of two extraordinary people— . . . it was inevitable that the book should be a complete biography of Stevenson too—but also full-length portraits of the many literary persons connected with them." Bernard Grebanier

N Y Times Bk R p8 My 19 '68 1100w

New Yorker 44:88 Jl 27 '68 110w

Va Q R 44:clxi autumn '68 220w

MACKAY, R. STUART. Bio-medical telemetry; sensing and transmitting biological information from animals and man. 388p il $12.50 Wiley

591 Telemeter (physiological apparatus) 67-31210

This volume, "part practical handbook, part survey and review, . . . [discusses] the basic transistor circuitry used for [bio-medical] . . . studies. The detail goes beyond circuits to . . . ways of assembling the little broadcasters to keep them working in an alligator's stomach or a rabbit's eye." (Sci Am)

"[This should] be of interest to both beginners in the field and those only casually interested in telemetry. The neophyte will not find the reading easy because a certain technical understanding has been assumed. . . . The casual reader will enjoy the book because Mackay has a readable style which imparts the information without a stereotyped textbook approach."

Choice 5:1324 D '68 110w

"This book is a definitive presentation of the most important considerations—biological, engineering, and clinical—of working with biotelemetry. It will be a standard reference for the scientist wishing to gain a comprehensive introduction to this new, rapidly growing field." J. H. Zar

Library J 93:2674 Jl '68 120w

"This [is a] fascinating and helpful text. . . . The field is about a decade old; the author . . . begins the book with the simple, small and reliable circuit he used then. The book continues at a level of detail that would probably enable a fairly experienced amateur to complete the work. . . . There is even a table of how much drug to use to induce a Bengal tiger to hold still for the broadcast installation. The law is here too. . . . The volume is an exemplar of book design."

Sci Am 219:258 S '68 550w

MACKAY, SHENA. Old crow. 157p $4.50 McGraw

68-11932

This is the story of "an English village belle, Coral Fairbrother, who is seduced . . . by an itinerant painter. Having thus fallen from the village's grace, Coral plummets into ever greater depths of disgrace. The village, whose women once envied her, whose men coveted her, now mocks and rejects Coral. Their leering tolerance soon turns to evil. And at last the villagers join a malicious widow [Stella Oates] in the all-out persecution of this girl who has never, consciously, done any harm." (Publisher's note)

MACKAY, SHENA—Continued

Reviewed by Mary Zavada
Best Sell 27:453 Mr 1 '68 330w

Reviewed by Maybelle Lacey
Library J 93:96 Ja 1 '68 150w

"[This novel] reminds me of the fiction in high-school literary magazines: it abounds in 'stark' imagery that passes for talent at an early age, but it is essentially juiceless and pallid. . . . [The events] aim at the seacoast of surrealism but founder on the shoals of adolescent fantasy." Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p40 F 25 '68 190w

"Shena Mackay's parable . . . uncovers the numbed mediocrity of spirit with which we strive to tame and control nature, only to violate it and our own humanity. . . . [Miss Mackay] is a diabolist, who races in swift pursuit of the tiny cruelties that wear the face of civilized intentions and grow to monstrous crimes. . . . [It is] a dated story, perhaps slightly preposterous. . . . But Miss Mackay's intention, in which she succeeds powerfully, is to transform the ancient scapegoat myth into a not-quite surrealist (because its elements are always homely and identifiable) nightmare of our present dilemma. . . . A reader follows [Miss Mackay's] lead, a bit dazed, through a landscape of hostile, mutilating objects. . . . There is such a multiplicity of targets [that] . . . despite its varied and witty particularity, the story is not quite controlled. . . . Information and psychological clues are withheld, so that the characters seem only partially glimpsed. [Yet] Old Crow is a book that should relieve critical worries about the novel's future." Muriel Haynes

Sat R 51:30 Mr 2 '68 800w

"Here, as in her earlier novels, Shena Mackay evokes a battle between children and adults. Coral is less a woman who prefers her own moral standards than a child embattled against authority. . . . The adult world is portrayed with the contempt of a rebellious teenager, and this has a distinctly limiting effect—strong characters are cruel and usually hypocrites and the weak are pathetic. There are times when Miss Mackay's callousness seems ostentatious. . . . The moral is crude but the novel's macabre encounters between predator and prey are handled with notable precision and the short elliptical scenes occasionally swell into lyricism. . . . It is a pity that she hasn't used [her verbal inventiveness] more purposefully." TLS p525 Je 15 '67 430w

MCKEAN, ROLAND N., ed. Issues in defense economics. See Universities-National bureau committee for economic research

MACKEN, WALTER. The flight of the Doves. 200p lib bdg $4.50 Macmillan (N Y)

68-12083

"Finn Dove and his little sister Derval live a beaten-down existence with their stepfather in a town in England, until Finn makes a decision. Minus the boat fare and with only a hazy idea of her whereabouts, they decide to make a dash for their grandmother in Ireland. An unexpected legacy to the children complicates the plot. Soon the police are on their trail and the race is on to see whether stepfather or grandmother will get them first. . . . Ages nine to thirteen." (N Y Times Bk R)

Reviewed by Ethna Sheehan
America 119:656 D 21 '68 50w

"Macken had the wonderful storytelling gift of the Irish. Never did he spin a more engrossing or affecting tale than his last one (he died in 1967) or create a more endearing character than Finn, whose protective love for his little sister and his goodness shine brightly from these pages." Polly Goodwin

Book World p4 (children's issue) My 1 '68 280w

Christian Science Monitor pB7 My 2 '68 100w

"The author permits the events themselves to create and maintain suspense; the action is almost underplayed in writing that is artlessly simple, sensitive but unsentimental, terse but compassionate. Many of the most interesting characters appear only briefly but are delineated with great skill: diabolical, hypocritical Uncle Toby; the detective Michael, shrewd but tenderhearted; Moses, the gypsy boy, unwashed, worldly-wise, and generous; and at the end of the tale, laconic, forthright Granny O'Flaherty, representing the love and security the children have so desperately sought." E. L. H.

Horn Bk 44:325 Je '68 210w

"Anybody who has ever tried to board a boat without a ticket will doubt the ease with which Finn and Derval cross the Irish Sea. But these are attractive kids, and they find plenty of helping hands—Nickser, the rascally truck driver who advises them to 'Keep laughing, nobody pays you for crying, unless you are working in an onion factory,' a band of gypsies. The sights and sounds of Ireland are in this book, the seedy streets and the pinched urban existence as well as the blue mountains in the distance. The impetus, however, lies in the characters of Finn and Derval. They shine out like two good little deeds in a naughty world." Kate McQuade

N Y Times Bk R p23 J1 28 '68 190w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland
Sat R 51:39 Mr 16 '68 120w

TLS p588 Je 6 '68 160w

MCKENNA, JAMES B., ed. A Spaniard in the Portuguese Indies. See Figueroa, M. F. de

MCKENNA, SISTER MARY LAWRENCE. Women of the church; role and renewal; foreword by Jean Daniélou. 192p $4.95 Kenedy

271 Church history—Primitive and early church 67-26804

A "study of the ecclesial women of the early Church—the orders of deaconesses, virgins and widows—the aim of which is to set the reforming women's religious orders of today in a broader historical context." (Commonweal) Index.

"A scholarly and interesting study."

Commonweal 87:390 D 22 '67 40w

"Because of the prevailing mood of risorgimento inspired by Vatican II, the scope of interest in this book should be wider than the title suggests. . . . The modern woman—secular and religious—will find here that an active and vital participation in the Church has strong traditional foundations, and that the current Church teaching on the religious life . . . is not so avant-garde as it may seem. . . . [The] study is recommended for libraries in religious institutions and for those large public libraries with wide circulation for books on religion and modern life." E. R. Nelson

Library J 92:4420 D 1 '67 170w

MCKENNY, MARGARET, jt. auth. A field guide to wildflowers of Northeastern and North-Central North America. See Peterson, R. T.

MACKENZIE, SIR ALEXANDER. Exploring the Northwest territory; Sir Alexander Mackenzie's journal of a voyage by bark canoe from Lake Athabasca to the Pacific Ocean in the summer of 1789; ed. by T. H. McDonald. 133p pl $4.95 Univ. of Okla. press

917.12 Northwest, Canadian—Description and travel. Indians of North America—Canada. Fur trade 66-22719

Mackenzie's journal was first published in 1801, but was a revised version of the original manuscript. The present edition "has been taken directly from a transcription of the manuscript in the British Museum. Since, however, it is not a facsimile, the editor has taken certain minor liberties with mechanical style in the interest of clarity and ease of reading. . . . Throughout the text, annotations point out variations between the Journal and the published book and delineate the sections that appear to have been reworked." (Editor's introd) Bibliography. Index.

"The techniques used in this edition of Mackenzie's journal give it maximum value. A critical comparison of [the original manuscript] and the 1801 edition of the Voyages, explained in concise but numerous notes, clarifies many questions. . . . This careful comparative study . . . will be a time-saving tool for further study of Mackenzie's epic journey and of the area in which it took place. A twenty-page introduction summarizes the stories of contemporary expeditions, comments on major works, and interprets significant features of the journal. The format is attractive, and the maps and illustrations are useful." M. G. Burlingame

J Am Hist 54:880 Mr '68 160w

"While less polished and less readable than the 1801 revision, this version is undoubtedly more accurate. It gives the full flavor of that remarkable adventure. The edition is excellent. Although the introduction tends to be little more than a listing of explorers, the journal itself has been well prepared. Throughout, Mr. McDonald . . . illuminates the text with his own experiences on a canoe trip over the same route, carried out in 1965. The book will serve as a valuable reference for historians and, with its graphic descriptions of the natives, for anthropologists. It also has all the elements of a great adventure story." M. S. Cross
Library J 92:773 F 15 '67 200w

MACKENZIE, DAVID. The Serbs and Russian pan-slavism, 1875-1878. 365p il maps $10 Cornell univ. press

327.47 Serbia—Foreign relations. Russia—Foreign relations—Serbia. Pan-Slavism. Balkan Peninsula—Politics 67-12306

Basing this study on "Yugoslav, Russian, Austrian, and English archives, . . . [the author traces] the political and military conflicts of the Serbian, Austro-Hungarian, Turkish, Montenegrin, and Russian interests in the Balkans during the . . . period which resulted in the freeing of Bulgaria from Turkish rule and the occupation of Bosnia by Austria-Hungary." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by W. D. McClellan
Am Hist R 73:1138 Ap '68 400w

"MacKenzie offers us a new interpretation of the Eastern Crisis as it affected Russia and the South Slavs. . . . [His] findings are most interesting. . . . Although the primary emphasis is on Serbia and its national aspirations, Bosnia, Herzegovina, Montenegro, and the Voivodina are also treated at some length. Since nationalist organizations and the press played significant roles in the events of the 1870's, the author devotes considerable attention to public opinion and the early use of mass media in forming national consciousness. He also examines the views and activities of such prominent Russian Pan-Slavs as Ivan Aksakov, M. G. Cherniaev, and N. P. Ignatiev, and Foreign Minister G. Jovan Ristic of Serbia. The result of ten years of research, MacKenzie's study is a distinguished, if not a remarkable, contribution to American historical scholarship." J. S. Roucek

Ann Am Acad 376:161 Mr '68 500w

"In part, this volume provides background for V. Dedijer's The Road to Sarajevo [BRD 1966] and clearly dovetails with Tsarist Russia and Balkan Nationalism: Russian Influence in the Internal Affairs of Bulgaria and Serbia, by C. Jelavich [BRD 1959]. MacKenzie's study is a specialized scholarly work with a somewhat difficult style. He does attempt to a degree to sketch the economic and cultural background of the events he describes. A valuable and useful book to the specialist but not essential to undergraduate collections in a relatively small library."

Choice 4:1306 Ja '68 200w

MACKENZIE, NORMAN. ed. Secret societies. 350p il col il maps col maps $9.95 Holt

366 Secret societies 68-10787

A collection of pieces written for this publication. "Chapters include 'Primitive Secret Societies,' 'Mau Mau,' 'Thuggee,' 'The Mysteries,' 'The Assassins and the Knights Templar,' 'Rosicrucians,' 'Freemasonry,' 'Nationalist and Chinese Secret Societies,' 'The Mafia,' and 'The Ku Klux Klan.' Appendixes cover 'Raising to 3d Degree Masonry,' 'Reception of an Apprentice Carbonaro,' and 'Initiation into the KKK.'" (Library J)

"The main part of the book consists of competent historical narrative, based mostly on the available secondary literature, and remarkably beautiful and numerous illustrations, of which the medieval ones are perhaps the most ravishing. Visually this is a very attractive volume. Michael Mendelson's chapter on primitive societies and Barbara Ward's on the Chinese are easily the most valuable parts of the text. Only one chapter is useless, that on the nationalist secret societies, since it consistently confuses ritual brotherhoods with merely illegal movements, and says little of interest about either. By no means all statements in the book are reliable. . . . [However,] this is an intelligent and well-written introduction and it is a pleasure to look at." R. J. Hobsbawm

Book World p6 Mr 17 '68 700w

Christian Century 85:359 Mr 20 '68 100w

Economist 227:xii Ap 27 '68 240w

"This is an interesting book for the casual reader in public and high school libraries who wants only an acquaintance with the purposes and activities of some of the world's major secret societies. . . . Minority groups will find a sympathetic but often patronizing air of tolerance, but there is some good balance between historical and socioeconomic explanations of the origins and activities of secret societies. However, as usual, competent scholars could argue against a number of points. None of the contributors is identified except by name in the table of contents. . . . The text, while it reads well in most parts, suffers from sensationalism, as do many of the excellent photographs. . . . The reviewer's lack of enthusiasm, surely should not discourage readers of popular non-fiction however, since the book may have some usefulness for libraries that have little or nothing else on the subject." Lee Ash

Library J 93:1138 Mr 15 '68 200w [YA]

Reviewed by Robert Berkqvist

N Y Times Bk R p49 My 12 '68 210w

"MacKenzie, a former editor of the New Statesman and now a professor of sociology, farmed out the chapters of this curious book to writers whose styles vary from arid academic to lucid, immediate and graceful. . . . MacKenzie's thesis that these groups have a common set of dynamics, is happily disregarded by his best scribes, who prefer to detail the sometimes gruesome, sometimes ludicrous and sad histories of these fraternities of odd fellows." P. D. Zimmerman

Newsweek 71:103A Mr 18 '68 600w

TLS p316 Mr 28 '68 1000w

MACKERNES, E. D. ed. The journals of George Sturt, 1890-1927, 2v. See Sturt, G.

MACKERRAS, COLIN. China observed [by] Colin Mackerras & Neale Hunter. 194p pl $5.95 Praeger

915.1 China (People's Republic of China). Communism—China 68-19649

Two young Australian teachers who spent 1964-1967 teaching English in Red China describe the Chinese people as they saw them. The "family, the cities, the communes, religion, the arts, education, conflicts and accommodations between the old and the new, the Chinese Communist Party and Chairman Mao . . . and Chinese attitudes toward the outside world are all discussed." (Publisher's note) Index.

"[The authors] left just as the chaotic Cultural Revolution was getting underway. In this delightfully well-written book they present glimpses of life in contemporary China. . . . If their observations are not particularly profound, they are nevertheless admirably level-headed. Mr. Mackerras and Mr. Hunter capture, above all, the spirit and tempo of China under Communism. What was intended to be the highlight of the book, namely, the nature of the Cultural Revolution is a disappointment. . . . [but the] book will appeal to both the informed layman and the specialist." Hyman Kublin

Library J 93:2239 Je 1 '68 140w

Reviewed by Margaret Prang

Pacific Affairs 41:424 fall '68 200w

"[This] is a dispassionate account, without rhetorical flourishes, reflecting unusual understanding of Chinese attitudes. . . . Mr. Hunter's description of the vicissitudes of the cultural revolution in Shanghai is a superb contribution to understanding this complex movement. . . . My only objection to China Observed is the authors' occasional lapses into naïveté. [They] are naturally at their best in relating their own experiences. Mr. Mackerras has written an excellent description of life at the Foreign Languages Institute in Peking, where he taught. He points out the difficulties in trying to teach elementary English from Mao's translated works, and he makes interesting observations on the indifferent health of students and teachers at the Institute. There is also an intriguing discussion of the effects of prolonged separation of husbands and wives in the Chinese academic community." Welles Hangen

MACKERRAS, COLIN—Continued

Sat R 51:28 J1 27 '68 370w

MACKINTOSH, DUNCAN, comp. A collection of Chinese lyrics; rendered into verse by Alan Ayling from translations of the Chinese by Duncan Mackintosh; foreword by F. T. Cheng; calligraphy by Lee Yim and on the il. by Chang Chien Ying; il. by Fei Ch'eng Wu. 254p $7.50 Vanderbilt Univ. press

895.1 Chinese poetry—Collections 67-13118

This collection "of Chinese Lyrics (tz'u), with the T'ang and Sung dynasties predominant, covers a period of one thousand years (about A.D. 750-1800). . . . The Chinese original of each poem faces the English and is written in Chinese scholar's . . . calligraphy. A 'Note on the Development of the Chinese Lyric' and several Appendixes provide the reader with . . . social, cultural and historical background." (Publisher's note) Chronology. Index.

"A very good and rather specialized sort of anthology. . . . Some thirty pages of notes discuss background and allusions. . . . The Chinese text is given . . . without transliteration into western form and without any literal translation, therefore charming in appearance but rather disturbingly useless to most readers. The translations themselves are very well done. If lines occasionally seem forced and artificial, the reader may rest assured that the Chinese occasionally seems the same. Probably the most moving among them are nearly twenty poems by the tragic last emperor of the Southern T'ang dynasty, Li Yü. . . . There are in addition strikingly beautiful songs by Su Shih." R. E. Teele

Poetry 112:283 J1 '68 360w

"This collection of tz'u lyrics is a bold attempt to capture something of the special flavour that comes from a combination of rhyme, tone and an irregular though regulated rhythm. Perhaps Mr. Ayling and Mr. Mackintosh have tried too hard to preserve the original form; rhymes in English tend to have a clogging effect that Chinese ones do not. It was a good idea to print the originals of the poems so that readers could persuade Chinese friends to recite them; it might have been an even better one to have included one or two plates of, say, Su Shih's poems in his own calligraphy. While the somewhat old-fashioned translations will not be to everyone's liking this book deserves respect as a conscientious labour of love and a pioneering venture in a neglected field."

TLS p244 Mr 24 '66 550w

MACKINTOSH, MALCOLM. Juggernaut: a history of the Soviet armed forces. 320p il maps $6.95 Macmillan (N Y)

355.3 Russia—Armed Forces. Russia—History, Military 66-21982

"In 1918 the Russian Armed Forces consisted of millions of disaffected and starving men and an officer corps threatened with mutiny. . . . [This book] traces the rise of the [Red Army] from these ominous beginnings to the Cold War and the space race of the 1960s." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"Mr. Mackintosh is an authoritative writer who marshals his materials in a readable and informative manner. . . . Juggernaut provides an excellent introduction to the complex relations of the military and political elites and to the evolution of their respective roles in the Soviet Union. . . . One would have liked to see a somewhat better balance in the treatment of the several historical periods. It is rather disappointing to see the whole post-war period treated in two slim chapters. . . . The author's generous use of rather obscure personalities and events may possibly tax the general reader's interest and attention. These, however, are minor points. . . . Mackintosh performs an extremely valuable service to the expert and to the layman." Roman Kolkowicz

Am Pol Sci R 62:657 Je '68 1300w

"A concise history . . . [based] largely on major published works in Russian and English. [Mackintosh] emphasizes the major bat-les of World War II—Moscow, Stalingrad, and the Kursk salient—and the pre-war developments. His is a good, noncontroversial account of military strategy in the major Army encounters and the major shifts in organization. The book could be useful in any collection." William Newman

Library J 92:2771 Ag '67 100w

MACKIRDY, KENNETH A., ed. Changing perspectives in Canadian history; ed. by Kenneth A. MacKirdy, John S. Moir [and] Yves F. Zoltvany. 373p $8.75 Univ. of Notre Dame press

971 Canada—History—Sources 67-30412

This book is designed for introductory college survey courses in Canadian history. It consists of twenty-one studies which "trace Canadian history from the years of French domination through the period of British settlement and expansion, and . . . illustrate the development of Canada's two distinct cultures. [It] explains the partial resolution of [Anglo-French differences] and examines the possibility of national harmony in Canada." (Publisher's note) Chapter bibliographies.

"For the most part, the editors have provided a series of contemporary statements on the problem under discussion, have given an excerpt from early scholarship, and then have provided a reinterpretive essay from the last two decades. While some of the selections are too short to be meaningful to the non-Canadian reader, the editors have compensated somewhat through succinct introductory notes and a number of footnotes. . . . Should be purchased by . . . small libraries."

Choice 5:676 J1 '68 120w

"The title is somewhat misleading, for the perspectives are anything but new: the problems chosen are traditional ones like the Quebec Act, responsible government, dominion status, all heavily weighted to political questions. But the choice of documents and historical commentaries is excellent on almost every problem, and the emphasis placed on contemporary questions, such as French-English relations and middle power foreign relations, is both unusual and welcome in a text of this kind. It is probably, then, the best book of its kind." M. S. Cross

Library J 93:2237 Je 1 '68 100w

MCKUEN, ROD. Listen to the warm. 113p $3.95 Random house

811 67-22668

Most of these poems "are the lyrics of songs already recorded by the author. . . . The poems deal with love, loneliness, the alienation of our present era, and the need of people to reach one another. The first section of the volume, 'Listen to the Warm,' is a continuous narrative poem; the following sections, 'The Grand Opening Going-Out-of-Business Sale' and 'Twenty-Two Songs,' are individual shorter poems." (Publisher's note)

"Like many skilled popular songsters, McKuen can achieve a forceful combination of words. In this collection he mis-combines too often, i.e. much of the poetry smacks of today's relevant wit, but is forgotten the next day. Light verse for light libraries."

Choice 4:1117 D '67 50w

Reviewed by Louis Simpson
Harper 237:76 Ag '68 140w

"The language of Mr. McKuen's poems lacks excitement and flavor. One is not moved by either the words or the images. Limited to large poetry collections in public and university libraries." Jerome Cushman

Library J 92:2785 Ag '67 200w

Reviewed by Collin Clark
Library J 92:4274 N 15 '67 90w [YA]

MCKUEN, ROD. Lonesome cities. 111p $3.95 Random house

811 68-28568

This volume of poetry "details a man's journey around the world in an attempt to find himself. . . . Thirteen lyrics from [McKuen's] most recent songs [are included]." (Publisher's note)

"It is irrelevant to speak of McKuen as a poet. His poetry is not even trash. . . . The downhill speed of American poetry in the last decade has been breath-taking. . . . We are entertained with the fecal-buccal carnival of the Naughties who have their own magazines and publishing houses, and the lovelorn alienates and disaffiliates who croon their way into the respectable publishing establishment. McKuen falls into the latter category. . . . No one, least of all this reviewer, would wish McKuen ill. He is himself intelligently modest about his accomplishments. It is his publicists who fail him." Karl Shapiro

Book World p4 N 24 '68 900w

"McKuen's new collection of poems concerns the many stops in his wandering life and retains the qualities that have built his strong YA appeal—romance, nostalgia, and a certain gutsiness that makes his a voice for Now. . . . McKuen manages to share with his readers in each poem his acute awareness and sense of fresh discovery." Jane Foster

Library J 93:4742 D 15 '68 180w [YA]

"[McKuen's] books have reached nearly 1 million in sales, a figure that places him in sheer volume among the immortals of the English language. He isn't. In fact, McKuen is an antipoet by his own admission. . . . [He] answers the outdated modes of poetry with a verse that draws in country cadences from one shapeless line to the next, carrying the rusticated innocence of a Carl Sandburg thickened by the treacle of a man who prefers to prettify the world before he describes it." P. D. Z.

Newsweek 72:111 N 4 '68 850w

MCLACHLAN, DONALD. Room 39; a study in naval intelligence. 438p $7.50 Atheneum pubs.

940.54 Great Britain. Naval Intelligence Division. World War, 1939-1945—Naval operations 67-25485

This account of British Naval Intelligence during World War II attempts to show "how raw facts were molded into prime orders to ships at sea, how code-breakers pitted their brains against the enemy, and how scholarship was matched against violence. . . . The author, who served on the personal staff of the Director of Naval Intelligence from 1940 to 1945, offers a . . . discussion of the principles and philosophies of Naval Intelligence, and explains how these were applied by such . . . characters as Rear Admiral John Godfrey, its . . . director, and Ian Fleming (later creator of James Bond), his personal assistant." (Publisher's note) General index. General index of names. Index of NID personnel.

Economist 227:65 My 18 '68 700w

"This is a good nonsensational study of naval and other intelligence. Some of the information has been given by those in intelligence, some has come from the author's knowledge, and much from published reports. But the author has brought together these pieces of information into a most readable and informative book, much of which will be new to the historian and average reader alike. He also presents a successful study of the needs for intelligence and the lessons learned from intelligence operations in World War II. Recommended for public libraries, colleges and universities, and any military minded organization and reader." P. W. Filby

Library J 93:2492 Je 15 '68 130w

Reviewed by Arthur Calder-Marshall
New Statesman 76:115 J1 26 '68 150w

New Yorker 44:88 J1 27 '68 130w

Reviewed by R. A. Sokolov
Newsweek 71:100 Je 24 '68 800w

"McLachlan gets down to detail, discussing the vast number of sources from which Intelligence may flow, the weight of belief to be placed on each, and how the results are integrated into a reasonably accurate pattern. . . . He describes, too, the many disciplines which are required to form a team which can produce the tangible from the intangible. This is the real strength and excitement of his book, the meticulous account of the vital processes of Intelligence. . . . [This] excellent book strips away much of the mystique of Intelligence work. . . . That at the same time he shatters some of our illusions about Intelligence gathering is no bad thing, for the reality is far more impressive than the cloak-and-dagger image which ignorance is apt to foster."

TLS p495 My 16 '68 1150w

MACLAGEN, MICHAEL. The city of Constantinople. 198p il pl maps $7.50 Praeger

949.6 Istanbul—History. Byzantine Empire —History 67-28193

"This book discusses the city of Constantinople from the first colonization of the site by the Greeks to about the year 1700 when it was the center of the Ottoman Empire. . . . Emphasis is on the years between A.D. 330, when Constantine made Byzantium his capital, and 1453, when the city fell to the Turks. . . . The author traces the growth of [the Byzantine] . . . society, its . . . leaders—among them Theodosius I, Justinian, Basil I. . . . and the [buildings that remain]." (Publisher's note) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"This book provides a lively medley of archaeology and history and an adequate introduction to Byzantine civilization. Despite its historical arrangement, it is more of a handbook than an expository text, more a labor of love than a piece of scholarship. MacLagan knows the city well and is responsible for most of the photographs, reproduced clearly but in excessively small format. . . . A small and readable reference work for undergraduates but hardly useful for any work beyond this level."

Choice 5:1025 O '68 150w

"[The author] uses much of the same material as John E. N. Hearsey [in his City of Constantinople, 324-1453, BRD 1966] but he does so in a briefer, less anecdotal manner. . . . [He] describes with admiration [Constantinople's] historical monuments, especially its churches and mosques. Mr. MacLagan writes well. Some of his sentences are striking. . . . This book will be useful for the general reader who desires a brief introduction to the history of Constantinople and its surviving monuments. Libraries that now have Mr. Hearsey's book will not need this one." P. F. Moran

Library J 93:1630 Ap 15 '68 190w

MACLEAN, ALISTAIR. Where eagles dare. 312p $4.95 Doubleday

67-20923

In 1944, eight Allied agents "are parachuted into an Alpine area of Germany to rescue an American general from his Nazi captors in a cliffside castle. . . . Leader of the expedition is Major Smith of British intelligence who is seconded by Lt. Schaffer, an . . . American from Montana. Of the eight who land in the vicinity of the impregnable Schloss Adler Castle, two are mysteriously murdered, three are turncoats working for the Nazis, and one is a girl, Mary Ellison who impersonates a serving girl to help Smith and Schaffer enter the snow-bound castle." (Best Sell)

"A story of double and triple agents during the Second World War and of infiltration into Gestapo headquarters in the Alps. The heroics are at times incredible, but there is plenty of genuine excitement." W. B. Hill

America 118:623 My 4 '68 50w

"This is escapist fiction at its best—excitingly told by the gifted author of 'The Secret Ways' [BRD 1959], 'The Guns of Navarone' [BRD 1957], 'Ice Station Zebra' [BRD 1964], and other adventure thrillers. . . . Those who read the book now will probably anxiously await the film. . . . Light, literate, wholesome entertainment." T. L. Vince

Best Sell 27:367 D 15 '67 300w

Reviewed by M. K. Grant
Library J 92:3450 O 1 '67 100w

"There is a splendid Lupinesque audacity about MacLean's [novel]. . . . The ingenuity, daring and off-beat humor of John Smith, M. I. 6, may remind you more of his contemporary, Tommy Hambledon. In any case, MacLean offers a real dazzler of a thriller, with vivid action, fine set pieces of suspense, and a virtuoso display of startling plot twists." Anthony Boucher

N Y Times Bk R p16 D 31 '67 100w

MACLEAN, RODERICK C. Television in education. 151p il $4; pa $2.50 Barnes & Noble 371.33 Television in education. Teaching—Aids and devices 168-105254j

This survey "deals with educational television in Britain. . . . [It traces] developments and implications for the future in public, higher, and adult education programs. Current techniques and equipment are discussed; the roles and purposes of the educator and television professional are analyzed." (Choice)

MACLEAN, R. C.—Continued

"A balanced account of the developing situation, presenting television as a facility through which the teacher can achieve more readily the aims of education."

Choice 5:1190 N '68 120w

"[A] detailed knowledgeable study. . . . Now director of the University of Glasgow Television Service, [the author], who for 11 years was associated with the BBC, is well-qualified as an expert on this topic. A good share of the material herein will be of direct benefit to those involved with educational TV in the United States. . . . A most significant appendix provides a brief but revelatory description of a revolutionary new technical development, EVR (electronic video recording and reproduction), which may affect educational TV throughout the world. Mr. MacLean's readable style helps put this book above the routine treatments and makes this work essential for education collections." E. M. Oboler

Library J 93:2860 Ag '68 170w

MACLEISH, ARCHIBALD. A continuing journey. 374p $5.95 Houghton

818

67-26606

Most of the essays and speeches collected here have appeared in such publications as The Nation, Atlantic, and Life, in the period from 1943 to 1966. They "are divided into four groups. . . . The first consists of observations on the American scene since World War II; the second, of discussions of poetry and art; the third, . . . of some aspects of libraries and of teaching; and the fourth is a collection of elegiac memorials." (N Y Times Bk R)

Reviewed by Edward Weeks

Atlantic 221:136 F '68 280w

"[This volume is,] on the whole, more continuous in thought than it is in style. Readers might almost think that MacLeish was addressing them in two voices, one resonant, the other intimate: one an orator's voice, the other that of a poet. In tone and message the poet's voice is the one that I admire. As for the other voice, I usually agree with what it says; at the very least I respect its generosity and courage; but I am often disturbed by its forensic tone. MacLeish in his public role is a rhetorician of the old school, and he makes an inordinate use of such figures as anaphora. . . . [This is a grievance] against his style, not his opinions, most of which I share (though sometimes I question the arguments he brings forward to support them). One can be pretty sure of finding him on the right side in a public issue, even when it is the unpopular side. . . . Nevertheless, I was happy to be finished with the speeches in this volume and to read the later, more intimate essays on poetry, teaching and people. . . . It is in these essays—as also in his tributes to dead and living friends—that one finds the speaking voice of MacLeish." Malcolm Cowley

Book World p6 Ja 21 '68 950w
Choice 5:1293 D '68 190w

Reviewed by Roderick Nordell

Christian Science Monitor p7 F 1 '68 800w

Reviewed by T. L. Vince

Library J 92:4002 N 1 '67 140w

"One is unhappy with this book and must take exception to its pervasive gentility, to the manner of its speech and the tone, which make addresses of almost all of these thirty-eight pieces and none of them satisfactory confrontations of our political troubles or essays that truly bear witness. A Continuing Journey may be 'a private history' for its author, but for us, to borrow the title of the book of poems that announced his public role, it is 'public speech.' It is speech, moreover, little altered from that of his earlier addresses and sounding now, out of habit perhaps as much as ceremonial demand and certainly because the speech of a new generation powerfully countervails it, like an ancestral voice." Sherman Paul

Nation 206:676 My 20 '68 1600w

"[These essays compose variations on] the theme that we [Americans] have somehow failed to understand the nature of the world we are in and helped make . . . and have maneuvered ourselves into a position of sullen hostility to change, [isolating] ourselves from other peoples and nations and from the moral issues of our time. . . . The essays on literature and on teaching are not divorced from these primary essays on the national character in time of crisis. Mr. MacLeish writes about libraries in terms of the contribution they can make to freedom of the mind; he writes about teaching in terms of academic freedom. He writes of the artist in terms of the artist's reaction to the current forms of American materialism and the current fascination with power. . . . No one, it is safe to say, [can offer eulogies] more gracefully or with deeper understanding than [he]. . . . Books of miscellaneous essays, written over a span of years, do not usually hang together or even stand up very well. This is not true for [this volume]." H. S. Commager

N Y Times Bk R p1 Ja 28 '68 1700w

Reviewed by Granville Hicks

Sat R 51:23 Ja 27 '68 1300w

MACLEISH, RODERICK. The sun stood still. 174p $4.50 Atheneum pubs.

956.94 Israel-Arab War, 1967- 68-12543

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Choice 5:543 Je '68 160w

Economist 227:48 Je 29 '68 290w

Reviewed by Joan Dillon

Library J 93:896 F 15 '68 130w

TLS p701 Jl 4 '68 340w

MACLENNAN, BERYCE W. Group counseling and psychotherapy with adolescents [by] Beryce W. MacLennan and Naomi Felsenfeld. 198p $6 Columbia univ. press

616.8 Psychotherapy. Counseling. Adolescence 68-18998

A study "of group programs for adolescents . . . [who are] either normal or emotionally disturbed. . . . [Convinced] that it is essential to understand the larger society, the culture . . . and peer-group pressures to which the individual is subject . . . we have included a basic consideration of the organization of society and chapters on general group theory and the adolescent and his culture as well as on our particular approaches to group counseling and group psychotherapy. In our chapter on the group leader and his training, we have stressed the importance of the leader's management of himself." (Pref) Bibliography. Index.

"A succinct treatment by two authors complementing each other in professional training and experience. . . . It is well written for any audience interested in using groups for behavior change. It differs from the usual textbook in its brevity, absence of do's and don'ts, and small amount of case material. It needs to be supplemented by more detailed specific case material, supervised experience, and additional psychological theory."

Choice 5:1049 O '68 110w

"It is hoped that the imposing title of this study on the dynamics of group work will not cause the layman to ignore the book . . . [which is] refreshingly free of professional jargon. Dr. Beryce MacLennan, a social worker in Washington, D.C., and Naomi Felsenfeld, research worker, Hillcrest Children's Center, Washington, D.C., . . . analyze types of groups, from a career-oriented group to one that helps participants adjust to life situations. This book is a useful aid for leaders involved in any kind of group situation who wish to learn more about adolescent behavior. Professional terms are explained but a glossary would have been helpful. Recommended for medium- to large-sized collections in public, academic, or special libraries." Laurence Kingsbury

Library J 93:2013 My 15 '68 170w

MCLIN, JON B. Canada's changing defense policy, 1957-1963: the problems of a middle power in alliance [pub] in coop. with the Washington center of for. policy res. School of advanced int. studies, the Johns Hopkins university. 251p $8.50 Johns Hopkins press

355.03 Canada—Defense. Canada—Military policy 66-29907

This study examines several questions which "became controversial issues in Canadian politics and Canadian-American relations. These include Canada's participation in a continental air defense command (NORAD) with the United States; its purchase, or contemplated purchase, of several advanced weapons, including the Arrow, Voodoo, and Starfighter aircraft and the Bomarc missile; and the decision to arm these weapons with nuclear warheads. These problems are examined in the context of Canada's military alliance policy as it has developed since World War II." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"For the specialist and generalist alike the book includes a useful discussion of the extent to which Canadian defense decisions and weapons procurement can be dependent on very minor alterations in U.S. policy. This discussion is of interest to students of alliance politics, for it points out the political liabilities for nations which become linked in a 'special relationship' with the United States with respect to defense and security matters." G. R. Winham

Am Pol Sci R 62:965 S '68 950w

"Mr. McLin has made a major contribution to the literature of Canadian defense policy, which may be parallel to other studies in progress but which is unlikely to be superseded. His book is far from a mere monograph on a few years of policy; it is set in the larger problem of changing technology and of alliance problems in general. It is based on research in seemingly all of the available and significant sources, and it is clearly written with an absence of technical jargon." R. A. McKay

Ann Am Acad 376:179 Mr '68 650w

"[This book] is intelligent, readable and accurate, and without noticeable bias. . . . The many aspects of [Canadian] defence problems . . . are laid out in detail accurately and succinctly: while the curious vacillations and changes in course of the government of the day . . . are brought back to life and laid out on the board with an almost surgical precision. . . . Dr. McLin has performed a real service in presenting this . . . balanced scholarly perspective." John Clarkson

Canadian Forum 47:211 D '67 500w

Choice 5:1216 N '68 240w

"[Dr. McLin] makes clear that defense, which was a subject of constant discussion, was seldom spoken of except as a means of enhancing Canada's role as a middle power. . . . Highly recommended as an accurate and fascinating account of the working of the Canadian parliamentary system." Peter Gellatly

Library J 92:2587 J1 '67 150w

MCLUHAN, MARSHALL. Through the vanishing point; space in poetry and painting. [by] Marshall McLuhan and Harley Parker. 267p il $7.50 Harper

701 Painting—Philosophy. Poetry. Civilization 68-15964

An analysis of the work of selected poets and artists from the caveman to the present. It is the intention of the authors to present "tools for discovery of a common ground among the manifestations of art in the world." . . . [They discuss] such subjects as the return of formal space, the lack of human space receptors, and the public as dithyrambic spectator. The middle section contains 49 illustrations and about 500 assorted quotations which are meant to depict the interplay between such polarities as King Lear and Hieronymus Bosch, Dryden and El Greco, Shelley and Turner, Chagall and Dylan Thomas. The final section . . . [contains] paragraphs about artistic endeavor, environmental and anti-environmental forces, and our age of circuitry." (Library J)

"[This book offers] attractive packaging of words and pictures. Both perform McLuhan's major public service: sounding the cry of 'Wake up! The future just arrived.' . . . [But] McLuhan unfortunately indulges in many of the most conventional assumptions, and much of the jargon, of fashionable art criticism. He depends upon one of the major nonsense words of current art chic, 'space,' stretching it, like most theorists who use it, until it means all and nothing at all. . . . Yet even this book, with its unique juxtapositions of pictures and text and aphorisms and one-liners, points the way to a new and much more fruitful form of art history book. Even at his worst McLuhan inspires you to try to see and understand in a new way. And in the long run this may prove to be his great contribution." Tom Wolfe

Book World p4 S 15 '68 1200w

"If this volume did not have McLuhan's name on the cover, it could and would no doubt be, ignored. When McLuhan speaks, however, many listen. Now and then he says something worthwhile." G. A. Cevalco

Library J 93:4130 N 1 '68 210w

Reviewed by Geoffrey Wagner
Nat R 20:1174 N 19 '68 350w

Reviewed by D. W. Harding
N Y Rev of Books 11:15 Ja 2 '69 1300w

MCLUHAN, MARSHALL. War and peace in the global village; an inventory of some of the current spastic situations that could be eliminated by more feedforward [by] Marshall McLuhan [and] Quentin Fiore; co-ordinated by Jerome Agel. 190p il $5.95; pa $1.45 McGraw

901.94 Technology and civilization. War and civilization 68-19249

An examination of some of the effects of technological innovations on mankind including various forms of violence. The authors assert that "every major new technology, such as electric circuitry, alters man's 'sensory ratios,' thereby wrecking his sense of identity and provoking violence. 'Every new technology necessitates a new war.' . . . [They further seek to show that] electric circuitry . . . is an extension of the human central nervous system. As the electric circuits spread, the whole world becomes one vast extended human central nervous system. This becomes man's new environment. . . . [Eventually] all men will be on one circuit, a 'global village.'" (Book World)

"I don't think McLuhan's insights and literary verve will be enough to carry [this] book. . . . The fact is that he now makes his theory so clear, and so sweeping, that he is going to start hearing a troublesome cry from many quarters: START PROVING IT. . . . At bottom, his entire theory rests on one assumption; namely, that new technologies alter what he calls man's 'sensory ratios.' . . . The postulate that TV, computers, etc., are altering the neural functions of entire peoples or even one person—this could only strike a clinician as romanticism. In [this book] McLuhan pays tribute to the new biologists and physicists working in this area. . . .—yet while the book is rich in literary scholarship, McLuhan's scientific sources are somewhat thin. . . . He ignores whole areas of current work in experimental psychology and neurology. At the same time, his literary gifts lead him into a kind of imprecision that damages his thesis." Tom Wolfe

Book World p4 S 15 '68 1200w

Reviewed by M. B. Cassata
Library J 93:4126 N 1 '68 80w

"This book is a visual and mental assault—the text is accompanied by pictures meant to elucidate and mock, while marginal passages from Finnegan's Wake provide a humorous gloss. Though the text is obscure, muddled, full of generalizations and abuses of history, McLuhan and Fiore nevertheless provocatively and amusingly project a message with which literate young adults will undoubtedly cope better than will adults." Marcia Keller

Library J 93:4742 D 15 '68 200w [YA]

Reviewed by Geoffrey Wagner
Nat R 20:1174 N 19 '68 350w

Reviewed by D. W. Harding
N Y Rev of Books 11:15 Ja 2 '69 1300w

"McLuhan's latest non-book's . . . sins are those of his first pictorial non-book, 'The Medium Is the Massage,' [BRD 1967]. . . . He again produces what British critic Anthony Quinton calls a 'thin diet of prose . . . eked out with a great deal of typographic space-wastage and photographic interruptions, in an attempt to produce something nearer the specifications of his theory.' He presents just what Dwight Macdonald damns as 'impure nonsense, nonsense adulterated by sense.' And he decorates the margins of his text with snatches from James Joyce's 'Finnegans Wake' [BRD 1937] that bear no apparent relation to anything at all." P. D. Zimmerman

Newsweek 72:102 S 23 '68 300w

MCLURE, WILLIAM P., jr. ed. Educational requirements for the 1970's. See Elam, S.

MCMANNERS, JOHN. Lectures on European history, 1789-1914: men, machines, and freedom. 420p $7 Barnes & Noble

940.2 Europe—History—1789-1900. Europe—History—20th century 67-8076

"The book begins and ends with general reflections on men, machines, and freedom.

MCMANNERS, JOHN—Continued

Machines and freedom have made great progress between 1789 and 1914. How far man has progressed is difficult to say. . . . In a concluding sentence McManners sums up his evaluation of the European nineteenth century as 'recund in a fashion never seen before . . . the belief that man is rational and that by the exercise of reason he can master both his environment and his passions, and achieve true freedom.' (Am Hist R)

"The book is aptly called 'lectures,' and it successfully recaptures the immediacy, liveliness, and zest of the lectures of an apparently very gifted teacher. . . . It abounds in apt quotations and avoids the dullness often connected with textbooks. Nor is it as detailed and systematic in its presentation as a similar American textbook would be. . . . The book is well balanced: it allows two hundred pages to the period from 1789 to 1848 and the same amount to the equally long period from 1850 to 1914. It thus avoids the mistake of 'contemporaneity' from which much of our teaching suffers. [McManners'] interpretation of Napoleon's character is brilliant, and, I believe, as correct as any approach to a very complex individuality can be. . . . The book is so well written and the arguments so intelligently presented that the book should be recommended not only to college students but to the general public." Hans Kohn

Am Hist R 73:1136 Ap '68 600w

"Informed and dense lectures with many of the defects of a textbook without the textbook virtues of systematic coverage and of varied typefaces to distinguish major from minor events. The lecture style, however, adds charm, permitting a relaxed tone and a most effective use of quotations and anecdotes. . . . As a good summary of current historical interpretations, with useful footnotes, these lectures should be valuable as supplementary reading for able undergraduates who already have some historical background. Specialists will admire the erudition easily borne; both will want to take notes more on McManners' quotations than on McManners himself. While anxious not to be dull, he does not claim to write challenging interpretations in the tradition of Namier or Acton."

Choice 5:856 S '68 190w

"[Published lectures may] be valuable for university undergraduates but may, by the same token, repel rather than attract the general reader. . . . [This volume] can, however, be warmly recommended to both types of reader, for even those who are already well acquainted with the outlines of the period will find here much that will extend and deepen their knowledge and the general public will be attracted by the author's easy mastery of his subject, his incisive judgments and the Namierite brilliance of his style. . . . [Mr. McManners has] the insight to select the really significant aspects of historical change and the ability and confidence to make the kind of challenging generalizations that promote rather than retard historical thinking. . . . A flair for the amusing and revealing anecdote makes the book a delight to read. . . . [It] should rapidly establish itself as the best available introduction to European history in the nineteenth century." A. Goodwin

Engl Hist R 82:851 O '67 400w

MCMANUS, GEORGE J. The inside story of steel wages and prices, 1959-1967. 240p $5.25 Chilton co.

331.1 Wages. Steel industry and trade
67-27856

This volume "deals with the men, issues, and ideas involved in determining steel wages and prices, beginning with the background to the 116-day steel strike in 1959 and continuing through the labor relations crises of the eight years up to the present." (Publisher's note)

"[This detailed account] is evidently compiled from direct press quotations of company, union, and government officials. In 'journalistic' fashion, equal time is given to each side on each price and wage change. . . . Although the account lacks perspective, McManus, for example, indicates that the failure of the economy to achieve full recovery in the early 1960's was due, at least in part, to price and wage decisions made in the steel industry. Moreover, few economists would agree with his analysis of industry pricing policies, the impact of anti-trust legislation on steel, and the failure of this industry to compete effectively with foreign producers. Other weaknesses include a failure to cite sources for the many quotations and lapses in editing."

Choice 5:99 Mr '68 180w

"[The author] outlines the confrontations between labor and management, and describes how Presidents Kennedy and Johnson intervened to hold back broad advances in steel prices and tried to limit labor gains to predetermined percentages. There is an implied question about the place of the Government in the regulation of wage and price increases, particularly by coercion or threat. This book should be a part of all fair-sized labor collections." D. E. Thompson

Library J 92:4000 N 1 '67 160w

MACMASTER, ROBERT E. Danilevsky; a Russian totalitarian philosopher. 368p $7.95 Harvard univ. press

320.5 Danilevsky, Nicholas Iakovlevich. Russia—Civilization
66-21340

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by J. D. Clarkson

Am Hist R 73:861 F '68 400w

Reviewed by R. H. W. Theen

Am Pol Sci R 62:256 Mr '68 1200w

Reviewed by Leonard Schapiro

N Y Rev of Books 11:25 D 5 '68 350w

Reviewed by M. Raeff

Pol Sci Q 83:107 Mr '68 1000w

MACMILLAN, C. J. B., jt. ed. Psychological concepts in education. See Komisar, B. P.

MACMILLAN, DAVID S. Scotland and Australia, 1788-1850: emigration, commerce and investment. 434p pl $12 Oxford

325.2 Australia—Immigration and emigration. Scotland—Immigration and emigration. Scotland—Commerce 67-102004

"The author argues that Scotland contributed the first regular shipping service between the United Kingdom and the Australian colonies; that it originated the concept of the joint-stock investment company as a means of facilitating commercial involvement in Australia; that it contributed a significant proportion of the skilled settlers and industrial innovations that provided the impetus for growth in the colony; that Scotland provided important loan funds for Australian pastoral development; and that Scottish emigrants were among the Australian colonies' leading citizens throughout this early growth period." (Pacific Affairs) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by P. J. Coleman

Am Hist R 73:1532 Je '68 220w

"Since a major part of the book consists of a description of the information flows, migrant flows, and the diffusion of knowledge about the potential of the Australian colonies throughout Scotland it seems strange that the author has used little if any of communication theory, migration theory, and diffusion theory to help analyze the processes he is examining. . . . Within the limits of the author's aims however, we must agree that it is a competently produced and valuable text." R. G. Gollidge

Pacific Affairs 41:142 spring '68 400w

"Mr. Macmillan gives us the first detailed analysis of Scottish emigrants and their motives, showing how waves of Scottish emigration to Australia reflected changes in the economic state of Scotland, and justifying his claim that Scottish emigrants were generally of a high quality. He examines Scottish attitudes to Australia at all levels—in treatises, newspapers, philosophic essays and letters home; and he provides (in an appendix) useful biographical details of people mentioned in the text. . . . [His] study is a new and useful contribution towards the economic and social history of Scotland as well as of Australia."

TLS p1263 D 28 '67 200w

MACMILLAN, HAROLD. The blast of war, 1939-1945. 623p il maps $11.95 Harper

B or 92 World War, 1939-1945—Great Britain. Great Britain—Politics and government—20th century 67-28810

"This is the second volume of [the British Prime Minister's] memoirs: here he deals exclusively with the events of World War II and concentrates . . . on the war in the Mediterranean." (Library J) For the first volume, Winds of Change, see BRD 1966.

Reviewed by C. L. Hohl
America 118:513 Ap 13 '68 460w

Reviewed by Oscar Handlin
Atlantic 221:114 Ja '68 700w

"It is [the] light touch which makes these memoirs so delightful. The reader should not be misled by it. It is clear that gruelling work was done, frustration and suffering sustained, extremely fancy in intricate headwork and footwork, persuasion, barter, and influence applied, in the pursuit of British and Allied political objectives. . . . A wealth of poignant and amusing incidents is woven into the telling, each contributing to the strengthening of the characterization or the plot, or the perspective, or the sense of history, as the reader may choose to receive them. . . . An appealing intimacy with the reader is achieved by Macmillan's liberal use of excerpts from letters to his wife, also from his delightfully informal reports to Churchill and the British Foreign Office. . . . Macmillan tells what he did and, in two significant passages, what he did not do." R. E. O'Brien

Best Sell 27:413 F 1 '68 1000w

Reviewed by Anthony Sampson
Book World p1 D 31 '67 1250w
Choice 5:856 S '68 170w

"Macmillan has plenty to say, and he says it with the utmost felicity. His first volume reminded us that there is much more to him than the rather Edwardian impression he gave . . . as Prime Minister less than a decade ago. . . . During his two-and-a-half years as Churchill's wartime political representative at Allied Force Headquarters in the Mediterranean, there was perhaps more unfettered scope for his talents than during his long postwar premiership. His account of events has remarkable actuality. . . . Some of the more fascinating observations come in letters which Macmillan wrote at the time to his wife. They are often remarkably perceptive." Geoffrey Godsell

Christian Science Monitor p11 Ja 11 '68 950w

Economist 224:895 S 9 '67 1000w

Reviewed by H. J. Steck
Library J 92:4404 D 1 '67 270w

Reviewed by Alex Campbell
New Repub 158:32 Ja 27 '68 1350w

Reviewed by Kingsley Martin
New Statesman 74:290 S 8 '67 1550w

"The master has not lost his special touch; rarely but unforgettably the surface of this bland narrative is rippled by some dark pike-like intimation of another life in the depths; a parallel, unspoken, and possibly unspeakable monologue. . . . What holds the contemporary reader . . . is not so much the narrative of events as the psychology of the great conservative politician, the man for whom, in Macaulay's language, 'tact' is an 'instinct.' Into such a psychology Mr. Macmillan's prose sends its slanted, dusty, precious shafts of light. His writing has been overpraised by courtly reviewers in his own country. He can write crisply and wittily—as in the passages about Giraud and about 'directives'; he can write boringly and pompously as he does through many of these 600 pages." C. C. O'Brien

N Y Rev of Books 10:10 F 15 '68 1200w

"The best book about World War II since Winston Churchill's 'The Second World War.' . . . [The author] has illuminated some dark and dubious areas of American and British military and political policy . . . and better than anyone else, including Churchill, he has described the national, political and, at times, personal considerations that lay behind decisions affecting the lives of millions. . . . The section covering events in French North Africa in 1943 is the most interesting in the book and should prove the most useful to historians. . . . It is all done with a felicity of phrase and an aptness of comment that makes this long book with its complex issues a delight to read." Drew Middleton

N Y Times Bk R p7 Ja 14 '68 1400w

Reviewed by Naomi Bliven
New Yorker 44:90 Ag 10 '68 2700w

Reviewed by J. H. Plumb
Sat R 51:26 Ja 27 '68 1500w

Time 91:76 Ja 5 '68 900w

"The ground has been covered often before, not only by the memoirs of participants but also by professional historians. Mr. Macmillan adds little more than anecdotal footnotes. Like Sir Winston Churchill's, his approach is personal and self-centred; but Sir Winston held a commanding position in relation to all theatres of war which made even his anecdotes part of the raw material of history. Mr. Macmillan's are too often sadly trivial. . . . His sense of history is keen but not deep. He displays it at a number of points. . . . [However,] his personal judgment on colleagues and even on enemies is both charitable and shrewd. . . . How brilliantly he used [his opportunities] will often have to be discovered by the reader himself from beneath the surface of this artful and sometimes deceptive self-portrait."

TLS p789 S 7 '67 3050w

Va Q R 44:cxix summer '68 150w

Reviewed by Herbert Feis
Yale R 57:627 summer '68 1300w

MCMILLAN, IAN. Man and the California condor: the embattled history and uncertain future of North America's largest free-living bird. 191p pl $5.95 Dutton

598 Condors. Birds—Protection 67-11374

"The California condor is America's largest bird of prey, and also its rarest. . . . [The author,] a rancher-naturalist who has spent his life in the condor country of the southern San Joaquin Valley, surveyed the condor's status for the National Audubon Society during 1963 and 1964; the formal report of the survey was issued by the society in 1965 as its Research Report No. 6, and the present title is essentially an updated version of this report for the general reader." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"Although not a professional zoologist, [McMillan] is a keen observer and the book is replete with observations on the behavior and life cycle of these birds. A series of remarkable photographs highlight the text. McMillan is continuing the classic observations of Carl Koford made over 20 years ago. His book supersedes Easton and Smith's California Condor (1964) and is written in a much more personal and appealing style."

Choice 5:812 S '68 220w

"McMillan blames the decline of the condor on two main factors: continued illegal shooting . . . and indifference and incompetence on the part of those government agencies responsible for condor protection. . . . His indictment is harsh, but supported by evidence, and deserves an answer. He is convinced that the species is still viable; man can preserve the condor, at trivial cost, but will he? If he will not, what does this imply about his will to save his own species from self-destruction? Mr. McMillan has written a polemic, sometimes angry, always deeply sincere, likely to arouse controversy. His book is highly recommended to all libraries concerned, even casually, with conservation—of condors or of man." P. B. Cors

Library J 93:1152 Mr 15 '68 270w

Library J 93:1828 Ap 15 '68 30w [YA]

"[This] probably is the most thorough report ever made on the California condors. . . . [It] states the problems [of survival] and points out that further encroachment will mean extinction. It also tells in detail about how condors fly, nest, raise their young, what they eat, and how long they live. It is not only first-class natural history but vigorous, crusading conservation." Hal Borland

Natur Hist 77:78 Ag '68 550w

MCMILLAN, JAMES. The American take-over of Britain [by] James McMillan and Bernard Harris. 252p $5.95 Hart

332.67 Great Britain—Economic conditions. Investments 68-29527

"The authors survey the American 'take-over' of British economy, which began in 1856. . . . [They] analyze the reasons for this take-over, and suggest remedies whereby Britain . . . might keep control of British industry, and possibly regain control of factories now owned by Americans. Should the British fail to stop the proliferation of American economic power in Britain, speculate the authors, they may lose their political independence as well." (Library J) Index.

"This account of interrelations between two friendly nations, strongly pro-British, but not necessarily anti-American is recommended for college and public libraries." Victor Novak

Library J 93:4135 N 1 '68 180w

MCMILLAN, JAMES—Continued

"Scholarship is far from being the intention of these two veteran journalists. . . . They are out to shout from the rooftops that [Britain] is being leaned on by its big transatlantic cousin and may collapse under the strain. . . . After reading this strongly expressed polemic, everyone British who does not look forward to living in the Fifty-First State will feel that we must do something." Andrew Robertson
New Statesman 75:417 Mr 29 '68 750w

MACMILLAN & COMPANY, LIMITED. Letters to Macmillan; sel. and ed. by Simon Nowell-Smith. 384p pl $10.95 St Martins

655.4 Authors and publishers 67-24488

"From the more than 500,000 letters in the files of Macmillan & Company, a selection from the correspondence of 84 poets, novelists, philosophers, historians, artists, illustrators, economists, and others was made by Simon Nowell-Smith, who has been librarian of the London Library, president of the Bibliographical Society, and Lyell Reader of Bibliography at Oxford. The letters in this collection concern the whims and vanities of authors, a wide variety of author-publisher relationships, problems of copyright, royalties, advertising, censorship, and many other matters." (Library J)

"[This offers] a peepshow on the concerns and conceits of authors, big or little, and on the kindly, firm, if fallible, patient, helpful, shrewd but not unprejudiced, guidance and acumen of these remarkable publishing men. . . . It is a discreet peepshow. . . . But it comes out still as a frankly telling documentary of what writers are like and what publishing used to be about. And what a roster it is, from Matthew Arnold, Barrie, Beerbohm, Blackmore, Winston Churchill, Marie Corelli and Gladstone to Keynes, Kipling, Shaw, Edith Sitwell, Tennyson, Trollope, Wells, Wilde and Yeats."

Economist 225:1230 D 23 '67 330w

"This collection is an essential purchase for libraries concerned with the history of 19th- and 20th-Century publishing." L. W. Griffin
Library J 93:2858 Ag '68 330w

"[This] is a most accomplished exercise in selection, arrangement and editing, and when Mr. Nowell-Smith says 'Out of this mountain, mouse' his readers will find themselves disposed to take this at the foot of the letter only. For in less than 400 pages, distilled from something over a million, he has successfully illustrated almost every facet of the author-publisher relationship. . . . Macmillan and their authors deserved a first-rate book and, with its excellent introduction and annotation, they have got one. If the layman can enjoy these always readable pages without reaching for his pencil, the specialists will find plenty of information as well as entertainment."

TLS p1196 D 7 '67 2300w

MCMULLIN, ERNAN. ed. Galileo: man of science. 455p $15 Basic bks.

B or 92 Galilei, Galileo 68-11203

This is a collection of papers "most of which were presented to the Galileo Quatercentenary Congress [held at the University of Notre Dame] in 1964. . . . The appendices include a Galileo bibliography (1940-64), addenda to the . . . Carli-Favaro and Boffito bibliographies (1564-1940), and finally an annotated list of works by Galileo and his contemporaries. Many facts of Galileo's life, work, and influence are assessed." (Choice) Bibliographies. Index.

"This is a well rounded memorial to the great scientist. Outstanding articles are by Boyer on Galileo's place in the history of mathematics, Hartner on his astronomy, Tannery on his principles of dynamics, Cohen on an aspect of Newton's and Galileo's work, and Dubarle's scientific methodology of Galileo. . . . [presented] in a very readable and extremely interesting fashion. No similar volume with so much critical material has ever been published on Galileo and so it is valuable for all students of science and history of science. The appendices are indispensable for Galileo studies. The editor has done an excellent job except for the introduction which should not have been included."

Choice 5:806 S '68 130w

"Specialists in the history of 17th-Century science will welcome this book as a significant contribution to Galilean scholarship. Virtually all of the more important historians and philosophers of science who concentrate on Galileo and his times are represented in this collection of essays. Here are S. Drake, A. Koyré, . . . V. Ronchi, . . . the Halls, and others." George Basalla

Library J 93:90 Ja 1 '68 80w

"Among other things, [this volume] . . . reveals how far the demands of a Galileo can strain a young discipline. . . . Some of the papers appear to have been composed while the plane was approaching the runway in . . . South Bend. Happily the same cannot be said of all or of most of the papers. . . . [The] volume, especially through the effort of its editor, Ernán McMullin . . . combines significant articles by earlier scholars with the contributions to the [Notre Dame] symposium, so that [it] systematically considers every major aspect of Galileo's work. [and] is an important addition to the literature which will exercise considerable influence over continuing scholarship."

R. S. Westfall

Science 162:553 N 1 '68 500w

Sci Am 219:164 N '68 550w

MCMURRAY, WILLIAM. The literary realism of William Dean Howells; with a pref. by Harry T. Moore. 147p $4.95 Southern Ill. univ. press

813 Howells, William Dean

67-10283

The author "seeks to demonstrate by a study of twelve of Howells's major novels that Howells was committed to a group of related ideas that can best be described as the pragmatism of William James. . . . [Mr. McMurray analyzes] each of the novels he considers, from A Foregone Conclusion (1875) to The Vacation of the Kelwyns (1920) . . . and concludes that the central themes of each work are closely related to pragmatic ideas." (Am Lit) Bibliography. Index

"In this enterprise Mr. McMurray is successful, and one is persuaded at the close of his book 'that both Howells and James conceived man as living in an open world, a world which is yet unfinished in its meaning and in which man himself is the maker of that meaning.' The study has a disturbing thinness, however, a quality which . . . arises principally, I think, from the rigidity of Mr. McMurray's approach to Howells and his work. With a few minor exceptions, he excludes consideration of Howells's thought other than as he finds it expressed in the novels chosen for analysis. . . . In addition, though Mr. McMurray writes perceptively, too much of his brief discussion of each novel is devoted to plot summary and to the quotation of critical commentary." Donald Pizer

Am Lit 39:415 N '67 400w

"The meaning of pragmatism is assumed on a rather superficial level. There are some helpful comments on the patterns of relationships and incidents within each novel, but McMurray does not succeed in raising the central questions and revealing the important implications of Howells' performance to the extent George Carrington, Jr. does in his The Immense Complex Drama [BRD 1967]. This book would be chiefly helpful for someone coming to Howells for the first time."

Choice 4:532 Jl '67 120w

MCNAIR, PHILIP. Peter Martyr in Italy: an anatomy of apostasy. 325p $8.80 Oxford

270.6 Martyr, Peter. Reformation. Europe—History—1492-1789 [67-78940]

"In 1542 Peter Martyr Vermigli, prior of the Monastery of San Frediano of the Lateran Congregation in Lucca, renounced the Roman obedience and hurried across the Alps . . . [to] the Zurich Protestants. From Zurich he made his way by stages to England, where he . . . [played a] role in the Edwardian reform as Regius Professor of Divinity at Oxford and canon of Christ Church. In 1553 he was one of Mary's exiles, returning to the Continent to occupy a chair in divinity at Strasbourg and then at Zurich, where he died in 1562. . . . [In this book the author considers] the Catholic period of Peter Martyr's life, which coincides with the rise and decline of Italian evangelism." (Am Hist R)

"One of the best features of the book is due to the author's good historical sense. Through brief, apt sketches of men, places, and ideas he grasps the milieu of pre-Tridentine Italian Catholicism and sets Peter Martyr in his environment; at the same time, through him he mirrors the spirituality of the time. Some will take sharp issue with a number of his contentions . . . but no one will be able to dismiss these contentions without first coming to terms with McNair's arguments. This is a good book, interestingly and even gracefully written, skillful and honest in the use of evidence, with a fine appreciation of the human passions and the dramatic qualities in this story of a man whose crisis of conscience drove him 'to forsake the sweetest nest of his native country & earthly pleasures.'" Donald Weinstein

Am Hist R 73:1194 Ap '68 600w
Choice 5:210 Ap '68 140w

"[Previous] detailed study of Peter Martyr Vermigli has concentrated on the years after his conversion to Protestantism in 1542. In writing [this study] McNair has performed a very valuable service. This is not confined to elucidating the details of Martyr's early career, but is extended to a full analysis of the reform movement in Italy. This last has in recent years been the subject of renewed interest. . . . Dr. McNair reflects this new scholarship and materially contributes to it. . . . The only fault that may perhaps be mentioned is an occasional exuberance of language, especially in early chapters. But normally Dr. McNair writes very well indeed so that his important book is also extremely readable." Denys Hay

Engl Hist R 83:389 Ap '68 500w

MCNAMARA, ROBERT S. The essence of security: reflections in office. 176p $4.95 Harper
353.6 U.S.—Defenses. Strategy. World politics 68-29573

The author attempts to present "the principles and philosophy by which I have directed the activities of the Defense Establishment. . . . [These recollections] are my actual policy statements, edited and adapted for clarity and logical sequence by Mr. Henry Trewitt. . . . They are drawn from documents, including the declassified versions of a number of highly sensitive security matters." (Pref) Index.

Reviewed by V. S. Kearney
America 119:559 N 30 '68 120w

Reviewed by J. F. Menez
Best Sell 28:243 S 15 '68 600w

"This book is important for what it reveals about a remarkable man . . . a rare combination of sensitivity, perception and toughness. Chapter Seven, 'On Gaps and Bridges'—including the generation gap—reveals a man whom very few people know and whom many should know. McNamara's book is divided into three parts of three chapters each—'This World We Live In,' 'The Tools of Power' and 'Where Security Lies.' The first of these is a clear-headed description of the situation in which we find ourselves. . . . A reading of these three chapters, less than fifty pages, will bring light to troubled citizens. . . . Each owes it to himself to read Mr. McNamara, not a digest of him." Dean Acheson

Book World p1 Ag 25 '68 1400w

Christian Century 85:1082 Ag 28 '68
100w

Economist 229:63 O 12 '68 700w

"The former Secretary of Defense, with brilliant clarity, enunciates . . . the basic principle of collective defense: strong nations must defend the weak; alliances such as NATO must remain. However, he holds that the intrinsic security of a nation does not lie in its weaponry, but in a stability which arises from a development of its economic, social, and political life. . . . He tells of his efforts to introduce scientific management into the Defense Department. He discusses the technological gap between the United States and Europe, and has words of wisdom on the generation gap. [This book] is a cogent, extremely important contribution to our national security. It should be available in public libraries." R. W. Henderson

Library J 93:2668 J1 '68 230w

Reviewed by T. J. Farer
Nation 207:501 N 11 '68 3400w

Reviewed by W. R. Kintner
Nat R 20:1068 O 22 '68 3100w

Reviewed by John Osborne
New Repub 159:39 S 21 '68 1150w

Reviewed by Hugh Brogan
New Statesman 76:636 N 8 '68 270w

Reviewed by I. F. Stone
N Y Rev of Books 11:5 N 7 '68 5300w

"In theory, [this book] is based mainly on recent speeches in office and policy statements to the Congress, edited into highly readable form by Newsweek's diplomatic correspondent. . . . But it is much more than that. It makes available to the general public . . . material familiar mainly to specialists heretofore. . . . [Mr. McNamara] discusses what he wants remembered, rather than the decisions he would prefer to forget. Controversies that get little or no mention include the F-111 fighter, the cancellation of the Skybolt missile (followed by the disastrous 1962 Nassau Conference and Britain's exclusion from the Common Market), and the 1966 ultimatum to Bonn's Defense Minister on U.S. troop costs. . . . The Vietnam conflict, once dubbed 'McNamara's war,' is barely mentioned. . . . [But the book] is required reading for every American." Robert Kleiman

N Y Times Bk R p1 S 8 '68 3200w

"For seven years [the author] commanded the Pentagon, aroused the Congress, computerized the armed forces, swayed the White House and, with a map, a pointer, a razor-sharp mind, a razzle-dazzle way of speaking, and an extraordinary memory, dominated the decision-making process of the nation at a critical time in its history. . . . [His] book is, however, a disappointment. It is not a fresh, wanted look at McNamara-ism by McNamara, but a collection of 'posture papers' and speeches dating back to April 20, 1963, tightly and intelligently edited. . . . There is little freshness about McNamara's papers and only occasional shafts of humor and philosophic insight in his speeches. . . . This volume, which may be needed on a library shelf, and which may be interesting (who knows?) to the curious reader who has never dipped into a McNamara posture paper, only teases the McNamara-watcher and -wonderer." Marvin Kalb

Sat R 51:28 Ag 31 '68 550w

Time 92:102 O 4 '68 600w

TLS p1167 O 17 '68 700w

MCNAMEE, LAWRENCE F., ed. Dissertations in English and American literature; theses accepted by American, British and German universities, 1865-1964. 1124p U.S. & Canada $17.50; elsewhere $19.25 Bowker

820 English literature—History and criticism—Bibliography. American literature—History and criticism—Bibliography

68-27446

A computerized subject breakdown of doctorate titles written over a 100-year period. "The dissertations are arranged under 35 general chapter headings, usually literary periods or forms. Within each of these chapters, there are anywhere from 10 to 100 subdivisions within which the arrangement is chronological. . . . In addition to a subject approach, the book also provides a cross index of authors (who wrote about whom), and an alphabetical index of the dissertation writers." (Library J)

"It is obvious (the convenience McNamee (East Texas State) has provided Ph.D. candidates and senior theses writers. A spot check against [J.] Woodress [Dissertations in American Literature, 1891-1966] . . . reveals that McNamee is just as complete but not as up to date. Woodress is also easier to use (all necessary information is in one entry); but McNamee's scope and (once you get the hang of the symbols) indices . . . make it required for strong literature libraries."

Choice 5:932 O '68 70w

"[A] very useful compilation of previously scattered information. . . . Since the book was prepared with the aid of a computer, the format is not very attractive, but the information is complete and accurate. It is recommended for all colleges and universities having graduate English departments." Donald Empson

Library J 93:4280 N 15 '68 80w

MCNEIL, ELTON B., jt. auth. Hooked on books: program & proof. See Fader, D. N.

MCNEIL, ELTON B. The quiet furies: man and disorder [il. by Edith Dines]. 207p $5.95 Prentice-Hall

157 Mental illness. Neuroses 67-25950

The author, a clinical psychologist and professor of psychology at the University of Michigan, presents twenty case histories of emotional disturbances, each prefaced by a "précis

MCNEIL, E. B.—Continued

of the usual clinical picture of the particular disorder. In each chapter he stresses a specific maladjustment. Among the topics he discusses are normality, gross stress reaction, obsessive-compulsive reaction, phobic reaction, musculoskeletal reaction, anti-social reaction, sexual deviation, and addiction. In the final chapters he deals with psychotic disorders." (Library J)

"[Dr. McNeill] uses the casebook approach very effectively in his attempts to illustrate how humans under pressure react, as well as what devices to reduce anxiety are utilized by man. . . . This work is an important addition to any course in abnormal psychology for required or supplemental reading. However, the main intent was for general reading by the public. . . . The jacket design as well as the representative drawings of each case presented . . . add much in understanding the psychological nature of man in his attempts to cope with his environment." J. A. Szuhay

Best Sell 27:384 Ja 1 '68 450w

Choice 5:1226 N '68 180w

"Dr. McNeill cautiously handles the detailing of therapeutic techniques and general prognosis in each case. Nevertheless, the book's usefulness is doubtful. It is too personal, elementary, and general to be of use either to the student or to the specialist and is likely to be misused by the general reader seeking instant therapy or reassurance." Annette Hirsch
Library J 93:1151 Mr 15 '68 180w

MCNEILL, JANET. The battle of St. George Without; il. by Mary Russon. 188p $4.50 Little

68-11113

Once Dove Square "had been an exclusive residential neighborhood, but now the old houses were cut up into small apartments, and the local population, which tended to be poor, was mixed in every way. At the center of the square proper was the church of St. George Without, long closed. Its roof was being stripped by thieves until a group of neighborhood children tenaciously and quietly foiled them. . . . Ages ten to twelve." (Sat R)

Reviewed by H. L. Maples

Book World p4 (children's issue) My 5 '68 240w

Reviewed by Margery Fisher

Christian Science Monitor pB4 N 3 '66 40w

Horn Bk 44:325 Je '68 140w

"The suspenseful story of Matt McGinley, initiator of the action, and his companions is related in a fast-moving style that guarantees reader involvement. Both the text and the lively black-and-white illustrations provide excellent characterizations of some believable children." M. J. Shapiro

Library J 93:1313 Mr 15 '68 90w

"The characters are wonderfully real, the plot and setting realistic. Moreover, the British author's graceful writing is lightened by humor and sweetened by moments of mild nostalgia." Zena Sutherland

Sat R 51:41 Ap 20 '68 100w

Time 91:10 Je 7 '68 50w

"[Janet McNeill is an] accomplished writer. . . with an adult elegance of phrase and simile that can create a magical atmosphere. There is a nice, varied collection of children and adults in her cleverly-managed story. Yet, oddly, it was easier to suspend disbelief in Miss McNeill's outright fantasy Tom's Tower [BRD 1967] than in the realism here. Coincidences fall too pat. There is the unlikely success of a mock faint in the fishmonger's, and some harmonious hymn-singing on St. George's day which seems a little over-sweet somehow."

TLS p1085 N 24 '66 200w

MCNEILL, WILLIAM H. The contemporary world 1914/present. 184p il maps $5 Morrow 909.82 History, Modern—20th century

67-26806

The author concentrates "upon the two great changes in human affairs during the past fifty years: (1) urbanization and (2) the experience of war mobilization and peacetime defense planning. . . . Political, economic, and diplomatic history are traced to their pre-World War I origins, with . . . attention given the paramount themes and sweeps of history. . . .

The history of significant cultural and social ideas and achievements is presented . . . [aided by] two ten-page pictorial essays, one of which deals . . . with twentieth-century art, and the other with the spread of modernization and its effects throughout the world." (Publisher's note) Chapter bibliographies. Index.

"An unusual book. . . . [Much is] left unsaid which many historians will feel is important, and the reader often feels that there is not enough explanation of many events. . . . There are some interesting innovations, however. McNeill . . . provides several good maps and gives many graphs dealing with such things as world literacy, energy production and consumption, and per capita incomes. There is one fine photographic section showing the old and the new in contrast in the 20th century. Most interesting are the biographical essays scattered throughout which demonstrate the similarities and contrasts between seven sets of prominent 20th-century personalities; Lenin and Wilson; Eliot and Picasso; Albert Speer and Jean Monnet; and John XXIII and Gandhi to mention a few. The book is not meant for the novice in the field unless he wants a quick survey. The specialist may find it disconcerting. . . . Recommended for larger libraries but not essential."

Choice 5:846 S '68 250w

"McNeill, chairman of the department of history, University of Chicago, won wide acclaim among scholars, as well as the National Book Award, for his work The Rise of the West [BRD 1963]. . . . His study is intriguing because of the emphasis he places on the global view and on other important aspects often overlooked by conventional textbook writers. While his coverage of political events is uneven and rather colorless, he does offer brilliant cultural vistas; and Professor Franz Schulze of Lake Forest College contributes an essay on modern art, an unusual feature in a history textbook. . . . The maps and graphs are helpful, but the bibliographic notes leave much to be desired and the index is inadequate. The book is recommended especially for public libraries and better high school libraries." F. E. Hirsch

Library J 93:1630 Ap 15 '68 230w

Reviewed by Bebe Morehead

Library J 93:2741 Jl '68 100w [YA]

MACNICOL, MARY. Flower cookery; the art of cooking with flowers. 263p $10 Fleet press corp.
641.6 Cookery—Flowers 67-24072

The author "combines legends, quotations, customs, bits of history, with recipes ranging from the familiar dandelion wine to rhododendron jelly and chrysanthemum soup." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"Obviously, the hippies on your list will love [this]. Not so obvious is its appeal to lady poets, male aesthetes and anyone who likes aromatic and exotic foods. A passion for jasmine tea, rose jam and orange blossoms ought to be the prerequisite for ownership of this delightful pastiche of poetry, flower-lore and genuine recipes." Gloria Levitas

Book World p6 D 17 '67 60w

"[This] is delightful reading . . . [and will make a] good addition to the growing collection of cookbooks public libraries need to satisfy their cookery reading fans." J. B. Lopez
Library J 93:551 F 1 '68 70w

MACORLAN, PIERRE. The anchor of mercy; tr. from the French by Frances Frenaye; il. by David K. Stone. 217p $3.95 Pantheon bks.

67-20211

Young Yves-Marie Morgat's "admiration for the glamorous Jerome Burns never wavers, though he slowly realizes that his respected friend and mentor is a murdering pirate. This novel of suspense is set in 18th-century France, in the seaport of Brest." (Commonweal) Originally published as L'Ancre de Miséricorde. "Grades six to eight." (Library J)

"Young readers will find it difficult to follow this historical novel. . . . Some flavor of the times will be found here, but most young readers will not have the patience to read through the book."

Best Sell 27:314 N 1 '67 110w

"This is a no-holds-barred tale of sudden murder and terrible intrigue. It has suspense enough and atmosphere enough to stand against an adult mystery. But if the excitement grabs hold of the reader and will not let him go so does the moment of history. Pierre MacOrlan makes no concessions to teenagers—even his hero, Yves-Marie breaks tradition, behaving with unheroic stupidity." P. M. Christian Science Monitor pB9 N 2 '67 90w

Reviewed by M. L. Birmingham
Commonweal 87:182 N 10 '67 50w

"A bloodthirsty pirate tale, mixed with murder and intrigue, should be marvelously exciting, but this one, first published in France in 1946, is slow going, and the characters are difficult to identify with. . . . The story has no particular historical significance. Possibly, the weaknesses of this version lie in the translation, but with so many more exciting books on pirates available to American children, it would be difficult to persuade them to plough through this one." Marcellee Gralapp
Library J 93:371 F 15 '68 90w

MACPHEE, A. MARSHALL. Kenya. 238p il $6.50 Praeger

967.6 Kenya—History 68-21161

In showing the social, racial and economic stresses which exist today "and are embedded in Kenya's history, [the author] divides the book into four parts. In the first, he takes account of the history from the early Hamitic invasions to the Portuguese and Arab conquests, after which East Africa became a target for Chinese, European, and American traders, explorers, and missionaries. He next discusses British colonial rule and the concept of White Kenya. The third and fourth parts deal with the Mau Mau rebellion, its defeat and the ensuing struggle for independence, with special reference to the career of Jomo Kenyatta." (Publisher's note) Chronology. Bibliography. Index.

"MacPhee affirms in his preface that 'To put on record in a single, comprehensive and factual account the story of Kenya from earliest times to the position it holds today among the nations of the world has been a challenging task.' . . . [This] is a challenge that MacPhee does little to meet. Of the 220 pages of this volume, 62 bring the reader to the year 1920. Moreover, these few pages include a most inadequate summary of these many centuries of Kenyan history, containing unnecessary errors, and demonstrating the author's unfamiliarity with much modern research. The years from 1920-67 are treated in greater detail, but again the account is unsatisfactory. Libraries with limited budgets for Kenyan history should ignore this inadequate volume." Choice 5:1202 N '68 180w

"MacPhee writes well and limits his work to the political development from the period of British rule through 1966, with a recognition of the importance of economic development in current political program planning. His study of Kenya is recommended for students in political science and African history. The documentation is excellent." M. D. Herrick
Library J 93:2492 Je 15 '68 170w

"A very large number of facts are presented economically and with clarity in a book of great thoroughness. Unfortunately, however, the history of Kenya is both too complex and too open to different interpretations for this essentially journalistic method to work in detail. The principal general objection to his book is that Mr. MacPhee is poor on historical interpretation, and especially that he seems to lack a considered overall attitude to the events of the past sixty-odd years. At any point he gives the impression of adopting the attitudes respectable at that time. The effect is rather that of reading a collection of past editorials from the East African Standard." TLS p658 Je 20 '68 500w

MCPHEE, JOHN. The Pine Barrens. 156p il $4.50 Farrar, Straus

917.49 Pine Barrens—Description and travel 67-22439

The author describes a wilderness area in the center of New Jersey, and its inhabitants. The contents of this book originally appeared in The New Yorker.

"New Jersey has the greatest population density of any state of the union. . . . however, John McPhee has uncovered a wilderness area. How it has survived this long or how much longer it can remain untouched is an unanswered question, but anything else you might want to know about the Pine Barrens—650,000 acres of wild land—is covered by the author. . . . [The area] now supports a small population of 'pineys' who scrape together an existence by supplying berries, wood, charcoal—and at Christmas—holly, laurel, and mistletoe to the urban areas of New York and New Jersey. Mr. McPhee's keen ear for local speech and his ability to reproduce the special atmosphere of the Barrens make this slim volume an outstanding reading experience." C. B.

Natur Hist 77:80 Ag '68 90w

Reviewed by E. S. Miers
N Y Times Bk R p18 My 12 '68 500w

MCPHERSON, JAMES M. Marching toward freedom: the Negro in the Civil War, 1861-1865. 181p $3.95 Knopf

973.71 U.S.—History—Civil War—Juvenile literature. Negroes—History—Juvenile literature 67-18585

The author "tells of the black man's belated but decisive entry into the battle. Using numerous quotes from politicians, slaves and freedmen, he shows that military and political expediency, not idealism, dictated the Union's altered stance." Bibliography. (N Y Times Bk R) "Age eleven and up." (Book World)

Reviewed by P. M. Angle
Book World p30 (children's issue) My 5 '68 150w

"A well-documented account . . . with contemporary illustrations. This latest volume of the Living History Library is an impressive study, reinforced with passages from the letters and diaries, song and oratory of its protagonists. Its relative brevity is an additional asset." M. L. Birmingham

Commonweal 88:302 My 24 '68 50w

Reviewed by M. H. Edmonds
Library J 93:[3331] S 15 '68 60w

Reviewed by Mel Watkins
N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p49 My 5 '68 100w

MACQUARRIE, JOHN, ed. Dictionary of Christian ethics. 366p $7.50 Westminster press

241 Christian ethics—Dictionaries. Ethics—Dictionaries 67-17412

A compilation by a professor at Union Theological Seminary "of answers to current moral problems now being articulated within the Christian community. . . . [The contributors] represent the Protestant, Anglican, Roman Catholic, Orthodox and Jewish faiths. . . . The dictionary covers three broad areas. The first deals with basic concepts. These include definitions of terms such as 'evil' and 'justice' and surveys of other ethical systems such as the Confucian, Egyptian and Hindu. The second concerns the Bible and theology. The topics are drawn from the Old and New Testaments and such interpreters of this point of view as St. Augustine and Karl Barth. The third chief emphasis is basic moral problems, from abortion and homosexuality to war and juvenile delinquency. . . . [Included are] articles dealing with anthropology, sociology and psychology." (Christian Century)

"The strength of this dictionary as a work of reference lies in its articles on the philosophy of ethics in general and the solid information it gives about ethical thinkers from Plato to Barth. Its weakness is that it fails to give a steady viewpoint to help those Christians who are tired of dancing to the lugubrious beat of the secular drum." Magdalen Goffin
Book World p8 J1 7 '68 700w

Choice 5:464 Je '68 80w

"Among the able scholars who have participated in this worthwhile venture: John C. Bennett, Harvey G. Cox, V. A. Demant, Joseph Fletcher, Joseph Haroutunian, Seward Hiltner, T. E. Jessop, Carl Michelson, Alex R. Vidler. The writers come from the United States, Great Britain and Australia. . . . Most [major articles] contain a bibliography listing books, articles in periodicals and books, government reports and pamphlets in English, French and German. The choices of classics and recent literature are excellent. However, in some cases the listings are too meager. For example, no titles are listed for 'capital punishment,' while only one is given for 'abortion' and for 'freedom.' . . . All the material is presented clearly, fairly and concisely, and there are cross references and 'see also' references to related material. . . . A necessary tool for those who want guidance." Alan Seaburg

MACQUARRIE, JOHN—Continued

Christian Century 85:358 Mr 20 '68 410w

"The articles are short; the major ones have bibliographies; and all are signed. There are good cross references. The book is light to handle and the print is good. An authoritative and invaluable reference book, it is recommended for all public and theological libraries." Jean Deuss

Library J 92:4492 D 15 '67 90w

Reviewed by D. M. Glixon

Sat R 51:64 My 13 '68 100w

MACQUEEN, JOHN. Robert Henryson; a study of the major narrative poems. 229p $4.80 Oxford

821 Henryson, Robert [67-803161]

After a "biographical introduction, MacQueen treats Orpheus and Eurydice, The Testament of Cresseid, and each of the Morall Fabillis, analyzing influences and sources of philosophical approaches." (Choice)

"MacQueen (Edinburgh), chooses to discuss the Middle Scots poet and his work apart from the Chaucerian tradition. . . . Henryson needs this kind of treatment, for he is a poet of considerable originality who would have done much the same work without Chaucer. . . . One reason for the neglect of Henryson is that little has been written on him, this being the first critical study since 1949. College libraries should have it."

Choice 5:196 Ap '68 200w

"There is little sense of purpose about Professor MacQueen's discussion of Henryson's major poems. Much of the scholarly material is admirable, but it is simply not used. The different parts of the book are linked only by the writer's affection for detail and his sometimes hobby-horsical preoccupation with allegory . . . at times the commentary shows evident signs of strain. . . . It is doubtful whether the parallel between Cresseid and Eurydice is as rewarding as [MacQueen] would suggest, but this is certainly one of the best two parts of the book. The other is Appendix I, which argues convincingly for a text of the Fables based not, as is usual, on the Bassandyne print, but on the Bannatyne manuscript."

TLS p726 Ag 10 '67 800w

MACRAE, DUNCAN. Parliament, parties, and society in France, 1946-1958, by Duncan MacRae, Jr. 375p $10 St Martins

320.944 France—Politics and government—20th century 67-12241

An American political scientist and sociologist examines "the mistakes of the Fourth French Republic. . . . [His book] is based on a statistical analysis of Assembly roll calls, aggregate voting statistics, and survey data, besides newspaper accounts and sociological analysis of the French social structure." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"This is a book aimed primarily at the new breed of scientists in politics—those who, in MacRae's words, 'study politics statistically.' Their purpose is to test out a number of widely accepted theories about the functioning of French democracy and to provide a basis for precise rather than speculative comparison with other political systems. . . . [The author's] sharp analytical mind operates effectively on his new subject matter. He has immersed himself thoroughly in the literature on modern French politics and has distilled out the essence of that literature as it relates to his central quest—a search for the causes of Cabinet instability. . . . A rich and challenging book, even for mathematical illiterates." Gordon Wright

Ann Am Acad 378:157 J1 '68 500w

"There are several limitations to MacRae's work; some are imposed by his weak grounding in French history; his machinery is cumbersome and perhaps too elaborate for the conclusions they yield, his findings are reported tersely, without evident concern for readability; and some unsupported speculation is elevated to truth, e.g. his belief that Frenchmen were passive politically under the Fourth Republic and that only a very tiny minority participated actively in politics. Yet this study will be valuable for the political scientist and the historian; its findings concerning the sources of cabinet instability, the structure of parties, and the role of ideology in politics are both provocative and illuminating."

Choice 4:1166 D '67 190w

"No other analysis of the political system of the Fourth Republic has yet been made which compares with this as an exercise in political sociology. Professor MacRae makes a general survey of the social divisions of France, and of the organization of political parties, before engaging in a careful, statistical examination of parliament and of the ways in which the parliaments were elected. In doing all this he is able to test a number of hypotheses that have often been put forward. . . . The criticisms that one can make of this book are those that could be expected. . . . Sometimes the assumptions appear a little inadequate. . . . Equally, one cannot but be disappointed at the rather cautious nature of the conclusions. But this is an important and valuable study."

Economist 226:53 Mr 9 '68 550w

MACRO ERIC. Yemen and the Western world since 1571. 150p $6.50 Praeger

327.53 Yemen—Foreign relations 68-17558

The author "details the interests and activities—commercial, social, and political—of western countries (but also Japan and Communist China) in Southwest Arabia, from the arrival of the Portuguese in the 16th Century to the present day [with] emphasis on the period after World War II." (Library J) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"This new book will be useful to the mature student, but ought to be read alongside [W.H.] Ingrams' Yemen [BRD 1965]. . . . Its terse, concise, and sometimes jejune style demands careful and close reading. Excellent bibliography and good index. The map is useful, although spelling of place names on it is not always consistent with the text."

Choice 5:1352 D '68 140w

"The relations between Yemen and Great Britain, which controlled parts of the area, [are discussed] in detail, [providing] information on the developments in Aden and the South Arabia Federation. [Macro] has packed the book with facts, in places he has overpacked it, for some of the early sections read more like shipping lists. Mr. Macro, who previously compiled two bibliographies on the Arabian Peninsula and Yemen, assumes that the reader might find the book tedious, and he is correct. It is recommended for academic libraries only."

David Shavit

Library J 93:548 F 1 '68 100w

"Mr. Macro is a bibliophile who has at his fingertips the year—it was 1711—in which the French first exported the famous coffee bush of Mocha from the Yemen to Réunion. His title should by rights be the other way about, for his book is written more from the standpoint of the European powers than from that of the Yemenis. It therefore never utters the cri de coeur that resounds throughout [other] books: 'We would rather have had Yemini rule than any kind of foreign rule.'"

TLS p502 My 16 '68 300w

MCSHANE, MARK. Ill met by a fish shop on George Street. 191p $3.95 Doubleday

68-10676

A novel of suspense in which "the ill meeting concerns an ex-policeman [Tom Brady] and an ex-murderer [Jack Partridge], who saw each other once before over 30 years ago. But the recognition is immediate (in Sydney, across the globe from the scene of the murder)." (N Y Times Bk R)

"Accomplishes the difficult task of wedding humor with a gripping, serious and, at times, unusual story."

Best Sell 27:457 Mr 1 '68 100w

Reviewed by M. K. Grant

Library J 93:575 F 1 '68 50w

"[The author] invents wonderful titles. . . . One's only (and probably hypercritical) reservation would be that this is, even more than most suspense novels, a short story developed as a book." Anthony Boucher

N Y Times Bk R p34 F 25 '68 100w

"An agreeable medley of shoplifting, blackmail, and murder with a legitimate use of coincidence is set in Sydney, Australia." Sergeant Cuff

Sat R 51:33 My 25 '68 20w

MCSHERRY, JAMES E. Stalin, Hitler, and Europe; v 1. The origins of World War II, 1933-1939. 308p $10 World pub.

940.53 World War, 1939-1945—Causes. Russia—Foreign relations. Germany—Foreign relations 67-31018

"A study of Nazi-Soviet relations from 1933 through September 1939." (Library J) "No significant Soviet publications covering the period have ever appeared. . . . Most of the pertinent German documents are available, however, and the British documents from 1938 to the outbreak of the war in September 1939 are now in print. French-British relations were so close during 1938 and 1939 that one can trace French policy in some detail through the British minutes and correspondence. A number of diplomats in responsible positions at the time have also published their memoirs, and the U.S. and Italian documents provide valuable supplements. Thus, with two elements of the equation known, Britain-France and Germany, it is not too difficult to determine the value of Russia." (Pref) Bibliography.

Choice 5:1207 N '68 180w

"Backed by careful research in documentary collections, [McSherry] has written an important book which ought to be read. . . . [It] may well be condemned as a cold-war history of Nazi-Soviet relations, but the type of study which he has attempted has been badly needed. However, although he amassed an impressive amount of material, he is not always certain what it all means, and fails to discuss it adequately. . . . Nevertheless, the book is recommended because it is a needed corrective to works which have tended to whitewash Stalin's foreign policy." Keith Eubank

Library J 93:1894 My 1 '68 300w

Reviewed by A. J. P. Taylor

N Y Rev of Books 10:14 Je 6 '68 200w

MCSWEENEY, BILL. The impossible dream: the story of the miracle Boston Red Sox. 249p il $4.95 Coward-McCann

796.357 Boston. Baseball club (American League). Baseball 68-22320

The author "is primarily concerned with the 1967 storybook success of the Red Sox. However, he first gives the reader a quick history of Boston baseball and many famous names of years gone by." (Library J)

"McSweeney is a reporter for the Boston Record American and a part-time scout for the Red Sox. It is evident that he knows baseball, its personalities, and its history. . . . Although his style leaves something to be desired—there are too many short-sentence paragraphs, too much jumping forward and then back in time—the story comes through. His chapter on the closing weeks of the 1967 season is downright suspenseful, even though you know how it all will end. Baseball fans will find this book necessary reading, although younger ones may be disillusioned by some of the cruel realities of professional baseball." R. L. Waters

Library J 93:2685 Jl '68 170w

"Intended to be an interpretation of the background of the Boston club, [this] is pretentious, frequently inaccurate, lacking in perspective and full of forced associations. . . . It professes to be 'honest' in evaluating the principal characters—Tom Yawkey, Red Sox owner; Dick Williams, the manager; such key figures from the Boston past as Ted Williams and Joe Cronin; and a host of others. But it doesn't deliver any real judgments; most of the criticisms are on the level of gossip. [McSweeney] labors to reconstruct something that caught his enthusiasm, but never gets inside it." Leonard Koppett

N Y Times BK R p14 Je 16 '68 330w

MCWILLIAMS, CAREY, ed. The California revolution. 240p $6.50 Grossman pubs.

917.94 California—Civilization 67-14135

"In this collection of critical comment 16 writers discuss California politics, land use, agriculture, industry, freeways, water development, higher education, social changes, Walt Disney, California's relations with Australia, and other current topics. Contributors include G. Hill, T. Roszak, R. Lillard, D. Bess, and K. Rexroth." (Library J)

"Witty, informed, and cynical scholars and publicists have contributed essays on the meaning and impact of population growth in California. Although they disagree on minor points, their analysis of human behavior, state institutions, and social and economic opportunities lead to one conclusion: without planning, all that is good, true, beautiful, and free in California will vanish. . . . Essential for readers who are interested in the attitudes and goals shared by liberal and left wing critics of California's materialistic and conformist culture. Lively reading."

Choice 5:1334 D '68 100w

"Some of the essays are packed with facts; others tend toward opinion and interpretation. As a whole, though, the book fails to justify any 'revolution' in the Golden State, for there is none. California's history has always been one of sudden growths, of changing economic bases and shifting population. A few of the contributors do not realize that there is more to California than Los Angeles and San Francisco and that one cannot judge the whole state by these two cities. This book is mostly for libraries which have highly specialized collections on California." Marco Thorne

Library J 93:2653 Jl '68 150w

"The trouble is that almost anyone who will bother to read this book about California already knows the bulk of what he can learn before he opens it, and much more that is curiously left out. . . . Unfortunately, McWilliams and his friends don't shoot straight. They appear to be angry men, even social critics, but for the most part they pick uncontroversial issues. They shy away from the real eyesores of race, poverty and rootless vulgarity on the California horizon and beat their breasts about 'presentable' problems like traffic. . . . In spite of these omissions, this is a muckraking book. It is filled with damaging accusations, but they are the outcries of white, middle-class professionals who have the leisure to fight for the redwoods. For them, the decaying inner city is a thing to wince at while driving by on the freeway. They may scoff at the shopping-center way of life, but it is theirs." R. A. S.

Newsweek 72:82 Ag 12 '68 900w

MCWILLIAMS, MARGARET. Nutrition for the growing years. 303p il $6.95 Wiley

649 Children—Nutrition 67-26226

"The nutritional needs of children—from the pregnancy requirements of the mother through the stresses of adolescence—are covered in seven chapters of this book. Four additional chapters include material on weight control, the sick child, questions mothers ask, and food favorites." (J Home Econ) Chapter bibliographies. Reference index. Subject index.

"The author intends the book for use in a college course in child nutrition, both by food and nutrition majors and by other students. The reviewer would take exception to her suggestion that the book serve as a text for advanced undergraduate nutrition majors. . . . It is a light, easy-to-read book which should appeal to nursery and elementary school teachers, parents, and others working with children and young people who have had little or no background study of nutrition. For the food and nutrition major, this book does not offer information that is not already available in special chapters of well-recognized advanced nutrition texts." E. H. Morse

J Home Econ 60:146 F '68 200w

"Mothers and expectant mothers will find safe and sound nutritive advice in this book. Mrs. McWilliams, instructor of foods at California State College . . . suggests typical menus for the different age levels. One does question the value here of the final chapter, 'Food Favorites,' a helter-skelter listing of 37 recipes (including Spanish rice and crunchy oatmeal cookies) all of which can be located readily in any basic cook book. Appropriate illustrations . . . accompany the easy-to-follow text. Most public libraries will want to consider purchase." D. L. Gustafson

Library J 92:2776 Ag '67 150w

MADAN, T. N. Family and kinship: a study of the Pandits of rural Kashmir; with a foreword by J. A. Barnes. 259p il maps $10.75 Asia pub.

301.44 Family. Kinship. Kashmir—Social life and customs 66-4065

This book is based on "field-work in the village of Utrassu-Umanagri in the Kashmir valley. . . . Dr. Madan describes a typical Kashmiri Pandit homestead and examines the composition of, and modes of recruitment to, the household. Also discussed are the economic aspects and partition of the household, its place within an extended family, and extra-familial kinship. . . . Appendices [deal with] the language of kinship." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

MADAN, T. N.—Continued

"The author conducted field work in Kashmir from January, 1957 to January, 1958. Data for the book were derived from census schedules, interviews, genealogies, biographies, and participant observation. . . . On the whole, this book is well written and contains useful information on a previously unstudied group. Yet, it suffers from the fact that the original data have been distilled to such a degree that it is no longer possible to recover them. . . . Nowhere are these data available in a form appropriate either for verifying the author's statements or for comparative purposes." S. A. Tyler

Am Anthropol 69:524 O '67 750w

"[This book] is very well produced and written in a straightforward, simple style. The photographs are good, but one or two more, say of a shop and an interior of a living room would have added to the information and vividness. . . . [However] the present study gives an impression of isolation of the Pandits, which is not true. The Pandit community is studied here in a connected village, but it is treated as if it were an isolate. . . . The study in . . . tells us nothing about other communities in the village or their interaction with the Pandits, and it does not tell us about the Pandits as a community but only of one group of Pandits in one village. . . . Some of the features of [the Pandit] organization could have been easily connected up with [the] fact [that they are part of Indian Brahmanhood]." Irawati Karve

Ann Am Acad 370:233 Mr '67 600w

MADDEN, CHARLES F., ed. Talks with social scientists. See Talks with social scientists

MADDEN, DAVID, ed. Proletarian writers of the thirties; with a pref. by Harry T. Moore. 278p $6.95 Southern Ill. univ. press

810.9 American literature—History and criticism 68-11423

A collection of essays which discuss the writings of John Dos Passos, Edward Dahlberg, Robert Cantwell, Jack Conroy, Daniel Fuchs, Dalton Trumbo, B. Traven, Michael Gold, and others.

Choice 5:954 O '68 150w

"[The book] opens with a questioning of the concept of the term, and the lively discussion between David Madden and Josephine Herbst seems to enliven the whole collection. The essays offer a review of a decade of social stresses and strains which were explored and recorded by great talents that sometimes outran the subject matter and lesser talents that were sometimes enhanced by their subjects. This collection of essays could indeed stimulate re-reading of the literature of the 1930's. . . . A curious timeliness reveals itself 30 years later. . . . [This volume would be useful in] college. . . . [or] general collections. The indexing is not thorough." J. M. Carroll

Library J 93:2241 Je 1 '68 160w

"[Madden] seems to have allowed his essayists every freedom to pick their own directions. The result is a sort of hodge-podge. Furthermore, there is the roller-coaster quality of the critics themselves, some well known and excellent, at ease with their work (Fiedler, Marcus Klein, F. J. Hoffman, Irving Howe); . . . some fledglings first trying out their pens; . . . [some] themselves writers of the Thirties. . . . [However, the book] makes clear that the literature of the Thirties was far more interesting in its variety and complexity than has heretofore been assumed. The superior work done during the Thirties by writers like Steinbeck, Dos Passos, . . . and Farrell transcends purely historical attention; lesser literature can function, as many of these essays show, as metaphorical interpreters of man, society, and culture." Robert Maurer

Sat R 51:35 Je 22 '68 800w

MADDEN, DAVID, ed. Tough guy writers of the thirties; with a pref. by Harry T. Moore. 247p $6.95 Southern Ill. univ. press

813 American fiction—History and criticism 68-10115

This volume examines detective and gangster novels, and the writings of Hemingway, J. M. Cain, John O'Hara, Raymond Chandler, Dashiell Hammett and contributors to Black Mask magazine.

Reviewed by Allen Guttman
Am Lit 40:420 N '68 390w
Choice 5:624 J1 '68 180w

"Relatively few obscure names are fetched back to walk memory lane. The movie and movie scenario of the decade are strongly emphasized. The essayists vary in approach from establishing literary lineages involving Stephen Crane, Zola, or Frank Norris on one hand to claiming Norman Mailer as a lineal descendant on the other. This collection of essays seems less focused and substantial than [Madden's] Proletarian Writers of the Thirties, BRD 1968. It would be useful] . . . in the inclusive or college collection. . . . The indexing is not thorough." J. M. Carroll

Library J 93:2241 Je 1 '68 160w

Reviewed by Robert Maurer
Sat R 51:35 Je 22 '68 800w

"At last we have begun to rediscover the thirties as they were and not as we would have them to have been, and along with this discovery is the realization that . . . we are the literary children of the tough guy writers. . . . This collection of essays, seventeen of them by such lively and different critics as Philip Durham, Matthew Bruccoli, and R. V. Cassill, is a welcome and valuable scholarly venture into fresh and exciting ground. David Madden has chosen well, for his collection has variety as well as intelligence; this book breaks new ground without trying to establish new dogma." Va ■ R 44:cxii summer '68 180w

MADDEN, WILLIAM, jt. ed. The art of Victorian prose. See Levine, G.

MADDOCK, REGINALD. The pit; il. by Douglas Hall. 191p $4.75 Little

68-12350

The setting of this novel is in the north of England. "Everybody in town knew that Butch Reece was a bad one; he spent his time alone on the moors, his father drank, and the family had for years lived on National Assistance. Because he was tough, Butch was blamed for misdemeanors he hadn't committed; because he was bitter, he pretended to be stupid in school. When he rescued a smaller boy from a bog in which he was sinking, Butch was only embarrassed at praise. Finally, when he realized that some of his friends—adults among them—had always had faith in him, he began to have faith in himself. . . . Ages eleven to fourteen." (Sat R)

Reviewed by Pat Boozer
Best Sell 28:18 Ap 1 '68 110w

"[This] is the vigorous story of a tough boy, a problem lad, in the North of England. It is full of exciting incident and good dialogue and does not dawdle in the narration. Underprivileged American adolescents will readily understand Butch Reece's attitudes, which are not unlike their own. Yet [the book] is not so memorable as it might be. Butch Reece tells the story in a first-person narrative, but the character is less fully realized than, say, the narrator of E. Clymer's My Brother Stevie [BRD 1967]. Perhaps the character of the hearty, well-meaning school headmaster comes across too strongly. He seems to stand as a shadow between Butch and the reader." Edward Fenton

Book World p5 (children's issue) My 5 '68 120w

"Maddock lets his English tough guy level with the reader in a crisp first-person dialogue that makes friends fast. Butch has a believable hard-knocks childhood that bounds from poverty into adventure. . . . [The author's] realism—the brawls between Bruce and his drunken father, and the beatings Bruce gives his rival at school—is tempered by the picture of a boy juggling courage, sympathy, and pride. This tender tough should be very recognizable to 10-14's and his escapades are just extraordinary enough to be completely enthralling." C. F. R.

Christian Science Monitor p9 My ■ '68 160w

"Butch Reece's story, told with gentleness and dignity, has many familiar themes. . . . The atmosphere of English village and moors pervades the first-person narrative; particularly memorable are the definite, individualistic characters." E. L. H.

Horn Bk 44:330 Je '68 200w

Reviewed by J. C. Thomson

Library J 93:1313 Mr 15 '68 150w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland

Sat R 51:51 F 24 '68 130w

MADDOX, JAMES G. The advancing South: manpower prospects and problems [by] James G. Maddox [and others]. 276p maps $6.50 Twentieth cent. fund

330.975 Labor supply. Southern States—Economic conditions 67-14506

This study of thirteen "states focuses on the factors and forces that are most likely to determine their rates of economic growth during the next decade and the effect their future economic development will have on employment, particularly on the expansion of employment opportunities for their Negro inhabitants." (p.4) Index.

Reviewed by M. H. Liggett

Am Econ R 58:1036 S '68 700w

"The emphasis is on manpower, of course, but looking at the South in the same light as the advanced industrial nations look at the underdeveloped nations, the authors also explicate important nonmanpower factors in the Southern economic scheme, as well as the cultural and social factors which intertwine the economic picture and serve to hinder or help in the slow but sure transformation which is going on. . . . There is little that is new, but, as a compact and readable compendium of the important data in the manpower field as it is seen in the South, [the book] serves its purpose well. I have only two criticisms. Firstly, the authors' emphasis on the Negro aspect of manpower and growth, with only occasional reference to the poor white, creates a somewhat unbalanced approach. Secondly, I could find no mention of unions—though it is possible that I missed the word." H. J. Lahne

Ann Am Acad 337:220 My '68 300w

"While this book will be of great value and interest to specialists on manpower and the South, and of lesser interest to economic historians and regional economists, it has a number of shortcomings for the general reader: the data only goes to 1964; the work is quite repetitive with much belaboring of the obvious. Rich in statistical materials." Choice 5:1184 N '68 160w

"Maddox, professor of economics at North Carolina State University, believes the South can solve her problems—given enough time. He has documented his account well with an abundance of charts, graphs, and statistics, and has ably pulled together many facts which were previously scattered throughout the economic literature. Recommended for stronger economics collections." R. L. Waters

Library J 93:183 Ja 15 '68 120w

MADIAN, JON. Beautiful junk; a story of the Watts towers; with phot. by Barbara and Lou Jacobs, Jr. 44p $3.95 Little

68-21170

"Simon Rodia worked for years building these structures out of materials salvaged from the streets and trash cans of Los Angeles. [The story here] is a fictitious one, built around [that of] the real Watts towers. Charlie, an angry Watts resident, is disgusted by the junk he must live with. He sees [Simon] making his collecting rounds and ridicules him; then he follows him and sees [the towers he has built with the junk]. The old man and the Negro boy become friends and plan to build together out of beautiful junk." (Commonweal) "Grades three to five." (Library J)

Christian Century 85:1602 D 18 '68 30w

Reviewed by M. D. Hamlin

Christian Science Monitor pB7 N 7 '68 110w

Reviewed by L. P. Scanlon

Commonweal 89:286 N 22 '68 100w

"The photographs—of an old man pushing a wheelbarrow through back alleys, stopping to pick up pieces of wire and broken glass, broken dishes and rusted pipes, and of two boys who mock the old man until one of them discovers the fairy-tale towers—are more expressive than the text. . . . The story of the man and his towers is wonderful enough and does not need the obvious moral stressed in the title and in the imagined incidents. Children will respond to the sensitive photography." D. F.

Horn Bk 44:557 O '68 100w

"That imagination, desire and work can transmute the ugly into the beautiful is the theme pressed gently home as the boy's scorn changes to awe. Even those who cannot read the simple text can follow the story through the compelling photos, which have the dramatic action of movie stills. Details of Rodia's career appear in a postscript. A fine tribute to the creative spirit, which transcends merely local interest." Priscilla Moxom

Library J 93:4406 N 15 '68 100w

MADISON, CHARLES A. Yiddish literature; its scope and major writers. 540p $10 Ungar 892.49 Yiddish literature—History and criticism 68-18597

"Following an introductory essay, 'Judeo-German to Modern Yiddish,' Mr. Madison . . . has presented a chapter on each of 14 noted Yiddish writers from . . . Mendele, Sholom Aleichem, and Peretz, through Rosenfeld . . . and Bergelson to the Singer brothers. Interspersed by the essays 'Yiddish Goes to America,' 'The Efflorescence of Yiddish in America,' 'Yiddish in Soviet Russia,' and 'Yiddish in Israel,' and closing with a list of 'Yiddish Writings in English Translation.'" (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"This is clearly a standard work in the field, of high order, and valuable for reference. It should be available in school and public libraries; indeed, the student of general as well as Yiddish literature should read it." H. M. Orlinsky

Library J 93:3787 O 15 '68 130w

"For those who seek basic information the volume is a serviceable introduction; with its extensive summaries and compact biographies it is a lexicon and master-plot index combined. Nevertheless . . . [it] is not successful as a work of criticism or history. . . . [Madison] considers each writer as though he were an isolated entity. The format is usually biography, extensive summary, and brief personal evaluation—a method that . . . makes [the writers] indistinguishable from one another. In his evaluations Madison utilizes a billowy romantic vocabulary. . . . [This type of writing] is almost wholly impressionistic and consciously or unconsciously, uses florid language as a substitute for precise analysis." Curt Leviant

Sat R 51:24 Ag 17 '68 850w

MADSEN, WILLIAM G. From shadowy types to truth; studies in Milton's symbolism. 208p $6 Yale univ. press

821 Milton, John

68-13918

The author studies Milton's poetry in terms "of his thesis that 'Milton's symbolic theory and practice are best understood in the context of theories of biblical interpretation . . . current in his day.'" (Choice)

"Although some sections of it have appeared previously in literary journals, this book is a unified and coherent study which scholarly interpreters of Milton's major poetry cannot afford henceforth to ignore. . . . Madsen shows that [the doctrine of typology], rather than modern notions of metaphor and myth . . . guided Milton's use of symbols. Courteously but firmly Madsen explicitly corrects the readings of some Miltonists (MacCaffrey, Ferry, Hanford). . . . Modest in size and tone, attractive in typography and style, instructive without becoming tedious, this book is essential for any library's Milton shelves."

Choice 5:954 O '68 160w

"Professor Madsen needs all his lucidity to prevent the section . . . which he calls 'Wandering in the Wilderness' from approximating too closely to its title. . . . [His] claim [that typology is Milton's mode of discourse and that the typological mode excludes the platonic is perhaps a piece of scholarly dramatization. . . . When it is applied to the history of literature, typological criticism carries with it the threat of cultural snobbery. . . . Professor Madsen's book is free from [this]. . . . It is both intelligent and provocative. We can even call it 'lively,' using that word as the typologists understood it."

TLS p795 Jl 25 '68 460w

MAGGS, PETER B., Jr. auth. Disarmament inspection under Soviet law. See Berman, H. J.

MAGUIRE, ROBERT A. Red virgin soil: Soviet literature in the 1920's. (Columbia Univ. Russian inst. Study) 482p $10 Princeton Univ. press

891.7 Russian literature 67-12347

The author "analyzes here a . . . Soviet 'thick journal' of the early years of the New Economic Policy. Krasnaya Nov' (Red Virgin Soil) is remembered today primarily as a forum for the views of the Marxist critic Voronskii, one of the precursors of Socialist Realism. Secondly, the journal happened to be a base and a meeting place for such diverse but mainly 'proletarian' writers as Leonov, Chapygin, Olesha, Gladkov, Kataev, Nikitin, and Seifullina." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"Maguire's book sheds much new light on many aspects of Soviet literature in the 1920's and introduces new material for our understanding of the period, especially on the tradition of the 'thick' journal. His analyses of the works that were published are fresh and perceptive. He is not uncritical. The discussions of the achievements of Voronsky, his literary program, the reasons for his purge, the literary groups and controversies are interesting. That Voronsky had a 'Marxist' theory of literature is a very moot question, since Marx himself never formulated a consistent theory of literature. One would have liked more of a discussion of the Futurists and Formalists and their role and literary theories. It is perhaps churlish to cavil; Maguire has made an important contribution to our understanding of Soviet literature."

Choice 5:1138 N '68 200w

"Of interest to serious students of the early Soviet period, this book is of a somewhat lesser value to general collections." Oleg Iivsky

Library J 93:2872 Ag '68 100w

"[Krasnaya Nov'] the most influential literary journal of the period, was in many ways typical of its age—the pre-totalitarian phase in Soviet development. . . . Though Mr. Maguire has been barred from the files of Red Virgin Soil on some implausible pretext, he has discharged his responsibility well, providing much in the way of detailed information, but ranging far beyond the narrower confines of his subject to convey a picture of the Soviet literary world as a whole. He is eloquent on the numerous literary theories of the age, as also on the interminable controversies between the competing literary groups, but does not lose sight of the nuts and bolts of the literary life, such as rates of pay, living conditions, the means of placing articles and stories, and the general rough and tumble of an editor's office."

TLS p724 J1 11 '68 1000w

Va Q R 44:cxxx summer '68 150w

MAHON, JOHN K. History of the Second Seminole War, 1835-1842. 387p il $10 Univ. of Fla. press

973.5 Seminole War, 2d, 1835-1842 67-26604

The author "begins with the origin of the Seminoles, and . . . discusses the First Seminole War, the political and social backgrounds which led to the breakout of hostilities during Andrew Jackson's second term, and the conflict of personalities in both the Army and the Seminole camps" (Library J) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"Mahon has provided the first extensive, trustworthy account of this Indian war. Like most such conflicts, this one has little continuity and a bewildering variety of units and commanders. Also, . . . it must be described almost entirely from the viewpoint of the whites. Despite these difficulties, Mahon has produced a volume which is likely to be the standard authority on this subject for many years to come."

Choice 5:678 J1 '68 170w

"Mahon's account may evoke some restlessness among those who believe that a book's conclusions should spring from systematic and tightly organized analysis. Readers who enjoy a carefully documented and leisurely narrative, frequently digressing to fill in the background or to discuss the evidence on disputed points, will delight in this book . . . [which provides] colorful detail not only of battles and leaders but also of problems (often comic ones) of military organization and ordnance, Florida population and high society, Seminole culture and history, and the life and character of the leading Indians." Mary Young

J Am Hist 55:392 S '68 360w

"The book is much more than a narrative of military engagements. . . . Mahon analyzes the motives of all three races involved in the struggle; he delineates the characters of the chief antagonists, including the Indian leaders . . . and the sundry officers sent to Florida. . . . While introducing considerable detail . . . he is also able to relate the war to the broader policies of the federal government and to the political history of Florida. For university and large public libraries." John Buechler

Library J 93:1628 Ap 15 '68 200w

MAHONEY, J. DANIEL. Actions speak louder; introd. by William F. Buckley, Jr. 408p $8 Arlington house

329.8 Conservative party (New York). New York (State)—Politics and government 68-21668

The author "presents the annals of the Conservative Party of New York State from its birth in 1961 through the election of 1966." (Library J) Index.

"[The author] does not, unfortunately, contribute more than a journalistic chronicle of one political campaign after another, with the result that the reader will find little in the way of insight regarding the influence of this latest 'third party' upon the political situation in New York. [This book] is recommended to large public and research libraries, except in New York State, where local interest will warrant purchase by most medium-sized public libraries as well." George Whitbeck

Library J 93:2508 Je 15 '68 100w

"The Conservative story, as related by party chairman J. Daniel Mahoney, is an epic of perseverance. . . . [His] narrative points a number of lessons that should be pondered elsewhere around the country by conservative strategists and Republican bosses alike. The first of these is simply the value of being willing to act—to shrug off predictions of futility and to chart the indicated course for maximizing conservative strength." M. S. Evans

Nat R 20:812 Ag 13 '68 1150w

Reviewed by W. C. McWilliams

N Y Times Bk R p3 O 20 '68 700w

MAIER, PAUL L. Pontius Pilate. 370p $5.95 Doubleday

Pilate, Pontius—Fiction 68-10585

An historical novel concerning the career of the 'Roman prefect of Judea from 26-36 A.D., best known for his part in the trial and crucifixion of Jesus.' (Library J)

"The author, a specialist in ancient history at Western Michigan University (with Ph.D. from Basel), is well qualified to develop in detail a credible interpretation of the political climate of the Near East and of Rome itself during the life of Christ, credible to any reader because in many respects so similar to our own world. One evidence, among many, of Dr. Maier's skill is his ability to create convincing dialogue, something that 'throws' many writers, particularly in historical fiction. . . . There are no fictional characters in this entire account. . . . With its corrections of tradition long overdue, this account brings history so vividly to life that it is well worth any reader's time and attention." W. H. Archer

Best Sell 28:236 S 15 '68 650w

"Readers who endure through the rather slow beginning will soon find themselves caught up in the tale. Yet Maier's style is not facile. And his 'constructed history' does not always seem convincing. . . . The reader who has some acquaintance with contemporary New Testament criticism will be uneasy with Maier's simple harmonization of the Gospel accounts and his uncritical use of the Gospels as historical documents. It is clear that the author's central concern is the birth of Christianity; he uses the Pilate story simply as a vehicle. . . . The scholarly care with which [he] has treated his subject is impressive. If one is critical of Maier as novelist, he can appreciate Maier as historian. This is one of the most palatable helpings of Roman political history I have encountered." Robert Kysar

Christian Century 85:1507 N 27 '68 390w

"[Pontius Pilate] has had an unusually bad press for the past 17 centuries. In this historical novel, based on the study of primary sources, the author presents Pilate more objectively, within the total picture of contemporary Roman history rather than as a scapegoat from the Christian or Jewish viewpoints. . . . A fascinating account of a controversial man." Larissa Rulofson

Library J 93:3995 O 15 '68 90w [YA]

MAILER, NORMAN. The armies of the night; history as a novel, the novel as history. 288p $5.95 New Am. lib.

323 Vietnamese Conflict, 1961-—Protests, demonstrations, etc. against 68-23406

The author chronicles his experiences during the four days of events surrounding the peace march on the Pentagon in October, 1967. In a final section, he presents an evaluation of the march and its implications for American life and politics. The title was suggested to Mailer by Matthew Arnold's poem Dover Beach.

Reviewed by R. J. Thompson
America 119:18 Je 6 '68 480w

"The book as a whole [is] mostly a character study of Mailer and as such crueller than the classic Lillian Ross profile of Hemingway. This may, to some degree, be intentional. . . . The prose itself ranges from awful to brilliant. Mailer is good when he's not being fancy but he has picked up irritating mannerisms. . . . Mailer tries to inflate [the Peace March] with an importance it simply did not have and to give the people in it a stature they do not have. He tries to make a case of armed brutality used against the marchers and that is unconvincing. Not that it might not have happened; this account does not convince. . . . The last page of the book is a poetic call for America to regain its lost magnificent beauty. Number one: America was never that beautiful. Number two: this page as prose, as art, is the most embarrassing piece of pretentious, hysterical fakery in the book and the irony is that it is the most well intentioned." Mario Puzo
Book World p1 Ap 28 '68 1550w

Canadian Forum 48:84 Jl '68 650w

Reviewed by Julian Smith
Christian Century 85:1020 Ag 14 '68 550w

Reviewed by Roderick Nordell
Christian Science Monitor p11 My 16 '68 450w

"Harper's unprecedentedly devoted almost all of its March issue to the 90,000-word first section, and Commentary allotted a chunky segment of the prime pages of its April issue to the remaining 30,000-word section. . . . [This book] is as complete and thoroughgoing an account as one could hope for. . . . [The second section] offers a brilliant panoramic vista of the whole scene. [Mailer] delves into the history of the demonstration. . . and presents the militant's version—never fully reported in the mass media—of the violence it ended in. He analyzes exactly where the new revolutionists' politics-first-program-later planning went wrong and makes suggestions as to how it all might have gone right with better strategy. . . . As a new journalist, . . . Mailer commits all of the old sins a cub reporter might be guilty of. . . . [However, this] is certainly the best piece of writing turned out by an American author so far this year." Josh Greenfeld

Commonweal 88:362 Je 7 '68 1400w

Economist 229:viii N 9 '68 450w

Reviewed by Eric Moon
Library J 93:2227 Je 1 '68 200w

Reviewed by Alan Tractenberg
Nation 206:701 My 27 '68 2100w

Reviewed by Jeffrey Hart
Nat R 20:754 Jl 30 '68 750w

Reviewed by Richard Gilman
New Repub 153:27 Je 8 '68 5000w

Reviewed by A. Alvarez
New Statesman 76:351 S 20 '68 1850w

Reviewed by C. C. O'Brien
N Y Rev of Books 10:16 Je 20 '68 2300w

"I believe that 'Armies of the Night' is just as brilliant a personal testimony as Whitman's diary of the Civil War, 'Specimen Days,' and Whitman's great essay on the crisis of the Republic during the Gilded Age, 'Democratic Vistas.' I believe that it is a work of personal and political reportage that brings to the inner and developing crisis of the United States at this moment admirable sensibilities, candid intelligence, the most moving concern for America itself. Mailer's intuition in this book is that the times demand a new form. He has found it." Alfred Kazin

N Y Times Bk R p1 My 5 '68 3150w

Reviewed by Saul Maloff

Newsweek 71:107 My 6 '68 800w

"[This book] is probably the truest picture we have of what has been happening to America. . . . [It] is Mailer's best book since The Naked and the Dead [BRD 1948]. To use his own criterion, it feels absolutely right. One measure of a book is its language, and . . . this book is written with amazing stylistic virtuosity. The texture consists of flashes of wit and poetry, but these build to breathtaking verbal cadenzas. . . . [It combines] the objectivity of journalism and the intimacy of a memoir. . . . Some people will never be able to overcome their repugnance for Mailer's public role, a combination of Tamburlaine, Faust, and Cassius Clay, but for those who can, the rewards are rich [as shown in] some of the flashes of observation, the lightning perceptions of people and events." H. S. Resnik

Sat R 51:25 My 4 '68 1900w

Time 91:120 My 10 '68 1300w

TLS p1050 S 19 '68 1650w

MAIN, JACKSON TURNER. The upper house in revolutionary America, 1763-1788. 311p $7.50 Univ. of Wis. press

328.73 Legislative bodies. U.S.—Politics and government—Revolution. U.S.—Politics and government—Colonial period 67-20753

Using "data from local histories, genealogies, tax lists, and probate records, [the author seeks] to determine the occupation, economic status, and social origin of approximately 1,100 councillors and senators. He has also consulted legislative records, newspapers, and correspondence to ascertain the functions of the upper houses and their relations with the lower ones. Main found colonial councils more active and less self-interested instruments of royal power than often assumed. He concluded that the Revolution vitiated aristocratic control of most senates and generally reduced legislative conflict to quarrels between political factions." (Choice) Index.

"Main has accumulated an impressive quantity of data. . . . Although every undergraduate library should own this important study, [his] conclusions are not fully refined. If he had defined certain crucial terms (democracy, aristocracy, etc.) with more care, scaled economic status to acknowledge the existence of poor people (those with £2,000 or less property all labelled of 'moderate means'), analyzed the years 1776-88 as two periods (Revolutionary and post-Revolutionary), and consulted records of state constitutional conventions fully, he might have noted enough additional continuity that the debates of the 1787 federal convention would not then appear as quite so 'curiously anachronistic and unreal.' "

Choice 5:550 Je '68 200w

"In contrast to the approach to institutional history represented by Andrews, Labaree, and most recently J. P. Greene, Main is interested in the membership of legislative bodies and their consequent position in political power structures rather than in practices and procedures and relationships with executives. [In this book he is] formulating a kind of socio-institutional history for the late-colonial and early national period by use of the quantitative methods he utilized so successfully in The Anti-federalists [BRD 1962] and The Social Structure of Revolutionary America [BRD 1966]." E. P. Douglass

J Am Hist 55:120 Je '68 410w

MAINTAINING and restoring balance in international payments [rev. versions of 17 papers prepared for a symposium held at the invitation of the Organization for economic coop. and development; by] William Fellner [and others]. 259p $6.50 Princeton univ. press

332.1 Balance of payments 66-23764

A collection of essays and "statements on narrow points by . . . economists. All are on the subjects of balance of payments adjustment processes, policies to alleviate balance of payments difficulties, and the role of international reserves. There is general support for increasing the effectiveness of semi-automatic adjustment mechanisms, for adding to incentives for

MAINTAINING and restoring balance in international payments—Continued
adjustment by surplus countries, and for modest-scale modifications of the international financial system." (Choice)

"Selecting a few for special comment from the articles . . . is not easy, partly because they overlap to a considerable degree—it is not difficult to detect in 13 of the 14 authors the desires to reach consensus—and partly because each of the authors writes with authority on his topic. Here are a few that impressed the reviewer. . . . Machlup has an exhaustive account of the problems of diagnosis—how can we recognize a balance of payments problem and its causes? Triffin, covering some of the same ground, presents a rather optimistic statement for expecting a convergence of objectives—although he is fully aware of the difficulties of securing a coordination of policies on an international basis. Harry Johnson sets out a short but revealing analysis of the possibility that countries will adopt mutually frustrating policies when each of them has at its disposal as many instruments of policy as it has objectives. . . . The volume is highly recommended." Lorie Tarshis

Am Econ R 58:269 Mr '68 600w

"All [of the] essays are of high quality, analytical but not abstract. That they require some background for basic comprehension somewhat limits their usefulness. Students of international economics will, however, find the compendium a mine of insightful ideas." Choice 4:722 S '67 200w

MAISKII, IVAN MIKHAILOVICH. See Maisky, I.

MAISKY, IVAN. Memoirs of a Soviet ambassador; the War, 1939-43; tr. from the Russian by Andrew Rothstein. 408p $6.95 Scribner 940.53 World War, 1939-1945—Diplomatic history. Russia—Foreign relations—Great Britain 68-12501

The author had been ambassador to Great Britain from 1932. This book deals with his experiences during World War II from "the start of Hitler's Blitzkrieg against Poland—until September 1943, when . . . Stalin recalled Maisky from London . . . as an expression of his disappointment with the Allied postponement of a second front in Europe." (Sat R)

Reviewed by B. D. Williams

Best Sell 28:39 Ap 15 '68 1000w

"The narrative, at times with some odd, though ideologically justifiable lapses of memory, gives a fair and invariably fascinating account of the vicissitudes of wartime Soviet-British, Soviet-American, and Soviet-French diplomatic relations. For the first time we also learn something about the Soviet government's policy dilemmas vis-à-vis the various East European governments-in-exile in London. . . . A valuable addition to the literature of wartime diplomacy and to the history of Soviet-Western relations." Choice 5:671 J1 '68 200w

Economist 224:655 Ag 19 '67 850w

Reviewed by R. H. Johnston

Library J 93:2486 Je 15 '68 150w

Reviewed by Douglas Gill

New Statesman 74:818 D 8 '67 270w

"[These recollections] are uncheerful reading. . . . Mr. Maisky's certitude that his country was invariably faultless, and that it is moral, just, and right that every nation's interest be subordinated to Russia's is bizarre. When he writes, 'Estonia, Latvia, and Lithuania in the summer of 1940 entered the U.S.S.R.,' he is not being disingenuous but—so the whole book suggests—telling the truth according to his peculiar lights. The translation does not suggest that he has any literary gift." New Yorker 44:177 Ap 6 '68 130w

Reviewed by F. Y. Blumenfeld

Newsweek 71:95A Mr 25 '68 600w

"[The book] is fascinating for a number of reasons. . . . It is a quickly paced story of high diplomacy in wartime, including accounts of summit sessions in Moscow, hazardous and secret journeys around enemy lines, and provocative if shallow descriptions of Western leaders. . . . The book performs an important scholarly function by giving an intelligent Soviet assessment of major historical events from the Russian-Finnish war to the embarrassing haggling over the opening of a second front.

Finally, in chapter after chapter Maisky, perhaps unintentionally, reveals aspects of his work and personality that are at least as informative as his running commentary on Britain and the war. . . . What is especially intriguing—at least, to this reader—is the way Maisky manipulated London's politicians, writers, and journalists to serve Soviet policy. . . . [He] understood Britain after all those years and yet failed to understand the British, lapsing into ideological clichés and tailored judgments when sophistication and perception were needed. His views of Churchill, Eden and Lord Beaverbrook seem almost primitive." Marvin Kalb

Sat R 51:43 My 11 '68 650w

"Mr. Maisky's Who Helped Hitler was ■ scintillating and, on the whole, convincing piece of polemic against Neville Chamberlain. . . . His Spanish Notebooks was a witty and, at times, uproariously funny satirical account of the proceedings of the Spanish Non-Intervention Committee in 1936-39. This latest volume of memoirs . . . is rather stale in comparison. It may be of some mild interest to Russian readers, but English readers will not find anything very new in it. . . . All controversial and tricky subjects are glossed over. . . . The book is of very little value as a contribution to history. What remains, however, is the interesting personality of the author. . . . Mr. Rothstein's translation is as excellent as usual." TLS p811 S 14 '67 1000w

MALAMUTH, CHARLES, ed. Stalin [new ed]. See Trotsky, L.

MALANIA, FAE. The quantity of a hazel nut. 152p $4.95 Knopf

242 Devotional literature 67-22217

The "wife of an American Anglo-Catholic minister writes a diary of her religious experiences, charisms, and encounters with God." (Library J) Portions of this book have appeared in Redbook magazine.

"Although [the author] would be the first to admit that she is no John of the Cross, her experiences have the ring of mystical authority. The traces of a lifetime of wide reading in classical Christian mystical literature are evident in this book and a delight to the reader who recognizes Mrs. Malania's allusions. There is . . . a pervading sense of the omnipresence of God, a sense of His infinite Otherness, His intimate love. This book may not prove to be popular, but it will continue to be read for a long, long time." G. M. Casey

Library J 93:756 F 15 '68 120w

"Here is the inward side of an essentially inward life. . . . This is enclosed-garden writing. But it is, for all that, no less cosmic, no less far-ranging; no less, if you will, robustly theological. . . . Here is sympathy for the different and the afflicted, for the misfit and the miscast—for Lee Harvey Oswald and Marilyn Monroe—but all held in a firm and Christian grasp. Here, too, is the . . . reservation of the right to criticize the more abject and unloving expositions of the power and righteousness of God. And here, above all, is the . . . resolute resistance to the inertia of deadness and inaction." R. F. Capon

N Y Times Bk R p12 Mr 24 '68 400w

MALERBA, LUIGI. The serpent; tr. by William Weaver. 206p $4.95 Farrar, Straus

68-14915

A first novel in which the "narrator is a 33-year-old stamp dealer who owns a small shop in Rome. He is romantic, innocent, paranoid, intransigent, ever searching for women, always afraid of them. . . . At a chorus rehearsal he meets a young woman whom he names Miriam, and whom he makes his mistress. . . . After he has become suspicious of a possible liaison between his mistress and his one friend [Baldasseroni, he] proceeds to rid himself of Miriam. . . . The police cannot find any trace of the woman. Nor can he remember much of the detail. . . . At the very end, after, possibly, he has been institutionalized, he refuses to think further about his story since he isn't sure if any of it was real." (N Y Times Bk R)

Reviewed by F. M. Rotondaro

Best Sell 28:102 Je 1 '68 300w

"This subtle, skillfully written black comedy has been compared to the lucid madness of Raymond Roussel. Malerba is a remarkable writer who seems destined to become one of Italy's more important literary figures. This excellent translation will help to establish his reputation here. [The book] is recommended for modern literature collections and for popular reading shelves." Arthur Curley
Library J 93:1917 My 1 '68 200w

"[This novel] is good, better than good, one of the best novels I've read in some years. . . . How much of [the narrator's] life is real, how much imaginary? No one can know; least of all, he, himself. . . . Corrosive? Yes, the insanity of life is all there. Comedy? Both in intent and manner. But beyond that, the novel is funny. Funny as only a book can be that is perfectly wedded in style and theme. And that is Malerba's real and very substantial achievement. The affinities with the cinematic style of Luis Buñuel are obvious. . . . The supposed line between the real and the non-real is absent, since everything—dreams, fantasies, imagination—has a basis in reality. . . . This good book deserves to be read." Shane Stevens
N Y Times Bk R p34 My 19 '68 300w

"[The book] is hard to identify. Is it the story of the love affair of a middle-aged stamp dealer and his dream girl? . . . Or is it simply a jaunty tour around an inventive, obsessed, and unbalanced mind? The story might be both; it is certainly the latter. Some of the descriptions are realistic enough, and certain Roman backgrounds—the Pincio, the banks of the Tiber, the beach at Ostia—are graphically and attractively portrayed. . . . This is a highly original work even in these days of technical experiment. I doubt if it is meant to be taken seriously; but as an exercise in fantasy it is carried through on a sustained note and at a tempo which, if not exactly allegro, is certainly rather more than andante. And it goes on just about long enough." T. G. Bergin
Sat R 51:60 My 18 '68 400w

TLS p1171 O 17 '68 370w

MALIN, IRVING, comp. Saul Bellow and the critics. 227p $6.50; pa $1.95 N.Y. univ. press
813 Bellow, Saul 67-10287

Twelve essays "on the works of Bellow by such critics as Leslie Fiedler, Earl Rovit, and John W. Aldridge. . . . There is, in addition to the critical essays, one by Bellow himself entitled, 'Where Do We Go From Here: The Future of Fiction.'" (Library J)

"Reading this book from cover to cover is a staggering task, one likely to end in surfeit and confusion. . . . Both the quality and range of the criticism vary hugely. . . . from critical brilliance (in pieces by Leslie Fiedler and Richard Chase) to fashionable critical babbling. . . . In any event, Malin . . . has accomplished a useful task in bringing these essays together. His choices are carefully made. . . . Recommended for all libraries as the best source for Bellow studies to date."

Choice 4:1117 D '67 170w

"Saul Bellow has enough stature as a novelist to require a book of this type, but I am doubtful that these particular essays tell us anything important about him. . . . It would have been wiser to delay the publication of a collection of this type until a clearer critical line had been drawn on [Bellow] as a novelist." R. F. Cayton
Library J 92:242 Ja 15 '67 170w

MALKIEL, BURTON GORDON. The term structure of interest rates; expectations and behavior patterns. 271p $8.50 Princeton univ. press

332.63 Bonds. Interest and usury 66-21836

"The author formulates an overall theory of the term structure in which expectations, transactions costs, and the maturity preferences of bond investors and issuers play major roles. In addition to formal aggregate statistical tests, considerable microeconomic evidence is developed to shed light on the actual behavior patterns of the various market participants. Differences with currently held theories are emphasized throughout the study, and implications for current monetary policy are suggested." (Publisher's note) Glossary. Bibliography. Index.

"This volume provides a systematic treatment of the subject, covering both the analytical and institutional aspects, and should prove to be especially helpful to students of monetary economics." D. I. Fand
Am Econ R 57:1364 D '67 900w

"Malkiel has adopted an extremely technical approach to a very complex phenomenon. He has carefully focused his analysis so that the monograph is very narrow in scope. The only extension of the study is that Malkiel, in a single chapter, permits himself to point out, but not support, a few of its policy implications. . . . Malkiel's econometric test of the expectations hypothesis shows that it cannot be rejected. Nevertheless, institutional features of the bond market suggest certain additions to the basic expectations model. This leads to a synthesized model which, at heart, depends upon the validity of the expectations hypothesis. The monograph is both deductive and inductive, building upon the theoretical work of Lutz and Hicks and the empirical efforts of Hickman, Meiselman, and Kessel. It contains a useful glossary of technical terms; but still it is likely to be comprehensible to specialists only."

Choice 4:1143 D '67 170w

"The importance of the statistical results is diminished considerably by the publication delay; the empirical work of others, notably Frank de Leeuw and Modigliani-Sutch, has since improved upon such distributed lag models. . . . The most fascinating and original portion of the book is contained in several chapters which discuss the effect of transactions costs and other institutional factors on the term structure. The book's real contributions come from Professor Malkiel's familiarity with the institutional details of the bond markets and his ingenious ability to incorporate into a theoretical framework those aspects he felt significant but which have typically been ignored by others." Richard Sutch
J Pol Econ 76:499 Je '68 650w

MALLESON, LUCY BEATRICE. See Gilbert, A.

MALLET, MARIE. Life with Queen Victoria; Marie Mallet's letters from court, 1887-1901; ed. by Victor Mallet. 245p il $5.95 Houghton

942.081 Victoria, Queen of Great Britain

68-21250

"Marie Adeane, mother of the editor of this book . . . was appointed maid of honour to Queen Victoria in 1887, and later served . . . as lady in waiting. Forbidden by the terms of her appointment to keep a journal she wrote long letters to her mother and her husband Bernard Mallet . . . and these letters form the main part of [this] volume . . . [and] give a picture of Queen Victoria's court during the last decades of her life." (Economist)

"The life [which the letters] describe . . . was one of paralyzing boredom, and it says much for Marie Mallet that she never lost her sense of humor. . . . It is plain that . . . the Queen herself kept a power to charm. Mrs. Mallet was no sycophant. Her views were liberal, and her taste secure. Yet her regard for her employer never faltered. . . . It has not been Sir Victor Mallet's intention to offer a new interpretation of history. He is content to present two portraits: one of a powerful old lady in the process of turning into a legend, and one of a young woman . . . under her spell. . . . Queen Victoria's type was not without its splendor, and Mrs. Mallet catches the autumnal glow of it." Alan Pryce-Jones
Book World p19 S 22 '68 1000w

Reviewed by Pamela Marsh
Christian Science Monitor p13 S 19 '68 700w

Economist 227:xii Ap 27 '68 550w

Reviewed by K. T. Willis
Library J 93:4551 D 1 '68 80w

Reviewed by Anne Fremantle
N Y Times Bk R p12 O 20 '68 1050w

"To the connoisseur of gossip there is hardly a line that is uninteresting, and to Queen Victoria buffs . . . the book is a necessity. The passages about Sir Victor's childhood experiences at Court and his presentations to the Queen are delicious. . . . Nor is [this book] without that tension, that mystery, which makes for good gossip. . . . To dismiss a work such as this as 'mere gossip' is to miss utterly what a very deep need gossip is. Sir Victor's book, then, satisfies it splendidly." Morse Peckham

MALLET, MARIE—Continued

Sat R 51:50 O 26 '68 400w

"'Wit and humour' Marie Mallet certainly possessed, and her conversation had a pleasant astringency which comes out equally clearly in her letters. The comments that such a personality had to make on Court life . . . have real historical importance as well as considerable entertainment value. Of course, like any book written by or about a member of . . . 'the entourage,' [this] is full of maddening gaps and omissions. 'Waiting' was for three months in the year only and any event in which the reader happens to take a particular interest invariably seems to occur during the remaining nine. . . . There are not very many inhibitions about Marie's comments on those members of the Royal Family with whom she came most in contact. . . . [and her] account of the trials of Court life is as outspoken."

TLS p395 Ap 18 '68 1650w

MALLET, VICTOR, ed. Life with Queen Victoria. See Mallet, M.

MALLETT, MICHAEL E. The Florentine galleys in the fifteenth century; with the diary of Luca di Maso degli Albizzi, Captain of the galleys, 1429-1430. 293p pl maps $11.20 Oxford 382 Florence—Commerce 67-86823

"Through examining the operation of the galleys in the context of the general economic life of the city in the quattrocento Mallett is able to demonstrate how the enterprise played a major part in revitalizing the Florentine woolen industry and in launching the new silk industry." (Choice) Index.

Reviewed by David Herlihy

Am Hist R 73:1127 Ap '68 480w

"Despite the seeming specialization of its subject matter, this book makes a broad contribution to the economic history of Florence, for which detailed studies are far from plentiful. . . . A tradition, moreover, which produced Amerigo Vespucci and Giovanni da Verazzano certainly merits study in its own right. The book is based almost exclusively on archival sources. . . . The diary of a captain of the galleys forms an interesting appendix. Belongs in any serious Renaissance collection."

Choice 5:253 Ap '68 130w

Reviewed by D. M. Bueno De Mesquita

Engl Hist R 83:830 O '68 350w

"[This] volume will appeal particularly because of its connexion with Renaissance Florence—magical words. It is an important contribution to economic history, in the best tradition of what may be termed the institutional school, and it is elegantly presented and printed. . . . Dr. Mallett seeks to show why the galley system was introduced, and why it ended. . . . The reasons for the suspension of the galleys seems more complicated than Dr. Mallett allows. Dr. Anthony Molho's note, in a recent issue of Renaissance Quarterly, suggests convincingly that the traditional (and Dr. Mallett's) view of the Florentine conquest of Pisa, as a manifestation of bellicose irredentism (fostered by Maso degli Albizzi), needs considerable modification. . . . Some may doubt if the 1421 establishment was as clear-cut as it appears in this study. Dr. Mallett has enough here to occupy him for a lifetime, particularly if he investigates the port returns for the eastern voyages too."

TLS p710 Ag 3 '67 800w

MALLIOL, WILLIAM. A sense of dark. 273p $5.95 Atheneum pubs. 68-23512

This novel "is about an angel of death in the uniform of a United States Marine. Brian Locke is an Englishman who, believing that God wants more people in heaven, wanders around Korea lopping off heads with a samurai sword. Officers cover for him whenever his violence exceeds the legal wartime limit, but he ends up paying his dues anyway: pounding rocks in a quarry, doing the dirty work in a field hospital. . . . Precariously psychotic, Locke is all too ready to exterminate anyone who causes suffering. It must also be said that he sometimes kills for the sake of killing. Malliol shows us in flashback how his man got that way. . . . Near the end Locke uncovers one spark within himself that seems worth fanning, and then just as his desperate soul fever is breaking, he runs into a man worse than he is." (Sat R)

"While Malliol's intense personal chronicle of Locke's struggle to bully life into an existential shoot-out radiates relevancy, it's still too much like the story of the Indian who turned up peddling blond scalps at Fort Apache. Trying to reconcile man's ancient and abiding habit of destruction with the retrospective values new wars supposedly teach us, Malliol piles on that mainspring which drives all war novels: killing brutalizes men, no matter how noble the cause. But considering the scars that even living leaves, that seems too easy. If this is the point of Locke's dilemma, then Malliol has attempted to suggest the deep, spiritual answer mostly by asking the question well." S. K. Oberbeck

Book World p16 Jl 14 '68 850w

"Malliol's first novel is farfetched and unbelievable, but not unrealistic and unbelievable for the reasons one would first consider. . . . The story is told in flashbacks and in the present—accounts of the front lines, and authenticity of descriptions are usually commendable. But Mr. Malliol seemingly got too wrapped up in the violence and the set effects, thus overlooking the necessary fictional foundations of credible plot and organic character growth. The greatest strain on credulity occurs at the end of the novel. . . . This part is entirely written in the first person by 'Kamikaze' himself. . . . But Mr. Malliol saves his most unbelievable scene for a surprise ending, where Locke describes in authentic detail his quick and violent death. . . . It seems as though Mr. Malliol used up a great deal of himself in writing this novel, but if he has anything left over in his artistic reservoir, his next novel might not have so many weaknesses." G. O. Carey

Library J 93:2691 Jl '68 300w

Reviewed by Josh Greenfeld

NY Times Bk R p5 Ag 4 '68 950w

New Yorker 44:95 Ag 10 '68 120w

Reviewed by T. G. Plate

Newsweek 72:70 Ag 5 '68 800w

"This is sensational stuff, but Malliol, who is an artist, puts nothing in that isn't strictly organic to the whole. . . . Locke tells his own tale in the present tense, changing key frequently as his moods veer. Mainly the voice is an ominous monotone, but occasionally, when the brainstorms hit, it changes to either a jerky Dick-and-Jane thing or a sinister parody of an aristocratic Britisher. . . . In one of the most demonic scenes in war fiction Locke finds his sanity as his companions descend into an abyss of hatred. In his tight-lipped, manic style Malliol conveys a sense of frightfulness and mental claustrophobia that is like an ether-induced nightmare. So effective is it that this reviewer wishes he hadn't read it." Martin Russ

Sat R 51:41 Ag 24 '68 500w

MALM, WILLIAM P. Music cultures of the Pacific, the Near East, and Asia. 169p il $5.95 Prentice-Hall

780.95 Music, Asian, Music—History and criticism 66-22089

Dr. Malm, the author of Japanese Music and Musical Instruments (BRD 1960) begins this survey with "a look into the most primitive of societies, the Aborigines of Australia. This is followed by a definition of ethnomusicological terminology and discussion of techniques as he leads the reader to Melanesia [Polynesia and Micronesia] . . . [and to] the music of the Philippines, Borneo and Indonesia. From here he works toward the Islamic world through Negro Africa and on to North Africa and the Near East. Subsequent chapters deal with Central Asia, Afghanistan, India, the Southeast Asian peninsula . . . then beyond the Himalayan barrier to Tibet, Mongolia and China; and finally, through Manchuria and Korea to Japan.

The book concludes with a view from Japan's northernmost island looking toward North America." (Pacific Affairs)

"It would be easy to level the charge of superficiality against a study which attempts so much in so few pages. Such criticism would be unjustified. The aim of the book is to introduce the student to a territory which has been terra incognita until very recently. Wherever a musical culture has rested on a powerful theoretical basis, such as in India, China, and Islamic countries, Dr. Malm has provided the essential facts with true clarity. Each chapter is fully documented, citing the best available references, and there is provided an up-to-date listing of records easily obtainable in North America." Elliot Weisgarber Pacific Affairs 40:430 fall-winter '67-'68
280w

"Each area is divided into smaller units for special study of the instruments, the musical basis and styles, their traditions and evolution. Pen drawings and music examples illustrate a fascinating text." D. M. Glixon
Sat R 50:50 My 20 '67 50w

MALOFF, SAUL. Happy families. 375p $5.95 Scribner

68-17333

This is a "first novel by the book editor of Newsweek. . . . Robert Kalb, 'past 40, accountable to no one,' . . . has come back to New York 'to disencumber himself of dreadful freedom.' . . . Divorced, in quest of [Jenny] his runaway [17-year-old] daughter, mystically fascinated by the symbolism of the father-daughter relationship, Kalb enters on an often nightmare-like existence. It takes him from sleazy hotel to Greenwich Village pad, from a job on a weekly magazine through visits to his ex-wife, his daughter's school, and her boy friend's apartment (he's a rabbinical student, and an atheist). Through it all, Kalb's growing conviction of the Death of the Family is repeatedly reinforced." (Publishers' Weekly)

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams
Atlantic 222:96 Ag '68 120w

Reviewed by C. M. Siggins
Best Sell 28:208 Ag 15 '68 700w

"In this first novel, Saul Maloff takes us to an urban place not far from Saul Bellow-land, and it's fun to be there. . . . Maloff leads off with two splendid epigraphs, from Anna Karenina and Tarzan of the Apes, which disclose that he will be examining the problems of the contemporary family. The book is about families, happy or unhappy, but usually disintegrating in fine style. . . . Kalb writes for the Culture-Capsules section of a national news magazine. So we get a variety of fine capsule observations on the high art of book reviewing. . . . If the novel has a serious flaw, it is the frantic overwriting, the flip side of Maloff's love of language. And the ending, a day-dream, is unworthy of this swinging and energetic book." Lucy Rosenthal

Book World p10 Ag 11 '68 440w

Reviewed by Abraham Rothberg
Commonweal 88:540 Ag 9 '68 1100w

Reviewed by O. A. Hagen
Library J 93:2521 Je 15 '68 180w

"Maloff, who is an established critic and short-story writer, has left it late to write his first novel, and he is obviously determined that it should be something out of the ordinary. He has gone straight to a genre that the great virtuosos of American Jewish fiction have already made their own. . . . Where the old-fashioned (family) novelist used to delight in pursuing his characters down the byways of plot, Mr. Maloff, like his distinguished peers, tracks every inner twinge and rhapsodizes on every metaphysical analogy. Any one page of [this book] is likely to contain enough verbal acrobatics to astonish the mind and challenge the wit, but I am bound to say that Maloff has written what I think is at times a dirty and rather twisted book." Frederic Raphael
N Y Times Bk R p5 J1 28 '68 600w

Reviewed by Jack Kroll
Newsweek 72:82B J1 22 '68 750w

Reviewed by S. I. Bellman
Sat R 51:46 S 7 '68 410w

MALONE, CHARLES A. The drifters. See Pavenstedt, E.

MALORY, SIR THOMAS. King Arthur and his knights; a selection from what has been known as Le morte d'Arthur; made and ed. by R. T. Davies. 271p $5.50 Barnes & Noble

398.2 Arthur, King

67-6948

This edition "abridges to one-sixth the Winchester manuscript version." (Choice) Genealogy. Glossary. Bibliography.

"Helpful editorial apparatus for the novice to Arthurian literature includes a brief introduction, running references to the divisions in Caxton's version [and] . . . brief explanatory and textual notes. . . . Davies' book offers much more text than does [E.] Vinaver's King Arthur and His Knights, a book of modernized selections from the same manuscript. The latter gives the effect of a series of short stories, . . . whereas Davies' modernized abridgement gives the effect of a novel with summaries between selections. Each work has mostly different material and probably different uses; Davies gives a more complete introduction to the full range of Malory. . . . Recommended for general and undergraduate collections."

Choice 5:484 Je '68 160w

"Mr. Davies has made a sensible and readable abridgement of the Morte which should be useful to teachers who wish their students to read more than just a book or two of Malory but cannot demand the whole. Inevitably, some of Malory's special flavour evaporates when his work is boiled down; as with Spenser, his digavations are intrinsic to his art."

TLS p1126 N 30 '67 330w

MALRAUX, ANDRÉ. Anti-memoirs; tr. by Terence Kilmartin. 420p $8.95 Holt

B or 92

68-24751

The autobiography of the French minister of culture who is a former "Resistance fighter, novelist, and art historian . . . Malraux has participated in . . . Chinese Revolution, the Spanish Civil War, [and] the French Resistance during World War II. . . . He takes the reader from the lost cities and civilizations of Asia and Africa to the torture chambers of the Gestapo. His conversations with such world leaders as Nehru, De Gaulle, Mao Tse-tung, and Chou En-lai are juxtaposed with reflections on life and death, the immortality and metamorphosis of art, and man's ultimate relationship with the universe." (Publisher's note) Index. This, the first of a projected four-volume autobiography, was published originally in 1967 entitled Antimémoires.

Reviewed by Michael Glazier
America 119:441 N 9 '68 1000w

Reviewed by Earl Rovit
Am Scholar 38:154 winter '68 2550w

Reviewed by J. J. Murray
Best Sell 28:358 D 1 '68 1100w

"There is no overestimating the breadth of André Malraux's interests or the depth of his ambition as a writer. In Anti-Memoirs the first is handsomely displayed and the second comes as near fulfillment as it is ever likely to. A suitable companion to Man's Fate [BRD 1934, it] will stand as one of Malraux's masterworks and a book that cannot be neglected. . . . [The title] is no misnomer. Nowhere in the course of the book do we learn anything about Malraux's family, the women in his life (he has married three times), the men who influenced his thought. . . . [The book] is dominated by the presence of three of the great heroes of our time: General de Gaulle, Jawaharlal Nehru and Mao Tse-tung. Malraux has known all three men personally—de Gaulle, of course, best of all. . . . Malraux's section on Mao and his retelling of the Long March must be the most perceptive and moving account of the myth of Maoism ever to be written. Taken singly, the portraits of each of these three men is an essay of great power." Joseph Epstein
Book World p3 O 13 '68 2250w

Reviewed by Florence Casey
Christian Science Monitor p11 O 17 '68 800w

Reviewed by Michael Harrington
Commonweal 89:358 D 6 '68 110w

Reviewed by Anthony Hartley
Encounter 30:69 Je '68 1050w

Reviewed by Dorothy Curley
Library J 93:4133 N 1 '68 130w

Reviewed by Paul Zweig
Nation 207:469 N 4 '68 2500w

MALRAUX, ANDRÉ—Continued

Reviewed by P. P. Witonski
Nat R 20:1277 D 17 '68 1700w

Reviewed by Richard Gilman
New Repub 159:27 N 23 '68 2500w

"The section of the book called Anti-memoirs occurs second. Somewhat longer than the other four sections, it is preceded by a section called The Walnut Trees of Altenburg and followed by three sections called, respectively, The Temptation of the West, The Royal Way [BRD 1935] and La Condition humaine [Man's Fate].... These are the titles of four of Malraux's earlier books.... This is not an anti-autobiography conceived analogously with some recent forms of anti-novel. Much of the writing is indeed commonplace.... I don't feel that I learned anything about... the great men or much that I wanted to know about M. Malraux." Rayner Heppenstall

New Statesman 76:354 S 20 '68 950w

Reviewed by Roger Shattuck
N Y Rev of Books 11:5 O 24 '68 6150w

"[The book] is a dialogue, probably the longest ever written. It is as original in its structure as it is astonishing in the variety of its forms. The participants in the dialogue are the young man who set out in search of all essential answers... and the mature man to whom all answers are questionable.... Malraux recounts with masterly restraint some of his encounters with death.... The passages describing these experiences are among the most impressive and moving in this powerful work.... The translator had to overcome nearly insuperable difficulties: [he] has done an intelligent and honest job; that he softens some phrases seems to me more admissible than his enlarging of certain others." Manes Sperber

N Y Times Bk R p1 O 20 '68 2400w

Reviewed by Edmund White
Newsweek 72:102 O 21 '68 950w

Reviewed by Lewis Galantiere
Sat R 51:45 N 16 '68 2450w
Time 92:99 N 22 '68 600w

"An excellent translation... to which is added the index which was so badly lacking in the original. It deserves nothing but praise, except [that] there are changes from the original about which the reader is not warned.... In the original there was a publisher's note explaining... that passages had been omitted even from this volume. That note has not been translated; part but not all of the information in it is printed on the dust-cover, which is not good enough. Again, it is electrifying to find a dedication to an eminent American personality, which seems extraordinary from a Gaullist minister. There is nothing of the kind in the French text: this must be Mr. Kilmartin's dedication of his translation, but he does not make that clear. When will English publishers learn that all deviations from the original of a translated text should be clearly indicated?"

TLS p148 O 10 '68 280w

Reviewed by W. M. Frohock
Yale R 58:126 O '68 2600w

MALRAUX, ANDRÉ. Museum without walls; the voices of silence; tr. from the French by Stuart Gilbert and Francis Price. 252p 172il $4.95 Doubleday

701 Art—Philosophy. Art—Psychology
67-15679

This volume was originally published in France in 1965, entitled Le Musée Imaginaire. It is a revision of the first volume of Voices of Silence (BRD 1953). It "describes how painting and sculpture have changed since the Middle Ages and how modern archaeology, photography, and the wide diffusion of world culture, particularly through reproductions, has resulted in a metamorphosis of works of art." (Library J)

"In brilliant writing [Malraux] combines art history, criticism, and aesthetics into a philosophy which transforms our ideas of what art is.... The book introduces a new dimension into art criticism.... Mr. Malraux and his translators have worked hard, rewriting, omitting, adding, and rearranging both the text and the illustrations which are themselves remarkable evidence of historical perception and visual sensitivity. This compact, yet difficult, little book is of great importance and surely will be essential to all art collections and general libraries serving as a clientele interested in the visual arts." W. J. Dane

Library J 93:65 Ja 1 '68 160w

"[This] is a study of significant juxtapositions such as M. Malraux loves.... The book has the merits and defects of an improvisation by a talented pianist who has twice the normal stretch of hand; he does things which no one else could do, with a certain lack of discipline. But some of them vibrate in the memory. The present edition is neat and well produced. The illustrations are necessarily reduced in scale from the earlier and more sumptuous version. It is not always easy to take the point made in the text, and occasionally a magnifying glass is needed."

TLS p26 Ja 11 '68 220w

MALRAUX, CLARA. Memoirs; tr. from the French by Patrick O'Brien. 372p $6.95 Farrar, Straus

B or 92 Malraux, André 67-17644

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Choice 5:348 My '68 170w

Reviewed by Anthony Hartley
Encounter 30:64 Je '68 4000w

Va Q R 44:lxviii spring '68 200w

MANCHESTER, P. W., jt. ed. The dance encyclopedia. See Chujoy, A.

MANCHESTER, WILLIAM. The arms of Krupp, 1587-1968. 976p il $12.50 Little

920 Krupp family. Krupp'sche Gusstahlfabrik, Essen 68-24450

A history of the German steel and munitions dynasty "from 1587 when Arndt Krupp emerged as a tradesman in Essen until January 31, 1968 when the Krupp properties passed from Krupp hands into those of a corporation." (Best Sell) Chronology. Bibliography. Index.

"Neither the many demonstrable factual mistakes nor the ludicrous melodramatic style nor, indeed, [the author's] distasteful journalistic vulgarities need perhaps be regarded too seriously in a book that undertakes to tell a story of truly extravagant dimensions. What Mr. Manchester lacks is an adequate conception of the fundamentally ugly and paradoxical nature of power; the view he offers of men and events, and of motives and decisions, is simplistic in the extreme.... Absorbing and lively, macabre and grotesque though this epic of a dynasty may be, it provides, with all its abundance of picturesque incident, less the materials and insights for an adequate understanding of a unique constellation of power than the scenario for a Hollywood spectacular." Victor Lange

Atlantic 222:128 D '68 1100w

"Rob the piggy bank if you must... to buy this big, expensive book, because you will later perhaps consider it as the most impressive book of 1968. It is an example of history writing at its best; the book is packed with facts but still traces movements in an interesting fashion.... You are really depriving yourself of a great reading experience if you fail to read this book, based on seven years of research in German documents." Paul Kinierly

Best Sell 28:383 D 15 '68 700w

Reviewed by Anthony Hartley
Book World p6 D 1 '68 900w

Reviewed by E. K. Welsch
Library J 93:4554 D 1 '68 160w

"Out of nearly four centuries spanned by the Krupp dynasty, it is the 10 years concerning World War II and its immediate aftermath that form the nub of Mr. Manchester's book.... Detail by gruelling detail he jockeys the reader forward to the conclusion that Alfred was guilty of, or accessory to a specific deed; then, at the last moment, he seems to shy away from the jump. One's confidence in Mr. Manchester's reliability on the major issues of Alfred's guilt would certainly be the greater but for his massive number of errors or part truths on lesser points.... What really does most damage to [his] theme is the tiresomely promiscuous, visceral anti-Germanism which underlies it throughout." Alistair Horne

N Y Times Bk R p3 N 24 '68 2200w

New Yorker 44:244 N 30 '68 150w

Reviewed by F. Y. Blumenfeld
Newsweek 72:114 N 25 '68 1000w

Reviewed by H. C. Wolfe
Sat R 51:24 D 21 '68 1250w

Time 92:84 D 20 '68 1500w

MANDELBAUM, ALLEN. Journeyman. 160p
$4.50 Schocken

811

67-13155

"In this volume appear translations of passages from Lucretius, Virgil, and Dante; of a poem each by Ungaretti, Montale, Quasimodo, and Ibn Gabirol. These occupy small space in a volume of more than 90 original verses, however." (Choice) Some of the poems included have appeared previously in such publications as Poetry, Partisan Review and Furioso.

"Form and style of Mandelbaum's poems may well be labelled like the section containing his translations: 'Freehand/Tight.' Terse, learnedly allusive, indirect, many of his pieces read like unrhymed Gnostic fragments or Greek epigrams 'after' Pound. The latter and W. C. Williams are acknowledged masters. Their manner and that of Wallace Stevens are quite evident among the poems here. A page of notes clarifying some allusions and offering ranges of dates for groups of poems is a limited help to the professional reader. Not for libraries with severely selective ordering policies."

Choice 5:484 Je '68 110w

"The poems here are a disparate wedding of the abstract and the concrete. One is tempted to say that his is the tradition of Hart Crane and Frederick Goddard Tuckerman—a fine sense of language, but a rather mossy level of ideation. That is, his words are easy to enjoy, but what the words are getting at is often not to be understood, at least on two or three readings. Perhaps it is not Mr. Mandelbaum's fault that the reviewer is left with a feeling of frustration, as though silver had turned too quick to hold—but then, again, perhaps it is." Lewis Turco

Sat R 50:32 O 14 '67 90w

MANDELBAUM, BERNARD. Choose life. 295p
$5.95 Random house

158 Behavior

67-22659

The editor is president of the Jewish Theological Seminary of America. "The greater part of this volume consists of selections from Jewish and world literature which augment and develop the central ideas of the High Holiday Messages [of the Jewish Theological Seminary]." (Foreword) Quotations have been selected from the works of "Buber, Maimonides, Defoe, Camus, Gandhi, Thoreau, Molière, Adlai Stevenson and others. . . . [This book] touches all the concerns in each of our lives: community concerns, such as reducing ignorance, poverty, and oppression; social concerns, such as learning the power of good action, providing for others, making a difference to our neighbors, our friends, our family; personal concerns, such as courage, creativity and excellence." (Publisher's note) Glossary. Index to sources.

Best Sell 28:209 O 15 '68 100w

"These precepts may be used in the search for a full and useful existence, and touch upon areas such as wisdom, man and God, looking inward, and parents and children. Selections range in length from one sentence to full paragraphs. All are interesting and appropriate. . . . Recommended for general purchase, circulating and/or reference collections." S. L. Simon

Library J 93:3144 S 15 '68 140w

MANDELL, MURIEL. Complete science course for young experimenters. See Complete science course for young experimenters

MANDER, JERRY. The great international paper airplane book, by Jerry Mander, George Dippel and Howard Gossage: the official record, analysis, and fly-it-yourself compendium of high-achievement paper airplanes from the Scientific American 1st international paper airplane competition, held during the winter of '66-'67, an event that has already taken its proper place in aeronautical history; told by the men who were there. 128p il $10; pa $2.95 Simon & Schuster

629.133 Airplanes—Models. Paper crafts

68-12169

In the competition the "contestants included scientists in aerodynamics and other disciplines, practitioners of the Oriental art of origami (paper folding), business executives, and boys and girls. . . . Letters that accompanied certain entries disclosed flights of record distance and duration. . . . The authors added as [an] Appendix, a collection of 20 tear-out-fold-and-fly paper airplane designs. . . . For each of the 20 planes there is a photograph, plus drawings to show the creasing and a perforated pattern sheet that can be torn out." (N Y Times Bk R)

Reviewed by Regina Minudri

Library J 93:315 Ja 15 '68 60w [YA]

"Masquerading as a book, this essay in promotion is, in fact, an elaborate spoof with tongue-in-cheek scholarly apparatus that raises trivia to a fine art. . . . Excerpts from contestants' letters give some indication of their maturity and state of mind at the time of the happening. More than half the book consists of plans and photos of 'tear-out, fold-them-yourself' paper airplanes. Since this section seems doomed to the readers' abhorred shears, librarians may consider the paper edition sufficient sacrifice. Recommended for all well-endowed trivia collections." J. V. Brain

Library J 93:762 F 15 '68 200w

Reviewed by S. V. Jones

N Y Times Bk R p43 Ja 28 '68 800w

MANDERS, OLGA SARAH. Mrs Manders' cook book; ed. by Rumer Godden [il. by David Knight]. 178p $5.95 Viking

641.5 Cookery, English

68-22867

This collection of English recipes by Rumer Godden's cook also contains the author's reminiscences and a preface and parenthetical remarks by Miss Godden. "British measurements have been converted to American equivalents." (Publisher's note) Index.

"[This book] is the result of years of experience not merely as a cook, but as a blue-ribbon chef who started at the bottom of the ladder as a fourth housemaid in a London house. . . . [It] is part autobiography, studded with some recipes, and mostly recipes somewhat leavened by anecdote and reminiscence. The unenviable reputation English cuisine had surely did not take into account the ability, the mastery of this talented lady. It is a book worth the investment." Friede Gruenrock

Best Sell 28:204 Ag 15 '68 150w

"There is not great variety here but there is delight in reading of the mistress-cook relationship and about good examples of real English dinners. Definitely a Rumer Godden item and for the amateur cook, and library collections." K. T. Willis

Library J 93:2657 J1 '68 80w

Reviewed by Nika Hazelton

N Y Times Bk R p30 D 1 '68 130w

MANGIONE, JERRE. A passion for Sicilians; the world around Danilo Dolci. 369p $7.95 Morrow

B or 92 Dolci, Danilo. Sicily—Social conditions

68-27450

This book tells of the life and work of Danilo Dolci "who since 1952 has been conducting a nonviolent crusade against the misery and violence of Western Sicily." (Publisher's note)

"[The author] writes with an eloquence that is extremely rare. . . . The picture he presents is of a man of great force and dedication. On another level, the work may be considered a superb addition to the . . . volumes attempting to explain the Italian temper. The paradox that seems to often-times be in Italian life is here brilliantly portrayed. And, of course the work has a third level of significance. For it is essentially a work of social studies. [It] comments on the ingredients necessary to remake the poverty areas of the world. It proclaims that not only devotion, but skill, is necessary to remake these areas. . . . Whether or not Dolci is more St. Francis Assisi or P. T. Barnum, he has undeniably done much to bring forth this spirit of rebirth to the land and people he loves." F. M. Rotondaro

Best Sell 28:270 O 1 '68 600w

"[This book] is beautifully written, utterly absorbing and permeated with the very spirit of Sicily. . . . The apparently artless construction is craftsmanship of the highest order. . . . But what contributes perhaps more than anything else to the book's rare flavor is the curious intimacy of the writing, its uncensored appraisal of named personalities (including Dolci himself), as though one were reading with the author's permission a very private diary that is usually kept under lock and key. A murderer, a Cardinal, a present or seceded member of Dolci's staff—each is sketched in with the same deft but quite uninhibited touch." Gavin Maxwell

MANGIONE, JERRE—Continued

Book World p6 O 13 '68 700w

Reviewed by A. B. Master

Library J 93:4430 N 15 '68 130w [YA]

"Because he is a sophisticated observer, [Mangione] records Dolci's status in western Sicily with admiration uncloyed by sentimentality. . . . Measuring the quality of Dolci against the scope of his task, Mangione strikes a balance of admiration that is more effective than praise. And he has written a buoyant book. It offers a parade of vivid personalities; it records ironic episodes and grotesque mischances. . . . Mangione loves being in Sicily; you can sense him breathing the air. Almost inadvertently, he has written a splendid travel book, though having seen Sicily through Mangione's eyes, it would be hard to be a tourist there in good conscience." Robert Hatch

Nation 207:602 D 2 '68 750w

"Frequently, there is much too much Mangione ogling the sideshow when the reader is waiting for specifics about what Dolci is up to and who his real enemies are. Still, the author's Sicilian ancestry gives the book an added dimension, and there are keen comments about the nature of the people. A Dolci biography remains to be done." Herbert Mitgang

N Y Times Bk R p22 N 17 '68 1050w

Reviewed by Walter Guzzardi

Sat R 51:39 N 9 '68 850w

MANGONE, GERARD J., ed. The administration of United States foreign policy through the United Nations. See Bishop, D. G.

MANLEY, SEON, ed. High adventure . . . a treasury for young adults; ed. by Seon Manley and Gogo Lewis. 288p $4.95 Funk

820.8 Adventure and adventurers. American literature—Collections. English literature—Collections 68-22147

This collection includes "sea stories, mysteries, westerns, fantasies, and . . . humor . . . [as well as] poetry and essays." (Library J)

"Here is an anthology . . . which could recommend itself to High School reading courses. Represented in the narrative are such disparate people as Rider Haggard, . . . Mark Twain, Antoine de Saint-Exupéry; and among the poets Shelley, Browning, Robert Louis Stevenson. . . . Homer, Columbus, Magellan, Captain Cook, William Beebe, Thor Heyerdahl comment on the Spirit of Adventure."

Best Sell 28:325 N 1 '68 70w [YA]

Reviewed by R. J. Folcarelli

Library J 93:4421 N 15 '68 60w

MANLEY, SEON. My heart's in the heather. 188p $3.95 Funk

B or 92 Scotch in the U.S.—Juvenile literature 68-15422

"A series of vignettes of life in New York City during the period when the parents and grandparents of many children still had strong ties to European countries. The orphaned author and her younger sister [Gogo] lived with their grandparents in a Scotch-Irish neighborhood, where they absorbed the never-ending homesickness along with the songs, food, and customs of the old country. . . . Grades seven to ten." (Library J)

Best Sell 28:155 J1 1 '68 100w

Reviewed by Polly Goodwin

Book World p12 J1 7 '68 160w

"Beautifully written, the book is, unfortunately, too static to have general appeal, but it could be successfully introduced to young people who enjoy dipping into nostalgic reminiscences." Madalynne Schoenfeld

Library J 93:1325 Mr 15 '68 110w

"The structure of Seon Manley's book is as episodic as memory. Each episode is a delight. . . . Mama is wholly Americanized, a dedicated admirer of the Revolutionary War heroine Molly Pitcher. Papa's heart remains in the heather. He never does take out naturalization papers, though he gives the United States credit for two world bargains: the Bill of Rights and the five-and-ten. The dialogue, especially between the children is superb." Robin McKown

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p18 My 5 '68
220w

MANN, GOLO. The history of Germany since 1789; tr. from the German by Marian Jackson. 547p $10 Praeger

943 Germany—History—1740-1815. Germany—History—20th century 67-24685

An account of Germany from the French Revolution to 1965. Originally published in Germany in 1958 under the title Deutsche Geschichte des 19. und 20. Jahrhunderts, this translation is based on the revised, expanded edition published under the same title in 1966. Bibliography. Index of names.

"Unfortunately, this work cannot be used by scholars or as a reference volume for further political-historical studies, because it lacks footnotes. No information is offered regarding the sources for quotes or documents used by the author. . . . [But this] does not seriously eliminate the book's usefulness as a highly readable and interesting account for the general public of the last 200 years of German historical developments." Eric Waldman

America 118:818 Je 29 '68 340w

Christian Century 85:622 My 8 '68 20w

"Although a member of Germany's postwar generation of historians, [the author] does not share the tendency of some of his confreres to indict the German nation for its past. At the same time, he is no apologist for Germany's shortcomings. . . . He makes a sober and perceptive judgment of men and events. . . . While there are a number of good general histories of Germany available, this one by Golo Mann is superb and is recommended for academic and public library collections." B. S. Vialat

Library J 93:2652 J1 '68 210w

"It is very welcome that the views of a German historian of impeccable background are now made available in English. . . . On the subject of Hitler Dr Mann is somewhat disappointing and adds very little to our understanding of this singular phenomenon. . . . If I find many of Dr Mann's opinions and his way of stating them refreshing and invigorating, there are also some which should not go unchallenged. . . . In general Dr Mann's strictures are justified; he has successfully tried to be fair to the Germans of the Left and of the Right, to the Poles and to the French, to the past and to the present—and this is no mean achievement in a work dealing with such a long period and such controversial topics." F. L. Carsten

New Statesman 75:449 Ap 5 '68 3300w

Reviewed by Geoffrey Barraclough

N Y Rev of Books 11:14 O 24 '68 3100w

"Mann has a very personal, a very endearing approach to history. He takes the reader into his confidence or stops for reflections for the reader's benefit. . . . He has tried to think out afresh each historical problem and admits himself baffled by human nature the better he learns to understand it. . . . [His account] is warm, critical, here and there prejudiced, never detached. The most delightful and illuminating portions in the book are the sections devoted to Hegel, Heine, Marx, Schopenhauer, Nietzsche, to the relation of their lives and thought to German history. There is a kindred section in the account of the Weimar Republic devoted to the intellectuals of that period. The descriptions of the author's father [the novelist Thomas Mann] and uncle are exquisite. . . . To the reader who is fairly familiar with German history this is above everything a delightful book to browse in. . . . When faced with some of [the author's] more delicate subtleties the translator tends to take refuge in slanginess. . . . By and large, however, Mrs. Jackson is to be congratulated."

TLS p401 Ap 18 '68 1100w

MANNES, MARYA. They; a novel. 215p $4.95 Doubleday

68-22514

This novel "is supposedly a journal kept by five elderly people and typed up by Kate, their hostess. . . . They include a Viennese conductor, a popular songwriter, a painter, and his wife. . . . They are all outcasts of the society of the 1980s . . . [which has ruled] that after the age of fifty, all men and women are to be totally sequestered from the rest of the population . . . [and] allowed to live . . . until the age of sixty-five, when they are painlessly liquidated." (Book World)

"What could have been a very good novel, isn't. . . . There are three reasons why a theme with rich philosophic potential comes to so little. . . . [The characters] seem to be exactly the kind of people they complain about. . . . Nothing much happens. . . . An unnecessary vulgarity permeates almost every page. . . . The characters seem neither real nor interesting. The author describes their characteristics in the abstract from time to time, which is fortunate, because by their conversations they could not be told apart, certainly not by their actions since they never do anything." R. B. Nordberg

Best Sell 28:368 D 1 '68 430w

"This is essentially a dialogue on human values by a group of intellectuals set in a science fiction frame. . . . Marya Mannes is concerned primarily to edify rather than to amuse. . . . The pessimism of the book lies . . . in [the] conception of a society which rejects all tradition and destroys those who embody it. . . . Fortunately for both the participants and the reader, life itself goes on till the very end; interspersed with the dialogues are fine descriptions . . . tender observations . . . and a delicate delineation of varieties of human love and loyalty. There is even mystery and mysticism in the shape of a young man, deaf and dumb, who is washed up on the beach and into their waning lives." A. C. Foote

Book World p18 N 10 '68 750w

Reviewed by Rosemary Neiswender

Library J 93:3799 O 15 '68 180w

"Most of the book is a testament of a vanished way of life, a group journal interlarded with . . . relics of civilization. In a [prologue] . . . we learn that it has turned up in the underground of a nearby university, to the great distress of the powers that be. . . . This could have been a terrifying book, with horrible comedy on every page. There's only one trouble . . . fiction is not Miss Mannes's metier. 'They' is not a well-written book, and if satire is not well-written, it fails more than any other kind of writing. . . . It was a fine idea. 'They' is an amusing and provoking book that might have been a great one." Kenneth Rexroth

N Y Times BK ■ p54 O 20 '68 700w

Reviewed by Glendy Culligan

Sat R 51:36 N 2 '68 1500w

MANNING, ROSEMARY, ed. A grain of sand. See Blake, W.

MANNING, THOMAS G. Government in science; the U.S. geological survey, 1867-1894. 257p $7 Univ. of Ky. press

550 U.S. Geological survey. Science and state 67-17851

This book presents an analysis of the "interrelationships of government, social utility, science, and private enterprise which were involved in the origin of the United States Geological Survey as a unification of governmental scientific efforts in the Far West. The story is carried up to the time of the acceptance of the Survey as a permanent federal agency with a well-defined sphere of operations, recognized as having a public value. . . . An epilogue provides a . . . summary of the USGS in the twentieth century." (J Am Hist) Bibliography. Index.

"[Manning's book] is the result of his years of research in primary sources, many of which have never before been thoroughly explored. . . . The volume will be of interest to historians of the Trans-Mississippi West . . . [and] to historians of science." W. B. Hendrickson

J Am Hist 55:156 Je '68 420w

Reviewed by Claude Albritton

Science 159:415 Je 26 '68 550w

"Only recently have historians begun to examine the rôle of science in shaping America. This thoroughly researched history of the origins, formation, and early years of the U.S. Geological Survey fills a major gap. It also points up, at least by inference, some of the continuing problems of government-sponsored research. The author's treatment of these and other issues is singularly clear and dispassionate. This is a superior piece of scholarship."

Va ■ R 44:xxxv summer '68 70w

MANNING-SANDERS, RUTH. A book of mermaids; il. by Robin Jacques. 127p $3.75; lib bdg $3.71 Dutton

398.4 Fairy tales

68-13414

A collection of sixteen mermaid stories which have been "gathered from the folklore of many countries, including one from the seacoast of North America. . . . Grades four to six." (Library J)

"In these expertly told tales . . . the struggle between sea creatures and their earthbound victims is touch and go, except for 'The Magic Lake,' a characteristically Irish view in which the mermaid is not only fat, piggish and easily winded in a chase but has been short-changed on magic powers. Mostly the conflict is over the reluctance of land-locked young men to get involved in soggy romance with mermaids, no matter how golden their hair or their dowry." Helen Renthal

Book World p14 (children's issue) My 5 '68 100w

"[Part of the book's] delight comes in the collection's freedom from the boy-meets-mermaid stereotype. One Icelandic prince is totally uninterested in the charms of the mermaid he is captured by. A Danish lawyer makes a mermaid pay damages because her cows have eaten the town's grass. One poor mermaid is baldheaded; another falls vainly in love with an unresponsive whale and chases him around, continually offering him kelp cakes and fish pies. . . . [The sketches] pick up the drollery of the stories." Elizabeth Pond

Christian Science Monitor pB5 My 2 '68 280w

Horn Bk 44:415 Ag '68 80w

Reviewed by Jessica McDaniel

Library J 93:1315 Mr 15 '68 120w

Reviewed by Nathan Silver

New Statesman 74:598 N 3 '67 30w

"[The style] is a little flat, but at least it does not get in the way of the story. . . . [The] stories are drawn from a wide field and include some little-known material. There are many who like Robin Jacques's illustrations, though one can find their charm a little cloying."

TLS p1142 N 30 '67 110w

MANNING-SANDERS, RUTH. A book of wizards; drawings by Robin Jacques. 126p $3.50; lib bdg $3.46 Dutton

398.4 Folklore—Juvenile literature 67-2307

The author of The Book of Giants (BRD 1964) and The Book of Dwarfs (BRD 1965) has gathered tales about wizards from all over the world. Contents: Aniello; The two wizards; Long, Broad and Sharpshot; Gold; Farmer Weathersky; Aladdin; Jack and the wizard; The silver penny; Kojata; Rich woman, poor woman; Cannetella. "Ages nine to eleven." (Sat R)

Horn BK 43:343 Je '67 90w

"Some of these stories can be found in other collections, but not all, and, for the storyteller, it is especially nice to have so many wizard stories in one volume." E. T. Dobbins

Library J 92:883 F 15 '67 80w

"For reading alone, for reading aloud, or for storytelling, any collection by Ruth Manning-Sanders is a treasure trove. Here, in addition to six stories about the wizard of the Arabian Aladdin, are ten tales from British, African, and European sources. They are filled with wit and outwitting, magic, adventure, and robust action, and are told with polished ease." Zena Sutherland

Sat R 50:35 Je 17 '67 50w

"Attractively presented, readable, but is this kind of thing really worth the money?"

TLS p1089 N 24 '66 30w

MANNING-SANDERS, RUTH. The glass man and the golden bird; Hungarian folk and fairy tales; il. by Victor G. Ambrus. 194p $5.95 Roy pubs.

398.2 Folklore—Hungary—Juvenile literature. Fairy tales 68-15343

This book contains twenty-three traditional tales including "The Enchanted Prince, The Fairy Helena, and The Adventures of Pengo. . . . [There are also stories of] dragons, and fairies, and good people receive their reward; wicked people are justly punished." (Publisher's note) "Grades four to six." (Library J)

MANNING-SANDERS, RUTH—Continued

"This collection . . . follows the same format as the author's The Red King and the Witch (gypsy folk tales) [BRD 1965], Damian and the Dragon (modern Greek tales) [BRD 1966]. . . . Miss Manning-Sanders' book, retold in modern British idiom, is a good one for the general library collection and a useful one for the storyteller." Clara Hutton

Library J 93:3972 O 15 '68 130w

Reviewed by Ted Hughes

New Statesman 75:699 My 24 '68 200w

"A wonderful, overflowing treasurehouse of a book, the kind to be loved and pored over through colds and rainy days until the original owner has far outgrown it, and then saved with love to be read again to children and even grandchildren. . . . The majority [of the stories] are new and exotic, though the pattern is the hallowed and traditional one of witches and magical quests and seven sons with strange talents. Best of all is the title story. . . . It is a beautiful story, haunting, magical and at the same time hilariously funny. . . . But the real joy of the book is in the style and verve of the narrative. It has a bouncing energy and immediacy guaranteed to strike home to a modern child."

TLS p257 Mr 14 '68 450w

MANNING-SANDERS, RUTH. Stories from the English and Scottish ballads; il. by Trevor Ridley. 148p $3.95; lib bdg $3.91 Dutton 398.2 Ballads, Scottish—Juvenile literature. Ballads, English—Juvenile literature. Folklore—Scotland—Juvenile literature. Folklore—England—Juvenile literature 68-30827

The English writer "has prosed some 15 folk-songs, the verse originals of which, like 'The Young Lord of Lorn,' 'King Orfeo,' and 'A Tale of Robin Hood,' are in her 'A Bundle of Ballads' [BRD 1961]. . . . Ages nine to twelve." (N Y Times Bk R)

"There is no actual substitute for the old ballads, but these prose versions are good stories in their own right. Fast moving and lively, the language has the simple stateliness of the ballads. Most of the tales concern chivalry, are peopled with knights and queens, a few fairies and elves, and of course Merlin the magician. . . . Young readers will enjoy these stories, but the excessively small type may be a drawback." L. P. Scanlon

Commonweal 89:294 N 22 '68 80w

Reviewed by Arlene Mosel

Library J 93:4421 N 15 '68 60w

Reviewed by A. B. Myers

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p46 N 3 '68 70w

"In an introduction to this collection which is surprisingly heavy-handed, [Miss Manning-Sanders] explains that the original ballads are 'not easy for children to read'. Maybe. But something is missing from many of her prose renderings; sometimes her attempt to incorporate an essentially balladic element into the prose produces a puzzling effect and occasionally, as in 'May Colvin', the tone seems at fault. This then is not an entirely satisfactory book. It may, however, for some children provide an appropriate introduction to a rich heritage. Many of the stories are beautifully done, capturing that strange blend of freshness and melancholy which lies on the surface and at the heart of the ballad."

TLS p1120 O 3 '68 170w

MANNIX, DANIEL P. The fox and the hound; il. by John Schoenherr. 255p $4.95 Dutton 67-20531

In this novel, "the prize hound from a hunting pack is led to his death by an unusually cunning red fox. The master of the hounds swears revenge, opening a chase that can end only with the final hunt. Copper, a 'big half-bred bloodhound,' is selected to trail the fox, Tod, who had once been captured as a pup, raised, and partially tamed before he returned to the wild. Years pass, but despite relentless pursuit, guns, traps, and poison, Tod cheats death. Finally, an aging Copper and his now elderly master set out for their last hunt across a once-beautiful countryside, now slashed by expressways and polluted by urban sprawl." (Library J)

"A corking good novel. The dog is a real dog and the fox is a real fox; there is no allegory, there are no social overtones. . . . The world out there, inhabited by creatures whom most of us know only vaguely, becomes vividly clear in a story which might well become a classic of sorts. . . . It is all credible, almost all fascinating; there is some unnecessary detail, but not much. John Masefield's Reynard will have to move out of his place at the head of the fox clan. The mischievous, thieving, casually cruel, but always entertaining Tod is at the top; and he shares the limelight with a hound whose faults . . . are greatly outweighed by the number and qualities of his virtues." W. H. Hill
Best Sell 27:251 O 1 '67 500w

"Winner of the 1967 Dutton Animal Book Award, . . . this is no sweet animal story. There is too much pain and hurt for a happy ending. In one fearful scene nature goes mad and invades man's domain with rabid jaws, even as man invades nature with cruel, death-dealing weapons and traps and poisons. . . . This novel mixes authentic wildlife details with a vehement view of man, the real predator." Jane Manthorne

Horn Bk 44:84 F '68 160w [YA]

Reviewed by W. C. Roselle

Library J 92:3445 O 1 '67 160w

"This is a simple enough tale, written on one level, but it holds the attention, for the author cares intensely about what happens to his fox, and he cares about his hound—about his loss of face when he fails his master, about his dim realization, as the years go by, that he is losing his powers. Mr. Mannix keeps a pair of foxes on his farm and has observed them from close up and without sentimentality. . . . Drawings [are] very good ones." New Yorker 43:234 D 2 '67 150w

MANSON, WILLIAM. Jesus and the Christian. 236p $5.95 Eerdmans

225 Christianity. Bible. N.T. 67-13986

This posthumous "work contains 14 essays under three subject headings: the ministry of Jesus, the Christian life, and eschatology and mission. Professor Thomas F. Torrance . . . helped prepare this book and has provided an . . . introduction to Mr. Manson's approach to New Testament studies." (Library J) Many of these essays were previously published in theological journals. Index of Scripture references. Index of names.

Reviewed by W. S. Sparks

Library J 93:1637 Ap 15 '68 120w

"There was in [Manson], and it is very obvious in this book, a sturdy element of common-sense. . . . [He] boldly rejected the myth hypothesis in which too many modern scholars . . . take uncomfortable refuge. . . . [His] conviction of history comes out . . . clearly in his firm hold of the cross as the historical centre of Christian life and thought. . . . To him the cross was more than a matter for learned inquiry; it was the heart of everything that was and is Christian. That is worth reading in a world that seeks to escape the 'guilt complex' on a psychiatrist's couch. . . . The book opens with his Inaugural Lecture at Edinburgh [in 1925]. . . . Its clarity is beautiful and so is the sincerity and openmindedness of its advice. . . . One could wish that [this] might be compulsory reading for every theological student."

TLS p757 Jl 18 '68 550w

MANVELL, ROGER. Ellen Terry. 390p il $6.95 Putnam

B or 92 Terry, Dame Ellen 68-12102

This biography of the English actress includes excerpts from hitherto unpublished letters and diaries as well as Ellen Terry's personal notes for her interpretation of the part of Lady Macbeth. Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by Maurice Adelman

America 119:570 N 30 '68 70w

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 221:124 Je '68 100w

Reviewed by M. G. Duffy

Best Sell 28:148 Jl 1 '68 600w

"It is one of the values of Mr. Manvell's biography that he sketches the sociological as well as the social milieu of 19th-century England. . . . Drawing on many available sources, Mr. Manvell has recaptured a time and set forth one of its most luminous stars—both as a private person and public personality. [This] is a fascinating book and—in this context it is no disparagement to add—a useful one." John Beaufort

Christian Science Monitor p11 My 29 '68 600w

"Dr Roger Manvell may fairly claim that he is well enough aware that Ellen Terry was far from being the female equivalent of the matinee idol of another day, but he has chosen to write her life in a way that dulis, rather than heightens, the splendours of his subject. . . . [His] book tends to turn itself into a conversation piece adorned with several figures and set carefully against its appropriate background. [This] would have worked well enough here if only there had been flair and style to illumine it. 'Imagination, industry and intelligence—the three I's—are all indispensable to the actress, but of these three the greatest is, without any doubt, imagination.' Thus wrote Ellen Terry. Dr Manvell, as a writer, can claim two of these qualities, but there is more imagination in her own scribbled notes as to the nature and playing of Lady Macbeth than in the whole of this worthy, conscientious book."

Economist 227:vi Ap 27 '68 600w

Reviewed by Paul Myers

Library J 93:2419 Je 15 '68 200w

"[Mr. Manvell] has been extremely adroit in compressing and sorting [a] mass of relevant detail into a highly readable and straightforward account and has added interest to it by shedding fresh light on many of the episodes which were suppressed or glossed over in the earlier books. . . . [His account] is greatly enriched by admirable sketches of Frederick Watts, Charles Kelly and James Carew (the three husbands of Ellen Terry); of her lover, the father of her two children and great love of her life, Edward Godwin (the architect and decorator); and of the great Henry Irving, her partner for some many years of splendour and success at the Lyceum Theatre. Mr. Manvell sides with Laurence Irving (and against Marguerite Steen) on conjecturing that Irving and Ellen were never lovers. This is a fascinating riddle, still unsolved. I find a certain coldness in the book." John Gielgud

New Statesman 75:483 Ap 12 '68 900w

Reviewed by Brooks Atkinson

N Y Times Bk R p26 My 26 '68 1800w

Reviewed by P. D. Zimmerman

Newsweek 71:102 My 27 '68 700w

Reviewed by Philip Burton

Sat R 51:31 Jl 6 '68 700w

"Dr. Manvell's biography will probably be the standard work on Ellen Terry for a long time. It is not distinguished by high interpretative quality nor by style, but it is adequately comprehensive and it bases itself firmly on contemporary testimony, drawing especially on its subject's memoirs and letters and on wide reading of printed sources. Dr. Manvell does not dictate assessments to his readers; he presents evidence, fairly. Such errors as the book contains are minor ones—misspellings of a few names—and he has made a useful contribution to the history of the English theatre and to our understanding of one of the greatest of our actresses."

TLS p474 My 9 '68 600w

MAO, TSE-TUNG. Quotations from chairman Mao Tse-tung; ed. and with an introductory essay and notes by Stuart R. Schram; foreword by A. Doak Barnett, 182p $5 Praeger

320.5 Communism—China. China (People's Republic of China)—Politics and government 68-20400

A collection of extracts from the volumes of the author's four volumes of Selected Works. This edition "contains the complete original text of the translation published and distributed by Foreign Languages Press in Peking [in 1966]. Stuart Schram [has written an] Introduction and annotated this edition; he has also translated the Foreword to the 1966 Chinese edition of Quotations (omitted from Peking's English-language edition). . . . By tracing the individual quotations to their original sources and determining the periods in which these works were written, Mr. Schram . . . [attempts to show] what the text reveals about Mao Tse-tung himself and about the aims of the Cultural Revolution." (Publisher's note)

"The editor, one of the foremost scholars of modern China and the translator and editor of the outstanding study, The Political Thought of Mao Tse-tung [BRD 1964], has added a useful introduction where he analyses the factors that have gone into the selection of the passages in this work. . . . An interesting feature is the inclusion of the translations of the forewords of the first and second editions of the Quotations and a comparison of the differences between them. Vital for understanding the history of the Communist movement in China and the contemporary Great Cultural Revolution."

Choice 5:1026 O '68 150w

Reviewed by W. S. Wong

Library J 93:2884 Ag '68 120w

"This best-seller wrapped in imported plastic for Chinese use [the 'Little Red Book']—waved by Red Guards, pored over by peasants, the carte d'identité of the simon-pure revolutionary—now appears with Mr. Schram's knowledgeable and scrupulously scholarly wrapping. . . . [The edition] reminds us again of the big gap in the Maoist canon if it is to feed the hopes of utopians: there is no clearly defined goal. The chapter in the little book entitled 'Socialism and Communism' has nothing to say about what these doctrines actually result in."

TLS p868 Ag 15 '68 230w

MARBURG, THEODORE F., jt. auth. The economic basis of American civilization. See Clough, S. B.

MARCEL, GABRIEL. Presence and immortality [tr. by Michael A. Machado and rev. by Henry J. Koren]. 284p $4.95 Duquesne univ. press

111.1 Philosophy. Ontology

67-28897

"This latest translation of Marcel's philosophical researches brings up to the year 1943 the meditations begun in 1914 with his Metaphysical Journal and continued through 1933 with the Metaphysical Diary of his Being and Having. It includes two unpublished essays and a fragment of a 1919 play, which support the major themes of existence, death, immortality, fidelity and memory suggested in these previous works." (America) Contents: My fundamental purpose: Metaphysical journal; Presence and immortality; The unfathomable, an unfinished play. Originally published Présence et immortalité.

"For those who consider Marcel among the most important of living Christian thinkers, this work provides further and important evidence of his 'concrete approaches' to the most intimate experiences of perennial and everyday life. . . . [It] stands as a testament to the dramatic and conversational thrust of his personal and professional mode of experience. Emerging from this chronicle, as from his other works, is Marcel's awesome conception of sociality as the major dimension of human life. . . . [He] shows through his social ontology how hope conspires to triumph over misery, anguish and despair. . . . This work, however sporadically compromised by translational inadequacies, serves to ratify Marcel's claim as a leading spokesman for human thought in an age of terror and transition." D. A. Drennen

America 118:125 Ja 17 '68 480w

Christian Century 84:1496 N 22 '67 50w

MARCEL, GABRIEL. Problematic man; tr. by Brian Thompson. 144p $3.95 Herder & Herder 128 Man 67-17622

The first part of this book describes and analyzes "the nature of the 'uneasiness' produced by man's self-problematization. In the second part . . . Marcel proceeds to analyze this experience historically and phenomenologically. [He discusses 'uneasiness' in Pascal, Kierkegaard, Nietzsche, Heidegger, Sartre, Goethe and Gide [and concludes that] the Christian faith can render meaningful not only experience in general, but even this very uneasiness." (Foreword) Originally published as L'Homme problématique.

MARCEL, GABRIEL—Continued

"A valuable systematic addition to Marcel's earlier occasional treatment of these same topics, this work also contains illuminating remarks on alienation and consciousness. The translation is clumsy, at times, and there are a number of misprints."

Choice 5:354 My '68 100w

"This book is a felicitous translation . . . of two of Marcel's pieces of the '50s, when the postwar consciousness of 'postmodern man's' uprootedness was most acute. . . . [His] subjects in these pieces are extremely subtle essences. . . . Moreover, though he does not lose sight of the concrete human phenomena with which he begins, the author's writing tends to become over-wrought with associated ideas and reified abstractions. . . . For all of the difficulties of understanding and applying it, we need very much, at this time and in this country, the kind of attention that such writers as Marcel give to the human phenomenon. . . . Marcel's kind of concern is central to the characteristic American philosophical tendencies, whether of pragmatism truly understood or transcendentalism." Walter Arnold

Commonweal 87:565 F 9 '68 1200w

"[Marcel's book,] though presented as a contribution to the current 'death-of-God' discussion, in fact anticipates it and certainly transcends it. M. Marcel is indeed no defender of the classical theodicies. He observes that 'the God whose death Nietzsche truthfully announced was the god of the Aristotelian-Thomistic tradition, god the prime mover'. But man's consequent discovery that he is a problem for himself . . . confirms the undeviating Christian belief that God has created man free. For M. Marcel the question of grace is therefore fundamental: it is only on the basis of it that Man can rise to the affirmation of God. [His book] could be described as an extended meditation on this theme—and 'meditation' is not too inapt a word for M. Marcel's writings, free as they are from the systematic structures of most formal philosophy."

TLS p967 O 12 '67 480w

MARCUS, FRANK. The killing of Sister George; a comedy. 117p pl $3.95 Random house

822

67-12758

This British play, which ran in London and New York, "relates the double life of June Buckridge, who to an enthralled nation is the B.B.C.'s angelic nurse, Sister George. At home she is just George, a lesbian. The 'killing' is her radio demise, a sacrifice to higher ratings. It is also the parallel disintegration of her personal life; the loss of her lover to a B.B.C. superior." (Library J)

"Though [this play] has some sure-fire scenes, and a number of good pokes at the simplicity of television audiences and at behind-the-scene plotting in the studios, the joke exhausts itself very soon. Sister George, offstage and on, has greater comic (and human) possibilities than Frank Marcus sees fit to give her; the other characters are not developed fully. There is a good deal of viciousness mixed in with the wit . . . so that the reader is distracted from what the author wants to convey. Despite its Broadway run, not required by most libraries."

Choice 4:1130 D '67 100w

"Presumably Mr. Marcus wished to expose the sham of soap opera, but unless one can maintain a condescending superiority towards the situations and characters, it is rather grotesque, if not offensive. The realities of the lesbian relationship are buried in bathos with all the skill and unreality of—soap opera." Irving Wortis

Library J 92:1849 My 1 '67 120w

MARCUS, MARTIN. Yiddish for yankees; or, Funny, you don't look gentile. 48p il $1.95 Lippincott

492.49 Yiddish language—Dictionaries

68-14132

A list of Yiddish expressions in common use.

Best Sell 28:228 S 1 '68 60w

"This book would make a great party gift. . . . Marcus seems to have anticipated all the possible criticism of his selection, transliteration and definition of the Yiddish words he has selected. This is a successful book in that it fulfills his intentions; it is flippant, amusing and will appeal to adolescents of all ages." Sophie Mitrisin

Library J 93:1143 Mr 15 '68 70w

"Here's a riddle: What is it that humbles the haughty and removes the stuffing from the stuffed shirt? According to Martin Marcus, it's the Yiddish language, and one is readily convinced by the abundance of reckless pejoratives in his [book]. . . . He defines (and pronounces) fewer than 200 words, but any lexicographic deficiencies are outweighed by the authentic humor." D. M. Glixon

Sat R 51:48 My 18 '68 70w

MARCUS, REBECCA B. The first book of the cliff dwellers; drawings by Julio Granda. 90p il $2.65 Watts, F.

970.4 Cliff dwellers and cliff dwellings—Juvenile literature. Southwest, New—Juvenile literature. Mesa Verde National Park—Juvenile literature 68-11138

This book gives an "account of the discovery in the past century of the cliff-dweller civilization of the Southwest and covers scientific speculation about that ancient culture, how its people conducted their daily lives, when and why they vanished. . . . Ages ten to fifteen." (N Y Times Bk R)

Reviewed by M. W. Stoer

Christian Science Monitor pB6 My 2 '68 140w

"Authentic, informative, with striking photographs and drawings from government sources, this is a good choice for collections of materials on American Indians. . . . Modern scientific reconstruction of [the cliff dwellers'] culture from the study of artifacts and ruins is well and clearly described with a good account of tree-ring dating. This excellent presentation has visual and verbal impact from handsome cover to useful index." Marjorie Stephenson

Library J 93:2735 J1 '68 90w

"[The account] is well documented with photographs. Unfortunately, the book also includes some not-so-scientific speculation about how the cliff dwellers felt and thought, suggesting that they were probably not much different from their metropolitan counterparts today. This kind of conjecture . . . is out of place in a book so determinedly 'scientific' that it drags in terms like dendrochronology and the Cretaceous Period (without further qualification) and interrupts a good story with a not too well done chapter on tree-ring dating." Paul Walker

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p38 My 5 '68 190w

MARCUSE, JACQUES. The Peking papers; leaves from the notebook of a China correspondent. 351p $6.95 Dutton

915.1 China (People's Republic of China) 67-10069

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by John Israel

Book World p1 Mr 17 '68 200w

Choice 5:668 J1 '68 180w

Reviewed by John Hughes

Christian Science Monitor p9 Ja 20 '68 700w

Reviewed by Michael Lindsay

Nat R 20:559 Je 4 '68 1300w

N Y Times Bk R p22 F 18 '68 300w

Reviewed by John Gittings

Pacific Affairs 41:422 fall '68 320w

MARE, GEORGE DE. See De Mare, G.

MARESCA, THOMAS E. Pope's Horatian poems. 227p $5 Ohio state univ. press

821 Pope, Alexander

66-23259

In the opening chapter, the author attempts to show "how pervasively 'moral' Horace was 'Christianized' by Renaissance editors and annotators of his works. The remainder of the book, [with] analyses of 'Satire II, i,' 'To Arbuthnot,' 'Epistle II, ii,' and 'Epistle I, i,' examines the extent to which Renaissance views of Horace are essential to an understanding of the Imitations and Pope's career." (Choice) Index.

"The great merit of this study is its demonstration of the existence of a distinct, generally held Renaissance view of Horace. . . . The chapters on 'Satire II, i' and 'To Arbuthnot' are excellent; they employ their critical point of view with full respect for the rhetorical sophistication and verbal complexity of the poems. The later chapters do not keep the poetry as firmly in the foreground; on the basis of limited evidence they assert more about Pope's aesthetic and theological beliefs than a broader view of the achievement of the decade of the 1730's will readily support. Though the scope of the book is narrow and the angle of vision sharply limited, it is a valuable contribution to the beginning of a better understanding of Pope's Horatian poems and can be warmly recommended for all undergraduate studies in Augustan verse."

Choice 4:423 Je '67 220w

"In pointing out that Pope was influenced by many Renaissance and seventeenth-century . . . commentaries on Horace, Maresca underlines too heavily the point that Pope's view of Horace was different from those generally held in the twentieth century. . . . Nonetheless his discussion . . . is interesting and important in understanding not only Pope but a general English Augustan approach to the classics. . . . [Its value] is twofold: it discredits the superficial and fallacious view that the quality of Pope's satire was determined by personal malice, and it demonstrates that the poetry of Horace was a significant influence in the development of Pope's conception of satire as a serious and enduring art." Lillian Feder

Class World 61:117 N '67 310w

MARGOLIES, EDWARD. Native sons; a critical study of twentieth-century Negro American authors. 210p $5.95 Lippincott

810.9 Negro literature—History and criticism. Negro authors 68-24135

The author discusses "the significance of modern American Negro writing in terms of what it tells us about the quality of American life, white as well as black. [He] examines the work of a number of authors, including Richard Wright, James Baldwin, Malcolm X, Chester Himes, and LeRoi Jones." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

Christian Century 85:1286 O 9 '68 20w

"[Margolies] has written eloquently out of profound understanding and deep feeling with the result that one comes away from his book not only with an enhanced appreciation of these men, but also with a quickened sense of the suffering and the contumely to which the Negro has always been heir in this country. It is a fine book, and one that should be widely purchased." A. L. Fessler

Library J 93:3562 O 1 '68 190w

"[By] looking at fiction by Negro American writers as literature first and protest only incidentally, . . . Margolies has produced an unusually fine work. . . . The main concern is with those [writers] who have appeared since 1940. . . . [Margolies'] concern with quality instead of quantity is clearly what raises his work above those of many of his predecessors. . . . He has rediscovered some long-forgotten works of high artistic value, such as [W.] Attaway's Blood on the Forge [BRD 1941]. . . . Margolies reminds us once again of the vitally important part the Negro has played in the growth of American literature. Over and over he tells us that these writers are worth reading . . . because we might learn something from them about literature." C. R. Larson

Sat R 51:37 N 30 '68 1100w

MARGULIES, SYLVIA R. The pilgrimage to Russia; the Soviet Union and the treatment of foreigners, 1924-1937. 290p $7.50 Univ. of Wis. press

947.084 Russia—Politics and government—1925-1953. Propaganda, Russian. Russia—Foreign opinion 68-16062

The author "explores the means by which the Soviets sought to select and control visitors to the USSR from the mid-1920's until 1937, when internal political imperatives and major problems of foreign diplomacy decreased Stalin's interest in showing off his state to the Western world. The discussion of why the Soviets encouraged travelers, how they tried to manipulate their guests, before, during, and after their trips, and how well their attempts succeeded forms the core of [the book]." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"Margulies, with thorough research and documentation, focuses primarily on the experiences of British and American visitors and residents in the Soviet Union. . . . This work is a valuable case study of the treatment of foreigners in a closed society, but the author's hope that its 'framework can apply to the Soviet Union today or to any other closed society' should be qualified by an awareness of the unique attributes of the U.S.S.R. in the 1920's and 1930's, an awareness revealed in the concluding chapter. The concentration on English-speaking foreigners in the Soviet Union tends to exclude consideration of the treatment of some important categories, e.g. the exiled foreign Communist."

Choice 5:1207 N '68 190w

"There are extensive notes and a full bibliography. This is a readable and reasonable discussion of the subject which should interest students and specialists." J. S. Robotham

Library J 93:2885 Ag '68 120w

"[The author] deals almost exclusively with American and British visitors. Gide is a lonely Frenchman and even he does not make the bibliography. . . . Far more serious is the neglect of the wave of visitors from many Asian countries. . . . Even English visitors do not come off too well. . . . Much space is devoted to Americans who worked in Soviet industry; and some interesting information is supplied about the way in which some of these workers were recruited in New York. But the whole account is inordinately sketchy and unsystematic. . . . The generalizations resulting from this hotch-potch were predictable; and the volume is all too reminiscent of those large rag-bags of Victorian housewives, stuffed with faded pieces of material of all shapes and sizes, which one picked over in an idle moment, wondering what use could conceivably be made of them."

TLS p823 Ag 1 '68 600w

MARICHAL, JUAN. A pitcher's story, by Juan Marichal with Charles Einstein. 215p il $4.50 Doubleday

796.357 Baseball

67-19069

The pitcher for the San Francisco Giants describes his life from early days in The Dominican Republic to major league "games and stratagems, locker-room plays and feuds." (Sat R)

"Coauthor Charles Einstein has done little more than string together a series of anecdotes told partly in sports journalese and partly in what seems to [be] Mr. Marichal's genuine colloquial manner. Fortunately, the anecdotes have enough intrinsic interest to entertain baseball fans. Mr. Marichal's light-hearted account of his early encounters with the Trujillo dictatorship in his native Dominican Republic is especially intriguing. . . . Recommended for libraries with extensive sports collections." J. W. Weigel

Library J 92:3655 O 15 '67 180w

Reviewed by Patricia McLaughlin

Library J 93:315 Ja 15 '68 100w [YA]

"Not always in a book written by a sports personality in collaboration with a sports writer does the biographee's personality emerge. Here it does: earnest but cocky, ebullient and candid. For young adults." Zena Sutherland

Sat R 51:41 Ap 20 '68 110w [YA]

MARILL, RENÉ. See Albérès, R. M.

MARITAIN, JACQUES. The peasant of the Garonne; an old layman questions himself about the present time; tr. by Michael Cudihy and Elizabeth Hughes. 277p $6.95 Holt

201 Theology. Christianity

68-10182

The French Catholic philosopher offers the thesis that "modern Catholic (and other Christian) thinkers have betrayed their faith, and the reason is that they have chosen to 'kneel down before the world.' How does the author support the charge of betrayal? Assuming the principle that the now traditional Scholastic understanding of the faith is the essentially unchangeable form of Christian truth, he sets out to demonstrate that there is a difference between the 'neo-modernist' and the earlier Catholic theological and philosophical world-views." (Critic)

MARITAIN, JACQUES—Continued

Reviewed by Ambrose Agius

Best Sell 27:461 Mr 1 '68 700w

Reviewed by F. D. Wilhelmsen

Book World p7 Mr 24 '68 950w

Reviewed by W. R. Miller

Christian Century 85:358 Mr 20 '68 850w

Reviewed by Michael Novak

Commentary 46:91 S '68 2300w

"The ideas exposed [here] are in perfect continuity with the doctrines [Maritain] has defended throughout his long intellectual career. . . . The whole burden of Peasant of the Garonne is to expose some of the major aberrations in Christian life and thought today, and to outline the foundations for genuine renewal. The work therefore is both critical and constructive. One of the gravest aberrations has been the growing secularization of the Gospel message. . . . The loss of a sense of objective truth today is of deep concern to Maritain. . . . [His] critique of the doctrine of Teilhard de Chardin (and of his even more radical followers) is largely responsible for the uproar about this book. Fully appreciative of Teilhard's profound religious faith, his unusual mind and his complete sincerity, Maritain is nevertheless distressed at the manner in which Teilhard hopelessly confused the different formal levels of knowledge in constructing his synthesis." F. E. McMahon

Critic 26:68 D '67-Ja '68 1350w

"The title of his book is explained at the outset by the author (who lives close to the Garonne) with explicit reference to the lack of urbanity with which he intends to polemize in this work. . . . As it turns out, this really means: to call those with whom he disagrees (namely, the 'neo-modernists' who have led post-Conciliar Catholic thought) 'stupid,' 'liars,' 'conformists,' 'simpletons,' 'fools' and the like. Additional invective, together with undisguised sarcasm and not a little bitterness, crop up with embarrassing frequency. . . . If one hides every problem raised by human development, and especially by science, under the idea that man's historic development has been a perversion and science is a negligible level of knowledge, and if one remains oblivious to the last one hundred years of Scriptural scholarship. . . . then the ascription of 'neo-Modernism' to an idolatrous 'kneeling down before the world' is at least a hypothesis that merits further study. Even so, the fruitfulness of this sort of exercise is questionable." Leslie Dewart

Critic 26:68 D '67-Ja '68 1500w

Reviewed by Brian Wicker

Encounter 31:74 S '68 400w

"From the outset this book seems destined to draw the howls of joy from the Right, and howls of protest from the Left which it received in France. On the surface it is a bitter and caustic attack on the 'new theology' and its forefathers, Teilhard, Marx, the existentialists and phenomenologists. It is unfortunate that it must appear so on the surface, for beneath the subtle insinuating style Maritain has raised real philosophical and theological questions. . . . This book will be in considerable demand because of the publicity given it on all sides, but will hopefully be replaced by a less passionate statement of these views in the years to come." Richard Walz

Library J 93:999 Mr 1 '68 190w

"The worst enemies of new radicals, Lenin pointed out, are old liberals. Jacques Maritain, now in his eighties, is a good illustration. [This book] is likely to send his old admirers looking for a new exemplar. . . . It is arrogant, unpleasantly coy at times, badly written and boring. Maritain draws on three main sources for his critique of the 'modernizers': his own earlier works, those of his poetess wife Raissa, and the Bible, in about that order of precedence. The result is a book which suggests that the main fault of the new theology is that it has forgotten Jacques Maritain. . . . The boredom is induced by a tedious recapitulation of some outworn or uninspiring positions; Aquinas is again vindicated, the authority of the Pope is upheld, most philosophers since Descartes are dismissed as unworthy of the name." Daniel Callahan

New Repub 158:34 Mr 2 '68 1250w

Reviewed by Jaroslav Pelikan

Sat R 51:30 Mr 9 '68 1200w

TLS p503 My 16 '68 50w

MARKHAM, JAMES W. Voices of the Red giants; communications in Russia and China. 513p il maps $7.50 Iowa state univ. press

079 Communication. Communism and literature. Journalism—Political aspects. Russia—Intellectual life. China—Intellectual life 67-12133

The author examines "the Soviet and Red Chinese press [including magazines, newspapers, radio, television, news agencies and advertising, and] describes their cultural setting, history, organization, functions, performance, and effects. . . . [He] deals with the two systems and attempts to compare and contrast them." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"Markham has less detail on the organization of the Communist press than [A.] Buzek's How the Communist Press Works [BRD 1964], less on the content of the publications than [F.] Barghoorn's The Soviet Image of the United States [BRD 1951], and less on overall goals and methods of agitation propaganda than [H.] Cantril's Soviet Leaders and Mastery over Man [BRD 1961]. . . . Markham's information is more up to date than any of these books, but his analysis tends to fall back on clichés concerning Communism and its propaganda techniques and media. The footnotes, index, and bibliography are extensive, and the illustrations helpful."

Choice 5:184 Ap '68 160w

"A formidable attempt to penetrate the immensely difficult terrain of the Communist communications apparatus in both Russia and China, with informed attempts to estimate the extent and influence of governmental control over the editorial function." S. W. Little

Sat R 50:129 O 14 '67 50w

MARKHAM, ROBERT. Colonel Sun; a James Bond adventure. 255p $5.95 Harper

68-15976

"Kingsley Amis, author of Lucky Jim [BRD 1954] and The James Bond Dossier [BRD 1965], has now taken the pseudonym Robert Markham to continue the Ian Fleming role in chronicling the adventures of James Bond. . . . This time the adversary is Colonel Sun of the People's Liberation Army of China. . . . Most of the action takes place in Greece and the nearby islands. . . . In the end Bond triumphs, rescues M [his chief] and thwarts Colonel Sun." (Library J)

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 221:124 Je '68 70w

Reviewed by C. M. Siggins

Best Sell 28:90 My 15 '68 500w

"I regret to say that Amis' Bond seems more Moxie than Mouton-Rothschild. . . . Skillful writer that he is, however, Amis manages to square a plausible plot with his stripped-down version of Bond, though he never quite captures the bizarre beat of a Fleming pace. In Colonel Sun 007 teams up with a shapely Greek Communist agent (and thereby with her Moscow masters) against Red Chinese bogeyman Col. Sun Liang-tan, a pewter-eyed giant and Sade scholar who has charge of Peking's plans to bombard a high-level Communist conference and hang it on the British. . . . Although Amis faithfully uses the usual Fleming script (semi-exotic setting, intriguing beauty, loyal native sidekick, creepy villain and entertaining sociogeographical cameos), the changes he has wrought on Bond's essential character throw the formula askew. . . . In humanizing Bond, in netting him back into the channel of real contemporary events, Amis somehow deprives him of the very ingredients that made his barely believable adventures so rewarding." S. K. Oberbeck

Book World p5 My 5 '68 1150w

"The pattern is almost traditional by now—the expertise in food and drink, gun lore, seduction, and physical combat all brought together as Bond battles the super-enemy. . . . The gadgetry seems less intrusive than in some earlier Bond stories and the writing is tauter. How much longer the Bond image will last is speculation; for the moment we need merely say 'Welcome back.'" Norman Horrocks

Library J 93:1500 Ap 1 '68 160w

Reviewed by P. L. Buckley

Nat R 20:619 Je 18 '68 300w

Reviewed by A. J. Hubin

N Y Times Bk R p32 My 19 '68 100w

Reviewed by P. D. Zimmerman

Newsweek 71:108 My 1 '68 500w

Reviewed by Sergeant Cuff

Sat R 51:30 Je 29 '68 50w

Time 91:128 My 10 '68 290w

"Mr. Amis is an extremely gifted novelist with a sharp ear, a savage eye, and a tight control of narrative. . . . Above all he is (as a previous publication and many interviews have revealed) an admirer of the Bond canon. How is it then, that with natural gifts, hard work and devotion, he has still failed to make the smallest incident in his story ring true? The answer is that the original James Bond was an intensely personal creation, the product not only of a distinct if minor talent, but also—like all fantasies—of distinct and private needs. Behind even the least probable of the adventures there is the kind of urgency that makes for complete conviction. Fleming, in other words, believed; and with such belief a man may be preposterous, and still hold us mesmerized. But Mr. Amis, who believes what Fleming wrote, does not believe what he is writing himself."

TLS p309 Mr 28 '68 650w

MARKHAM, ROBERT. For other works by this author, see Amis, K.

MARLOWE, CHRISTOPHER. Dido, queen of Carthage; and, The massacre at Paris; ed. by H. J. Oliver. (The Revels plays) 187p $6.50 Harvard univ. press

822

68-31947

"A modern spelling edition of [these two plays]. . . . [The introduction] aims at interpreting the two plays . . . and also discusses sources, textual history and probable staging. The text is edited according to modern principles [with] explanatory notes and collations." (Publisher's note) Index to annotations."

"[The] head of the School of English, University of New South Wales, has made an important contribution to literature by editing the first fully annotated versions in 35 years of what are probably Marlowe's first and last plays. His confident yet speculative approach to some aspects of textual history and authorship, sources, and interpretation of the plays can be challenged, but his scholarship cannot. The detailed footnotes and supplementary comments make this edition noteworthy for serious students of Marlowe." J. A. Phillips

Library J 93:2500 Je 15 '68 100w

TLS p604 Je 6 '68 110w

MARMION, HARRY A. Selective service: conflict and compromise. vp $5.95 Wiley

355.2 Military service, Compulsory 68-8107

The author "traces the 1967 Selective Service law to its origins in the Oates Report after the Civil War and gives an account of the Civil Service which was planned for the total war requirements of World War II. . . . He also evaluates the Kennedy hearings, and the Clark and Marshall reports." (Library J) Appendixes: Civilian Advisory Panel on military manpower procurement (Clark report), Summary of the report of the National Advisory Commission on selective service (Marshall report), Public law 90-40 and executive order 11360. Index.

"[The author's] 'Overview' of the 1967 law may appear controversial to the timid. . . . However, because of the timely, objective, and factual discussion of selective service, this book should be in libraries and should be promoted for wide duplication and readership especially in community libraries." P. R. Penland

Library J 93:3543 O 1 '68 250w

"[The author] has written the best and most exhaustive description I have seen of what actually happened to the [1967] attempt to reform the draft. As such, it serves as an excellent case study of how frustrating it can be to try to change long established institutions." E. M. Kennedy

N Y Times Bk R p3 N 17 '68 1600w

MARPLES, MORRIS. Romantics at school. 206p pl $5.50 Barnes & Noble

821 Poets, English

67-8895

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by Edward Blisshen

Book World p19 F 4 '68 800w

Choice 5:196 Ap '68 100w

Reviewed by R. M. Adams

N Y Rev of Books 10:25 F 15 '68

700w

MARQUEZ, GABRIEL GARCIA. See García Márquez, G.

MARRIC, J. J. Gideon's river. 213p $4.95 Harper

68-26546

"To uncover the organization responsible for the loss of large quantities of industrial diamonds it is necessary for Gideon to mobilize all the forces that guard the Port of London. There is also the problem of protection for the fabulous collection of jewels and furs that are to be used in a fashion show and pageant on a chartered river boat. A 'river robbery' planned for this would rival the Great Train Robbery." (Library J)

Best Sell 28:241 S 15 '68 120w

"One of the features that makes [the author's] police procedurals so distinctive is the warm humanity of Commander George Gideon of Scotland Yard. Not for Gideon are mere abstract enjoyment of the chase, or the cold intellectual pleasure that follows the solution of an intricate problem. Gideon is personally and compassionately involved, not only in the lives of his family, but also in the lives and efforts of his men, both high and low in rank. His concern extends especially to the victims of tragedy—sometimes even to criminals, those victims of a different kind. . . . The situations [in this novel] are believable, the sequences are logical, the principal case is well-developed, and I was extremely sorry the story had to end when I laid it down." A. J. Hubin

N Y Times Bk R p16 S 1 '68 220w

"Gideon at his best, and the Thames at its most diversified." M. K. Grant

Library J 93:3024 S 1 '68 80w

Reviewed by Sergeant Cuff

Sat R 51:45 O 26 '68 20w

MARRIC, J. J. Gideon's wrath. 205p $4.50 Harper

67-13704

The author describes "the busy life of Commander George Gideon of Scotland Yard . . . [as he attempts to solve] a series of vandalistic attacks on London's churches, the disappearance of one girl and the murder by overdose of veronal of three others, the murder of a man's wife [and] gold smuggling, not any of which are related one to another." (Best Sell)

"Well done in the suspense category."

Best Sell 27:108 Je 1 '67 100w

"As usual, [the author] has brought off his annual miracle of treating all these matters detailedly and persuasively in fewer than 80,000 words, and creating another permanent addition to the top shelf of the police procedural novel."

Anthony Boucher

N Y Times Bk R p36 Je 18 '67 250w

New Yorker 43:88 J1 22 '67 70w

TLS p824 S 14 '67 20w

MARRIC, J. J. For other books by this author, see Creasey, J.

MARRIOTT, ALICE. American Indian mythology [by] Alice Marriott and Carol K. Rachlin. 211p il $7.95 Crowell

398.2 Indians of North America—Legends. Folklore, Indian

68-21613

This is a "collection of myths, legends and contemporary folklore [from some twenty North American tribes]. . . . With each tale there is a brief introduction to the tribe. Subjects include myths of creation; the world and the hereafter; 'how-and-why' stories told to children; historic legends and witchcraft. Among the tribes represented are Cheyenne, Modoc, Ponca, Hopi, Kiowa, Comanche and Zuni." (Publishers' Weekly) Bibliography.

Choice 5:1376 D '68 220w

MARRIOTT, ALICE—Continued

"In this volume Alice Marriott, who has written many books on Indians, and Carol Rachlin, an anthropologist, seek to present . . . accurate background on the main Indian groups in America, and a sort of literary telling of their myths and legends. The viewpoint is that of the anthropologist rather than of the folklorist. The stories do not have an Indian flavor but this makes for somewhat smoother reading. . . . The book is recommended for public, college, high school, and reference collections of children's libraries." Jerome Cushman

Library J 93:2243 Je 1 '68 150w

"Reading this compilation . . . would be a busman's holiday for any anthropologist interested in oral art, and would also please any adult who wishes an introduction to Indian sacred myths, popular tales, and traditions that could be shared with most of the family.

The two dozen or so photographs, attractive as they are, are, unfortunately I think, mostly of artifacts rather than of people doing things in their tribes. . . . Marriott and Rachlin have that rare gift which Charles Perrault also had of presenting orally transmitted narratives in a written style that appeals to all readers despite cultural differences." Katharine Luomala

Science 162:785 N 15 '68 500w

MARRIS, PETER. Dilemmas of social reform: poverty and community action in the United States [by] Peter Marris and Martin Rein. 248p $6.95 Atherton

361 U.S.—Social policy. Poverty 67-17146

"In this book we set out to examine, in the light of one experiment, some of the principles, dilemmas and frustrations with which social reform in America must grapple. The particular projects with which we shall be concerned . . . were promoted, and largely financed, by the Ford Foundation and the Juvenile Delinquency and Youth Offences Control Act of 1961: absorbed into the poverty programme, and diffused as a national strategy, they are now known as community action projects." (Intro) Bibliography. Index.

"Marris and Rein criticize deftly the reformers' exaggerated belief in the immediate utility of social science research. The chapter on 'Research' should be read by social scientists whenever they are tempted to apply their scholarly apparatus to practical situations. . . . The discussion of the participation of the poor is less satisfactory. Although the authors reveal the dilemmas faced by demonstration projects whenever residents are mobilized to political action, their analysis is too filled with many of the clichés of the Left. . . . Nonetheless, [they] have detailed persuasively the resources available to bureaucracies in the American political system for resisting reforms designed to ameliorate the conditions of the poor. Those interested in community action and institutional reform will find this a stimulating and worthwhile book." P. E. Peterson

Am J Soc 73:640 Mr '68 700w

"Marris and Rein raise the proper questions but stop short of supplying the answers, possibly because there are no answers to these complicated questions. . . . [Can dollars] reorient established agencies to forgo their independent jurisdictions and coordinate their resources to improve the quality of life in our cities? . . . Is it more effective to change the established institutions by working with them or by fighting them? . . . Money alone, the authors conclude, does not resolve these perplexing problems. . . . Students of social movements during the sixties will, no doubt, be indebted to [the authors] for their scrutiny of the nascent antipoverty experiments. However, policy shapers will do well to examine critically their conclusions." S. A. Levitan

Am Soc R 33:646 Ag '68 600w

"The book is well written and informative. The references are adequate, and the primary readership audience would be college and adults. This is a welcome appraisal of the effectiveness, or the lack of it, of private foundations and governmental commissions."

Choice 5:880 S '68 140w

MARSDEN, WILLIAM. The history of Sumatra; a reprint of the third edition introduced by John Bastin. 479p pl $20.30 Oxford was published in London in 1811. . . . It is considerably longer than the first and second editions, incorporating material subsequently communicated to Marsden by informants in west Sumatra, and gleaned from his wide reading in Malay literature. . . . When it was published in 1811 the book was accompanied by a separate atlas of plates, a number of which were bound up in some copies of the text. In this reprint all of the plates in the atlas are reproduced including those which originally exceeded quarto size." (Intro) "As a young man [the author] spent the years from 1771 to 1779 in West Sumatra in the service of the East India Company. . . . [It was his intention to present] a comprehensive picture of [the island] and its peoples. Besides history, therefore, there are geography, botany, zoology, customary law and linguistics." (Pacific Affairs) Index.

992 Sumatra SA66-6528

This work was first published in 1873. "A revised and enlarged third English edition . . .

"Actually Marsden has given us more than a mere chronicle of kings, princesses, and European traders. He has recounted with considerable accuracy and detail the daily life, customs, traditions, as well as the climate, vegetation, and mineral resources, of the Sumatrans and Sumatra. This facsimile reprint should be part of any collegiate or graduate library. Naturally, certain parts of Marsden's work have been superseded. But where can we find under one cover such a charming, yet factual account of Sumatra and Sumatrans."

Choice 4:208 Ap '67 120w

"Marsden's History was the first detailed account of Sumatra to be published in any language, and, as he himself tells us, was undertaken because 'of all accessible places of the world' Sumatra was the least known. . . . The study of Sumatran history has made much progress since Marsden's day. But his careful, painstaking and very intelligent account of the Sumatra he knew gives his book a unique value today. Dr. Bastin's scholarly introduction provides much essential information about Marsden and his writings. He and the Oxford University Press are to be congratulated upon their enterprise in making this important work more readily available." D. G. E. Hall

Pacific Affairs 40:165 spring-summer '67 320w

TLS p136 F 8 '68 1450w

MARSHALL, BYRON K. Capitalism and nationalism in prewar Japan; the ideology of the business elite, 1868-1941. 163p $5.75 Stanford Univ. press

330.952 Capitalists and financiers. Industry and state—Japan. Industrial relations 67-26528

Industrialization in Japan "took place within the framework of traditional values. Business leaders asserted that they served the nation in the same manner as the traditional samurai elite, that their basic motivation was patriotic devotion and a willingness to sacrifice for the common good. The attempt by the business elite to reconcile this description of their motives with the institutional characteristics of private capitalism is the chief concern of this study. Among the subjects discussed are business views on government economic controls, the debate over labor legislation, and the influence of the West on the formation of business ideology. . . . Marshall is Assistant Professor of History at the University of Minnesota." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

Choice 5:852 S '68 160w

"The main interest of Japan's past for the average Western reader lies in the light it throws on present achievements and what it indicates for the future. Here is a book that, while keeping rigorously to its chronological and subject terms of reference . . . does a very great deal to satisfy this dual interest. . . . [The] initial success and ultimate failure of the Japanese business elite before the second world war, so graphically recorded in this book, are of obvious importance in explaining postwar achievements, for that elite still exists today and in very much its prewar form. . . . The story told in these pages has many lessons for modern leadership in an advanced industrial community."

Economist 227:53 Ap 20 '68 800w

"A very readable and important study comparing Japanese and Western patterns of industrialization. It is recommended for college and university libraries and for special collections on business and labor." C. W. Stucki

Library J 92:4408 D 1 '67 170w

MARSHALL, F. RAY. Labor in the South. (Harvard univ. Wertheim publications in ind. relations) 406p $8 Harvard univ. press

331.88 Labor unions. Labor and laboring classes—Southern States 67-22870

In this "general history of organized labor in the south, Mr. Marshall analyzes the main factors influencing union growth in the region from the earliest times to the present. Writing within the context of the south's political, social, and economic history, the author provides material on labor economics and labor relations." (Publisher's note) Index.

"A labor history that covers so many industries and so many states as well as numerous issues was not easy to write. In places one finds real excitement in the stories, but in others the prose is heavy and one can predict that few will read this volume straight through. Still . . . it will long remain a standard work." M. H. Liggett

Am Econ R 58:1035 S '68 700w

"This is an excellent and ambitious study. The research is thorough. The depth of documented material on every major labor union and organizing effort in the South, since the later nineteenth century, makes the book highly valuable and assures it long life as a scholarly source in labor history. It adds new understanding to racial aspects of union organizing, makes a contribution to union growth theory, and challenges the conviction, held by many, that laws have been a major cause of union growth . . . or a major impediment to it. . . . [The book] is full of facts (and is not always easy reading) yet contains provocative analysis. It is one of the best books written on this subject." J. O. Morris

Am Hist R 73:1655 Je '68 450w

"[This volume] complements [R.] Marshall's The Negro and Organized Labor [BRD 1965]. . . . Useful and unique."

Choice 5:384 My '68 170w

MARSHALL, F. RAY. The Negro and apprenticeship, by F. Ray Marshall and Vernon M. Briggs, Jr. 283p $8 Johns Hopkins press

331.5 Negroes—Employment. Apprentices 67-18561

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by H. D. Marshall

Ann Am Acad 337:206 My '68 450w

Choice 5:532 Je '68 140w

Reviewed by Daniel Sinick

Record 69:616 Mr '68 900w

MARSHALL, HOWARD D. The great economists: a history of economic thought. 397p $7.50 Pitman

330 Economics—History 67-10166

"From Aristotle through Keynes and his contemporaries, each thinker is presented first as a man in his own time. Then follows a distillation of his economic theory, comparison of that theory with past and concurrent ideas, and criticism of the theory in the light of historical perspective. Particular attention is devoted to the work of Adam Smith, Thomas Robert Malthus, David Ricardo, John Stuart Mill, Karl Marx, Alfred Marshall, John Maynard Keynes, John Maurice Clark, and Joseph Schumpeter." (Publisher's note) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"[Since the author's coverage spans so many years,] in the space of only 369 pages, it is quite clear that [this] book can hardly be more than an outline of the history of economic thought. Since no generally recognized contributor to the development of economic thought is left out of Marshall's survey, many outstanding contributors are fortunate if their work is treated in more than three or four pages, while lesser-known figures such as David Hume are dismissed with less than one page. Marshall's book is much too condensed to provide what this reviewer would regard as an adequate coverage of the subject even for a class of undergraduates. . . . [The survey itself] is of quite uneven quality." A. G. Gruchy

Am Econ R 58:208 Mr '68 700w

"The author has concentrated on an appraisal in some depth of those who would be generally selected as most famous, and he attempts to avoid name dropping and reference to minor figures unless their inclusion is necessary to make a particular point."

J Pol Econ 75:903 D '67 260w

MARSHALL, J. D., ed. The autobiography of William Stout of Lancaster, 1665-1752. See Stout, W.

MARSHALL, WILLIAM H. The world of the Victorian novel. 487p il $8.50 Barnes, A.S.

823 English fiction—History and criticism 67-16945

"A study of 'the development of the Victorian novel as an expression of the value-quest dominating the intellectual life of the nineteenth century' after the collapse of the Enlightenment. The author sees this quest most fully expressed in the major novels of Dickens, Thackeray, Eliot, and Meredith, with possible new faiths appearing toward the end of the century in 'Marius the Epicurean,' 'Jude the Obscure,' and 'The Way of All Flesh.'" (New Yorker)

"Professor Marshall is a perceptive critic with philosophic training, and his book is a good one."

New Yorker 43:242 D 2 '67 90w

"The merits of this stodgy academic exercise are all incidental. Mr. Marshall's allusions to celebrated novels of the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries do help to freshen and extend our recollections of these substantial works. But this modest virtue tends to be limited. . . . It is not that Mr. Marshall's ideas are entirely without interest or value; merely that as applied here they betray a blandly innocent disregard of any need for literary discrimination." TLS p110 F 1 '68 350w

MARSHALL-CORNWALL, SIR JAMES. Napoleon as military commander. 308p il maps $8.95 Van Nostrand

B or 92 Napoleon I, Emperor of the French 67-97894

"The aim of this book is to portray Napoleon as a military commander. In Napoleon's career, however, strategy and statecraft were so closely interwoven that it is difficult to treat of one aspect without encroaching on the other." (Prologue) Chronological table. Bibliography. Index.

"The author's coverage of the Napoleonic Wars is quite complete, especially if the relatively short length of his text is considered. Allowing for the author's built-in bias, it is roughly impartial. No words are wasted, but room is found to wedge in an occasional detail of interest. Taken as a whole, the book develops considerable drive, something like a falling brick wall. It is unfortunate that most of the individual bricks are chipped, cracked, broken, or completely pulverized. There is hardly one really complete and accurate battle description in the whole book, and some are ridiculous. . . . [The strategical 'analysis'] contains nothing new, much that is dubious, and some flat errors. The whole effect is one of hasty writing and complete carelessness as to the results. In sum, the book cannot be recommended for either pleasure or profit." J. R. Elting

Am Hist R 73:1168 Ap '68 400w

"[The author's] scholarship is sure and his writing is clear, professional and persuasive; he makes most effective use of direct quotations from the originals of Napoleon's correspondence. . . . His critical comments illuminate not only Napoleon's technical mastery of military means but his proficiency as an intrigant and practitioner of ruthless statecraft. The maps—several of them are foldouts—are superior. The illustrations and reproductions of contemporary paintings and sketches are handsome and evocative. Although scholarly, Sir James's exposition will present no difficulties for the lay reader. This book should have wide appeal, and will make a valuable addition to general library shelves and to specialized military collections." E. V. Sutherland

Library J 92:4502 D 15 '67 340w

Reviewed by Yvette Schmitt

Library J 92:4639 D 15 '67 90w [YA]

"Those who are not seeking novel judgments or unfamiliar material will be well served by [this study]. The Russian and later campaigns are unduly compressed as compared with the earlier history, and on a few minor points the author makes . . . positive assertions where the real evidence is uncertain. But in the main he is not open to criticism on grounds of accuracy. . . . Sir James has obviously read widely and intelligently in his field; yet he breaks no new ground. . . . In the specifically military sphere there is still much to be done." TLS p702 J1 4 '68 220w

MARTIAL. Sixty poems of Martial; in translation [by] Dudley Fitts. 127p $4.75 Harcourt 871 67-19196
For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Choice 5:46 Mr '68 160w
Reviewed by W. S. Anderson
Class World 62:141 D '68 250w
Reviewed by Louise Bogan
New Yorker 43:135 Mr 30 '68 190w
Reviewed by Michael Benedikt
Poetry 113:212 D '68 160w

MARTIN, A. W., jr. auth. Parliament factions and parties. See Loveday, P.

MARTIN, DAVID. A sociology of English religion; introd. by D. G. Mackae. 158p $5 Basic bks.

274.2 Great Britain—Religion. Religion and sociology 67-22385
This "essay in description of 20th-century life in churches in Great Britain attempts to cover the sociological causes for the decline in church and chapel membership and participation in this century. Martin has not used a questionnaire and interview methods, but has examined church publications and census reports for his information." (Choice) Bibliography. Index of names. Index of subjects.

"There is much information packed into Dr. Martin's short book. True to the British survey tradition . . . Martin grounds his study in demographic fact-finding surveys concerning the incidence and distribution of religious membership, belief, and practice in the United Kingdom. For Americans who often know more of distant 'anthropological' religions than those of people more closely akin to them, this treatment has considerable value. . . . Martin's pungent thumbnail sketches of the varieties of religious belief and religious culture are vastly entertaining. His writing is refreshing and devoid of jargon. . . . [His] book suggests a broad comparative theoretical frame of reference from which American sociologists could profit." E. K. Nottingham
Am J Soc 74:103 J1 '68 500w

"This scholarly (and pedantic) essay . . . [is] so conditioned by English social structure that [the] conclusions have little meaning for anything in American church life. It should not and cannot be taken as a study of religion in the new world even in Canada. . . . but for those concerned with, or interested in, English religion, worth the trouble."
Choice 5:639 J1 '68 140w

"It is true, as David Martin says in his preface, that his book 'tries to cover a wide range of issues in a small space'. Partly he is continuing to tilt at the concept of secularization, though it is less and less clear what he is tilting at and whether in fact the statistics and other evidence he brings forward do not effectively disprove his own case. . . . The chapters which are most crucial to Dr. Martin's argument, Chapter IV 'Structures and Patterns' and Chapter V 'Explanations', are broadly impressionistic and fail as sociology. Yet as sociology they must be judged, since this is what their author calls them. The performance as a whole is puzzling."
TLS p728 Ag 10 '67 350w

MARTIN, F. X., jr. ed. The course of Irish history. See Moody, T. W.

MARTIN, J. E. Greater London; an industrial geography. 292p maps $6 Univ. of Chicago press

338.4 London—Industries 66-21351
"In studying the highly complex spatial pattern of manufacturing industry within one of the world's greatest metropolitan areas, the author places major stress on the mapping of industries by 'location quotients', the calculation of distributional 'median points and quartiles', and computerized correlation analysis designed to measure the degree of spatial association within Greater London of no fewer than 201 different industry/size groups. . . . [He uses] unpublished Local Authority and Ministry of Labour employment statistics, London Traffic Survey figures, published histories of individual firms, and actual interviews with businessmen." (TLS) Index.

Reviewed by D. L. Foley
Am Soc R 33:330 Ap '68 550w

"Martin has presented a thorough discussion of the geography of selected segments of those industries found in the London area, and of several techniques useful in analyzing such patterns. One wonders if the main objective of this text is not the portrayal of the geography of a particular aspect of the economy of a small region, but rather a treatise on a few techniques with numerous demonstrations. The early chapters are very slow reading for someone not familiar with locations and neighborhood names within the study area. . . . Certain topics, such as the movement of industry to New Towns, might have been developed more fully. This text will be most appreciated by readers with some capability in the areas of the techniques used."
Choice 4:1434 F '68 200w

"The book represents one of the first major industrial location studies to use wholeheartedly some of the newer analytical techniques now available to geographers. . . . However, though in principal highly commendable, the bringing together of this range and volume of material has clearly in practice presented the author with a most difficult task. The resultant compression of ideas and facts . . . does not make for easy reading. . . . However, Dr. Martin's book represents one of the most thorough and interesting studies in industrial geography to appear in recent years. As an illustration of the value of newer statistical techniques in analyzing human geographical distributions, as a compendium of ideas and information on London's industrial geography, and as a contribution to the study of urban spatial structure, [it] should reach a wide audience."
TLS p51 Ja 19 '67 650w

MARTIN, JAY. Harvests of change: American literature, 1865-1914. 382p $7.50 Prentice-Hall

810.9 American literature—History and criticism 67-14850

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by James Woodress
Am Lit 40:94 Mr '68 800w

Reviewed by R. E. Long
Christian Science Monitor p9 J1 25 '68 800w
TLS p52 Ja 18 '68 550w

MARTIN, MARIANNE W. Futurist art and theory, 1909-1915. 228p il col il 144pl $17.75 Oxford

709.04 Futurism (Art) [68-114920]

The associate professor of fine arts at New York University writes on an Italian movement in 20th century art. She presents the major artists, "analyzes the celebrated manifestoes, and records the sources of the movement and its ultimate decline." (Library J)

"[The author] presents the whole sweeping story leaving out none of the myriad details. That she is brilliantly informed becomes immediately evident for she drew her material not only from research libraries but also from recollections by the artists, their families and friends and from visits to notable collections of Futurist art. . . . The 234 illustrations have been carefully searched, sourced and reproduced with clarity. In short, this notable book tells a significant story in the history of art and it takes its place along with the two volume Archivi del Futurismo (Rome, 1958, Italian language) as essential bibliography on the topic. Recommended without reservation for art collections, college libraries, and for general humanities concerned with Europe and Italy in the 20th Century." W. J. Dane
Library J 93:4130 N 1 '68 210w

Reviewed by Lawrence Alloway
Nation 207:663 D 16 '68 20w

"Futurism made an enormous noise throughout pre-1914 Europe, then abruptly sank into oblivion. Only now is its reputation beginning to revive. [This] scholarly book is one sign of this renewed interest, and a very welcome

one. As far as it goes, it is certainly the soundest, the clearest, the best-researched and documented book about the movement to have appeared as yet. . . . However, not only does the author confine herself to the first phase of Futurism, which came to an end with Boccioni's death in 1916, but she sticks fairly rigorously to the visual arts. Since it was the emphasis which the Futurists placed on the idea of a 'total art' which makes them especially interesting today, this limitation is the more to be regretted." Edward Lucie-Smith

New Statesman 76:176 Ag 9 '68 950w

MARTIN, MICHAEL RHETA. Encyclopedia of Latin-American history [by] Michael Rheta Martin [and] Gabriel H. Lovett; consulting ed: Fritz L. Hoffman; rev. ed. by L. Robert Hughes. 348p $10 Bobbs

980.003 Latin America. Encyclopedias and dictionaries 66-28231

The work, originally published in 1956, is intended to provide a "one-volume reference work on Latin American history from the earliest times to the present. The encyclopedia is arranged alphabetically. . . . The coverage is comprehensive, including political, social, cultural, economic, geographical, agricultural and biographical information, and definitions of important terms in Latin American history." (Library J)

"The information about the post-1956 world is less detailed than the information, say, about the 19th century. To locate, for instance, current political figures, particularly leaders of the various countries, one must look under the country's name and not under the man's name. (Fernando Belaúnde Terry appears to be the exception with two lines under his name.) Occasionally the death dates are included in one article and excluded for the same person in another article. Although size is also a primary fault, being too small for detailed information, the encyclopedia can give quick information for those librarians who do not have larger, multivolumed biographical, geographical, or encyclopedic handbooks and manuals on Latin America."

Choice 5:752 S '68 150w

"Generally, the information appears to be up to date, accurate, and objectively presented. The amount of revision is extensive and many of the longer articles have been rewritten to take into account developments within the last ten years. The articles for each country are thorough in historical coverage and provide insight into many of the facets of current policy in Latin America today. There is no index, but cross references are generally adequate. . . . Highly recommended for reference collections." T. L. Welch

Library J 93:2228 Je 1 '68 250w

Reviewed by D. M. Glixon
Sat R 51:46 My 18 '68 20w

MARTIN, P. S., ed. Pleistocene extinctions: the search for a cause [ed. by] P. S. Martin [and] H. E. Wright. 453p il $12.50 Yale univ. press

566 Extinct animals

This book is "based on the investigation conducted at the VII Congress of the International Association for Quaternary Research in 1965. [It] contains eighteen papers by . . . paleobiologists, that examine the causes for the sudden extinction of large animals during the Late Pleistocene period." (Natur Hist)

Natur Hist 77:75 Je '68 60w

Reviewed by O. H. Prufer
Science 162:1110 D 6 '68 2700w

"[Some of the extinct fauna of North America include] the mammoth, the camel, the pronghorn antelope. . . . together with their predators such as the saber-toothed cat and the hyena. . . . Who done it? Was it our cousins—the agile, tireless able hunters. . . . or was it merely the last shrinking of the glaciers? . . . The argument ranges with fascination and no clear resolution in this fine report of an expert international symposium, held in Boulder, Colo., three years ago but supplemented by up-to-date papers on the subject. . . . The case remains open, although the indictment was brought as long ago as Lucretius. . . . The book begins with an enormously helpful brief 'bestiary for Pleistocene biologists' opening many papers otherwise barred to the general reader."

Sci Am 218:157 My '68 600w

MARTIN, SAMUEL E. A Korean-English dictionary, by Samuel E. Martin, Yang Ha Lee [and] Sung-Un Chang. 1902p $35 Yale univ. press

495.7 Korean language—Dictionaries—English 67-24503

"The entries include Korean native vocabulary and common Chinese and European loan words. . . . Entries also include information concerning morphology, morphophonemics, etymology, and dialect variations." (Library J)

"The best Korean-English dictionary available. . . . A companion English-Korean volume is to be hoped for. . . . The Chinese character is given for words of Chinese origin. Romanization is given in the Yale system (much to the distress of scholars who would have preferred the McCune-Reischauer system). . . . Definitions are adequate, and quotations where given are helpful. The general approach is linguistic rather than historical."

Choice 5:464 Je '68 120w

Reviewed by Eung-Do Cook
Library J 93:1465 Ap 1 '68 280w

MARTINDALE, ANDREW. Gothic art; from the twelfth to fifteenth centuries. 287p il col il $7.50 Praeger

709.02 Art. Medieval. Architecture. Gothic. Art, European 67-28194

A lecturer in the history of art at the University of East Anglia presents a "survey of the arts of Western Europe in the two and half centuries from Romanesque to Renaissance. The principal centres were the Ile de France and northern Italy, radiating their influences to Spain, England, Germany, Rome and Prague." (TLS) Glossary. Chronology. Bibliography. Index.

"The Introduction clearly distinguishes the meanings of the term Gothic, setting the reader straight also on the deductions art historians must make from evidence that is little documented by more than art itself. . . . There are over 200 illustrations, black-and-white photographic plates and line drawings and ground plans, with 32 of the illustrations in excellent color. Particularly valuable is this as an introduction to more detailed study of the period covered and as such highly recommended to libraries."

Best Sell 27:387 Ja 1 '68 240w

"For good scholarly surveys at low prices, all of the volumes in this [Praeger World of Art] series are to be recommended to college libraries but most especially Martindale's new survey; . . . it is probably the best short survey of this period to date."

Choice 5:766 S '68 140w

"The flowering of the arts from the Abbey of St. Denis and Chartres, to Giotto, Simone Martini and Milan cathedral can scarcely be crammed into a few pages, but [this book] is always readable; never a catalogue of dates and artists. Mr. Martindale writes on painting, architecture, sculpture, metal-work, manuscript illumination and stained-glass; perhaps not quite enough about the latter."

TLS p124 F 8 '68 140w

MARWICK, ARTHUR. Britain in the century of total war: war, peace and social change, 1900-1967. 511p $8.50 Little

942.082 Great Britain—History—20th century. Great Britain—Social conditions [68-110065]

The author's "thesis is that the two world wars, despite their great destructiveness in many areas, have nonetheless furthered great social changes in Britain. He is concerned to demonstrate how and why this has happened as it has, within the framework of existing institutions." (Library J) Bibliography.

Reviewed by Anthony Hartley
Book World p20 O 27 '68 700w

Reviewed by Edwin Tetlow
Christian Science Monitor p9 O 22 '68 300w

"Drawing on a wide range of sources—there is a useful bibliography—Mr. Marwick has succeeded in his declared aim to be a guide as well as a guide. This reviewer has some reservations about certain observations and interpretations of the author, but taken as a whole this is a readable, stimulating work; it is recommended for both history and social science collections of libraries where [it] will find its appeal among informed laymen." Norman Horrocks

MARWICK, ARTHUR—Continued

Library J 93:2654 J1 '68 180w

"[Marwick] has drawn again on the research which went into [The Deluge: British Society and the First World War, BRD 1966], his admirable account of the Home Front in 1914-1918, and has read remarkably widely over the events of the last 50 years, to produce a most original and stimulating book. . . . His style is swift and lucid, and he has a gift for vivid quotation from unexpected sources—notably, many novelists from Richard Aldington to Sean Hignett. The vast field which he has to traverse makes excusable his errors of fact and emphasis. With some topics (such as social security benefits) he offers too much detail; with others, far too little. . . . But many of his emphases are novel and rewarding." Angus Calder

New Statesman 75:733 My 31 '68 1250w

"For sheer stamina [this work] wins high marks. So much information, gathered from so many fields, is crammed into this huge survey that its occasional inaccuracies and irritating snap judgments might be forgiven. The real trouble is that to contain his enormous assortment of political, social and historical luggage Mr. Marwick has felt it necessary to provide himself with this general theme like a kind of travelling bag, and the packing is neither comfortable nor convincing."

TLS p619 Je 13 '68 350w

MARX, GARY T. Protest and prejudice; a study of belief in the black community. 228,27p $8.95 Harper

301.451 Negroes

67-22531

"This study of Negro attitudes regarding his situation is based on interviews with a sample forming a cross section of the nation's Negro population (1119 from all of the nation's major areas). Statistical analysis [is] coupled with frequent representative quotations from those interviewed." (Library J) Index.

Reviewed by A. M. Rose

Ann Am Acad 337:205 My '68 550w

"[Marx] analyzes the survey findings intelligently and ingeniously and discusses them fluently. The volume, by exhibiting the very wide range of beliefs, not only about Jews, but about whites in general, is an enormously valuable corrective to stereotypes and glib generalizations about contemporary Negro attitudes. . . . Apart from exhibiting the variation in Negro orientations, the book provides invaluable insights into the determinants of the variation (for example, into how militants and black nationalists differ from other Negroes). This understanding study belongs in all college libraries."

Choice 5:264 Ap '68 200w

"This third volume in the 'Patterns of American Prejudice Series' . . . is excellent for the scholar, presenting as it does the results of original research, and for the general reader, serving as an antidote for uninformed journalistic speculation about Negro opinion. With both a preface and an introduction by the author, the foreword by Bayard Rustin might better have been published separately as a review, particularly since it represents one of the several Negro attitudes held by the study's respondents." J. M. Elrod

Library J 92:2797 Ag '67 180w

"[This work] sharply challenges certain popular stereotypes of Negro thought. . . . Marx has come up with some surprising conclusions. [His] study is an eminent example of opinion research, one carried through with estimable honesty and sensitivity. What is of doubt is whether his findings, completed over a year ago, remain applicable. The interviews on which Marx based his study were conducted in late 1964." Martin Duberman

N Y Times Bk R p8 Ja 21 '68 900w

Reviewed by B. E. Olson

Sat R 51:82 My 11 '68 850w

MARX, JOSEPH L. Seven hours to zero. 256p pl $5.95 Putnam

940.54 Hiroshima—Bombardment, 1945.

World War, 1939-1945—Aerial operations

66-20290

"Her 12 crew members tell how it felt to be flying the 'Enola Gay' when it dropped the world's first atomic bomb on Hiroshima. The author describes the way the crew were selected from thousands of qualified men and outlines their difficult training in a desolate part of Utah, the unbelievable security regulations imposed upon them, and their arrival on Tinian still uninformed of their destination. The flight is covered hour by hour." (Library J) Bibliography.

"[This] is tedious to the extreme; replete with banalities, hopelessly repetitious, and written in an immature style. I suppose Mr. Marx's paramount purpose is to drum into our minds that the men who performed such a fateful deed were not demons, but instead, clean-cut Americans typical as apple pie, who had a job to do. . . . What the crew of the B-29 superfortress 'Enola Gay' . . . did is dramatic enough, and has been amply documented in previous books. But who the men were, and what they thought as recorded by Marx, makes extremely dull copy." E. G. Hamann

Library J 92:3997 N 1 '67 160w

"Despite the well-known outcome, suspense builds as the 'Enola Gay' heads over the Pacific towards Japan and is detected by the Japanese radar system. Clear and concise, the writing has all the drama of a novel." Marian Trahan

Library J 92:4276 N 15 '67 110w [YA]

"[This is] written for the general public and [its] style is correspondingly dramatic. . . . [However, the author] does not strain . . . after effect or wallow in death and destruction." F. C. Jones

Pacific Affairs 41:288 summer '68 110w

MARX, KARL. Writings of the young Marx on philosophy and society; tr. and ed. by Loyd D. Easton and Kurt H. Guddat. 506p $6.95; pa $1.95 Doubleday

335.4 Communism

67-12896

A "collection of the early writings of Marx. Covering the years from 1835 to 1843 [the editors have] selected those documents which best illustrate the evolution of Marx from a left-wing Hegelian to an economic materialist." (Choice) Index.

"This anthology fills a great need in Marxist studies, for it makes available in English for the first time materials which are crucial for an understanding of the early Marx. Furthermore, it complements books like [G.] Petrovic's Marx in the Mid-twentieth Century [paperback] and [E.] Kamenka's The Ethical Foundations of Marxism [BRD 1963] by providing source material which underscores the humanistic and altruistic aspects of Marx. The fact that Marxist studies are in the process of thoroughgoing revision in the general line of socialist humanism is made incontestably clear by the appearance of this book. A must for every library, this book would be perfect as a textbook for a course in political theory."

Choice 5:671 J1 '68 230w

"An aptly entitled book, this translation and editing of the writings of the young Marx by two scholars, one an outstanding philosopher, the other, a specialist in German literature, marks a significant contribution to Marxian studies. The book is significant in that it seeks to convey what Marx 'actually said in the dozen years prior to the Communist Manifesto.' . . . In many cases, editorial comments are made at the beginning of each of Marx's works included here so that there is connective tissue, as it were, from one writing to another. This gives a sense of continuity of thought development even though the material is edited. This reviewer found the material stimulating and exciting, proving the validity of this technique. In a long introduction, the translator-editors further develop the relationship of Marx's writings to each other publication, or nonpublication so that one has a sense of having new insights and exploring new facets of Marx's thought." W. L. Morin

Library J 92:2594 J1 '67 280w

MASARYK, TOMAŠ GARRIGUE. The spirit of Russia; v3; ed. George Givian; tr. and associate ed. Robert Bass; pref. by Kenneth D. Miller. 331p $8 Barnes & Noble

914.7 Russia—Civilization. Dostoevsky, Fyodor Mikhailovich

68-31931

The author, the leader of the Czechoslovak nationalist movement, was elected first president of the Republic of Czechoslovakia upon the fall of the Austro-Hungarian Empire. The first two volumes of The Spirit of Russia originally appeared in German in 1913 under the title Russland und Europa. For the English edition see BRD 1919. There has existed a completed manuscript of a third volume. It is this volume, translated from the original German, which is now available.

"Masaryk approached Russian social thought as philosopher and sociologist. His insights have stood the test of time well. He was a 19th-Century liberal and positivist, but this did not prevent him from recognizing strong elements of irrationality in the spiritual makeup of the Russian people. A good part of the book is dedicated to Dostoevski who can rightly be regarded as an embodiment of all Russian intellectual and emotional contradictions and conflicts. Along with the first two volumes of The Spirit of Russia, the present one belongs in all good collections on Russia." Joseph Bram
Library J 93:2252 Je 1 '68 200w

[The manuscript] now appears, rearranged and with some omissions in an English translation under American editorship. The volume must be regarded as a pious tribute to the memory of a great man rather than as a finished product or as the culmination of an important literary enterprise. . . . [It] is divided into twenty or more chapters and sub-sections, some of which look like brief jottings of ideas which the author intended to develop later. . . . The whole is formless and obviously provisional, and much of the content frankly disappointing. Masaryk shone as an historian of ideas rather than as a literary critic; and his assessment of great artists like Dostoevsky and Tolstoy, Turgenev and Chekhov seems today both old-fashioned and lacking in depth. . . . His original work remains complete without this supplement."

TLS p175 F 22 '68 500w

MASEFIELD, JOHN. In glad thanksgiving. 90p $3.95 Macmillan (N Y)
821 67-20733

A "collection of recent lyric and short narrative poems by the late poet laureate of England." (Publisher's note)

"Recommended. The long narrative poem, 'Two Cousins,' an account of John Hawkins and Francis Drake's tragic sea encounter with the treacherous Spanish fleet in the Gulf of Mexico, is a compelling poem. Masefield's ballad simplicity and directness now seems more viable than at any time since 1922. . . . In the short lyrics of this new collection there is frequent laureate bonhomie. . . . But the two long poems ('Pagan-Born' is the second) redeem this sort of thing, and the three translations from Heine are moving."

Choice 5:484 Je '68 90w

"This slim volume . . . includes narrative poems and shorter lyrics and sonnets. All have the strong storytelling motif that runs through much of his writing and makes his lucid poetry so popular with young adults and children."

Helen Jacob

Library J 92:4274 N 15 '67 70w [YA]

Reviewed by K. T. Willis

Library J 93:86 Ja 1 '68 100w

MASON, HERBERT MOLLOY. The Texas rangers [by] Herbert Molloy Mason, Jr. 171p il $4.95 Meredith

976.4 Texas Rangers—Juvenile literature
67-16507

The author gives an account of some of the Rangers' encounters and activities from their beginnings in the mid-nineteenth century to the present. Index. "Grades four to six." (Library J)

"The material in this book is fascinating, but, unfortunately, the writing is poor. There is a good bit of fictionizing and many errors. Such phrases as the 'blood-thirsty Comanches,' the 'revenge-hungry Mexicans,' and 'Clyde Barrow was the most vicious killer Texas ever spawned' are examples of sensational writing and questionable accuracy. There are several mistakes in the account of Ranger Frank Hamer which can be checked with the reports of Walter Webb. [Story of the Texas Rangers, BRD 1957] acknowledged by Mr. Mason as 'the great Texas historian,' who knew Hamer well." Laurie Dudley

Library J 92:4614 D 15 '67 120w

"In his foreword Herbert Mason has the Texas Rangers ambushing and massacring a group of farm-style bootleggers. Next, in Chapter I, he depicts the Rangers decoying and slaughtering a band of Comanches. At this point I leafed to the back to see whether the 1967 Rangers were bludgeoning the poor paisano field hands as per television. No, but it did seem that the author was out to show them in a poor light. It's a pleasure to report that he settles down to the business at hand, placing the Rangers solidly in Lone Star history. . . . All in all, a bloody account of the past, sparing no sensibilities, and updated to include the modern duties of this elite force." Dan Cushman

N Y Times Bk R p38 S 10 '67 160w

MASSEY, REGINALD, jt. auth. Indian dances. See Singha. R.

MASSEY, ROBERT. Formulas for painters [ed. by Judith A. Levy]. 224p $6.50 Watson-Guptill

751.2 Artists' materials 67-21790

A "reference book containing over 200 numbered . . . recipes for sizes, grounds, mediums, glazes, varnishes, fixatives, and adhesives. Each recipe describes purpose, precise ingredients, directions for manufacture and use." (Choice) Cross references are provided. Bibliography. Index.

"[Recipes are] easily located. . . . As a rule, Massey does not recommend one recipe over another. Especially useful are tables of approximate drying times of mediums, glazes, and varnishes; table of solvents, melting points, boiling and flashpoints of solvents; ratios of dry pigments, conversion tables; and a directory of suppliers. A number of questions remain unanswered, such as why an 'imported leaf gelatine' is recommended rather than the unsweetened powdered gelatine obtainable at the supermarket. . . . The compilation, which resulted from three years of experiments and testing, should, according to the author, 'excite, suggest, and sometimes startle the artist or art student who might enjoy experimenting.'"

Choice 5:610 JI '68 160w

"Both fascinating and useful to the art student, artist, and technician. . . . [The] professor of fine arts at the University of Texas, El Paso, presents these normally difficult-to-find recipes in three separate parts: purpose of the item, directions for manufacture, and directions for use. . . . Highly recommended for art collections and general reference collections." S. L. Sobel

Library J 93:65 Ja 1 '68 90w

MASSIALAS, BYRON G. Creative encounters in the classroom; teaching and learning through discovery [by] Byron G. Massialas [and] Jack Zevin. 274p maps $5.95; pa $3.50 Wiley

371.3 Education, Secondary. Education—Experimental methods 67-13527

Concerned with 'methods for stimulating creativity and maximizing learning in the classroom, . . . the book identifies ways in which the teacher may organize the curriculum and the instructional procedures in order to enhance learning. . . . Based on actual cases and recorded dialogue, it provides suggestions for teachers who aspire to teach through methods of inquiry, discovery, problem-solving, or inductive teaching and gives examples of how teachers can maximize student creativity.' (Publisher's note) Glossary. Bibliography. Index.

"In general, the findings seem to support the use of inquiry teaching but not the importance of structure. Students of education courses at all levels will find the book useful, not only for its relevance to current educational theory, but, more importantly, for its insights into how inquiry teaching may be carried out. For most readers, the most interesting and rewarding parts will be the sections describing in detail the experimental lessons and the transcripts of interaction in the lessons. A must for anyone interested in inquiry teaching, particularly in the social studies areas."

Choice 5:387 My '68 150w

"Approaches in books like The Authentic Teacher [by C. Moustakas, BRD 1968] and Creative Encounters in the Classroom represent refreshing antidotes to the indigestion many students may be suffering from the knowledge being crammed indiscriminately down their throats. . . . Massialas and Zevin concern themselves primarily with the relationship between ways of motivating students and intellectual performance. . . . [They] emphasize repeatedly that their study was exploratory, and hope it will be followed up by others. Their conclusions, for which they do not provide statistical analyses, are quite consistent with the findings and conclusions provided in the body of statistical studies on creativity. . . . Evidence similar to that of many creativity researchers [is provided by the authors] that 'less intelligent' students can sometimes perform more imaginatively and effectively than 'more intelligent' students, under the type of environment where creative behavior is encouraged. . . . This kind of teaching may be quite difficult for some teachers. . . . But for the teacher who is willing to accept the challenge of a 'discovery' type curriculum, . . . I would heartily recommend [this book]."

MASSIALAS, B. G.—Continued

S. J. Parnes

Record 69:394 Ja '68 850w

Reviewed by Helen Sagl

Social Studies 59:223 O '68 280w

MASSIE, ROBERT K. Nicholas and Alexandra. 584p il $10 Atheneum pub.

B or 92 Nicholas II, Emperor of Russia. Alexandra, consort of Nicholas II, Emperor of Russia. Russia—History 67-24627

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by T. H. Von Laue

Am Hist R 73:1204 Ap '68 470w

Reviewed by Edward Weeks

Atlantic 221:110 Ja '68 700w

Reviewed by Naomi Bliven

New Yorker 44:152 Mr 23 '68 1100w

TLS p111 F 1 '68 1000w

MASTERS, ROBERT E. L. Psychedelic art [by] Robert E. L. Masters & Jean Houston; with contributions by Barry N. Schwartz & Stanley Krippner; ed. designed and produced by Marshall Lee. 190p 110il 32col il $15 Grove 709.04 Modernism (Art). Hallucinogenic drugs 67-31583

The authors describe "artists working in painting, drawing, sculpture, film, theater, ballet, opera, multi-media, and lumia. . . . Barry Schwartz, writer and teacher at Pratt Institute, contributes a chapter relating the present movement to its antecedents and Dr. Krippner, director of the Dream Laboratory, Maimonides Medical Center, contributed the final chapter in which he lists and interprets the results of his questions to 91 psychedelic artists." (Library J)

"The publication treats the use of psychedelic drugs from a favorable point of view and deals lightly with the dangers involved. . . . In spite of its propagandistic bent, the book covers a direction in art which has heretofore been found only in magazines and parts of other publications. . . . However, there are not enough color plates for the specific subject covered, and the price is also a negative factor. Suggested for the graduate shelves."

Choice 5:942 O '68 140w

"Between them, [the authors] have had 15 years of association with behavioral sciences and research with drugs and their effect on creativity. They write expertly. . . . There is a minimum of social science jargon and a discussion of the ramifications of psychedelic experience which may lead to an important new creative force. . . . The book is well produced and the 142 illustrations have a particular fascination, especially the 32 color illustrations. . . . The bibliography will be of real assistance to writers of term papers. The book will be of general interest to a wide public and to psychologists, social scientists, art historians, and artists."

W. J. Dane

Library J 93:2637 Jl '68 260w

"[This book] is a hymn of praise to the creative consequences of LSD 25, pot, the magic mushroom and all those. If you have not been chemically inspired you may find the illustrations of paintings, bits of film, multi-media, environments, happenings and lumia a trifle tedious. They reminded me of art nouveau, which my eyes reject. . . . It is claimed that LSD is quicker and safer than surrealism. Synaesthesia is honoured, ritual thought to be our current need, and the creation of 'intimate four-wall cinema' something to be desired. The claim that drugs increase both quality and quantity in works of art is yet to be demonstrated." Frederick Laws

New Statesman 76:148 Ag 2 '68 180w

TLS p1144 O 10 '68 800w

MASTERS, ROGER D. The political philosophy of Rousseau. 464p $12.50 Princeton univ. press

194 Rousseau; Jean Jacques 67-12348

This book is designed "to complement reading of the texts themselves. . . . Part I, 'The Limits of Politics,' is concerned with establishing the general structure of Rousseau's thought from the perspective of political philosophy. . . . [Part II] 'The Possibilities of Politics,' deals with the Social Contract, in which Rousseau elaborates his conception of political right and . . . political action. . . . The concluding chapter offers an . . . attempt to confront Rousseau's assumptions and conclusions about human nature with the findings of modern science." (Publisher's note) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"[The book] will appeal primarily to specialists in the field and will be of value to graduate students." Judah Adelson

Library J 93:1490 Ap 1 '68 120w

"Masters' is a model study which illustrates again the kinds of insight and understanding which can be won by a patient and careful reading and explication. . . . Within the framework of this reading, the seeming contradictions in Rousseau's thought tend to disappear and Emile is established as the central document in understanding his philosophy. Masters' book is, without question, the most important single work in English on the subject of Rousseau."

S. J. Tonsor

Nat R 20:916 S 10 '68 700w

"[Masters] pursues—I am tempted to say, he worries—Rousseau's political writings with great care and in the most satisfying detail. [But he] has his own firm view of the meaning of Rousseau's thought, and his chosen method—detailed examination accompanied by extensive quotation of texts—skillfully supports that view. His conclusions, however, are hardly surprising. . . . [Masters's] technique obstructs his effort to understand Rousseau's political thought as a whole. . . . [He] worries far too much about ambiguities, hidden intentions, personae, purported audiences. . . . In consequence, he fails to address himself seriously to either the psychology or the social and political world out of which Rousseau's thought emerged and which gave it the unity that Master's subtle explorations seek in vain." Peter Gay

N Y Rev of Books 11:33 D 5 '68 3500w

MATHEWS, F. X. The concrete judasbird. 276p $4.95 Houghton

68-18777

In this first novel "the hero, Michael Cassidy, leaves college and his New York home after the death of [Aunt Agnes] who raised him. He subsists for a time in rural Wisconsin as a cat burglar named Christopher Marlowe and, later, as a zoo worker while trying to recover his psychological balance. He returns home to the brooding memories of his aunt's house . . . only to witness the death of his uncle, a priest who was the nearest thing to a father Michael had." (Library J)

"This is the kind of book which will provoke prayer, conversation, confrontation. . . . Michael is raised in a Victorian house which symbolizes the awesome presence of Aunt Agnes; the concrete Judasbird within her garden has deep tones of meaning. . . . The death of Aunt Agnes sets loose a flood of Freudian behaviour patterns. . . . Sex is strong in the book; because Michael's needs are here rooted. . . . Toward the novel's end there is a return to homeland and a surprise meeting with Priscilla Laudenslager. . . . With her there is physical consummation in the empty house of Aunt Agnes. The background atmosphere of rigid piety; of fearful parochial school imagery; of cats and mustiness—all spell out some kind of therapy for this man-child who is Michael Cassidy. I think his story has something for us adults to ponder."

E. J. Linehan

Best Sell 28:160 Jl 15 '68 480w

Reviewed by Lucy Rosenthal

Book World p11 Ag 11 '68 250w

Reviewed by R. J. Thompson

Library J 93:2260 Je 1 '68 190w

"One thinks of Stephen Dedalus and other pilgrims when reading Mr. Mathews's dream-like intermezzos. His impressionistic portrait of the hero as a boy in parochial school, impelled to mischief and hounded by guilt, is first-rate. As Michael grows older, he becomes more picaresque and less distinctive; an episode of a second-story man and zookeeper is amusing but out of key. But the author gets his character in hand before the novel's conclusion, and supplies him with an epiphany that is a fitting terminus to this intriguing spiritual journey." Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p33 Je 16 '68 200w

"Tender and touching is this first-rate study of an orphan trying desperately to understand himself and the world about him, isolated as he is in his loneliness and sense of defeat. While the theme is a familiar one Mr. Mathews' sensitivity and deep sincerity give his narrative a compulsive force, augmented by his persuasive style and an absolute control over his material."

Va Q R 44:cxlv autumn '68 80w

MATHEWS, JANE DE HART. The Federal theatre, 1935-1939: plays, relief, and politics. 342p pl $8.50 Princeton univ. press

792 Federal Theatre Project. Theater—U.S. 67-14412

"The WPA Theatre Project [was] born out of a need to employ jobless thousands and a desire to create a drama relevant to the times and accessible to all men. . . . Inherent in its design—as a relief measure, a work program, and an artistic experiment—were conflicts which could not be resolved. . . . [This book seeks to convey] both the mood of the era and the nature of the people who gave life to the idea." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by Richard Moody

Am Lit 40:260 My '68 430w

"This study, which 'grew from a seminar paper into a book,' is sympathetic and informative. The good feeling and hard work in the book make its lapses all the more regrettable. . . . Besides its well-articulated account of the political environment of the Federal Theatre, one of the book's chief virtues is its portrait of Mrs. Flanagan. In this lady's own book [Arena, BRD 1941], her clarity of vision, her energy and courage, were, naturally, not emphasized; here they get the memorial they deserve. . . . But there are serious imperfections in the work. Mrs. Mathews is not a theater specialist, and she does not ask all the questions of her material that a theatrical reader wants answered. Many, many important details are missing. . . . Still, faults and all, Mrs. Mathews has caught such fire from her subject that she has lifted her book above most academic expeditions into art. The work also has a particular timeliness. This country is beginning to demolish the barriers between government subsidy and art." Stanley Kauffmann

Am Scholar 37:172 winter '67-'68 850w

"Mrs. Mathews' excellent volume is a thorough recounting of the brief life of the Federal Theatre Project. . . . In little more than three hundred pages of text, she succeeds in weaving together four major themes that are vital for an understanding of the program: first, the very considerable artistic accomplishments of the Project itself; second, the administrative complexities inherent in an unprecedented federal program and exacerbated by the unique requirements of the theater; third, the multiple conflicts among artists, bureaucrats, trade unionists, and politicians; fourth, the story of Hallie Flanagan. . . . The book, unhappily, has its weaknesses. . . . [It] lacks that quality of immediacy and excitement generated by . . . Mrs. Flanagan's Arena. Mrs. Mathews' book adds much to the information in that volume, but it does not supersede the earlier work. Both are necessary for a complete understanding of this important New Deal agency." Alan Schaffer

Ann Am Acad 376:184 Mr '68 800w

Choice 4:1402 F '68 180w

Reviewed by G. T. Tanselle

J Am Hist 54:921 Mr '68 500w

"Who now remembers the Federal Theatre of 1935-39? Jane De Hart Mathews does, and has written an objective but happily not entirely dispassionate book about it. For those too young to have known that remarkable phenomenon of the thirties, and for those so old they wish to forget it or are determined to recall it only in derision, Mrs. Mathews' book offers material for fruitful meditation. . . . What the Federal Theatre story indicates is that despite competition by all the mechanical media there is still a real appetite for 'living' theatre in this country. . . . The first and essential step is to divorce the idea of theatre from the rule of entertainment for profit. Out of necessity our government in 1935 was obliged to undertake the task; the results proved that for all the opposition, hazards, pitfalls—amply illustrated in Mrs. Mathews' book—impressively creative work can be achieved." Harold Clurman

Nation 206:56 Ja 8 '68 1050w

Reviewed by G. H. Quinby

New Eng Q 41:143 Mr '68 750w

MATLAW, RALPH E., ed. Tolstoy: a collection of critical essays. 178p $4.95; pa $1.95 Prentice-Hall

891.7 Tolstoy, Leo

67-18700

This is a collection of 12 essays by such critics as "Edmund Wilson, Sir Isaiah Berlin, and the . . . Russian scholars Dmitri Merezhkovsky, Boris Eikhenbaum and Leo Shestov. The essays [which] have been published previously in various books and journals. . . . [emphasize] the stylistic side of Tolstoy's work—his craftsmanship and form and the close relationship of form and content in his fiction." (Choice) Chronology. Annotated bibliography.

"Matlaw has done a valuable service to students by gleaning the best of European and American studies of Tolstoy's art and making them readily available in one volume, and the book fills a need in Tolstoyan criticism in English. . . . [These essays] cumulatively present a well rounded study of the supreme technical proficiency by which Tolstoy . . . made his art commensurate with his high purpose. . . . Recommended."

Choice 4:1387 F '68 230w

Reviewed by Arthur Minerof

Library J 92:2412 Je 15 '67 180w

MATSON, FLOYD W., ed. Being, becoming and behavior; the psychological sciences; ed. with intrs. by Floyd W. Matson. 288p $7.50 Braziller

150 Psychology

67-24208

The editor presents a selection of excerpts "ranging from Aristotle, Wundt, James, Freud, and Jung to Tillich . . . that he uses to document the 'most recurrent, representative and relevant' issues illustrating major themes in the making of modern psychology. He shows how the struggle between determinism and freedom has been expressed since Socratic times through Skinnerian behaviorism to modern psychoanalysis which eschews Freud's mechanistic instinctivism, thereby reasserting the individual as self-determiner." (Library J) Index.

"[These] excerpts from the writings of some philosophers from Aristotle on, and from a number of psychiatrists, psychoanalysts, and psychologists on a wide variety of topics, i.e., the soul, mind, consciousness, interpersonal relations, personality, free will, and the self, [will be] of interest mainly to the general reader who likes an historical, philosophical approach to these concepts. . . . The subtitle of Matson's book is misleading; there is little in it about science in psychological matters."

Choice 5:561 Je '68 100w

"This book should be read by all students in psychological and allied fields. It is a textbook in the foundation courses in the nonorthodox psychoanalytic and related institutes." Louis DeRosis

Library J 93:1006 Mr 1 '68 110w

MATSUO, BASHŌ. Back roads to far towns; Bashō's Oku-No-Hosomichi. with a tr. and notes by Cid Corman and Kamalke Susumu. 173p $8.50 Grossman pubs.

895.6 Japan—Description and travel 67-26108

This book is one of "several travel books written by Japan's foremost 17th-Century haiku poet. The complete text in both Japanese and English is included in this edition, with notes and a brief introduction." (Library J)

"[This] is a brief work, but Bashō's prose style, as well as the poetic style of the haiku which he composed as he viewed the scenes along his way, has been considered a high point of Japanese writing. . . . Sixteen color illustrations by the contemporary haiga painter, Hayakawa Ikutada, add much to the attractiveness of the volume. As a matter of fact, the illustrations may be the primary reason for library purchase, since a substantial portion of the text was included in Donald Keene's Anthology of Japanese Literature [BRD 1955], and the complete text, four other travel sketches, and a 40-page introduction were included in an edition [recently] published by Penguin [The Narrow Road to the Deep North and Other Travel Sketches]. Both of these translations are clearer and more readable than the present one. In summary, I would say this is a handsomely produced and illustrated edition of an important Japanese classic. It should be considered for purchase by Oriental art and comparative literature collections." C. W. Stucki

MATSUO, BASHŌ—Continued

Library J 93:1898 My 1 '68 210w

"Corman adopts an extraordinary language, bearing some resemblance to his own poetry and those poets associated with his magazine Origins. It does not mimic Japanese syntax but it does try to mimic Bashō's own psychologically syntax and the tone of a decoratively scrawled notebook. Corman's haiku are something else—Zen mondos with a vengeance. Many of them have half the syllables of the Japanese originals and resemble nothing so much as lines taken at random from a radically dissociated Robert Creeley. This is not always successful, but sometimes it is, and it is certainly one way to avoid lapsing into sentimentality. Or does it substitute a new, hip sentimentality? My principal objection is the excessive use of Japanese words and expletives." Kenneth Rexroth
Nation 206:610 My 6 '68 500w
Va Q R 44:cix summer '68 120w

MATT, LEONARD VON. Ancient Crete; phot. by Leonard von Matt; text by Stylianos Alexiou, Nikolaos Platon [and] Hanni Guanella. 238p $29.50 Praeger

913.39 Crete—Antiquities 68-19131

The book is arranged "by sections in a chronological order, from the Neolithic down to Dorian Crete. Each section consists of a few pages of introductory text, some notes on the photographs and about twenty pictures." (Class World) Chronology. Annotated bibliography. Index of names and places. First published in German under the title Das Antike Kreta.

"This is one of the better picture books of the past few years, with magnificent photographs . . . and a careful text. . . . Most of this last is by Guanella, with Alexiou contributing an introduction on Minoan art and history and Platon eight pages on Zakro. . . . All the important sites have been noticed and are well illustrated, with plans for all the important palaces. It is a pity, however, that there is no plan for the townsites of Gournia. Guanella's contributions are brief, sensible and thorough. She is especially interesting on such new discoveries as Arkhanes. Least satisfactory is Alexiou's introduction. . . . But he makes many good points about Minoan art." R. J. Buck
Class World 62:107 N '68 210w

"[The] account is generally well written, with few highly technical terms. Most exciting is the section on the newly excavated palace at Kato Zakro by Nikolaos Platon who was also the archaeologist." F. M. Lauritsen
Library J 93:2867 Ag '68 140w

Reviewed by Caskie Stinnett

N Y Times Bk R p99 D 1 '68 140w

"This is a beautifully illustrated book but it is something more than a book of illustrations. It belongs with Thames and Hudson's series of archaeological monographs rather than with the coffee-table category. . . . [The] text is well translated. . . . [The photographs] are the crown of the book both as illustrations of the historical text and as presentations of the material remains of Minoan art and architecture and of the scenery of Crete." TLS p1028 S 12 '68 700w

MATTHEWS, HONOR. The primal curse; the myth of Cain and Abel in the theatre. 221p pl $5.95 Schocken

809 Cain. Literature, Comparative 67-11107

"The dramatic use of the Cain and Abel story—explicitly in dramatic narrative and allusion, or implicitly as a mythic pattern—serves here as a touchstone for Matthews' interest in the religious thematic problems of murder, guilt, and justice in an earlier God oriented universe as compared to the absurdist world we face today." (Choice) Index of names and subjects.

"The scope is wide and intelligent—from the Renaissance world of Shakespeare, Kyd, Chapman, Middleton, Webster, and Ford to the modern world of Ibsen, Strindberg, Sartre, Beckett, Genêt, Brecht, Arden, Pinter, Albee, and Ionesco. Matthews' books are especially useful for undergraduates as she has an engaging style, a central focus that is stressed clearly but not distorted, and a copious use of relevant quotations. . . . Highly recommended for all collections." Choice 5:214 Ap '68 180w

"The scope of [Miss Matthews'] study is limited, but her philosophic analysis is far-reaching. She contributes striking insights into the worlds which produced Renaissance revenge tragedy, our period's theater of the absurd, and much which lies between the two. Both the student of the theater and the cultural historian will find this perceptive and persuasive book valuable. Primarily for university libraries." Robert Regan
Library J 92:2175 Je 1 '67 180w

MATTHEWS, STANLEY G. The night pastors. 224p $4.95 Hawthorn bks.

253 Clergy. Pastoral work 67-15555

In ten separate chapters the author describes the lives and careers of ten clergymen "who work through the night among prostitutes, dope addicts, attempted suicides, alcoholics, and others." (Library J)

"In rather conventional, somewhat slangy vignettes of [the pastors'] lives and careers, Matthews opens a window on a form of ministry which has taken on urgency in our night-people age." Christian Century 84:595 My 3 '67 70w

"Each of the ten reports follows largely the same pattern of frenetic night, but each is interesting, some moving. However, the book is too heavily anecdotal to be impressive. Although some effort is made to indicate the roots of these clergymen in scholars such as Tillich and Bonhoeffer, this book is stronger as a document of ecclesiastically initiated social work." Dennis Ribbens
Library J 92:1015 Mr 1 '67 160w

MATTHEWS, WILLIAM H. The story of the earth, by William H. Matthews III; il. by John E. Alexander. 124p $3.95; lib bdg $3.79 Harvey house

551 Geology—Juvenile literature. Earth—Juvenile literature 67-16904

An "introductory geology book. Covered are minerals, rocks, volcanoes, earthquakes, mountains, erosion, and the geologic calendar. [Glossary. Bibliography. Index.] Grades five to seven." (Library J)

"A useful overview. . . . I say 'useful' because [the author] does more than tell a few facts. He describes ways that readers can make simple observations for themselves, as in testing minerals for hardness or studying their color to identify what may turn up on a hike. Land and rock formations that might be seen on an outing are explained in ways that help the reader understand what he encounters. And all of this is neatly tied together into a coherent profile of earth. Well-chosen illustrations help tell the story." R. C. Cowen
Christian Science Monitor pB10 My 2 '68 90w

"The material is presented simply, the volume is easy to handle, and the entire package makes a satisfactory addition to the growing collection of books in this field for young readers." E. F. Graves
Library J 93:2541 Je 15 '68 60w

MATTHEWS, WILLIAM H. Wonders of fossils [by] William H. Matthews, III. 64p il $3.25; lib bdg $2.99 Dodd

560 Fossils—Juvenile literature 68-13600

The account is divided "into three basic sections: the formation of fossils, their physical characteristics, and fossil collecting as a hobby. [Bibliography. Index.] Grades four to six." (Library J)

"A workmanlike handbook for grade-school enthusiasts. Matthews offers them such theoretical tools as a clearly-charted geological time scale, as well as excellent practical advice for fossil-hunters, including pictures of useful equipment." M. L. Birmingham

Commonweal 88:308 My 24 '68 40w

"Whereas the first and last parts are written in rather general terms for readers who have little or no previous knowledge of the subject, the middle section abounds with detailed descriptions of major plant and animal fossils; numerous photographs and drawings clarify their distinguishing features. . . . Should be considered only if additional, very brief, supplementary material is needed." M. J. Shapiro

Library J 93:2114 My 15 '68 130w

MATUSOW, ALLEN J. Farm policies and politics in the Truman years. 267p $7.50 Harvard univ. press

338.9 Agriculture and state. Agriculture—Economic aspects—U.S. U.S.—Politics and government—1945— 67-12101

"This study [by a professor of history at Rice University] analyzes the assumptions and priorities of the administration's responses to the postwar European famine, the Korean War, domestic concerns over surplus-inflation-depression, and the 1948 and 1952 presidential campaigns." (Am Hist R) Index.

"This book reviews the major agricultural policy decisions of the Truman administration in terms of their relationship to the problems and politics of postwar agriculture. . . . Wide ranging and well written. . . . the study's focus, if presumably presidential, centers on the Department of Agriculture. . . . [and] provides real insights into the formulation and development of agricultural domestic and foreign policy. Its weaknesses stem from Professor Matusow's descriptive, noninterpretive approach, his failure to relate departmental decisions either to presidential decision making or congressional politics or to ask basic questions about Truman's role and the factors explaining the changed climate of domestic politics, and, most importantly, to the absence of a concluding chapter. The resulting account is both illuminating and frustrating. . . . [but] imperative for the student of postwar American politics." Athan Theoharis

Am Hist R 73:259 O '67 410w

"The study here presented is disappointing. It is readable and interesting, but too highly personalized and too unanalytical. . . . The real issues do not come into clear focus, nor is there an adequate analytical basis for the judgments so freely expressed or implied. . . . Inadequate emphasis is given to the truly remarkable performance under the Marshall Plan [and] the Brannan Plan is given undue prestige. . . . [The book] will prove interesting reading for those sufficiently familiar with the struggles of that period to fill in the gaps." M. R. Benedict

Ann Am Acad 374:198 N '67 440w

Choice 5:118 Mr '68 240w

"Matusow's well-written volume rests upon a broad base of published and unpublished sources. It reveals that the Truman Library is not a 'sentimental mausoleum.' [and] demonstrates that for agricultural policy at least the National Archives is an even more important research center. Matusow deals chiefly with Truman's first term. . . . [His] appraisal of the Truman administration avoids the extravagant praise of Truman that developed during the Eisenhower years but also shuns the harsh criticism that one finds in some of the recent writing. . . . Matusow hoped to illuminate 'the larger character of the Truman Administration' and has done so." R. S. Kirkendall

J Am Hist 54:717 D '67 280w

MAUD, RALPH. ed. The notebooks of Dylan Thomas. See Thomas, D.

MAUGHAM, ROBIN. The second window; a novel. 403p $6.95 McGraw

68-20055

While exploring his new house, George Bristowe discovered a hidden bedroom furnished like a prison cell and in it . . . the diary of the last tenant of the house, the late journalist and novelist Martin Yorke, written during months of self-imprisonment. . . . One by one, those whom Martin Yorke believes he has failed are investigated. Ambrose, a soldier he had not rescued from a burning tank, Sandra, his neurotic mistress who ends in the asylum she dreaded, Fletcher, an Englishman-turned-Buddhist-hermit, who committed suicide after Yorke had pitilessly probed his motives. . . . As his diary ends, Martin Yorke determines to seek atonement." (Best Sell)

"[In this] absorbing and compelling novel . . . Lord Maugham has written an engrossing character study of one man and guilt. . . . Every person, every locale are fully realized as Yorke's course is charted in his ledger. [Yorke's fate] is explained in the third part of the novel with the arrival of Yorke's sister at Bristowe's house. If this third section is slightly anti-climactic, it is necessary thematically for the conclusion of what must be called a very fine work of fiction by a gifted storyteller." N. J. Loprete

Best Sell 28:261 O 1 '68 460w

Reviewed by Pamela Marsh

Christian Science Monitor p11 O 10 '68 180w

Reviewed by Robert Johnson

Library J 93:3800 O 15 '68 100w

"The main character in Robin Maugham's new novel is dead before it starts, and I'm afraid there is only fitful life in its overlong and uneven narrative. . . . The central incident is a gross improbability in which Yorke finds a 13-year-old girl in Kenya being hired out by a junkie grandmother. . . . [Yorke] has an affair with the girl, gets quite involved in fact, and in spite of all the poignancy of description you simply don't believe a word of it. Mr Maugham is a fine story-teller who has an admirable, unobtrusive trick of style, but this time it's wasted in emotional melodrama. The book keeps threatening to be good, sustains hope that it will be, but it just takes you for a ride." David Haworth

New Statesman 76:468 O 11 '68 180w

Reviewed by Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p54 N 3 '68 240w

"As you examine the complex and sometimes extenuating circumstances surrounding each of his transgressions, you may wonder whether Martin Yorke is all that unspeakable. And here, I think, is where Maugham seems to have missed the boat, for Yorke comes off much less a bastard than a bore. Although . . . Maugham has painted a disturbingly vivid portrait of a derailed personality, any author . . . runs a considerable risk when he dresses his principal character in a hair shirt for 400 pages. Maugham took the chance and almost made it. . . . Still, the book offers many worthwhile moments. . . . In short, there's not much wrong with The Second Window that couldn't have been righted by exorcising the dreary specter of auto-damnation that nags its way relentlessly through an otherwise forceful and absorbing character study." Charles Miller

Sat R 51:38 S 21 '68 700w

TLS p1301 N 21 '68 260w

MAURIAC, FRANÇOIS. The holy terror; drawings by Ingrid Fetz [tr. by Anne Carter]. 63p $3.95 Funk

67-20639

"Mademoiselle Thibaud, en route to her new position as a governess, learns that her charge is, indeed, a holy terror. Utterly spoiled by the grownups who cater to his every whim, Ernest at ten is capricious, sulky, and bad-tempered, alternately whining or bullying until he gets his way. After a dismal initiation, the governess orders the entire family to their country house; then, left alone with the terror, she tames him by firmness, tact, and a resolute refusal to be intimidated." (Sat R) Originally published in France in 1961. "Grades five to six." (Library J)

Reviewed by M. L. Birmingham

Commonweal 87:177 N 10 '67 30w

Horn Bk 44:67 F '68 180w

"[This is] the first translation to be published in America of Mauriac's short study of a boy and the governess who rescues him from the extreme misery of growing up surrounded by adults who compete for the opportunity to cater to his unreasonable wishes. . . . The biting perceptions of the story are likely to be lost on most American children, who, seeing spoiled Ernest growing up in a very alien context, will find him more grotesque than realistic. The idea, for instance, of a boy demanding and getting a partridge out of season will have little meaning, and even the structure of the household in which the governess gains control is far removed from the normal American experience." E. S. Cullen

MAURICE, FRANÇOIS—Continued

Library J 93:1313 Mr 15 '68 160w

"The distinguished author extracts the maximum humor from [a] bizarre situation, in which the adults are absurd and malicious while the child has enough sense to respond to the judicious application of firmness and kindness. Ernest is not a completely reformed character at the end of the tale, but he shows possibilities of becoming more tolerable. Ingrid Fetz's illustrations show these events taking place in provincial France about 60 years ago, and also succeed in arousing some sympathy for a spirited but unhappy boy." Alleen Pippett
N Y Times Bk R p60 N 19 '67 190w

"Both the theme and the writing are more suitable for adults than for children, as is the author's point of view. The story will probably not be appreciated by readers younger than 11 or 12." Zena Sutherland
Sat R 50:47 N 11 '67 110w

MAUROIS, ANDRÉ. Illusions. (Brookhaven nat. laboratory. George B. Pegram lectures) 101p $4.95 Columbia univ. press

848

68-29043

The aim of these lectures, Maurois says, is to show that the interplay between appearance and reality "embraces all the activities of the human mind. . . . We shall have to determine the part played by illusions in the life of man, to what extent they are dangerous, and whether on the contrary they are not, in certain cases, salutary. In our opening lecture we shall examine the nature of illusions, taking as examples some of the illusions of the senses and of the sentiments; in the second lecture, the illusions of intelligence, and at that point we shall seek to define the role that science may play in dissipating, in part, these illusions; in our third and final lecture we shall study those voluntary illusions known as the fine arts." (p. 1) The lectures were delivered after Maurois' death by Jacques Barzun who has edited them for the press.

"Maurois proves himself an uncommon artist and illustrates his own thesis by the classical skill with which he has handled a difficult subject, making [the book] a pleasure to read. . . . These three lectures do not say the last word on appearance and reality or on their relation to one another. But they ask many useful questions and make a contribution to our awareness of the ultimate answers." P. J. Henniker-Heaton
Christian Science Monitor p11 O 23 '68

750w

"[Maurois] sees science as a method of removing harmful illusions which man projects into nature. But, in art, illusion is deliberately cultivated and serves properly to refresh man for his labors in the world of fact. The book is recommended for larger academic and public libraries." T. M. Bogie
Library J 93:3011 S 1 '68 150w

MAW, BA. See Ba Maw

MAXWELL, GAVIN. Seals of the world. 153p il col il $6.95 Houghton

599.7 Seals (Animals). Walruses 68-11053

"Begins with general characteristics of the Pinnipedia, the order of mammals which includes the seals, the sea lions, and the walrus, and discusses in general the effects of human activities on the group. There follows a separate description for each of the 32 contemporary species, which usually includes information on distribution, population, appearance, habitat, habits, seasonal movements, reproduction and growth, and the relationship of man's activities to the group. Twenty-eight of the species are included in the illustrations." (Choice)

"Maxwell, whose Ring of Bright Water [BRD 1961] made the otter an imaginary pet in thousands of American households, has performed an exemplary and entertaining task in the writing of his new book, the second volume in the World Wildlife Series. . . . In his terse and lively manner the author describes the habitat and present population of each species. . . . and then comes the heart of the matter, what has happened to the species in its relation to man. This is a bloody story with infinite variations. . . . Observant and authoritative, Mr. Maxwell is most entertaining in his account of the walruses. . . . He is equally explicit about the elephant seals, with their mammoth courage, the leopard seal, the playful seal pups, and the baritone sea lions." Edward Weeks

Atlantic 222:91 Ag '68 360w
Choice 5:1160 N '68 80w

"Every species is described and 28 are shown in photographs in this serious and charming work of reference. . . . This is not an intimate book like Gavin Maxwell's famous account of his otters, but it is a readable and yet detailed volume, excellent for library or enthusiast." Philip Morrison
Sci Am 219:129 D '68 230w

MAY, CHARLES PAUL. Chile; progress on trial. 224p il $3.50; lib bdg $3.30 Nelson

918.3 Chile—Juvenile literature 68-14951

Historical background is offered in addition to a treatment of present progress and development. Chronology. Bibliography. Index. "Grades six to nine." (Library J)

"The treatment of Chile is broad and informative and will be a revelation for most young readers. . . . The information on food and drink in Chile leaves something to be desired. . . . [This volume] should find a place in the high school collection." Best Sell 28:112 Je 1 '68 60w [YA]

"[This] would be an adequate supplement to young people's collections because of the scarcity of information on this country. [The] book contains some valuable information on early Chilean Indians, but is weak on the Spanish Conquest. The idea that the conquistadores were nothing more than greedy opportunists has been generally discounted by scholars, and it is time that this interpretation showed up in juvenile books. Modern Chile is presented in clear photographs and an uneven text which ranges from such trivia as the latest colors in lipsticks to a well written examination of the Chilean educational system. Use of the excellent bibliography would help to make up for many of the faults in the text." J. L. Buelna
Library J 93:13320 S 15 '68 160w

MAY, CHARLES PAUL. Great cities of Canada. 192p il $4.50 Abelard-Schuman

917.1 Cities and towns—Canada—Juvenile literature 67-18118

The author has written profiles of seventeen Canadian cities "within the framework of history, commerce, education, religion and politics." (Publisher's note) Chronology. Bibliography. Index. "Grades five to eight." (Library J)

"An interesting and well-written book, a valuable asset for any Junior or Senior High School student." Pat Boozer
Best Sell 27:467 Mr 1 '68 150w [YA]

"This book is poorly written, poorly organized, and the author shows little real knowledge and less understanding of the subject. Information that should be included is omitted. . . . while much that is irrelevant has crept in. Meaningless comparisons are drawn. . . . There is considerable writing down. . . . and moralizing. . . . So much attention is paid to social problems that alcoholism, drug addiction, etc. appear to be peculiarly Canadian problems, while stress is laid on supposed religious differences to the point of becoming offensive. Certain inaccuracies are apparent. . . . and poorly constructed sentences lead to misinterpretation. . . . At best, this gives a questionable view of the Canadian scene, and at worst it is definitely distorted." Shirley Ellison
Library J 93:1325 Mr 15 '68 270w

MAY, ERNEST R. American imperialism; a speculative essay. 239p $5.95 Atheneum pubs.

973.8 U.S.—History. U.S.—Foreign relations. Imperialism 68-12544

The author of Imperial Democracy; the Emergence of America as a Great Power (BRD 1962) endeavors to set forth a synthetic interpretation which will "account for the shift in attitude among a comparatively few American leaders of public opinion which enabled the United States during 1898-99 to deny its anti-imperialist tradition and become a colonial power through seizure of the Philippines, Cuba, and Puerto Rico and the annexation of Hawaii. . . . May's book . . . [discusses] the influence on Americans of European attitudes and actions. Utilizing public opinion research concepts, [he] identifies the leading opinion-makers and endeavors to show how they affected the foreign policy establishment." (Sat R) Index.

"[May] only deals 'with imperialism narrowly defined as direct territorial acquisition.' . . . The author of a significant narrative work on this subject. . . . May now attempts to apply 'recent social science findings' to divine who shaped opinion on American foreign policy in the 1890s. . . . Social scientists and historians will question whether findings on the mass electorate of the 1950s can be projected back to the 1890s, even with the wise qualifications May attempts to interject. . . . [However] the central question of American imperialism is how the McKinley Administration managed to shape its policies from day to day until it had committed the nation to annexing the Philippines and civilizing China. This May's book cannot answer. . . . The men who made the decisions are never discussed; the connection between public opinion and decision-making is never pointed out. American imperialism thus becomes a mere manifestation of public opinion, not the result of government policy, and defined in that way the problem is badly confused." Walter LaFeber

Book World p18 S 8 '68 800w

Reviewed by Geoffrey Blodgett

J Am Hist 55:667 D '68 500w

"[May] does not offer definitive answers to questions raised about the reasons for involvement with, and the acquisition of, foreign territories, but instead provides a competent review of pertinent literature, outlines potential research techniques, and suggests needed research. . . . [This] is a provocative, well-written account which is highly recommended for anyone concerned with current involvements, American history, and certain areas of political science." E. K. Welsch

Library J 93:2667 J1 '68 130w

Reviewed by W. R. Kintner

Sat R 51:44 Ag 24 '68 1050w

MAY, ERNEST R., ed. Anxiety and affluence: 1945-1965. 404p $4.95; pa $2.95 McGraw

973 U.S.—History—1945-1953. U.S.—History—1953-1961. U.S.—Foreign relations 66-14810

A "collection of source materials ranging from the text of the Truman Doctrine and the Marshall Plan to 'Herblock on the Red Scare,' [with] several excerpts from pertinent Supreme Court briefs. [Introductions] precede each selection and include relevant bibliographical data." (Choice)

"The strong point is May's (Harvard) tightly written introductions. . . . Recommended for college American history survey sections, upper division courses in recent America, and, perhaps most important, for libraries that cannot ever hope to purchase the primary sources from which these selections were taken. While there are scores of books that consist entirely of documents and readings, none devote 404 pages to this period."

Choice 4:473 Je '67 120w

"Mainly designed for college students, [this volume] can be profitably used in advanced high school courses in American history."

Social Studies 58:336 D '67 50w

MAY, JULIAN. Horses, how they came to be; il. by Lorence F. Bjorklund. unsp lib bdg $3.75 Holiday

599.7 Horses—Juvenile literature 68-2126
"The story of equine evolution, beginning with eohippus, the tiny prehistoric 'dawn horse.' . . . Ages six to nine." (Commonweal)

"Text and pictures are clear, harmonious, nicely focused. The narrative suggests, also, how human history is related to the history of this valued beast." M. L. Birmingham

Commonweal 88:307 My 24 '68 40w

"Bjorklund's interesting and frequently dramatic pencil drawings are the principal attraction of [this book]. . . . Sentences are short and the vocabulary is as simple as the subject permits. Considering the perennial demand for material on horses, this may well fill a need for wobbly third-grade readers." Janet French

Library J 93:2107 My 15 '68 150w

MAY, JULIAN. They lived in the ice age; il. by Jean Zallinger. unsp lib bdg $3.75 Holiday 551.7 Glacial epoch—Juvenile literature

67-8641

"This beginning science book touches on the probable origin, duration, and range of the four Ice Ages. The text then . . . considers their effects on prehistoric animals and men, particularly with regard to the so-called Bering Sea bridge and the subsequent migrations between Asia and North America. Glacial geology, present-day glaciation, and a possible recurrence of the ice age carry the story from the ancient past into the future. . . . Grades one to three." (Library J)

"This is a large conceptual order for a primary science book and the result is fragmentary and confusing. Soft crayon illustrations in red and blue appear on every page; they are uneven in quality and lacking in vigor. Particularly unfortunate is the ice-age family pictured in little fur miniskirts." Janet French

Library J 92:4605 D 15 '67 150w

"Softly drawn, precise illustrations add to the attractiveness and the utility of this excellent introduction to a fascinating period in prehistory. The dignified format, spaced print, and crisp, clear writing are eminently suitable for the young audience." Zena Sutherland

Sat R 50:42 N 11 '67 80w

MAYER, ALBERT. The urgent future: people, housing, city, region. 184p il maps $16.50 McGraw 711 City planning. Regional planning

66-26580

"The future that Albert Mayer urges us to look at is one of overpopulation and intense urbanization. The solutions he recommends are decentralization, dispersal of the population into sub-cities, and regional complexes. He urges that full use be made of the possibilities in the recent Model Cities Act and that public interest groups participate in the planning and rehabilitation process." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by C. S. Ascher

Ann Am Acad 376:202 Mr '68 480w

"This book by a veteran in housing and planning is mighty good. . . . Mayer takes only positive and creative remedies under counsel; and it is urgent reading indeed to follow through his closely reasoned suggestions for a program. . . . It is in his consideration of regions that [he] is at his best. . . . [The book] is hard reading because of the special Mayerese language and style which a good editor could have helped him to translate a bit. But it is thoroughly worth sticking with. . . . Mayer is fully involved with all the refractory details of the day; his writing carries an air of tough realism that builds confidence and breeds will. For, praise the Lord, this is an action book." Douglas Haskell

Arch Forum 128:136 Ja-F '68 1600w

"[The author's] recommendations are already the current trend. The examples of successful decentralization—London, Paris, Zurich, Stockholm—are all foreign cities with rich histories and environments quite different from those of the United States. . . . Although the book is addressed to planners it should be of general interest." Sophie Mitrisin

Library J 92:4170 N 15 '67 140w

Reviewed by J. R. Lowe

Sat R 51:48 Ap 13 '68 370w

MAYER, ARNO J. Politics and diplomacy of peacemaking; containment and counterrevolution at Versailles, 1918-1919. 918p $15 Knopf

940.3 Versailles. Treaty of, 1919. History. Modern—20th century. European War, 1914-1918—Influence and results 67-18598

This analysis of the movements influencing the decisions made at the Paris Peace conference following World War I is a sequel to the author's Political Origins of the New Diplomacy (BRD 1960). The author describes the ideological conflicts in Europe, Russia and the United States. It is his contention that "the end of World War I 'intersected' with the opening of a universal international civil war which still goes on." (Christian Science Monitor) Bibliography. Index.

MAYER, A. J.—Continued

Reviewed by C. L. Hohl
America 118:615 My 4 '68 100w

Reviewed by W. T. Perkins
Am Pol Sci R 62:1014 S '68 600w
Choice 5:539 Je '68 200w

"Dr. Mayer's ambitious book will, one may assume, be as widely discussed as was Professor Sidney Fay's work some three decades ago: The Origins of World War I [BRD 1928]. Dr. Mayer's work is fascinating in its delineation of the political culture of the period, in its grasp of the social movements which influenced the Big Four. One may disagree with some of his interpretations, but one must also be grateful for his detailed descriptions of the underlying structure of a Europe whose leaders failed so badly to understand what they were doing." Arnold Beichman

Christian Science Monitor p13 Ja 25 '68 1200w

"Every student of the 1919 peace settlement will have to read this massive study... [which] will oblige historians to revise their thinking about the drafting of the Versailles Treaty under threat of revolution, strikes, and chaos in eastern Europe. Through this book we can better understand the pitfalls and distractions which beset the Paris peacemakers. It is also a great mine of information on the problems of peacemaking at that time. Unfortunately, the narrative should have been tightened. [Nevertheless] this book is recommended for all large collections." Keith Eubank

Library J 92:4512 D 15 '67 230w

"Mayer has given the story [of Wilson's failure] a fresh twist. Whereas previous writers have explained Wilson's failure by his weakness or lack of understanding, Mr. Mayer has linked it to his other, Russian, theme, Anti-Bolshevism, he argues, was Wilson's undoing. Obsession with the Communist peril eclipsed the idealism which had welcomed the Fourteen Points, and Wilson was taken prisoner by the reactionary forces throughout Europe. The merit of Mr. Mayer's book is to have a thesis... even though the demonstration is conducted at excessive length... [However,] the evidence [for his thesis] has to be forced into a preordained frame or, when this proves inadequate, be ignored altogether. The Soviet part of the story... is told only from the Western side. The Russians have never revealed their confidential material." A. J. P. Taylor

N Y Rev of Books 10:13 F 1 '68 2800w

"[This book] stands out as a monument of erudition, industry and masterly organization... Mayer, professor of history at Princeton, has combined an account of the exchanges between the Big Four—Woodrow Wilson, Lloyd George, Georges Clemenceau, Vittorio Emanuele Orlando—and their assistants with a detailed analysis of the impact of public opinion and the fascinating interplay of domestic and foreign policy in the various countries concerned... [But] no single historian can be equally at home in the internal affairs of a dozen countries. The treatment accorded in this volume to Germany, Hungary and Russia is not quite equal to the analysis of American, French and British politics, which the author clearly studied in greater depth. Mr. Mayer appears to be deeply, though not uncritically, committed to what may broadly be called the cause of revolution." Walter Laqueur

N Y Times Bk R p3 F 11 '68 1700w

New Yorker 44:154 Mr 9 '68 110w

MAYER, MARTIN. Emory Buckner; with an introd. by John M. Harlan; pub. under the auspices of the William Nelson Cromwell Foundation. 304p il $7.95 Harper

B or 92 Buckner, Emory Roy 68-15965

This biography covers Buckner's "career from struggling young lawyer to assistant United States attorney and then as one of the assistant district attorneys of New York County, followed by his appointment as counsel for the Aldermanic police investigation and later as United States attorney in the 1920's." (Library J) Index.

"On first sight of the name-title of this biography, one says 'Who was he?' Within a few moments, one realizes that this biography... was a necessity, because the name should not be forgotten, since the actions of the man and the events in which he participated are well known and well remembered. [Buckner's primary significance is not in the spectacular aspects of his career, but in the permanent effects he achieved in the practice of law... An excellent piece of work, but, directed only to lawyers and written in a colorless style comfortable to lawyers. The perceptive introduction by Justice Harlan is so succinctly well done that the detailed biography which follows is almost superfluous." C. J. Maguire

Best Sell 28:75 My 15 '68 600w

"The fascinating cases Mr. Buckner handled were part and parcel of the national New York scene—colorful, dramatic, exciting and sometimes history making... [Mayer] tells Mr. Buckner's story well; it reflects the excitement and tension of the legal and personal problems Mr. Buckner had to resolve. His description of his subject's activities and thoughts in managing a leading Wall Street law firm consisting of many partners and associates and representing highly influential business interests should be of special interest to members of the legal profession. Recommended for law libraries and large public libraries." J. J. Marke

Library J 93:1131 Mr 15 '68 400w

Reviewed by C. E. Wyzanski

N Y Times Bk R p14 S 22 '68 1000w

MAYES, HERBERT R., ed. An editor's treasury; a continuing anthology of prose, verse, and literary curios. 2v $25 Atheneum pubs.

808.88 Literature—Collections 68-26101

This anthology contains material the compiler had selected from his reading over the course of more than forty years. "A professional editor, Mr. Mayes [former president of the McCall Corporation] has included J. Addison Alexander's rhymed lesson in English, 'The Power of Short Words.'... He gives us Beardsley Rumf's 'Statement on the Organization of the United Nations: 1945'... jingles by Ogden Nash, political tracts, excerpts from great speeches, advertising copy—including the complete inspirational text of 'They Laughed When I Sat Down at the Piano.' " (Sat R)

"Mayes has been named 'one of America's most famous editors'. He now writes 'Trade Winds' for the Saturday Review... Bits and pieces of every kind from every literature come tumbling out on [these] pages, page after page, helter-skelter. For example... an epitaph on Oliver Goldsmith (by Samuel Johnson) precedes 'Advantages of Mathematics' by F. G. de Quevedo and a 3-page bit from 'Uncle Tom's Cabin' follows that... There must be some reason for putting all this together so carefully (paper, printing, binding are admirable), but at this particular moment, we cannot find it."

Best Sell 28:349 N 15 '68 360w

"[This is] the first portion of an immense personal anthology. It is planned to consist of six parts of two large volumes each... The range and variety of the present two volumes is enormous... There is no observable pattern... though the index of authors, titles, and sources of selections is full. A book for browsing, it contains something for everyone and will be useful in most libraries—if they can afford it." L. W. Griffin

Library J 94:77 Ja 1 '69 220w

"[This collection] stands up well, all 2,196 pages of it... That is to say, the editor's choices are almost always appetizing. The adjective is justly used, for this enormous collection is a smörgårsbord of literary tidbits. Some may not be to one's taste, but all are worth sampling... Though the gathering embraces many classical selections (in truth, there's a lot of everything), its spirit is contemporary. Mayes likes the lyrics of a number of Broadway shows and pop tunes; they are here... You meet great minds and mediocre ones. You can make acquaintances. Turn them into friends, into intimates, if you will. [This book], like a good host, introduces you and then leaves you alone." Edwin Fadiman

Sat R 51:52 D 7 '68 600w

MAYFIELD, SARA. The constant circle; H. L. Mencken and his friends. 307p $6.50 Delacorte press

B or 92 Mencken, Henry Louis 68-16641

This treatment of the late American satirist and editor of the early twentieth-century magazine, The Smart Set, is a "personal recollection of [Mencken], his marriage and his literary and social relationships. Sara Mayfield, like Sara Haardt, grew up in Montgomery, Ala., where she also knew Zelda Sayre (the future Mrs. Scott Fitzgerald) and Tallulah Bankhead. Her years at Goucher [College] brought her closer to Miss Haardt. After the world-shaking Mencken marriage, Miss Mayfield became a younger 'friend of the family,' and after Miss Haardt died in 1935, she remained on the same footing with Mencken until his death." (N Y Times Bk R) Index.

Reviewed by Maurice Adelman
America 119:571 N 30 '68 80w

"[This] is chiefly a crusading biography of Mencken. This Mencken is only incidentally the corrosive wit, the battling agnostic, the joyous blasphemist. He is the perfect gentleman, respectful of all women. . . . never seen in his cups, generous, compassionate, a faithful husband, a doting son, a dedicated brother. . . . For all that Sara Mayfield says in his favor, Mencken does not wear well. . . . [Miss] Mayfield joins Mencken in belittling all his major contemporaries in the assumption that she is elevating him beyond their reach in doing so. The grand madness of the 1920's comes across superbly in this book but it is appalling to realize that Sara Mayfield still believes in it." J. J. McAleer

Best Sell 28:190 Ag 1 '68 700w

"Previous biographies have suggested the discrepancy between Mencken the myth and Mencken the man, but none has done so with such convincing thoroughness as [this]. . . . Miss Mayfield has gone further into the background and personality of Sara, and into the nature and circumstances of her marriage to Mencken, than anyone has yet done. . . . Miss Mayfield's portrait of F. Scott Fitzgerald, who is given prominence in the book, is written in acid. . . . She goes so far as to credit Fitzgerald's talent to Zelda, showing more than anything else that her partisan biography is blinded at times by her deep loyalties. . . . This Mencken is a useful correction to previous, sometimes hostile, biographies, but he is not the most full-blooded and fallible Mencken biographers will ever give us." R. E. Long

Christian Science Monitor p9 S 23 '68 900w

Reviewed by K. T. Willis
Library J 93:3551 O 1 '68 160w

Reviewed by W. S. Schlamm
Nat R 20:964 S 24 '68 420w

Reviewed by Joseph Epstein
New Repub 159:31 S 14 '68 950w

"Although Miss Mayfield has dipped studiously into the records and letters, she speaks with the special warmth and insight of her own acquaintance with Mencken and with many of those in the 'constant circle' around him. She looks back with an attitude almost as candid and gossipy as that of the Sage of Baltimore himself, and a style that is breezy and colloquial. What emerges is a vivid montage of an era not long gone and yet firmly ended. Most of the personages who created the literary golden age that began in the twenties are here again." W. A. Swanberg

N Y Times Bk R p8 Ag 25 '68 1400w

Reviewed by Granville Hicks
Sat R 51:31 S 7 '68 550w

Time 92:72 Ag 16 '68 100w

MAYHEW, LEON H. Law and equal opportunity; a study of the Massachusetts commission against discrimination. 313p $7.95 Harvard univ. press

301-451 Discrimination in employment. Negroes—Employment. Negroes—Housing. Massachusetts. Commission Against Discrimination. Discrimination in housing 68-14266

A "study of the forces that facilitate, shape, and obstruct the legal implementation of social ideals. . . . Mayhew's analysis focuses on the impact of antidiscrimination law in the state of Massachusetts and the workings of the corresponding administrative agency. The book provides an account of the establishment of the Commission, its policies and practices, and the obstacles it confronted over a seventeen-year period, but in particular from 1959 to 1963. . . . [The study analyzes] actual complaints and how they were settled . . . [and suggests] that the question of how much discrimination can be eliminated through law remains unanswered." (Publisher's note). Index.

"Based on interviews with the M.C.A.D. staff and officials and the persons with whom they deal, and on a detailed examination of virtually all housing and employment complaints filed in the Boston metropolitan area in 1959-60. University of Michigan sociologist Mayhew does a thorough, sophisticated, and judicious analysis of the complaints and of the attitudes of the Commission personnel."

Choice 5:1176 N '68 140w

"[The author's] main thrust is to accentuate how the race-relations law is affected by institutional constraints on social action. In this sense, his study is distinguishable from the great mass of literature on antidiscrimination which suggests how law can change behavior and attitudes. As he points out, the latter studies have relied primarily on the published reports of public commissions. Mr. Mayhew, however, by personal examination of actual cases . . . both successfully and unsuccessfully resolved—was in a better position to permit a 'more critical sociological study of the forces that facilitate, shape and obstruct the legal implementation of social ideals.' A reading of this report indeed bears out his thought. Many of his conclusions . . . deserve study and evaluation. . . . Recommended for law libraries, general university libraries, and large public libraries." J. J. Marke

Library J 93:766 F 15 '68 380w

MAYNARD, H. B., ed. Handbook of business administration. vp $29.50 McGraw

658 Management. Business 66-20719

This collection of articles is divided into seventeen sections, each dealing with a different aspect of management. Chapter bibliographies. Index.

"Constitutes a library in itself. Sections covering organization, planning, marketing, finance, manufacturing, foreign operations, research and development, accounting, human resources, external relations, law, data processing, international operations, statistics, operations research, and other new quantitative tools of management science, make it up-to-date for top and middle managers. Intended primarily for business managers, but much of the material is applicable to managers of any type organization."

Choice 5:34 Mr '68 150w

"Maynard, who already has a fine reputation in the area of management, has edited a work which should be on the bookshelf of every administrator and aspiring administrator. The list of contributors reads like a Who's Who in the business and business education world. The information provided is informative and significant. . . . A detailed index makes this book valuable as a source of information about specific problems. On the other hand, a complete reading should be of considerable help to any manager in his development as an administrator." M. E. Nehlig

Library J 93:987 Mr 1 '68 180w

MAYNARD, OLGA. Children and dance and music. 311p $6.95 Scribner

649 Child study. Dancing—Study and teaching. Music—Study and teaching 67-21335

The author of Enjoying Opera (BRD 1966) and American Modern Dancers (BRD 1965) "is concerned with the child's relationship to the performing arts in his various environments—home, school, community center, and church. She describes specific programs of dance and music education within each of these situations. She draws upon her own experiences as a teacher, those of several of her colleagues, and selected pilot programs of the Contemporary Music Project for Creativity in Music Education." (Library J) Index.

"Maynard demonstrates her rich theater-arts background, her enjoyment and understanding of children, and her commitment to the improvement of American education. Two chapters will be of particular interest to parents, but the entire book should be of enormous value to those who expect to teach, especially in the areas of music, physical education, art, and drama. . . . Recommended for all college libraries."

Choice 5:1015 O '68 160w

"[The] approach is a creative one, emphasizing active involvement on the part of the participants. The responses of the children are fascinating, and both parents and teachers should be stimulated to set up similar programs in their own homes and classrooms." Barbara Henry

MAYNARD, OLGA—Continued

Library J 93:770 F 15 '68 180w

MAYNE, WILLIAM. The battlefield; il. by Mary Russon. 158p $3.75; lib bdg $3.71 Dutton 67-20129

In this story set in Yorkshire, two girls, Debby and Lesley, "explore a dangerous, abandoned area, the old Battlefield, marked by a huge rock, 'sitting by itself among the gorse and juniper and rowan,' crowned with a look-out tower, haunted by strange, shivery legends and a river nearby said to run with blood before a disaster. Heedless of danger, the girls prowls, search and excavate an ancient cannon, and tempt the Fates literally in [the] climax. . . . Ages ten to fourteen." (N Y Times Bk R)

"Once again, as in Earthfasts [BRD 1967], this gifted English writer demonstrates his fresh use of language, his ability to fuse the realistic with the supernatural, his sure touch with the Yorkshire people he knows best. Lesley and Debby are unforgettable. Bright, venturesome, funny, they hold conversations with one another and their elders that are utterly engaging. The dialect may prove a stumbling block for some readers, but, actually, it adds a fillip to a fascinating book." Polly Goodwin
Book World p24 N 19 '67 440w

Reviewed by P. M. Daltry
Christian Science Monitor p7 F 1 '68 180w

Horn Bk 44:179 Ap '68 160w

Reviewed by J. C. Thomson
Library J 93:884 F 15 '68 230w

Reviewed by Naomi Lewis
New Statesman 74:600 N 3 '67 170w

Reviewed by Ivan Sandrof
N Y Times Bk R p42 N 12 '67 170w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland
Sat R 50:46 N 11 '67 160w

"The skill and imaginative power of William Mayne's writing are beyond question and The Battlefield is full of richness; the pity is that there is too much. . . . The account of life at the inn and . . . the girls' daily tasks . . . are deeply satisfying, on many levels. . . . It is when [Debby and Lesley] talk . . . analysing their reactions, preciously describing themselves as 'ornaments' and 'curiosities', . . . that exasperation and disbelief creep in. . . . Though powerful, the story itself is strange, and it is only the compulsive quality of Mr. Mayne's writing which enables us to cling on to belief. . . . [At the climax] belief is shattered at last. . . . Questions swirl in the mind. . . . At every successive plunge back into the story to discover the answers new depths and subtleties of craftsmanship reveal themselves but whether children's patience will hold out long enough to discover them it is hard to say."
TLS p1140 N 30 '67 650w

MAYNE, WILLIAM, ed. William Mayne's book of heroes; stories and poems; il. by Krystyna Turska [Eng title: The Hamish Hamilton book of heroes]. 230p $4.95; lib bdg $4.90 Dutton 398.2 68-16252

"Beginning with an ancient Welsh legend, [this collection] leaps about in time and geography to . . . [bring the reader] tales and poems from every corner of the globe." (Christian Science Monitor) "Ages seven to eleven." (Commonweal)

"Although this contains a handful of old favorites, it is much more than a scissors-and-paste performance, for the editor's personal tastes and enthusiasm, conveyed through the prefatory comments to each selection, make it something of a journey shared with a stimulating and knowledgeable companion. . . . Three of the stories Mayne tells himself, superbly, and his 'Sir Percival' especially stands out as quite the freshest and most original treatment of the Arthurian material since [T. H. White's] The Sword in the Stone [BRD 1939]. Considering how brilliantly and sympathetically he handles this story, one can only speculate on what might result if he could be persuaded to set about a full-scale retelling." Houston Maples

Book World p16 Ag 18 '68 330w

"Many of the selections have been edited or vividly retold by Mr. Mayne himself. His comments on heroism and his colorful background notes on each selection are as intriguing as the stories themselves. Included are such favorites as . . . Hawthorne's 'The Minotaur,' while the collection is enlivened by many lesser-known characters and epics, both legendary and real. Teachers and parents sampling this feast will be eager to share it aloud." M. D. Hamlin
Christian Science Monitor pB8 My 2 '68 140w

Reviewed by M. L. Birmingham
Commonweal 88:304 My 21 '68 70w

Reviewed by C. H. Simonds
Nat R 20:1281 D 17 '68 30w

"Varied and quirkish, as one might expect from its editor. . . . The collection is not limited to the remoter heroes of ballads, romances or sagas. It includes Tennyson's 'The Revenge' and Macaulay's 'Horatius'. Mr. Mayne has given lucid and interesting notes on the sources of his material, notes that for once children may be expected to understand and profit from, which is rare enough."

TLS p1142 N 30 '67 250w

MAYO, CHARLES W. Mayo: the story of my family and my career. 351p pl $6.95 Doubleday
B or 92 Mayo family. Surgeons 68-22502

A noted surgeon and grandson of the founder of the Mayo Clinic "writes about his family and friends, their triumphs and tragedies; he . . . expresses his opinions, professional and personal; and he describes his own achievements." (Publisher's note)

"The real drama of [Mayo's] life begins with his training period as surgeon. His accounts of the many interesting people who took part in this drama keep the interest of readers alive. Such episodes as his meeting Mussolini, and King Ibn Saud, are unforgettable passages revealing his sense of humor. This fascinating account of a distinguished surgeon and an interesting person who enjoyed life is recommended for both professionals and laymen." C. K. Stout
Library J 93:3551 O 1 '68 200w

"[This book] tells an intimate personal story. . . . Its striking characteristic is an astonishing candor—about family quarrels and scandals, . . . financial affairs, the uncertainties of surgery and the fallibility of surgeons and their disagreements. . . . Dr. Mayo is no medical historian given to checking facts in documentary sources; he is content to record his memories of people and events. He repeats some family legends that have been proven false or inaccurate. . . . The least engaging part of Dr. Mayo's story . . . deals often at too great length, with his activities in several sorts of public service. . . . [But this] is a memorable self-portrait."
Helen Clapesatt

N Y Times Bk R p48 O 27 '68 950w

"Here is an old man talking—opinionated, disjointed, long-winded, and yet in the end endearing. . . . Without benefit of ghost or literary pretension, 'Chuck' Mayo tells us the story of his life. It is a touching and peculiarly American story, for, as one skips over Dr. Mayo's accounts of controversies in rectal surgery, there emerges an upper-middle-class life sadder than anything imagined by O'Hara, Marquand, or Cozzens." Michael Halberstam
Sat R 51:38 O 26 '68 850w

MAYS, DAVID JOHN, ed. The letters and papers of Edmund Pendleton, 1734-1803. 2v. See Pendleton. E.

MAZO, EARL. Nixon; a political portrait [by] Earl Mazo and Stephen Hess. 326p $6.95 Harper

B or 92 Nixon, Richard Milhous 68-31363

"Earl Mazo, a journalist whose specialty is national politics, and Stephen Hess, fellow at the Institute of Politics, John F. Kennedy School of Government, Harvard University . . . provide a close look at [Nixon's] career to date [in this updating of Mazo's earlier biography, Richard Nixon: A Political and Personal Portrait, BRD 1959]." (Library J) Index.

"[The authors'] treatment is mainly favorable but they strive to be fair and dispassionate . . . [Included is] an interview with Mr. Nixon conducted by the authors in May 1968 in which he delineated his views on the Vietnam War, Communism, NATO, De Gaulle, and the presidency, among other matters. The authors have not attempted an exhaustive survey but have selected the most noteworthy events and treated them in detail. The book is well arranged and holds the reader's interest." T. E. Smith

Library J 93:2854 Ag '68 170w

"[The authors] range far and wide over Nixon's checkered career . . . yet what emerges is not a man with feelings and beliefs, but an actor upon the stage of history. . . . [Nixon] has made a decent record on civil rights and foreign aid, but . . . Mazo and Hess barely mention them. The book gives no clue that Nixon has pondered the problems of war and peace, urbanization, the restlessness of the young, social justice in a technological society. . . . There is, of course, an admirable side to Richard Nixon, on which [the authors] dwell at length. . . . [Eight new chapters] chronicle the years since Nixon emerged from Eisenhower's shadow. . . . Perhaps the searchers for the real Richard Nixon will be dissatisfied with [this] work . . . [but biography] is an art form profoundly limited by its subject." Milton Viorst

N Y Times Bk R p3 Ag 4 '68 1250w

MAZOR, JULIAN. Washington and Baltimore; stories. 212p $4.95 Knopf

68-14883

A collection of short stories set in two American cities. "Four of the six stories . . . form a unit. John Lionel is the protagonist in all of them: aged ten in 'The Boy Who Used Foul Language,' eighteen in 'Rock Creek,' and an adult in the two title stories." (Sat R) Washington, Baltimore, Rock Creek and The Boy Who Used Foul Language were first published in The New Yorker; Mary Jane appeared previously in Shenandoah.

Reviewed by F. L. Ryan
Best Sell 28:134 Je 15 '68 600w

Reviewed by Lyon Phelps
Christian Science Monitor p7 Je 20 '68 500w

Reviewed by Robert Coles
Commonweal 89:351 D 6 '68 100w

"Good storytelling, warm characterization, and skillful writing mark Mr. Mazor's first book. . . . Writing sympathetically and realistically of the subtle interplay of relationships between men, he is at his best in his descriptions of encounters between Negroes and whites. And it is a pleasure to read of such encounters devoid of the violence and racism prevalent in much writing today; instead, in all these stories there is an underlying sense of perplexity that there should be any racial problem at all. The prize of the six is 'The Boy Who Used Foul Language,' an intensely warm story of a misunderstood little boy fighting his way to adulthood. The book is recommended for university and large public library collections." C. A. Hough

Library J 93:2260 Je 1 '68 100w

Reviewed by Janet Strothman
Library J 93:2739 J1 '68 140w [YA]

"Mazor skillfully plumbs the inner tickings and pathways of a human menagerie numbering ex-pugilists, rebellious schoolboys, soldiers, maids, young marrieds [and] dime-store baseball players. . . . These are stories of conflict and exploitation, often pitting black man against white. There are multiple side contests: husband vs. wife, North vs. South, schoolboy vs. teacher, father vs. son, sickness vs. health. . . . Mazor's good ear, observing eye and easy prose make each of his stories worthwhile. . . . He can write; his prose says simply that he cares about people, places and things." L. L. King

N Y Times Bk R p36 Je 30 '68 800w

"John Lionel's encounters with Negroes are central to the stories, encounters refreshingly free of complexity and issues and 'significance.' . . . In 'Washington' and 'Baltimore' the Negroes seem sentimentalized, almost anachronistic refugees from those happy Harlem novels of the Thirties. I do not mean that Mr. Mazor sentimentalizes them any more than he does the Negro maid in 'The Boy Who Used Foul Language' or the black man who teaches the white boy how to box in 'Rock Creek.' But the last two evoke a time when relationships seemed and probably were easier and simpler, when nagging questions of guilt and justice did not haunt every human connection. . . . No problems, however, mar 'Jack Kelsey's All-Stars, 1941.' Mr. Mazor's rendering of adolescence is thoroughly conventional . . . [but] it is also the subject for which Mr. Mazor's personal voice, his honesty and lack of contrivance, are ideally suited." Barry Gross

Sat R 51:26 Ag 17 '68 850w

MAZRUI, ALI A. Towards a pax Africana; a study of ideology and ambition. 287p $5.95 Univ. of Chicago press

320.158 Nationalism. Africa—Politics

67-12232

The author discusses the question of who is going to keep the peace in Africa, now that the European order is at an end. "The nature of the problem was brought into . . . focus by events in the Congo since 1960, and again in 1965 by the action of Ian Smith in Rhodesia. If Africa had possessed the military power to act as her own policeman, these are . . . the events which could have been dealt with, without interference from outside the continent. That is what the concept of Pax Africana is about, and it is tied to many other complex concepts and questions: the idea of self-government and the problem of who that 'self' is and exactly what constitutes an African, and the differences between Africa north and south of the Sahara." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"This is a most welcome elaboration and analysis of current African political thought by an African political scientist. Mazrui redefines some older concepts as an African sees them and presents a rationale for such new concepts as 'racial sovereignty' and 'continental jurisdiction.' . . . Drawing upon a wide range of European, Asian, and American as well as African sources, Mazrui has produced a thoughtful and stimulating book that should be widely read and provoke much discussion." Vernon McKay

Am Hist R 73:557 D '67 360w

Reviewed by H. J. Spiro

Am Pol Sci R 62:258 Mr '68 600w

"This is the first book to achieve what many have attempted: a critical, theoretical, and comprehensive analysis of the philosophy underlying intra-African and extra-African international politics. . . . The book's conceptual tool kit is applied most dexterously to such African and other international events, as . . . the East African mutinies, India's take-over of Goa, the projected liberation of remaining colonies, apartheid, and Negro movements in the United States. Since completion of the manuscript, many new crises—unanticipated by most Africanists—have occurred on the continent. Each of these, rather than contradicting Professor Mazrui's analysis, can be brilliantly illuminated and explained through application of his categories. This is the best book on African international politics available today." H. J. Spiro

Ann Am Acad 374:240 N '67 550w

Choice 4:1177 D '67 130w

Reviewed by Louis Barron

Library J 92:2165 Je 1 '67 150w

Reviewed by A. R. Zolberg

Pol Sci Q 83:489 S '68 320w

"Born in Kenya, Professor Mazrui holds a chair at Makerere University College, Uganda. . . . It is necessary to understand the importance of race—the importance of 'Africanness'—if we are to understand independent black Africa, and Professor Mazrui's analysis is helpful. Also helpful is the fact that he points—albeit cautiously—to the weaknesses which stand in the way of the 'triumph of continental jurisdiction' which the Pax Africana represents. . . . The author covers a good deal of ground. He rightly gives a central place to the concept of non-alignment. . . . He discusses the African relationship with the European Economic Community. He looks at the communists' efforts to influence Africa, and assesses them realistically. . . . He writes with insight and is well worth reading."

TLS p331 Ap 20 '67 550w

MAZZEO, JOSEPH ANTHONY. The design of life; major themes in the development of biological thought. 227p $5.95 Pantheon bks.

574.09 Biology—History

67-19169

An account of the evolution of biological thought. The author describes the ideas of "Aristotle, Darwin, and Mendel, and also discusses the major discoveries of the present, including an explanation of the structure of DNA . . . [in an attempt to show] the interplay of biological ideas with each other and with ideas from other branches of knowledge." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

MAZZEO, J. A.—Continued

"A readable history of the major ideas in biological science by a knowledgeable and enthusiastic author."

Library J 93:897 F 15 '68 20w [YA]

"[This] is an admirable endeavor and a competent performance, but two complaints must be registered. The first is stylistic. None of the excitement of scientific discovery is in this book, nor any of the elegance and humor of scientists. Ostensibly written for the intelligent 'nonprofessional,' it reads rather like a textbook converted into Weekly Reader prose. . . . The second complaint is Mr. Mazzeo's acceptance at face value of the claims of the molecular biologists. . . . Today, however, a new biology is in the wings, prepared to assert the necessity of considering systems whose complexity is many orders of magnitude greater than that of the gene-pool. . . . Alas, [the author] spent most of his time on the genes, very little of it on the spinal cord, and none of it on that ultimately integrated organism, the brain."

N Y Times Bk R p44 N 19 '67 300w

MBITI, JOHN S., ed. & tr. Akamba stories. 240p $7.20 Oxford

398.2 Folklore—Kenya

[67-72464]

"Seventy-six stories make up this volume of Kikamba oral literature. The stories were selected by the Reverend Mbiti, himself an Akamban, who had collected them since childhood. . . . [Included are] two volumes of Akamba folktales published by G. Lindblom: Kamba Folklore I: Tales of Animals, and Kamba Folktales II: Tales of Supernatural Beings and Adventurers. This collection . . . is prefaced by a description of Kikamba (Kenya) society and culture, language, and literature. Some attempt is made at analysis of the tales." (Choice)

"Mbiti writes of the 'structure' and 'grouping' of stories, and that these tales are a 'reflection of Akamba society,' but few folklorists would recognize this accurate description as analysis; rather, the intent of this volume is to provide a basis for future African literary studies. As such, this book has rich source material for the undergraduate in such disciplines as non-Western literature, folklore, anthropology, and psychology."

Choice 4:1122 D '67 150w

"[There is a] good and useful introduction . . . [to this] collection of simple folktales, rendered in straightforward English. The stories themselves deal with family life, with kings and spirits, travel and adventure. They are about wise and foolish people, and virtue usually triumphs as it should. The mythological element is almost entirely missing in this selection and we lack the humour, the imagery and inventiveness that is so marked in some other collections of African stories. The greatest fault lies in the telling. Mr. Mbiti himself explains that 'More important than anything else in good story telling is to make the story personal'. But this is precisely what he fails to do. His language is dry and somehow non-committal."

TLS p244 Mr 23 '67 330w

MEACHAM, HARRY M. The caged panther: Ezra Pound at Saint Elizabeths. 222p $5 Twayne

B or 92 Pound, Ezra. Loomis

67-30723

The author's purpose is to provide information about the campaign to obtain the poet's release from the mental hospital where he was confined for thirteen years. He "begins with a brief sketch of Pound's early life, describes the difficulties during World War II that led to his arrest, and then depicts the years at St. Elizabeths. He . . . provides transcripts of 54 letters written to him by the poet [and] presents extracts of other correspondence, especially from Archibald MacLeish (a key figure in getting Pound released) and from Robert Frost, T. S. Eliot, and Ernest Hemingway. . . . Mr. Meacham had occasion to see Pound after his release and he also gives an account of this." (Library J)

"Despite its subject, [this] is not a particularly exciting book, nor does it tell us anything new about Ezra Pound. Denying any biographical intentions, the work is partly a documentary account, partly a memoir; and its point of view is extremely limited. . . . It is true that Pound appears as a human being, but that he should be, at this late date, not noteworthy." L. S. Dembo

Am Lit 40:416 N '68 280w

Choice 5:778 S '68 120w

"In this interesting book Harry Meacham, a Virginia businessman who became a friend of Pound while trying to get his discharge from St. Elizabeths hospital, contributes a good deal of new information about the poet. . . . Of interest are photocopies of letters and beautiful photographs of Pound. . . . Certainly academic libraries will wish to purchase this book and probably many public ones as well." D. B. Schneider

Library J 93:1485 Ap 1 '68 190w

"Mr. Meacham interviewed many of those who worked for Pound's freedom and he had access to hitherto unavailable correspondence. . . . As a highly interested party, Mr. Meacham has a hard time refraining from interpretation . . . and his record is not very well organized. However, he does supply some interesting footnotes to a bleak chapter of Pound's life. The poet himself comes through in some energetically spiky letters."

N Y Times Bk R p23 F 11 '68 230w

"The book is naive about poetry but sound on practical affairs. Dealing mainly with Pound's long incarceration and the delicate, wearing process of getting him out of it, Mr. Meacham, whatever his private opinions may be on Pound's status as a martyr for free speech, had the wisdom to see at the time, and has the further wisdom to state now, that Pound's philosophical position was not a legal issue. . . . Mr. Meacham can be forgiven, indeed commended, for considering Pound's ideological position to have been beyond his brief. He confined himself to writing to people who had influence and trying to get Pound to keep quiet. The person who did most to free Pound, it turns out, was the much maligned Archibald MacLeish. The person who did less than he later made out was Robert Frost. All this is documented and unassailable, in a book that is on the whole balanced and sensible."

TLS p388 Ap 18 '68 400w

Reviewed by Alan Holder

Va Q R 44:337 spring '68 1700w

MEAD, DONALD C. Growth and structural change in the Egyptian economy. (Yale Univ. Economic growth center. Publication) 414p $8.50 Irwin

330.962 Egypt—Economic conditions 66-27466

The "book begins with a general historical survey, followed by the demographic background and, after chapter surveys of agriculture and industry, . . . we are given interpretative descriptions of the problems of Egypt's foreign trade, its financial system (mainly on the money supply and prices), and the consumption-savings nexus, followed by an essay on the Plan, its implementation, and a concluding chapter on the growth of the economy in perspective." (Am Econ R) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by W. O. Thweatt

Am Econ 11 58:218 Mr '68 700w

"[The author] has tried to cover important changes in all sectors of the economy from population to planning, and has supplemented his exposition with considerable statistical detail. One of the more notable features in the vast array of statistical tables and a statistical appendix which takes up almost one-third of the book. Mead has referred consistently to the work of B. Hansen and G. Marzouk, Development and Economic Policy in the U.A.R. as well as Issawi's Egypt in Revolution: An Economic Analysis [BRD 1964], so it would appear that this book would serve as a valuable supplement to the above mentioned studies. Probably should be made available for graduates and undergraduates who may be working in the area of economic development."

Choice 4:1143 D '67 170w

J Pol Econ 76:158 Ja '68 320w

MEAD, IGOR, jr. auth. Unofficial art in the Soviet Union. See Sjeklocha, P.

MEAD, MARGARET, ed. Science and the concept of race; Margaret Mead [and others], editors. 177p $6.50 Columbia univ. press

572 Race

68-19754

This book "is an outgrowth of a symposium that was jointly sponsored by several scientific groups, including Scientists' Institute for Public Information and the Committee on Science in the Promotion of Human Welfare of the American Association for the Advancement of Science. The authors . . . attempt to dispel the myths that persist about race, particularly those that assert the biological superiority or inferiority of certain peoples. Some of the articles offer new information; some are discussions of what science has learned about race." (Publisher's note) Chapter bibliographies.

"Dr. Mead and her associates . . . exchange ideas on the present state of knowledge and research on problems and explore the evolving concepts of race within their fields. . . . Their report will stimulate further research and analysis. Recommended for college collections." H. S. Camenson

Library J 93:1648 Ap 15 '68 180w

"[This is] a provocative and well-integrated volume. . . . The layman who is not a specialist in either biology or social science, when assaulted with racism by scholars armored in academic credentials, needs a summary of the evidence and a straightforward report of the assessment of the data by the best contemporary scientists. This book . . . offers the reader the straight dope. . . . [However] I am annoyed to have to report that the social science section of the book constitutes a clear step down in quality from the sections on behavior-genetic analyses and on biological aspects of race." R. W. Mack

Natur Hist 77:86 N '68 2200w

MEADE, EVERARD. The golden geese. 274p $4.95 Dodd

68-15411

"Set at an advertising convention at White Sulphur Springs . . . [the central characters] Minor, Morgan, and Twitchey battle for a $14-million cigarette account. The new brand is called 'Hallucinations,' 'Lucies' for short, since they have . . . mushroom filters. A motion picture star-producer, her ex-husband agent turned advertising executive with only six months to live because of throat cancer, a beautiful young copywriter, and a tobacco tycoon . . . round out the cast." (Library J)

Reviewed by W. B. Hill
America 118:623 My 4 '68 90w
Best Sell 28:28 Ap 15 '68 40w

Reviewed by Robert Lasson
Book World p9 My 26 '68 400w

"Here it is again: another slick novel, heavy on contrived plot, light on characterization, with no particular content, but pleasantly entertaining for an hour or two of escape reading. Recommended for large libraries only." Charlotte Georgi

Library J 93:1163 Mr 15 '68 130w

"Who will get the advertising account for 'Hallucinations'? . . . Will it be Keith Morgan, the Madison Avenue sharpie who will stop at nothing? Or Walpole Twitchey, a reasonably decent flack? And what part will be played by Tom Minor, onetime agency prexy fighting his way back from the outskirts of Skid Row? If these are the sort of questions that interest you, you will find the answers [here]. . . . When Frederic Wakeman made 'The Hucksters' [BRD 1946], he didn't break the mold." Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p44 Ap 28 '68 100w
Va Q R 44:xcvii:summer '68 70w

MEAGHER, SYLVIA. Accessories after the fact; the Warren Commission, the authorities, and the report; introd. by Leo Sauvage. 477p $8.50 Bobbs

973.922 U.S. President's Commission on the Assassination of President Kennedy. Kennedy, John Fitzgerald—Assassination

67-25176

The author of the Subject Index to the Warren Report and Hearings and Exhibits (BRD 1966) "advances three arguments intended to show that Oswald could not possibly have been the one assassin. First, there is the argument based on the Commission's analysis of the Zapruder film . . . [in which she attempts to] demonstrate that the single-bullet theory is contravened by the evidence. . . . [Second, she asserts that] films of the assassination show that the President's head moves backward, not forwards, when hit . . . [so that] at least one bullet was fired from in front. This would mean that there were at least two riflemen. . . . Finally, Mrs. Meagher attempts to show that the Commission's conclusions are weakened by implausibilities." (Book World) Index.

Reviewed by Oscar Handlin
Atlantic 221:141 F '68 130w

"[This] is the most exhaustive and objective evaluation of the Warren Report yet. [It] is more than a mere compendium of errors; it is a definitive analysis of the Warren Report. . . . Mrs. Meagher focuses on inconsistencies . . . [and] seems to have uncovered many [unresolved contradictions]. . . . [She] does not succeed in breaching the epistemological barrier between the world of the Warren Report (with all its flaws and contradictions) and the world of real fact (with all its contingencies), but this does not detract from the historical value of her book. In a sense it completes the Warren Report by supplying the contradictory evidence the Commission ignored or missed." E. J. Epstein

Book World p1 N 26 '67 1750w

Reviewed by A. V. Krebs
Commonweal 88:637 S 20 '68 380w

"In innumerable cases, [Mrs. Meagher] finds fault with leading questions, the suppression and misrepresentation of facts, the failure to follow up sources of information, and so on. She seldom holds back her judgment; she usually condemns. . . . Her criticism is frequently justified, but whether her doubts disprove the basic conclusions of the Report is very questionable. . . . Still, Mrs. Meagher's book will be of interest to law libraries and large public libraries." H. H. Bernt

Library J 92:4022 N 1 '67 170w

Reviewed by F. J. Cook
Nation 206:277 F 26 '68 2250w

"[This book] is the [author's] fleshed-out index—that is, text and summaries instead of page references—plus a running and disjointed critical commentary. It literally disassembles the Warren Report into bits and pieces, each of which it examines briefly with a magnifying glass if not a microscope. . . . [Unfortunately], it is indiscriminate. Miss Meagher extends the scrupulous equal protection of her attention to every doubt, every ambiguity, every startling coincidence, every loose string, even though . . . she does make a few concessions in favor of the Commission's findings." A. M. Bickel

New Repub 157:34 D 23 '67 460w

"Unfortunately [the author's] meticulous skills as an indexer carried over to produce a book that is a bore. It catalogues the weak spots in the Warren Report and intersperses the inconsistent material she discovered, but there is little organization and no change of pace. She does not appear to have unearthed any new shockers but this is not certain; she cries 'wolf' so often that a big bad one could have slipped by unnoticed in the pack." Fred Graham

N Y Times Bk R p16 F 18 '68 800w

Reviewed by Irwin Karp
Sat R 51:113 Mr 9 '68 750w

"The parti pris and political prejudice that permeate [Mrs. Meagher's] book drive her to extremes that make her criticism ineffective." John Sparrow

TLS p1217 D 14 '67 700w

MEANS, GARDINER C., jt. auth. The modern corporation and private property. See Berle, A. A.

MEAUZÉ, PIERRE. African art; sculpture. 219p il col il $25 World pub.

732 Sculpture, African. Negro art 67-24467

The curator of the Musée des Arts Africains et Océaniens, Paris, offers an illustrated historical survey of African masks and sculpture.

"The description of styles is adequate but not brilliant, while what purports to be an historical survey contains some errors and a certain amount of romantic nonsense. The discussion of the artist, his status and purposes, his materials and his techniques is inferior to that of Himmelheber's Afrikanische Kunst und Kunstler (which incidentally is missing from the bibliography)."

MEUZÉ, PIERRE—Continued

Choice 5:1295 D '68 110w

"The book is particularly appealing because of Mr. Meauzé's simple approach to the bothersome problems of linkage, tradition, and interrelationships of different native groups. His panoramic view is not sufficient for scholars, but is sound and reasonable enough for the student or collector. Of special value are his descriptions of the African craftsman's materials and techniques in terracotta, stone, wood, iron, bronze, gold, and ivory. There are also descriptive notes of varying length on the special distinctive features of large masks and statues of individual groups. . . . The tipped-in color plates are nothing less than beautiful, and the black-and-white illustrations are handsome, clear, artistic, and minutely detailed. This is an excellent and valuable book on African sculpture for any art collection, and will provide enjoyable reading for an evening at home." Lee Ash

Library J 93:1888 My 1 '68 190w

"[Not] correctly titled. There is no treatment of the art . . . of North Africa, Egypt, or Ethiopia. What is treated is black African tribal society south of the Sahara. And it is largely done as an exercise in iconolatry. The illustrations, which emphasize larger objects in sculpture, have but a faint connexion with the text. . . . By the skilful manipulation of lights and studio equipment, the photographs of art objects removed from their natural setting can be made to appear more beautiful or sophisticated than the originals. This is true of the pictures [in this beautiful book whose] main value . . . is in its magnificent illustrations." TLS p645 Je 20 '68 160w

MEDLICOTT, W. N. Contemporary England, 1914-1964. 614p maps $10.95 McKay 942.082 Great Britain—History—20th century
67-26796

A consideration of "the impact of an almost continuous series of external crises on the domestic outlook, economy, and national policy of the country. The landmarks are the two world wars (1914-18 and 1939-45), followed in each case by a period of emotional deflation and economic difficulty and also perhaps by some lapse of will power and mental vigour." (Intro) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"Inevitably invites comparison with [A. J. P.] Taylor's English History 1914-1945 [BRD 1965] and [C. L.] Mowat's Britain between the Wars [BRD 1955]. In some ways it is to be preferred to either. It is more comprehensive in coverage than Mowat and less polemical and eccentric than Taylor. Moreover, unlike Taylor, Medlicott understands economics. Not surprisingly the book is oriented toward British foreign relations since the beginning of the First World War, although chapters on domestic politics are also excellent. There is little of the endless discussion of social and literary trends which has marred the work of so many armchair historian-essayists who have undertaken to write semi-serious histories of modern Britain. All undergraduate libraries should have this book."

Choice 5:672 J1 '68 120w

"Though he extends his study of contemporary England to 1964, rather than stopping at 1945, Mr. Medlicott's account can never compete with A. J. P. Taylor's comparable work in the Oxford series, English History 1914-1945 [BRD 1965]. But then, very few authors can. Mr. Medlicott, a sober, experienced, and respected historian, has written however, a sound and judicious book. He has been somewhat conventional in concentrating heavily on political developments. But any library which wishes to maintain a strong commitment to a student clientele or to solid general books on historical scholarship will find that his book fills the bill." H. J. Steck

Library J 93:186 Ja 15 '68 110w

"[Medlicott's] dense, very factual account of [Great Britain's] last 50 years exudes neither complacency nor a sense of impending doom: one has the impression, rather, of continuous crisis. Our present griefs are minor items in a long catalogue of disasters which we have, nevertheless, managed to survive. . . . Medlicott chronicles these events in an impressive manner. But he tends to lose his objectivity as he nears the present. His account of Suez is almost a straightforward defence of Eden. . . .

Again, his description of the way in which Lord Home became Prime Minister . . . is seriously misleading."

New Statesman 74:439 O 6 '67 250w

TLS p251 Mr 14 '68 1000w

MEEK, RONALD L. Economics and ideology and other essays; studies in the development of economic thought. 221p $7.25 Barnes & Noble

330 Economics—History [67-90200]

"A collection of essays based upon published articles by Meek during the past 15 years. Part I deals with classical economics. . . . Part II treats Marxian economics and includes essays on Marxian methodology, the 'increasing misery' doctrine, and 'transformation problem.' . . . Part III treats modern economics, including essays on Keynes and 'Economics and Ideology.'" (Choice)

"While Meek employs Marxist categories, his essays are free of ideological dogmatism. For this reason, as well as for the high level of scholarship and the lucid exposition of ideas in the essays, I believe that the volume will be well received by the specialist in the history of economic thought and by the general economist as well." R. V. Eagly

Am Econ R 58:566 Je '68 850w

"Of special interest are the essays 'Adam Smith and the Classical Theory of Profit' showing the uniqueness of Smith's treatment of profits on capital as a general category of class income, and 'The Decline of Ricardian Economics in England' which contains both a good account of elements in the debate between Malthus and Ricardo and an evaluation of the influence of Say's (Mill's) Law upon Ricardo's thinking."

Choice 5:532 Je '68 300w

"This collection of essays illustrates once more the debt that historical scholarship owes to the Marxian standpoint. Here the techniques of Marxian historical analysis are applied with intelligence, learning and subtlety to a field particularly close to Marx's own heart: the development of economic thought and its relationship to ideology. . . . Of course, there are reservations. Marxian expectations lead to conjectures that sometimes hurry the narrative too rapidly over difficulties. An interpretative tradition that furnishes insight into Adam Smith and Ricardo is less helpful, and possibly even a handicap, when dealing with figures like John Stuart Mill and Marshall. . . . But it is always worth debating with Professor Meek."

Economist 224:418 J1 29 '67 400w

Reviewed by Robin Blackburn

New Statesman 75:306 Mr 8 '63 300w

"Mr. Sraffa's Rehabilitation of Classical Economics, 'The Place of Keynes in the History of Economic Thought', and 'Economics and Ideology' . . . are the essays on which the scholar will wish to dwell, and in which Professor Meek has made a contribution of considerable importance to our thinking about the nature of economics in the modern world." TLS p1006 O 26 '67 300w

MEEKER ODEN, Israel; ancient land, young nation. 358p pl $7.95 Scribner

915.694 Israel

68-12502

The "chief of the CARE Mission in Israel for the last three years has written about his impressions and experiences while serving in that post. . . . Interspersed with personal anecdotes, he relates segments of the long turbulent history of the land of Israel and of the Jewish people." (Library J) Glossary. Bibliography. Index.

"A warm, though candid, appraisal of Israeli life as it really is. . . . The book contains a pot-pourri of information: characterizations of the major cities, descriptions of wildlife, flora and fauna, and famous personalities. Written in an engaging manner, both the land and her inhabitants come to life with their strengths and weaknesses. Mr. Meeker's book is recommended for general collections." C. R. Glatt

Library J 93:2654 J1 '68 130w

"In a book about Israel unconnected to the war, [the author] . . . divides his subject into geographical areas and devotes a chapter to each region's cultural, religious, aesthetic and political histories. . . . He recalls the past of Safed, of General Allenby, of the holocaust, of ancient Phoenicia and of Masada, and includes detailed portraits of contemporary people, among them Abie Nathan, the peace pilot; Dr. Rolf Pauls, the first West German envoy to Israel; Dr. Nelson Glueck, the archaeologist, and Miriam Mirvish, a handicraft shopkeeper. It is a beautiful study of a people and of a nation." M. J. Bandler

Nation 207:444 O 28 '68 170w

MEER, F. VAN DER. Early Christian art; tr. by Peter and Friedl Brown. 149p 48il $8.50 Univ. of Chicago press

740.948 Christian art and symbolism. Christian antiquities. Art, Ancient 67-114396

"This book deals with the discovery of Early Christian art and with its most important manifestations, arranged according to subject. I have deliberately taken as my point of departure, not outward forms, which in many ways are simply continuations of earlier traditions, but the meaning and purpose of the works discussed." (Pref) Index. Originally published in Dutch under the title Oudchristelijke Kunst, this is a translation from a subsequent German text.

"A useful and generally sound introduction to a difficult subject. It is aimed at the general reader rather than the specialist, and seeks to provide a broad picture rather than a detailed account of early Christian art. In spite of inevitable simplification, the text is informative and thought provoking. . . . [It is] regrettable that the illustrations are often only small details taken out of context, while the captions beneath them are cryptic at best: 'Curtain, Ravenna' serves as a description of a part of the representation of the palace of Theodoric in the mosaic of the nave of Sant' Apollinare Nuovo. While no substitute for [W. F.] Volbach's more comprehensive work bearing the same title [BRD 1962], the book's more modest scope makes it appealing on its own terms."

Choice 5:766 S '68 160w

Reviewed by Laurence Alloway
Nation 207:664 D 16 '68 10w

"The first chapter deals with the 'discovery' of early Christian art. The second is entitled, rather oddly, 'The Few Remains'. Then Fr. van der Meer deals briefly with the Basilica, the 'Memoria', the Baptistry and the Cemeteries linking together Christian buildings, rites and beliefs. None of this is very deep but it is always limpid. There are two brief, unsatisfying chapters on Portraits and Holy Books. But the three other chapters give the book a permanent value. That on the Historiae deals primarily with the Sculptural cycles and illuminates the whole approach to the Two Testaments. The Ancient Tradition and the New Meaning treats of the nature of the links with the Classic past."

TLS p420 Ap 25 '68 320w

MEERHAEGHE, M. A. G. VAN. International economic institutions. 404p $8 Wiley 338.91 International economic relations 67-4282

"The first part of the book deals in a general way with the theory of international economic relations, [with] chapters devoted to international trade, the balance-of-payments equilibrium, and international economic policy. The second part is concerned with some world organizations and conventions: the International Monetary Fund, the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development and its subsidiaries, the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (as well as the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development) and the commodity agreements. [The third section concerns] European organizations: the Benelux Union, the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development, the Economic Coal and Steel Community, the European Economic Community, and the European Free Trade Association. As far as possible, each organization is analyzed on the same pattern: origins, provisions (objectives, members, administration, functions), operation, appraisal, and bibliography." (J Pol Econ) Bibliography. Index of authors. Index of subjects.

"This book aims at a worthy purpose—to combine description of the origins, provisions, and operations of contemporary international economic institutions with an analysis of their effectiveness. . . . [It] is most useful at the purely descriptive level, covering in orderly fashion the functions of a dozen international economic organizations. . . . When it comes to appraisal of the advantages and disadvantages of each institution, the volume is less useful. Professor van Meerhaeghe does not state his value premises, so they must be largely inferred by the reader. . . . This volume is in no way a substitute for the source material or the monographic literature on the individual institutions (e.g., [G.] Curzon's Multilateral Commercial Diplomacy [BRD 1966], [I.] Frank's European Common Market [BRD 1962] and M.J. Camps' Britain and the European Community [BRD 1964]). . . . It offers a moderately useful handbook for the reference shelf." John Pincus

Am Econ R 57:1391 D '67 950w

"This translation of a 1964 Flemish work by a Belgian economist explains briefly—too briefly to be of much use—a few of the major issues of theory and policy in current international economics. . . . The exposition [in the second part] is concise, highly segmented, dull, and occasionally lapses into nonidiomatic English. There is a classified and annotated bibliography useful to researchers. . . . [Nevertheless, this volume] is, for most American collegiate libraries, worthy of acquisition as a convenient reference work on the facts about international economic organizations."

Choice 5:235 Ap '68 170w

J Pol Econ 75:907 D '67 150w

MEHDI, M. T. Peace in the Middle East. 109p $3; pa $1.50 New world press

956.94 Jewish-Arab relations. Zionism. Jewish question 67-20933

The "Secretary-General of the Action Committee on American-Arab Relations in New York City considers the Israeli claims . . . to sovereignty in Palestine, and refutes each from the Arab position. . . . [He] argues that a third world war is inevitable. To save the peace, he appeals to all Christians, Moslems, non-Zionist Jews and liberals, to unite in an effort to return the Arab Palestinian refugees, to restore Arab sovereignty, and to provide for the reemigration of all nonnative Jews in Israel to Europe, the United States and Canada. To the native Jews he would grant citizenship in the new Arab Palestine." (Library J)

"This tract [contains] . . . arguments against the prejudice which Mehdi feels responsible for the creation of Israel—anti-Semitism as well as anti-Gentilism. . . . Although the argumentation in the book is oversimplified, it is useful, especially in the light of the recent war (June 1967) to have available to the general reader a statement explicating the important emotional reasons for the absence of peace in the Middle East."

Choice 4:1178 D '67 160w

"Undoubtedly, [Mehdi] reflects current Arab conviction regarding a solution to the problems of the Middle East. . . . This book will strike most readers as a curiously unrealistic plea for help in a situation which, somehow, must move forward rather than backward to a solution. Useful only as a statement of the rigid Arab position in the Israeli-Arab confrontation." J. C. Shipman

Library J 92:3428 O 1 '67 190w

MEHTA, RAMA. Ramu; a story of India; foreword by Santha Rama Rau; il. by W. T. Mars. 96p $3.50; lib bdg $3.06 McGraw

66-8453

Ramu is "a small boy living in Udaipur, who finds himself torn between the customs of his ancestors and the possibilities of western civilization. He comes from an illiterate stock, and cannot at first appreciate why it is a crime to play truant from school in order to enjoy a national feast day; his father, a sweet-maker, eventually makes him understand that schooling will bring its rewards, and that he need not forgo the traditional way of life while he learns the new one." (TLS) Glossary. "Grades four to six." (Library J)

Horn Bk 42:669 O '66 110w

"Ramu's wish for a mouth organ and his renunciation of this undeserved gift because of his unworthiness does not provide much of a plot. The importance of the book is its portrayal of small-town life in India. Slow-paced and sometimes contrived as fiction, [it] offers a rich array of facts presented by the Indian author with a sympathy that arouses the reader's interest. . . . Ramu, mischievous and yet serious, is a convincing boy; his family is poor, but hunger is not a problem. Family relationships and school life are vividly shown. The book could be used in class studies on India." P. A. McKenzie

MEHTA, RAMA—Continued

Library J 91:6194 D 15 '66 120w

Reviewed by Robin McKown

N Y Times BK R pt 2, p46 N 6 '66 150w

"There are loving descriptions of the colourful preparations for Diwali, the Feast of Lights, and details of the family's everyday life which will please young readers; it is only every now and then that one has a slightly uneasy feeling that there is more information given than is integral to the plot, that there is a faint taste of powder perceptible in the jam. The glossary of Indian words right at the beginning of the book is also offputting."

TLS p263 Mr 14 '68 210w

MEIER, DON, PRODUCTIONS. The miracle of flight. See Cromer, R.

MEIGS, CORNELIA. Invincible Louisa; the story of the author of Little Women; with a new introd. by the author. Alcott centennial ed 1950 il $4.95 Little

B or 92 Alcott, Louisa May—Juvenile literature 68-21174

First published in 1933 as The Story of the Author of Little Women: Invincible Louisa (BRD 1933), this biography, which won the Newbery Medal in 1934, has been reissued "in honor of the hundredth anniversary of the publication of Little Women." (Publisher's note) Chronology. Index.

Best Sell 28:274 O 1 '68 50w

Reviewed by J. P. Wood

Book World p34 (children's issue) N 3 '68 50w

Reviewed by L. P. Scanlon

Commonweal 89:291 N 22 '68 130w [YA]

"[This biography] is to be praised still for its straightforward account of a life of struggle and success, which was no less intense because it took place within narrow boundaries and against severe limits. If you want to know about Louisa's external life, and trace there the events which gave rise to the internal urges and passions that produced 'Little Women,' this book will serve well. It will give an excellent idea too of that vanished New England culture which, a century ago, was already hardening into rigidity but which contributed an ineradicable strain to the American ethos." Elizabeth Janeway

N Y Times BK R p46 S 29 '68 110w

MEIJER, E. R. The Rijksmuseum, Amsterdam [tr. by James Brockway]. 160p il col il $8.95 Meredith

708.9492 Amsterdam. Rijksmuseum 68-31901

This volume recounts the history of the collection and the building. It also covers the "paintings of Rembrandt, Maes, Vermeer, Steen, and Frans Hals . . . [and] tells the story of the development of Dutch art right up to the nineteenth century." (Publisher's note) Index.

"The illustrations are numerous, more than 120 black-and-white reproductions and 32 pages of full color, with explanatory text conveniently placed to accompany the plates. 20 pages are devoted to the wood-carving, pottery, silver-smith work and furniture characteristic of the region in the past. . . . This will be a valuable addition to every college and public library and is within the reach, one should think, of the budgets of High School libraries. It also suggests itself as a handsome gift book."

Best Sell 27:357 D 1 '67 140w

Choice 5:476 Je '68 150w

"The present [Great Galleries] series is distinguished neither by its texts nor by the quality of reproduction. . . . There are reproductions of the selected works, mostly in black and white, some in high glossy, somewhat yellowish, overstrong colors. The commentary accompanying each illustration is very brief and of little help in characterizing the artist or in analyzing the work. The books may appeal by their illustrations to the general reader who wants to be introduced to, or who wants to remember, the collection. . . . The scholar will have to accept these limitations if there are no better publications [available]." J. L. Dewton

Library J 93:537 F 1 '68 120w

MEISEL, MAX. A bibliography of American natural history; the pioneer century, 1769-1865. 3v 244:741-749p $50 Hafner pub. co.
016.574 Natural history—U.S.—Bibliography 67-16632

This is a reprint of the work first published in 1924-1929. The volumes contain "an annotated bibliography of all known publications pertaining to American natural history between 1769 and 1865. There is a . . . description of . . . the scientific societies and institutions founded or organized during this period plus a complete listing of every article known to have been published by these institutions. [The] bibliography covers the fields of botany, geology, mineralogy, paleontology, and zoology. . . . Other features are a bibliography of biographies of early American scientists; a bibliography of all books and pamphlets published between 1590 and 1865 dealing with American natural history; chronological tables of publication of all known journals in this period; and an index of all authors, naturalists, and institutions referred to." (Choice)

"Perhaps the most valuable feature is an extremely complete subject index and geographic index. This alone has made Meisel the outstanding reference work in early American biological and geological sciences for over 40 years. One minor drawback is that a supplement to the annotated bibliography is at the end of volume 3 instead of following the original listing in volume 1. . . . Essential to all college and university libraries, plus specialized libraries devoted to science and the history of science. There is no comparable reference of such completeness and thorough internal organization."

Choice 5:752 S '68 220w

"These are outstanding volumes in their class: . . . [they] are expensive, but indispensable for all interested in history of early American science." R. J. Haylik

Library J 93:65 Ja 1 '68 120w

MEISNER, MAURICE. Li Ta-chao and the origins of Chinese Marxism. 326p $4.95 Harvard univ. press

951 Li, Ta-chao. Communism—China 67-10904

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by J. R. Levenson

Am Hist R 73:566 D '67 280w

Reviewed by H. L. Boorman

Ann Am Acad 375:225 Ja '68 600w

Choice 4:1302 Ja '68 200w

Reviewed by R. C. Croizier

Pacific Affairs 41:92 spring '68 250w

TLS p55 Ja 18 '68 1200w

MEISS, MILLARD. French painting in the time of Jean de Berry; the late fourteenth century and the patronage of the Duke. 2v il pl $30 Praeger

096 Illumination of books and manuscripts. Miniature painting. Berry, Jean de France, duc de [67-29885]

These two volumes are concerned with early French manuscript painting in the period from about 1380 to 1400. The Duc de Berry is known to have owned over three-hundred manuscripts. Three more sections covering the work of the Boucicaut Master, the Limbourg brothers, and the various Parisian workshops active around 1400 have been announced. Chronology. Bibliography.

"The first part of Meiss' long awaited study . . . has at last brought together an enormous body of visual and historical material and treated it in a systematic and scholarly way. Meiss (Institute of Advanced Study, Princeton) has wisely chosen as the organizational framework for the present two volumes the patronage of the man often called the first modern patron of art, Jean, Duke of Berry. . . . It seems certain that these volumes will become the standard study for medieval French art. . . . While the present books are basically designed for the graduate student, the text is readable enough to be used by undergraduates."

Choice 5:337 My '68 240w

"A reader does not usually expect to find a scholarly book with all the apparatus such engrossing reading. This book is packed with information in clear prose which flows along without impeding enjoyment. . . . Translations of documents, inventories, a chronology, list of extant manuscripts and their locality, and other information of specialized interest are included, sometimes in the body of the book, sometimes in an appendix. The illustrations are in Volume 2." Julia Sabine

Library J 93:1129 Mr 15 '68 270w

"All Jean de Berry's finest manuscripts have been studied over and over again. The new weapon that the distinguished American author brings to the task is a profound knowledge of early Italian, especially Tuscan Trecento painting, to which much of his life has been devoted. . . . Both the printing and the lay-out of the book are excellent. The twelve colour plates are splendidly reproduced, and the 845 black-and-white illustrations include all the main miniatures of the manuscripts discussed and cover much else besides: panel paintings, comparative material from Italian sources, enamels, gems, medals, and sculpture without which any view of French medieval art must be incomplete."

TLS p500 My 16 '68 1400w

MELFI, LEONARD. Encounters; 6 one-act plays. 206p $4.95; pa $1.95 Random house

812 One-act plays 67-22669

A first collection of plays which were first performed Off-Off Broadway. "The plays—Birdbath, Ferryboat, Lunchtime, Halloween, The Shirt and Times Square—are all first encounters between two or more characters." (Publisher's note)

"Consisting of five realistic plays and one off-beat romp through theatricalism, this book is an excellent example of the playwright's hungry, massive individuality. . . . Birdbath pictures a young man picking up a girl who works at the same cafeteria, only to discover that she isn't really such a 'dumb broad' after all—she's just murdered her mother. Lunchtime, Halloween, and Ferryboat all concern boy-and-girl situations with specific twists. Halloween features the exchange of masks and illusion for reality in illicit romance. The Shirt is the strongest of these realistic plays; its sex and violence reflect much of the civil unrest in the U.S. today. The characters are especially well developed. Times Square is a humorous, sardonic treatment of several characters meeting near that landmark in New York City. The theatricalism is wide in scope and very funny. The playwright has an awareness of raw intensity in characterization; the book would be useful for play production, acting projects and play-writing assignments."

Choice 5:363 My '68 180w

"[Each play] is a poignant, human tragedy laced with a twist of the macabre and an occasional dash of profanity for profanity's sake. Although [these] potpourris of psychic symptoms are variations of tried and true dramatic themes, they do bear the stamp of graphic and authoritative realism. . . . Four-letter words notwithstanding, Encounters is a meritorious contribution to the drama of Off-Off-Broadway." L. A. Rachow

Library J 92:2600 J1 '67 260w

MELMAN, SEYMOUR. In the name of America. See In the name of America

MELTON, JULIUS. Presbyterian worship in America; changing patterns since 1787. 173p $5.75 John Knox press

264.05 Presbyterian Church 67-22003

In tracing their "worship patterns from colonial days to the present, the author shows how Presbyterians have reshaped their worship and its theory to fit their changing views and their nation's changing culture. . . . He draws on source materials . . . such as directories for worship printed in 1644 and 1787, private letters of nineteenth-century churchmen, and minutes of church courts." (Publisher's note) Index.

"The outline of the book reads tolerably well. . . . The stresses of [each] period are carefully analyzed with clear conclusions. . . . [This work] should be well received by scholars in religious history of the U.S. For libraries with substantial collections in American studies or religious history of the U.S."

Choice 5:976 O '68 120w

"The style of writing is free from pedantry and makes for easy reading. . . . A brief bibliography would have been welcome, but most of the significant sources are referred to in the notes. A glance at the index reveals the large amount of biographical material with which the author has enlivened his account. For anyone interested in what sober Calvinists do when they seek to serve their God, this book provides a sober historical appraisal." W. N. Jamison

J Am Hist 55:384 S '68 390w

"[The author] has made a factual subject into a lively, often controversial, and never less than fascinating subject. He is never critical. A practicing Presbyterian will find his treatment of the issues alive and amusing, amusing mainly because the same conflict between generations still exists. . . . [This book] should not be overlooked by any practicing Christian who wonders if other denominations ever chaff at ecumenical, directory changes." E. F. Waterman

Library J 92:4161 N 15 '67 100w

MELTZER, JACK, jt. ed. Goals for urban America. See Berry, B. J. L.

MELTZER, MILTON, jt. auth. Black magic. See Hughes, L.

MELTZER, MILTON. Bread—and roses; the struggle of American labor, 1865-1915. (The living hist. lib.) 231p il $3.95; lib bdg $3.59 Knopf 331.09 Labor and laboring classes—U.S.

67-19485

A narrative of the background and early history of the American labor movement. Glossary. Bibliography. Index.

"The title comes from a poem by James Oppenheim, who saw mill girls in Lawrence, Massachusetts, picketing for higher wages and better working conditions. Their signs said, 'We want bread and roses.' They wanted the money their labor deserved and the sense of dignity, too. Mr. Meltzer's book shows how hard and long American workers have struggled to achieve the power some of their unions now have. He relies heavily on quotations from both rich men and poor men. He is unsparing in the political and economic details he brings forth." Robert Coles

Book World p12 Ja 21 '68 190w [YA]

Horn Bk 44:194 Ap '68 180w

"Mr. Meltzer has managed to pack a lot of facts, including names, dates, and statistics, into an interesting presentation. . . . This history will be most valuable to school libraries and collections backstopping school assignments. . . . Grades seven to nine." Julia Russell

Library J 93:885 F 15 '68 160w

"This compelling book . . . is a one-dimensional story of battle by an infant labor movement against the forces of corporate greed in a period when all the institutions of government and polite society were on the side of the employer. The very fact that the book is episodic and often overdrawn adds to its usefulness in supplying a new generation of readers with some illumination on the atavistic hatreds and insecurities behind many of the seemingly irrational things unions do now. . . . Many will feel, with considerable validity, that Mr. Meltzer's book is oversimplified history . . . but it will give [its readers] a better understanding of the reasons for labor's undiminished belief that its unity is its only dependable source of strength." A. H. Raskin

N Y Times Bk R p26 Ja 28 '68 900w [YA]

"Meltzer is an impassioned writer and he gives the impression of being very angry over the callousness and greed of management and the glaring injustices that confronted the worker. The author, who approaches the subject almost exclusively from the viewpoint of the embattled worker, has chosen his material judiciously and has marshalled it effectively. For the most part he lets the facts speak for themselves and they do carry a powerful message. The absence of specific source citations, the very limited bibliography and the brevity of treatment (almost too sketchy in places) are blemishes in an otherwise excellent book." Almont Lindsey

Social Studies 59:289 N '68 410w

MELTZER, MILTON. Langston Hughes; a biography. 281p $4.50 Crowell

B or 92 Hughes, Langston—Juvenile literature 68-21952

"This story of Langston Hughes' life and career moves from his 'boyhood in Kansas to young manhood in Harlem, from his father's Mexican ranch to dishwashing in a Paris café. . . [to show] the growth of a poet and a man." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index. "Age twelve and up." (Sat R)

Best Sell 28:423 Ja 1 '69 160w

Reviewed by H. W. Fuller

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p6 N 3 '68 900w

"Langston Hughes was more than just a writer, more than just a Negro pioneer; he was a voice of the common man, and his biographer has done him ample justice in a stirring book. . . . Poems, plays, short stories, novels, histories, anthologies, translations and books for children are listed in a bibliography; what more can one say of a biographer than that he makes the reader want to read every one?" Zena Sutherland

Sat R 51:71 N 9 '68 130w

MELZACK, RONALD. The day Tuk became a hunter & other Eskimo stories; retold; il. by Carol Jones. 92p $3.95 Dodd

398.2 Folklore, Eskimo—Juvenile literature. Eskimos—Juvenile literature 67-26842

"Based on folktales and legends that have been recorded by anthropologists and explorers, these 10 stories have been adapted and retold to appeal to children. The author has selected varied and representative tales that describe daily life, as well as the origin of birds, animals, the sun, and the stars. . . . Grades three to six." (Library J)

Reviewed by Helen Renthal

Book World p14 (children's issue) My 5 '68 110w

Reviewed by Elizabeth Pond

Christian Science Monitor pB5 My 2 '68 110w

Reviewed by M. L. Birmingham

Commonweal 88:304 My 24 '68 30w

"Animal fables, stories of trickery and wisdom, as well as tall tales, combine to capture the unique spirit of Eskimo culture. The illustrations in two colors have the quality of stone carvings and enhance the enjoyment of stories which have a clear cut style suited to reading aloud or telling." B. M. Adam

Library J 93:1313 Mr 15 '68 110w

"[These tales] should catch a child's attention for among them are tales of heroes: Tuk, the brave boy who outwits a polar bear and becomes a mighty hunter; Netchillik who befriends a polar bear and bests his selfish wife. There are also legends, such as how the Owl and the Raven got their markings and how the Raven brought light to the world. But children hoping for the magic of story-telling won't find it here. As retold by the author, the stories though clear and direct are somewhat thin and bare. He has written them to explain not entertain; his tales record the stuff of literature, but without its breath of life." Janet Lunn

N Y Times Bk R p22 Mr 10 '68 140w

TLS p585 Je 6 '68 160w

MENARD, ORVILLE D. The army and the fifth republic. 265p $6.95 Univ. of Neb. press

320.944 France. Army. France—Politics and government 67-18269

An assistant professor of political science at the University of Omaha examines the French military's "political role between 1958 and 1962. . . . He analyzes the social structure of the officer corps. . . . and investigates the professional and political attitudes of French officers. . . . In tracing the army's political activities [during this period he gives] . . . attention to [its] role in returning Charles de Gaulle to power. . . . [and to its] attempt to dictate French policy toward Algeria. . . . The concluding chapters assess the prospects for civil-military relations in France. . . . [and the restoration to] civilian control of the military in France." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"Menard's work is based almost entirely on secondary sources, including a number of recent books. . . . As a result, his study is little more than a pedestrian, if comprehensive retelling of a familiar story. The title itself is somewhat misleading, as the author devotes only 12 pages to de Gaulle's attempt to reintegrate the officer corps into the mainstream of French society after the abortive putsch of April 1961. Skimpy bibliography."

Choice 5:1029 O '68 70w

"It is hard to put down this comprehensive, readable book which fortunately provides a longer history than the title promises. Here is an account of how the French army became alienated from France between 1919 and 1958 and so gave up its role as 'The Great Mute' as it moved from being an instrument of policy to a role of policy making. . . . College and university libraries and most public libraries should purchase this competent book." Garland Downum

Library J 93:2866 Ag '68 130w

MENCKEN, H. L. H. L. Mencken's Smart set criticism; sel. and ed. by William H. Nolte. 349p $10 Cornell Univ. press

809 Literature—History and criticism. The Smart set 68-16387

"In gathering these criticisms, reviews, comments, barbs horselaughs, prophecies, and assorted miscellanea, which constitute about one sixth of Mencken's Smart Set literary criticism, I was guided by a desire to collect material that deals with books or men still of interest, or that vividly displays what was of special interest in the period [1908 to 1923] or that helps us to understand better the multifarious personality of Mencken. I have avoided articles that are solely or largely concerned with aesthetic theory or with literature in its broadest sense." (Intro) Index.

"It is salutary to have in the present convenient volume the best satire, wit, and general criticism of the first 25 years of our century, for is there any argument about the place of Mencken in the history of American literature? Mr. Nolte is an astute critic and has edited this selection well. He makes the period of the 'smart set' and the 'vicious circle' worth a new consideration. For general purchase." K. T. Willis

Library J 93:3005 S 1 '68 120w

"What [Mencken] wrote remains incomparably the best Humana Comœdia written in America in this century. In Mr. Nolte's superbly edited collection of Mencken's Smart Set criticism, there is not a single page that left me without the sensation of sinful delight, the kind of laughter that comes from the darkest corner of the soul—where man, in spite of his obligations to brotherhood and kindness and charity, succumbs to his inborn malevolence." W. S. Schlamm

Nat R 20:964 S 24 '68 700w

Reviewed by Joseph Epstein

New Repub 159:31 S 14 '68 950w

"[This volume] gives us a chance to examine some of the work on which [Mencken's] fame was based. . . . [According to Professor Nolte] 'the writers he praised have lived, and those he panned are forgotten.' [Is this] accurate? There were no contemporary writers for whom he had higher praise than he had for Joseph Hergesheimer and James Branch Cabell. On the other hand, he was lukewarm about Henry James, Scott Fitzgerald, Ernest Hemingway, and William Faulkner. . . . It is true that he panned scores of rubbishy books, but there is nothing remarkable about that. . . . His great virtue was that he cared about writing well. 'As a stylist,' Professor Nolte says, 'Mencken lacks a peer in our time.' That surely is an overstatement, but it comes closer to the truth than some other claims Nolte makes." Granville Hicks

Sat R 51:31 S 7 '68 500w

MENDELL, CLARENCE W. Latin poetry; the age of rhetoric and satire. (Archon bk) 223p $6 Shoe String

871 Latin poetry—History and criticism

67-28320

"Professor Mendell tells us his book 'is intended for the general reader who would like to revive a fading impression of poets with whom he once had at least a bowing acquaintance.'" (TLS)

"The standard views of the first half of this century on Latin poets from Phaedrus to Juvenal and Martial are here presented gracefully and sympathetically. The book is just right for the normal undergraduate library and suitable for those of the secondary school. Mendell is unaffected by new styles of translation, new criticism, and recent scholarship. But he is clear, pleasant, reasonably informative, and just plain downright useful to one who wants to know something about these authors without making a major project of it."

Choice 5:772 S '68 90w

"This volume is evidently not designed for students or for those coming directly upon the classics for the first time. The same conclusion emerges from the short list of books the [author] recommends. They are mostly over fifty years old. Their excellence is undeniable, but room might also have been found for recent studies, because some of them are good too; and they are closer to the interests of the modern reader. . . . It is not an easy period, but it is a great one. . . . [This book] is not the spark that will bring it to life for the present day and age, but perhaps the very fact that it shows up the problems and needs will prove a challenge to others."

TLS p850 Ag 8 '68 1000w

MENDELOWITZ, DANIEL M. Drawing. 464p 11 col pl $11.95; college ed $9.95 Holt

740 Drawing—History. Drawings 66-13297

"Beginning with definitions of drawings [a] professor of art and education at Stanford University writes . . . of drawing throughout history. [He discusses] elements of the art and gives a special chapter to drawing media." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"A valuable contribution . . . [which] provides a tremendous variety of drawing techniques through an historical survey of drawing from cave paintings to contemporary art. Richly illustrated with 330 superb black-and-white and color reproductions, this book and its supplement, Drawing: A Study Guide, deserve to become the standard texts in freehand drawing and figure drawing classes in American colleges. Coverage includes art elements, drawing media, the historical survey, plus a concluding chapter on imagination in drawing. . . . What success H. W. Janson has gained with his tremendously popular History of Art [BRD 1963], Mendelowitz seems sure to repeat with Drawing."

Choice 4:284 My '67 130w

"Must rate as one of the best. Mendelowitz has crammed this handsome volume full of information, good photographs, and an approach to drawing which is characteristic of contemporary trends. . . . This is not a how-to-do-it book, but artists should like it for its ideas and sources. In the same vein, teachers will not be apt to use it as a text, but it should become an indispensable aid for young draftsmen."

Richard Beale

Library J 92:440 D 1 '67 160w

MENESES, ENRIQUE. Fidel Castro: tr. by J. Halcro Ferguson. 238p pl maps $6.95 Taplinger

972.91 Cuba—History. Castro, Fidel 68-17643

A journalist for Paris-Match reports "on the first years of Castroism, through the missile crisis, the American naval blockade, and the flow of Cuban exiles to the United States. In concluding chapters he deals with 'The Mystery of Ché Guevara,' 'The Awakening of Latin America,' 'Continental Subversion,' and 'The Birth of a Legend.'" (Library J) Index.

"It is Meneses' judgment that Fidel wrecked Cuba by his refusal to take advice from anyone—and then handed the island over to Communist control. . . . With vivid accounts of ambushes and bivouac conversations, with a minimum of generalizations and much factual reporting, [this] is a quick-paced, readable indictment of a romantic who imagines himself a planner." E. K. Culhane

America 119:332 O 12 '68 190w

"Meneses' book is more informative than most and probably more accurate. Mr. Meneses, who had the advantage over many other reporters sent to Cuba of speaking fluent Spanish, arrived there in 1957 on the assignment which eventually resulted in this book. Within a few months of his arrival he was in the Sierra Maestra with Castro and his men. For the next four months he shared the lives and travails of the rebels, speaking frequently and at length to Castro, to his brother Raúl, and to other leaders. . . . [The author] places Castroism within the broader context of Latin America. The illustrations are unusual and revealing. The book is generally recommended." R. D. Harlan

Library J 93:3552 O 1 '68 220w

MENNINGER, KARL. The crime of punishment. 305p $8.95 Viking

364 Punishment. Crime and criminals. Criminal law 66-15905

The author of The Vital Balance (BRD 1964) contends that "our system of penology is . . . ineffective . . . our method for controlling crime is antiquated and unjust. He examines the entire juridical system and its functions, commenting on modern scientific discoveries about human behavior and the fact that these are not recognized in our present legal code. He describes the chronic misunderstanding and antagonism between lawyers and behavioral scientists, and some misuses of psychiatry. Dr. Menninger is opposed to punishment because he feels there are more efficient and scientific ways to handle offenders, to treat them and rehabilitate them, so that crime would tend to diminish rather than increase." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"Dr. Menninger charges the American public with an ignorance about crime and punishment: an ignorance that is culpable. . . . As he explores the facts in a scientific manner, the author is not a detached, unemotional observer of the criminological scene. There is sympathy for the victim and for the criminal alike. . . . Occasionally in this book there are errors. . . . [Menninger] largely overlooks the role of the criminologist and sociologist in the prison system and the part they have played in recent reforms. Yet much remains to be done in American penological institutions. This message alone would make [this] book a timely and constructive contribution." J. J. Conlin

Best Sell 28:304 N 1 '68 500w

"[The author] speaks out persuasively against [the present] system with facts about police, courts, judges, jails, lawyers, psychiatrists, many case histories and, above all, with the immense background and mature wisdom of an eminent psychiatrist. He speaks highly of the diagnostic centers in Kansas for the study of criminals, of California's excellent counseling and vocational programs for qualified prisoners, and of work programs in other states which offer some hope. . . . This is an enlightened and important contribution by a distinguished authority whose observations and recommendations will outlive the taunts of 'bleeding heart' he will have to absorb for a while." Allan Angoff

Library J 93:2017 My 15 '68 230w

"[Menninger] devotes an entire chapter to the sins of the psychiatrists, chief among which is perhaps their incomprehensible 'pompous fraternity jargon,' comparable to the 'quaint, contrived, redundant, obscure mishmash' of the lawyers—a 'psychonanalesque' to match legalese for want of clarity. . . . [He] develops an imaginary dialogue between himself and a judge, which I found the most brilliant single bit in the book—and for this book that is high praise. . . . For all its mournful message about the miserable present state of our penal system, there is a strangely refreshing aura of excitement and hope about this book. The renowned doctor, long recognized as one of his profession's most gifted members, writes not only with the insight and inventive imagination one would expect in him but with a vigor and a sturdy simplicity of style that fairly shout his battle cry toward better days to come." Fred Rodell

N Y Times Bk R p4 Ja 5 '69 1500w

Time 92:117 D 6 '68 650w

MENZIES, SIR ROBERT. Central power in the Australian Commonwealth: an examination of the growth of Commonwealth power in the Australian federation. 198p $5 Univ. press of Va.

354.94 Federal government. Australia—Politics and government 67-28061

"The 1901 Australian Constitution sought to define the relationships between the state and federal governments. Subsequent developments have shown that whatever the original hopes were of the framers, power has increasingly gravitated to the federal area. . . . [The author] is concerned to show how, in the Australian context, this state of affairs has been reached; sometimes by court decision, sometimes by public referendum, and on occasion by the judicious use of a political decision's bypassing the actual constitution itself. . . . Prior to his recent retirement [Menzies] held a variety of state and federal offices including a record 18 years as prime minister." (Library J) Index.

MENZIES, ROBERT—Continued

Economist 225:528 N 4 '67 250w

"Sir Robert is uniquely placed to discuss the politico-legal implications involved. . . . [This book contains] seven lectures he gave recently at the University of Virginia. They do not make easy reading because he sticks closely to his brief with few of the pungent asides for which he is noted. In view of the continuing discussion on state-federal relationships this monograph will be most useful in legal and political science collections." Norman Horrocks

Library J 93:2248 Je 1 '68 200w

Reviewed by R. H. Barrett

Pacific Affairs 41:476 fall '68 500w

"An admirable guide to the complexities of Federal-State relations in Australian constitutional law. Though Menzies, perhaps not surprisingly, is inclined to overlook some of the strength of the states' case, and the debilitating effects on their independence which their financial dependence on the Commonwealth government involves, his survey, spiced with personal anecdote, offers an excellent introduction to some of the problems of a federal government, problems which it seems are not always fully appreciated in the United Kingdom and other 'unitary' countries."

TLS p1123 N 30 '67 200w

MENZIES, SIR ROBERT GORDON. Afternoon light; some memories of men and events. 384p $7.95 Coward-McCann

994 World politics

68-19223

"Sir Robert's professed object is, as he puts it, to come to 'the assistance of tomorrow's historian', by making available to him the 'first hand impressions' of those, like himself, 'concerned in the world drama' and who have known some of the actors in it; in this way he will help the historian 'to see his human beings 'in the round', and to form something like a balanced judgment of great events.'" (TLS) Index.

"[This is a] book for those who want to know [Menzies] better. The trouble is that one knows him no better after reading it than before. To a great extent he is simply repeating his speeches. . . . And what he says about his parents in the Wimmera and about Sir Winston Churchill in England is what he has said about them in speech after speech after speech. The Churchill sections are especially disappointing. . . . There are things he could have written about. . . . There is nothing about his fellow-ministers in the 20 years of his prime ministership, except for the doglike devotion of Sir Eric Harrison. . . . Sir Robert does not explain how he went about his work. It is a pity."

Economist 225:528 N 4 '67 250w

"From 1939 to 1941 and from 1949 to 1966 Sir Robert Menzies was prime minister of Australia. . . . This well-written, urbane volume [contains] recollections and reminiscences, with sidelights on people he has met and admired—Mr. Justice Frankfurter and Dean Acheson, for example, and, of course, Sir Winston Churchill. Despite its length, this is a light, pleasant book, its contents admirably fitting its title. . . . An interesting background book for larger collections in Commonwealth and political history." Norman Horrocks

Library J 93:1889 My 1 '68 210w

"[Will the historian] when he comes to recount and analyse any of the events which are here discussed, find that these memoirs help him much? and will they so fulfil Menzies's purpose in writing? Regrettably the answer is 'very little'—because a compound of well-told stories, admirably suited for television or a newspaper article, as many readers and viewers will have already observed, is of limited value to the scholar (as well as being of limited interest to the general public). Naturally as the Prime Minister of a minor, and not of a major, power, he has less of interest to say than those more intimately and frequently concerned with events of world importance; but unfortunately on what would be of interest he is silent."

TLS p1123 N 30 '67 1700w

MERANTO, PHILIP. The politics of federal aid to education in 1965; a study in political innovation. (Educ. in large cities ser) 144p $5.75; pa $3.25 Syracuse univ. press

379 Federal aid to education 67-16846

This case study of a legislative bill shows "how the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 was adopted. . . . Analyzed are some of the background conditions of the bill—environmental changes . . . constituents, interest groups, political parties, and the Presidency." (Choice) Index.

"The strength of Professor Meranto's book lies in the clear exposition of the necessary conditions for a legislative breakthrough. . . . [He demonstrates] detailed understanding of the end product as substantive policy and of its relationship to the activity that produced it. For these virtues the book is a scholarly contribution. Aside from a few minor embarrassments that should have been corrected in proof . . . there appear to be two weaknesses. These are a misapplication of systems analysis, and a disturbing reluctance to even try to determine the relative importance of the independent variables. . . . On balance, Professor Meranto's discussion of each contributing factor is knowledgeable and convincing. . . . I feel denied something, however . . . what is a good book could have been even better." L. K. Pettit

Am Pol Sci R 62:635 Je '68 900w

"An interesting, well organized, case study in depth. . . . The framework is somewhat pretentious and marred by unneeded jargon of political science. . . . Treated too briefly, though not entirely ignored, are the economic aspects of Federal aid to education. . . . Unfortunately, there is no bibliography and the index is of limited value. Libraries will find this book of less value than will teachers of courses in political science interested in an in-depth analysis of the process by which a bill becomes a law."

Choice 5:537 Je '68 190w

"A readable, if somewhat limited, contribution to the all too sparse literature on the politics of education. Dr. Meranto has allowed himself to be led astray in . . . vital areas through an excessive reliance on the public record. . . . [A major failure] lies in the inadequate recognition accorded those . . . who are not easily identifiable but who significantly determined some portion of the eventual decision. This failure raises serious questions about the author's selection of variables . . . [which] was made almost wholly from published sources. . . . [He] dismisses the significant and exciting conceptual problems that might have confronted him had he investigated the perceptions of the various groups of decision-makers involved. . . . [He] has made a vigorous effort to order the variables in a complex piece of legislative decision-making and has managed to portray these variables in an informative and lively manner. Those who seek an understanding of the legislative process involved in the passage of ESEA will wish to read this case study as a starter." S. J. Trachtenberg

Harvard Ed R 38:185 winter '68 1000w

MERING, JOHN VOLLMER. The Whig party in Missouri. 276p $5 Univ. of Mo. press

329.9778 Whig party (U.S.) Missouri—Politics and government 66-21762

The author traces the "fortunes of the Whig party from its beginnings in 1824 when Clay and Adams men first cooperated as advocates of 'the American System', through consolidation as anti-Jackson party, to its demise in 1855." (Am Hist R) Bibliography. Index.

"Mr. Mering's handling of this melancholy tale is thoughtful and intelligent. He gives a clear and objective portrayal of why, in specific cases, the Whigs acted as they did. Particularly valuable is his chapter on 'Whig Characteristics.' . . . While he does not examine the political affiliations of racial and religious groups, his thorough research methods lead one to assume that such evidence is not available for the period. This is a valuable book." G. G. Van Deusen

Am Hist R 73:603 D '67 240w

"[A] solid monograph. . . . Clearly though soberly written, a valuable study recommended for all undergraduate and graduate libraries and others with collections focused on political history or the Mississippi Valley."

Choice 5:258 Ap '68 190w

Reviewed by C. M. Wiltse

J Am Hist 55:127 Je '68 290w

MERIT students encyclopedia; Bernard S. Cayne, ed.-in-chief; William D. Halsey, editorial director; Louis Shores, senior lib. advisor. 20v il col il maps col maps $289.50 Collier

031 Encyclopedias and dictionaries 68-825

This reference work arranged in dictionary form is designed "for users from fifth grade through junior high school. . . . A feature of the encyclopedia is the dictionary information—pronunciation and definitions or identification—which is given in italics at the beginning of an article. . . . Most major articles have selective bibliographies. . . . [The work contains] 21,667 articles . . . and an alphabetical subject index in volume 20." (Library J)

Reviewed by Cynthia Parsons

Christian Science Monitor pB7 N 2 '67 200w

"Effort has been made to write each article in the vocabulary appropriate to the grade level at which the subject is taught. . . . The subject coverage is broad, with, perhaps, some overemphasis on geography and on American and Canadian history and people. . . . The editors, obviously influenced by young America's fondness for sports, give equal space to Joe Louis, the American boxer, and to Louis XIV. Also predictable, and more justifiable, is an emphasis on science and technology. . . . [However] not every related entry is always listed in the index. This set] . . . most closely resembles World Book Encyclopedia [BRD 1963] (which is still number one in all-round quality and usefulness), and some of its articles read almost as if they were based on those in World Books; its appearance is more attractive than that of Compton's Pictured Encyclopedia [BRD 1963], but its articles lack their scope. . . . This is a useful, accurate encyclopedia." S. L. Kennerly

Library J 93:312 Ja 15 '68 1100w

Reviewed by L. C. Powell

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p2 N 5 '67 300w

"[This set] is also of definite value for older members of the family. . . . The writing is clear, without showing any condescension. The abundant illustrations and maps are of impeccable quality although the text presswork is uneven and sometimes muddy. Color, too, is unstintingly and helpfully employed. As the opening sentence of each article is in dictionary style, . . . the user need go no further for complete identification, but full exposition follows. Geographical entries are accompanied by thumbnail color maps that locate the area regionally. . . . The Merit is roughly comparable in size to several others on the same educational level." D. M. Glixon

Sat R 50:38 N 18 '67 140w

MERIWETHER, JAMES B., ed. Lion in the garden: interviews with William Faulkner, 1926-1962; ed. by James B. Meriwether and Michael Millgate. 298p $6.95 Random house

818 Faulkner, William 68-14497

This collection brings together Faulkner's comments on literature and life arising from "interviews, here and abroad, from the beginning of his career to its end. In addition the texts of the Nagano seminars, which were edited and published in Japan in 1956, are made available again. The interviews and classroom sessions contained in Faulkner in the University [BRD 1960] and Faulkner at West Point [BRD 1964] are otherwise available and are therefore not included. The interviews are presented in the order in which they took place. . . . [There is an essay on] Faulkner's attitude toward interviews and publicity in general, and [a prefatory note to] each interview." (Publisher's note) Index—Faulkner's references to his own works. Index—Faulkner's references to other authors. Index—Thematic.

"All the material in [this] volume has been previously published, and some of it has been recently reprinted, but the editors have rendered students of Faulkner a service by assembling and correcting the texts of these scattered pieces. . . . The occasionally inane and sometimes perverse responses that Faulkner gave to interviewers are worthy of notice only because Faulkner uttered them. . . . Almost a hundred pages are taken up with responses he gave at a series of seminars at Nagano, Japan, and at interviews with other Japanese groups. Despite the barrier of language, Faulkner was on this occasion more effusive, more revealing about himself and his work, than in any other confrontation with individuals or groups. . . . We do gain, from the accumulation of interviews, some valuable insights into the personality and esthetic of this significant American writer." E. P. J. Corbett

America 119:261 S 28 '68 250w

Choice 5:1310 D '68 150w

"Faulkner seems to have befuddled most of his interviewers. His technique was poise, courtesy, an unsmiling refusal to give a straight answer to any personal question. . . . Whatever its origin, this contempt was clearly kept alive by the quality of the questions he was asked. . . . All of this makes for a curious book but not by any means a trivial one, for something of Faulkner emerges, in spite of all his slipperiness, from even the most bumbling of the confrontations."

New Yorker 44:116 Je 15 '68 210w

"[The collection] is impressive in an ironic way, for Faulkner, who tended to regard interviewing as an impertinent invasion of privacy, brought forth thousands of words in reply to questions asked by journalists, critics, and students. . . . [The best of the early interviews] was with Henry Nash Smith. . . . Smith knew Faulkner's books well enough to ask intelligent questions about them, and to that kind of interest Faulkner responded. . . . As was to be expected, there is a good deal of repetition in the collection, but that is not wholly a liability, for it is enlightening to observe the themes to which Faulkner frequently recurred." Granville Hicks

Sat R 51:23 J1 13 '68 600w

MERK, FREDERICK. The Oregon question: essays in Anglo-American diplomacy and politics. 427p $7.95 Harvard univ. press

327.73 Northwest, Pacific, U.S.—Foreign relations—Great Britain, Great Britain—Foreign relations—U.S. 67-14345

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by Walter LaFeber

Am Hist R 73:598 D '67 360w

Reviewed by Oliver Benson

Ann Am Acad 376:180 Mr '68 360w

Reviewed by J. W. Pratt

Pol Sci Q 83:453 S '68 550w

MERKLING, FRANK, ed. The Opera news book of Traviata. 152p il $5 Dodd

782.1 Verdi, Giuseppe. Operas—History and criticism 67-26841

Selecting from the twenty-eight issues of Opera News "dealing with Traviata, this volume presents a brief summary of the plot, articles on the background and music of the opera, and 19 essays by a variety of authors concerning the opera and its history, ranging from one on 'The Oldest Profession in Opera,' through Verdi as musical dramatist and the Verdi/Strepponi liaison as a 'Traviata' in real life, to Dumas as lover and moralist." (Choice) Index.

"Because the essays reflect varying points of view and have appeared over several years, there is, inevitably, much repetition of basic facts, and, perhaps unfortunately for the novice, much contradictory material. . . . More careful editing, with editorial comment, perhaps in footnotes or in a summary, would greatly add to the value of the series. There is very much of value here, and it seems likely that the entire series would be of interest and value to undergraduates."

Choice 5:204 Ap '68 240w

"Contributors include George Marek, Joseph Kerman, J. W. Freeman, Ann Lingg, Ruth Berges, and Spike Hughes. . . . There is little interpretation: the only performance discussed is the world premiere, about which much misinformation has become traditional. The articles are all brief and uncomplicated, intended to stimulate the minds of time-pressed opera lovers. . . . There is no attempt to coordinate the various articles. If I were to single out one writer for special praise, it must be Mary Jane Matz, who contributes three of the pieces." P. L. Miller

Library J 92:4002 N 1 '67 230w

MERLE, ROBERT. Ahmed Ben Bella; tr. by Camilla Sykes; with an introd. by Clare Hollingworth [Eng title: Ben Bella]. 160p pl $5 Walker & co.

965 Ben Bella, Ahmed. Algeria—Politics and government 66-22513

A biography of the former president of Algeria written "on the basis of tape recordings made during 15 interviews. First published in French in 1965. . . . Ben Bella explains the major events in his life from boyhood to presidency." (Choice)

MERLE, ROBERT—Continued

"The translation reads smoothly as it involves the reader in the dynamic story of a new Algeria. . . . This book gives the reader valuable insights into [Ben Bella's] character and personality as well as an inside story of Algeria's bloody fight for independence. Also revealed are the differing points of view among the Algerian nationalists which led to Ben Bella's overthrow in 1965. Should be available in American colleges and universities."

Choice 4:1300 Ja '68 120w

"[Merle] has chosen to present the narrative in the first person in order to preserve the vivacity, the fire, and the occasional picturesque quality of the man. . . . Unfortunately in this purpose he fails, perhaps because of the translation. Furthermore, by this method of presentation, Mr. Merle has avoided the necessity of documenting any of the events described, or of verifying any of the statements made in the book. More seriously, he has not supplied any further information about Ben Bella which might help to explain his character and what shaped his ideas and ideals. There emerges from these pages a two-dimensional portrait of a man who surely must have been a good deal more interesting than that." Jean Deuss

Library J 92:1922 My 15 '67 130w

MERMELSTEIN, DAVID, jt. ed. The great society reader. See Gettleman, M. E.

MERRIAM, ALAN P., jt. comp. Ethnomusicology and folk music. See Gillis, F.

MERRIAM, EVE. Andy all year round; a picture book of four seasons and five senses; pictures by Margo Hoff. unsp $2.95 Funk

525 Seasons—Juvenile literature 67-26037

"This picture book attempts a lyrical instruction in appreciating the changing seasons through the full use of the five senses. In summer Andy plays at the beach: 'LOOK at the sand all tawny-colored like a lion.' Readers are encouraged to feel, taste, listen to and smell the sand as Andy performs these actions. Similar activities are presented with autumn leaves, winter snow, and spring grass. . . . Preschool to grade two." (Library J)

Reviewed by Polly Goodwin

Book World p16 F 25 '68 150w

"Meant to be shared by an adult, the book makes the child aware of his sense impressions, stimulating in him a desire to develop them further. For the adult the book evokes memories of his own early childhood. While more color would have enriched the visual experience, certainly the tactile quality of the illustrator's impressionistic style is in complete harmony with the text." M. M.

Horn Bk 43:743 D '67 150w

"[The] onomatopoeic text is at times too difficult for new readers. Read aloud the book makes an adequate though obvious and pretentious introduction to the concepts of changing seasons and the five senses." Joan Sragow

Library J 92:4245 N 15 '67 130w

MERRILL, JEAN. The elephant who liked to smash small cars [by] Jean Merrill and Ronni Solbert. unsp col il $3.50 Pantheon bks.

Elephants—Stories 67-20215

"'How I love to smash small cars!' sang this destructively playful creature. And he continued doing so until a certain car salesman taught him a lesson that almost flattened him." (America) "Preschool to grade two." (Library J)

Reviewed by Ethna Sheehan

America 117:514 N 4 '67 50w

"This really funny story is told and illustrated with the elegant simplicity of genius. It deserves to become a minor classic. The elephant is irresistible, and his 'Smashing Song' is great fun, too. The book is a good-humored, unpriggish lesson for ardent young smashers—and also a joy." M. L. Birmingham

Commonweal 87:178 N 10 '67 50w

"A minimal book with undistinguished primary-color illustrations—and yet, it will strike a responsive chord in young children who do, after all, enjoy smashing." Dorothy Gunzenhauser

Library J 93:860 F 15 '68 50w

"Picture books no longer frighten or sadden. They are almost dotingly cheerful and reassuring, and when, on occasion, a writer wishes to point a moral he takes elaborate care not to come right out and point it. A good example of a modern picture book with an oblique moral is [the one under review]. . . . By the end of the book . . . the reader (or listener) presumably has received a notion of the Golden Rule, and undoubtedly all the smashing has been good for his little id. The drawings, done in a cheerful, likable fashion, resemble crayon drawings by children, though they clearly were not done by a child . . . and they nicely match the cheerful, likable text." Janet Malcolm

New Yorker 43:157 D 16 '67 200w

MERSEREAU, JOHN. Baron Delvig's Northern flowers, 1825-1832; literary almanac of the Pushkin Pleiad, by John Mersereau, Jr. 267p $8.50 Southern Ill. univ. press

391.7 Russian literature—History and criticism 67-10722

"During his lifetime the . . . Russian poet Alexander Pushkin contributed some 50 pieces, including much of Eugene Onegin, to a literary annual, or almanac, called Northern Flowers. . . . [In this study of that publication the author suggests] that the period of its existence was one of a general shift from poetry to prose. [He gives an account of this gradual shift, and of the general concerns of the Russian romantics." (Book World)]

"Northern Flowers receives scrupulous scholarly attention [here]. . . . The book presents for the first time in English most important material on Russian romanticism." Richard Freedman

Book World p17 Je 1 '68 400w

"Mersereau's drab, academic survey thoroughly catalogues the contents and contributors and talks about literary alignments and tendencies. But for whom was it assembled? To keep all the names straight and to be able to accept Mersereau's encyclopedialike judgments, one must have read the Russian texts; if one reads Russian why read this?"

Choice 5:784 S '68 250w

"The Pushkin period is perhaps the most crucial point in the development of Russian literature, for it links the derivative and imitative earlier Russian literature with the maturity of the years succeeding. . . . Professor Mersereau realizes that the literary almanac 'Northern Flowers' is not representative of all the literary activity carried on in the period, but by systematically surveying all eight issues of the almanac he has provided an excellent study of many of the finest works of Russia's marvelous Golden Age of Poetry. In fine, this seemingly obscure study of an apparently minute subject is neither obscure nor minute. It is a long overdue Western examination of poets and writers, poetry and prose, which for too long have been the exclusive property of Russian scholars."

Va Q R 44:cxvii summer '68 130w

MERTON, THOMAS. Cables to the ace; or, Familiar liturgies of misunderstanding. 60p $3.75; pa $1.25 New directions

811 68-15881

A new volume of poetry by the Gethsemani Abbey Trappist monk.

"[This volume] is a challenge—and an often delightful one—from the impudent prologue to the rather derisive epilogue. However light the thrusts at the modern world may be they are still forceful; the worlds of irony and parody are balanced by some profoundly moving insights and genuine lyrical passages. The reader is offered a mixed bag that may not be to everyone's taste, but the serious student of modern poetry, whether professional or amateur, will find much here that is rewarding. Libraries with a wide circulation in modern poetry may find this book a worthwhile accession." Elizabeth Nelson

Library J 93:2246 Je 1 '68 110w

"Merton's latest book is an urgent message to the age. It is revelation in the way that any liturgy is revelation. But [the subtitle] suggests the paradox of his book—the familiar made suddenly inexplicable, communication turned to incoherence, and revelation reduced to a low, internal mumble. Merton has turned to techniques of the absurd, of the practicing anti-poets, to achieve a new expression. . . . This provocative book is filled with a great deal of negation—anti-violence, anti-science, anti-mass culture, and the technique of anti-poetry. But, as a liturgy must be, it is finally concerned with faith. It is essentially a book of love poetry. For all the irony, parody, and wit of this interesting volume, it is poetry rich with affirmative possibility."

Va Q R 44:civ summer '68 250w

MERTZ, BARBARA, jt. auth. Two thousand years in Rome. See Mertz, R.

MERTZ, RICHARD. Two thousand years in Rome, by Richard and Barbara Mertz; drawings by Betty Jean Sheedy. 384p il $6.95 Coward-McCann

945 Rome (City)—History. Rome (City)—Description—Guide books 68-11876

The authors' goal is "to appeal to the tourist interested in following the history of the Eternal City by guiding him through its surviving monuments, ruins, and works of art. [They proceed] from prehistoric through classical, medieval, Renaissance, and baroque Rome to the modern metropolis." (Library J) Bibliography. Indexes of names and of places. General index.

"A subjective and easy-to-read book. . . . Throughout the book the authors puncture various myths. . . . While they give lists as varied as those of the major works of Caravaggio to be found in Rome, and places for picnics, they do not cite hotels, and, an even wiser omission, they recommend no restaurants, knowing full well how often, when this is done, the tourist business increases, prices soar, and the quality of food deteriorates. Their unusual book is useful for the alert and historically minded tourist, and for those who may not yet know Rome as well as they think." J. A. Boromé

Library J 93:78 Ja 1 '68 300w

"[The Mertz's] guidebook quite properly takes for granted the traveler's historical ignorance and provides succinct introductions to the various epochs of Rome's past. . . . Replete with heresies, emperors and popes, their presentation is at turns anecdotal and sweepingly general—a refreshing antidote for the usual mindlessness of sightseeing. The first chapters are the most evocative, skillfully mixing archeology and history. . . . The book's weakness is anticipated in its title. The succession of years . . . is too speedy for the less than frantically dedicated tourist and finally perhaps too sketchy for him. Maps of the proposed walking itineraries would have been useful."

N Y Times Bk R p39 Ap 28 '68 190w

MERWIN, W. S. The lice: poems. 80p $4.50; pa $1.95 Atheneum pubs.

811. 67-25473

A new collection of poems by the author of The Moving Target (BRD 1964). These poems have appeared in various literary journals.

"[The poet] has abandoned formal metrics and punctuation, moving into loose two-stress and three-stress lines which join images together in a steady rhythmical cycle. His new poems, which when gathered together seem like serial fragments of a much longer work, explore the elusiveness of our perceptions ('Everything that does not need us is real'), express the vagueness of our intimations of ourselves ('Where else am I walking even now/ Looking for me'), expose the uncertainty of anything but the search for veracity ('But we were not born to survive/ Only to live'), and achieve all this in a groping syntax that reenacts the movements of the mind. Merwin has invaded dangerous and uneasy areas of consciousness, and if his new poetic style sometimes seems forbidding and opaque, it may be the resistance of the reader's perceptions that makes it so." Peter Davison

Atlantic 221:142 F '68 250w

Reviewed by Louis Simpson

Harper 237:76 Ag '68 70w

"These are almost exclusively cerebral poems that tease the mind in a maddening game of verbal permutations: no sooner is one certain of a reading, when, because of external formlessness, an emphasis shifts and the whole interpretive structure crumbles. . . . This being said, Mr. Merwin must be praised for the skill (he rolls his words around like loaded dice) and perceptivity he has brought to this mode. There are a few times when the imagery works so well to inform the whole poem that he achieves major poetry in spite of his lack of external poetic form." T. E. Luddy

Library J 93:87 Ja 1 '68 180w

Reviewed by Louise Bogan

New Yorker 44:63 D 28 '68 40w

Reviewed by Hayden Carruth

Poetry 112:421 S '68 410w

"Merwin has really given us two books. The poems in the first half . . . are very much anti-poetry, urgent and bristling with authority. . . . The second half of the collection is made of poems put together according to the conventions of what we call logic, and speaking in voices we know. Their honesty is almost painful, and their feeling of foreboding, of the end, is deep and quietly terrible. Here I think is Merwin at his finest. . . . While there are curious pieces in the first part of this book which I have not been able to reach, Merwin has long since taught me to trust him. He is a poet to follow wherever he goes."

Miller Williams

Sat R 51:32 Mr 9 '68 400w

Reviewed by S. F. Morse

Va Q R 44:507 summer '68 170w

Reviewed by Laurence Lieberman

Yale R 57:597 summer '68 1700w

MERYMAN, RICHARD. Andrew Wyeth. See Wyeth, A.

MESSICK, HANK. Syndicate in the sun. 248p $5.95 Macmillan (N Y)

364.1 Crime and criminals—Florida 68-12071

"Believing that 'organized crime rules south Florida' and that 'the Miami area was the crime capital of the country,' Mr. Messick went to Florida in late 1965 and immediately began a series of . . . articles for the Miami Herald which uncovered surreptitious but well-defined connections between politics, law enforcement, and Big Crime." (Library J) Index.

"It has become Messick's belief that our society has become so apathetic and amoral that substantial progress against organized crime is practically impossible. A person acquainted with southern Florida, its politics and newspapers, will find this book an engrossing study of names, places, events and conditions. For readers like myself, this book can be read as a warning that organized crime swiftly takes over unless our law enforcement agencies are beyond corruption and reproach; and that we are responsible for and deserve the kind of police protection we get." W. H. Scweder

Best Sell 28:14 Ap 1 '68 250w

"Much different from his first book, The Silent Syndicate [BRD 1967], in which he objectively traced the origins and growth of organized crime in the United States, this [is a] fast-moving, firsthand account of Mr. Messick's recent activities as a crime reporter and investigator in Dade and Broward Counties, southern Florida. . . . His search for evidence led to intrigues with frightened witnesses, arrogant and corrupt cops, big-nosed prostitutes, cheerful bagmen, would-be governors. . . . A highly readable book on a top priority subject." K. F. Kister

Library J 93:2684 Jl '68 190w

Reviewed by Sergeant Cuff

Sat R 51:50 Ap 27 '68 30w

METGE, ALICE JOAN. See Metge, J.

METGE, JOAN. The Maoris of New Zealand. 245p il $6 Humanities press

390.09931 Maoris

67-17669

An account of Maori history, culture and social organization. Bibliography.

"Metge is to be congratulated on her comprehensive brief volume with its extensive bibliography. While the cultural data are not presented in the functional form of social anthropology and while other Maori scholars may dislike the handling of specific sections, this handbook with its 1961 social and economic statistics belongs as a basic reference in all general collections."

METGE, JOAN—Continued

Choice 5:880 S '68 100w

"The author writes with evident attachment to the Maoris, among whom she has lived for a number of years, and with a tactful apprehension of the difficulties still confronting them in their continuing adjustment to the ways of the dominant pakeha. Her writing is clear and sober, factual enough to inform the serious student but also untechnical enough for the general reader. . . . She scrupulously abstains from any personal, political, or theoretical observations such as might have obstructed her purpose of conveying succinctly the maximum reliable knowledge about her subjects. . . . [Readers who have known Maoris personally] will find their understanding of them deepened."

TLS p621 J1 13 '67 300w

METZ, CHARLES V. Divorce and custody for men; a guide and primer designed exclusively to help men win just settlements. 147p $4.95 Doubleday

301.42 Divorce 68-10567

The head of "an organization which counsels men with divorce problems, here makes a . . . plea to change state laws on divorce, alimony, and custody." (Library J)

"[Mr. Metz] gives advice, some that could be grounds for divorce if followed, such as how to prepare your case while still blissfully married. He attacks inept lawyers, callous judges, avaricious wives, nosy social workers. . . . Invaluable legal and general information for the troubled hubby, but . . . he had better keep this book from his wife. For public libraries, large law libraries, and prison libraries." El. J. Bander

Library J 93:200 Ja 15 '68 130w

N Y Times Bk R p27 Mr 17 '68 120w

MEYER, EDITH PATTERSON. That remarkable man: Justice Oliver Holmes. 189p il $4.75 Little

B or 92 Holmes, Oliver Wendell—Juvenile literature 67-19797

The author describes "the man, his background and his dedication to his chosen profession." (Best Sell) Bibliography. Index. "Grades six to nine." (Library J)

Best Sell 27:394 Ja 1 '68 80w

Reviewed by J. R. Waltz

Book World p14 Ap 7 '68 260w

Horn Bk 44:190 Ap '68 210w

"This biography follows rather closely the general outline and the small details and incidents used in C. D. Bowen's adult biography Yankee from Olympus [BRD 1944]. . . . Holmes' brilliant mind, his keen wit and love for life come across with strength. . . . A sympathetic, well-written, and interesting portrait." J. G. Russell

Library J 92:4624 D 15 '67 160w

"If one is looking for a picture of Holmes as a person, this chronology of his life from his Boston childhood to his retirement as a Supreme Court Justice should satisfy that need. However, if one is concerned with the impact left by Holmes, better look elsewhere."

N Y Times Bk R p28 Ja 21 '68 40w

"Holmes emerges as a man of warmth and charm . . . although there is little resiliency in the writing. Nevertheless, because Holmes's career was of great significance and his personality of such stature, the material transcends the rather staid style." Zena Sutherland

Sat R 50:48 N 11 '67 130w [YA]

MEYER, HOWARD N. Colonel of the black regiment; the life of Thomas Wentworth Higginson. 346p il $5.50; lib bdg $5.31 Norton

B or 92 Higginson, Thomas Wentworth 67-15445

An account of the life and times of "a 19th century author, abolitionist, women's rights reformer and soldier." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"[A] long, detailed, well-written account of the life and times of Higginson. . . . Commander of a Negro regiment during the Civil War, Higginson learned to love and respect his men as individuals, a radical attitude for his time. With small but well-leaded print and generally attractive format this is for good readers, particularly interested in this period of American history. Meyer's is the only biography written for young people about this crusader." Marilyn Goldstein

Library J 92:3866 O 15 '67 100w [YA]

"Higginson is worthy of a thorough, notable biography, one that would help us understand the intellectual ferment of 19th-century America. Unfortunately Mr. Meyer's portrait of the many-faceted man is not up to this standard. It is at times dull, and at others, hardly dispassionate. Often we are left to wonder about the motives and attitudes behind Higginson's actions. Too much of him remains a mystery." A. L. Todd

N Y Times Bk R p30 Mr 3 '68 210w

[YA]

MEYER, JEROME. The big book of family games; the most complete treasury of fun-filled games and activities for family and friends. 191p il $4.95 Hawthorn bks.

793 Amusements. Games 67-27334

This new collection "includes something for every occasion, and for different age groups. Some old favorites appear with a new twist, and there are complete directions for the games everyone knows but can't remember well enough to teach to someone else. There are games for trips, holidays, dress-up, and pencil-and-paper games. There is a section of tricks, magic and puzzles. A special chapter is given to games for the very young." (Library J)

"A handy reference book for homes, schools, camps, or any place people enjoy amusing themselves with games." N. H. Purcell

Library J 92:2800 Ag '67 110w

Reviewed by D. M. Glixon

Sat R 51:63 My 18 '68 80w

MEYER, LEONARD B. Music, the arts, and ideas; patterns and predictions in twentieth-century culture. 342p $7.95 Univ. of Chicago press

780.1 Music—Philosophy. Music—History and criticism. Music—Analysis, appreciation 67-25515

The author offers a statement "on esthetics, criteria of value in assessing great works of music, and on compositional practices and theories of the present day. . . . In [Part I] 'Prelude: As It Has Been,' he . . . applies the information theory to value of musical works and finishes by asking whether our culture has reached the end of the Renaissance. In [Part II] 'As It Is, and Perhaps Will Be,' he predicts that music, and by inference the arts in general, will have reached a point of stasis. In 'Formalism in Music: Queries and Reservations,' he delves . . . into the conflicting maze of theories and practices of leading contemporary composers." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"An extremely valuable statement. . . . Meyer (Chicago) has the advantage of being both a professional musician and a professional philosopher. . . . Throughout the book Meyer quotes, interprets, and successfully analyzes a multitude of writings by composers, philosophers, and musical theorists of our generation. In some respects, he appears to have changed his mind since publication of his previous treatise, Emotion and Meaning in Music [BRD 1957]. This book is a necessary addition to the library of any serious composer, musical scholar, or listener concerned with the musical mainstream of the 20th century."

Choice 5:634 J1 '68 210w

"[This book is built on a] misapprehension. Professor Meyer believes that the future of music will be 'characterized, not by the cumulative development of a single style, but by the coexistence of a number of alternative styles in a kind of 'dynamic steady-state.' This vision stems largely from writers in social science, for example, McNeill, Hellbroner, and Mandelbaum; through it he fits the arts concepts like multiple causation, the decline rate of technological scientific change, and the reduced possibility of discovery in the geographical-cultural sense. . . . If art is unique, and independent of developments outside its sphere, then we must wonder—as I do—about the final usefulness of studying social change (or stasis) to understand artistic change." Guy Marco

Library J 92:4504 D 15 '67 440w

Reviewed by Gilbert Chase
Music Lib Assn Notes 25:225 D '68
1350w

MEYER, MICHAEL A. The origins of the modern Jew; Jewish identity and European culture in Germany, 1749-1824 [ed. by Robert H. Tenenhouse]. 249p $3.50 Wayne state univ. press

910.03 Judaism. Jews in Germany—Intellectual life 67-12384

"This historical study presents an analysis of the question of Jewish identity as it manifested itself initially within German Jewry. . . . My central concern has been to probe the reactions of individual Jews, expressed in both word and deed, to the circumstance of their Jewishness. Thus I continually applied a single question to a wide variety of source material: What does being a Jew mean to this individual? The intent was not any personal evaluation of the answer, but an understanding of what produced a particular response and an exploration of its consequences. . . . There is little attempt to seek out covert economic or psychological motivations. . . . The effort is rather to discover how the impact of challenging values was consciously met by those German Jews who first became aware of European culture and refused to ignore it." (Pref) Bibliography. Index.

"This brief doctoral essay deals with a transitional era of modern Jewish history which embraced, in Dr. Meyer's conception, both the intellectual awakening and the spiritual and psychological disjuncture of the middle-class German Jew. . . . Meyer explores the dilemma of Jewish protoemancipation with sensitivity and perception. He is at his best in his refreshing evaluation of such underrated figures in the early Christian-Jewish dialogue as the Marquis d'Argens, Christian Gellert, Charles Bonnet, and others even less well known, and in his deft interweaving of European and Jewish cultural patterns. Yet his study is not without its occasionally serious shortcomings. . . . In devoting the major portion of his essay to a small handful of rather familiar historical personalities, Meyer has not convincingly projected their cultural malaise onto the larger backdrop even of the literate elite of German Jewry. . . . [His] biographies in and of themselves are surely erudite and eloquent, an impressive maiden effort suggestive of even richer future creativity." H. M. Sachar

Am Hist R 73:1177 Ap '68 480w

"[It is] hard to see why the book ends with 1824. . . . We are, however, grateful for what we have been given. Dr. Meyer's contribution consists not so much in the presentation of new facts and novel syntheses, but rather in his interesting description of how the Jews were affected by the shifting cultural background in Europe. . . . Perhaps Dr. Meyer did not see it as part of his task to point out that German culture, rather than Jewish traditionalism, was at fault in the spectacular failure of the struggle he described. But he might at least have found a way of avoiding the impression left by the 'heroes' of his book that the Jews of their day were all their genteel critics accused them of being." Solomon Grayzel

Ann Am Acad 378:160 J1 '68 700w

Choice 5:672 J1 '68 90w

"Professor Meyer, of the California school of the Hebrew Union College-Jewish Institute of Religion, deals with German-Jewish intellectual and religious history during the period starting with Moses Mendelssohn and ending with Leopold Zunz, the period of the Enlightenment and of early German nationalism. . . . The question of identity is still relevant, and any student of minorities can gain insight from this book. Because of the thorough, up-to-date scholarship of the work, it should be read by anyone interested in European as well as Jewish history. . . . Highly recommended." John Neufeld

Library J 92:2568 J1 '67 150w

MEYER, MICHAEL C. Mexican rebel; Pascual Orozco and the Mexican Revolution, 1910-1915. 172p pl $5.50 Univ. of Neb. press

B or 92 Orozco, Pascual 67-10667

An assistant professor of history at the University of Nebraska seeks "to analyze the General's revolutionary career and to trace the course of the 1910 revolution in Chihuahua. . . . [The author also attempts] to unravel the maze of revolts and counter-revolts which so often render incomprehensible the first five years of the Mexican upheaval." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"[Meyer] examines, meticulously using often contradictory sources, the whole series of charges and criticisms that prorevolutionary writers have leveled against Orozco, discarding some and moderating others. Orozco emerges as a brilliant military leader whose campaigns, here chronicled in detail, reveal organizational skill, tactical acumen, and field generalship. Politically, Orozco was a warrior with revolutionary ideals and tremendous, almost charismatic, popular appeal. These assets were, however, seriously encumbered by a political naiveté that became so indefensible in the latter years that the somewhat sympathetic author cannot avoid the conclusion that Orozco degenerated into intellectual incompetence. . . . I wish that the author had been able to document more fully the role of Gonzalo Enríle, who allegedly was a key link between Orozco and conservative backers. . . . There is little mention of the actual conduct of the Huerta regime or, more importantly, of Orozco's reactions. This is an interesting and useful study, characterized by scholarly integrity."

Am Hist R 73:634 D '67 500w

"Orozco, the much maligned hero of 1911 who later turned against Madero and supported the Military Government of Huerta, is for the first time placed in relation to his times. Meyer argues that he was not solely an ambitious Caudillo but the well-meaning representative of the Northern Mestizo's desire for land. The work is well documented, drawing upon nine archives as well as many newspapers and Spanish monographs. It throws much light on relations between Madero, Zapata, Villa, and Orozco. A must for students of the Mexican Revolution."

Choice 4:1308 Ja '68 130w

MEYER, ROY W. History of the Santee Sioux; United States Indian policy on trial. 434p il maps $7.50 Univ. of Neb. press

970.3 Santee Indians

67-19161

"This book traces the history of the Santee Sioux from the first European contacts about 1660 to the present; it shows the effects of these contacts and of the later westward movement in the United States on the aboriginal culture." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"The Santee story is complete with the usual cast of characters and sordid events: incompetent agents, zealous and bigoted missionaries, confused and faction ridden Indians, grasping traders, land hungry settlers, unfair treaties, and pathetic migrations. . . . [Their history] could typify the plight of our most deprived minority. The period before 1882 is the most thoroughly researched, but it is all well written and rings true. . . . Should be of interest to both the scholar and the general reader."

Choice 5:1034 O '68 200w

"[The author's] overall framework is not only an outsider's view but also an ethnocentric one in organization and frequently in specific phraseology. Sympathy is no substitute for the anthropological theory that would have provided greater insight into the available white-produced documents. For lack of ethnology, Meyer produced not a history but a chronicle of some Santee-white relations. . . . Although Meyer stresses the significance of the missionaries, he utilizes little of their voluminous correspondence to corroborate or to supplement government agents' reports. . . . In fact, the whole book fails to place United States-Santee relations into the larger context of Indian-white relations in general." R. F. Berkhof

J Am Hist 55:376 S '68 350w

"[The] associate professor of English at Mankato State College has written a lucid, informative account of the Santee Sioux. . . . He gives particular attention to the experiences of the splinter groups and their dispersal after the abortive Minnesota uprising in 1862. Neither time nor the settlers' desire for Indian lands would allow a transitional period between two cultures, and the result is seen today in Indian poverty. Yet, as Mr. Meyer points out, the Indians have not vanished, they retain some cultural identity, and there is hope for a change of attitude among whites. This thought-provoking book should be widely read." T. W. Wright

Library J 93:1629 Ap 15 '68 120w

MEYERS, BERT. The dark birds. 68p $3.95
Doubleday 811 68-10577

This is the author's second book. A number of the poems were published in a different form in his first collection, Early Rain, and in such periodicals as Ante, Choice, and The Literary Review.

"[The author] is trying to find images for ordinary life that will at the same time reveal depths. . . . It is truth and poetry that are in short supply. I hope that Meyers will continue to provide them." Louis Simpson
Harper 237:74 Ag '68 230w

"Although written on topics, ranging from 'Pigeons' to 'Picture Framing,' these poems have their context in the awarenesses and sensitivities of Mr. Meyers, who translates the forms of the objective world into the feelings of his subjective one. . . . [This], however, is generally limited to the apprehension of a meaningless existence in an absurd world. . . . [The result is a] romantic obscurity that requires the reader to accept the poet's point of view to gain access to any aesthetic values that the poems might contain. . . . [Some] are simple statements affirming the paradoxes existing in a solipsistic world." Walter Waring
Library J 93:557 F 1 '68 170w

"[Meyers] continues and refines his use of clean, hard imagery which was the touchstone of his first book. . . . Thematically, Meyers' work retains its sense of private and public hurt; the poems are songlike, and this is the secret of their success in dealing with the large concerns as well as the smaller ones. We haven't often experienced social criticism sung in autotelic poetry. . . . The slenderness of the song, the tenderness, in fact, of the device, plays off against the toughness of what is being said." Gene Frumkin
Nation 207:344 O 7 '68 900w

MEYNAUD, JEAN. Trade unionism in Africa; a study of its growth and orientation [by] Jean Meynaud & Anisse Salah-Bey; tr. by Angela Brench. 242p $11.50 Barnes & Noble

331.88096 Labor unions. Labor and laboring classes—Africa. Africa—Politics [67-82061]

"A general survey, covering both North and Sub-Saharan Africa." (Choice) Originally published in French under the title Le Syndicalisme Africain; Evolution et Perspectives.

"As the authors of this book sensibly assert, African trade-unions now can usually do no more than to express the discontent of some workers; in most areas they are no longer capable of bargaining in industrial affairs. They also argue cogently that strong classical trade-unionism is an obstacle to economic development. . . . Despite the general acceptability of its conclusions, this is an inferior book that adds little that is original to the study of trade-unionism in Africa. The authors obtained their data largely secondhand, and their examination of the problem is derivative and unimaginative. Despite a pretentious theoretical framework, the approach is decidedly descriptive. Their subject is important, but a definitive analysis must still be awaited." R. I. Rotberg
Am Hist R 73:870 F '68 380w

"Much of the book is now outdated [and] . . . the translation is a poor one. . . . The basic thesis of the book rests upon a belief about the pre-eminence of politics in Africa: unions must deal with this fact of life by becoming politicized. This thesis, which has had broad support in the past has been challenged by a number of scholars in recent years. . . . The strength of this book rests on its breadth of coverage. It is one of the few studies which is strong on francophonic and anglophonic Africa. Its documentation and coverage of the literature of the field are impressive, although paradoxically, basic reports from labor departments are hardly cited. . . . Finally, the book conveys a tone of having been commissioned by the International Labour Organization. Although intended as an introduction to the study of trade unionism in Africa, [it] will be too advanced for most readers without basic knowledge of the subject." W. H. Friedland
Ann Am Acad 376:169 Mr '68 550w

"To date there have been few surveys of the political activity of African trade unions, and none has achieved the scope of geography and subject matter of this book. . . . [It] includes an excellent section on the former French-African countries, and a highly useful 80-page reference section, making it an important addition for African area studies collections. For all its merits the book has several serious defects. As often occurs when two persons write the same book, there is a noticeable difference in the style and quality of the writing; in this case the differences are fundamental, resulting in contradictions within the text. . . . In the period of four years [since the original publication], a number of crucial assumptions have been overturned by more recent empirical research; the result is a much needed survey of labor politics in Africa—unfortunately already musty with age."

Choice 4:1286 Ja '68 210w

"Within the limits of their material [the authors] provide a lucid, if schematic, survey of the origins and political context of African unions, and, for English-speaking readers, a valuable summary of the situation in North Africa. They skillfully trace the problems of the emergence of trade unions before large-scale industrialization and of the conflict between European models and African conditions. And yet the more one reads the greater is the feeling that perhaps the real failure with this kind of operation is that the researchers are using artificial categories to describe a very complex process. By discussing 'trade unions' the emphasis is inevitably on the attempts of elites . . . to manipulate workers. In itself this is an interesting study, but it lacks any sense of the industrial, rural and urban context of the workers themselves."

TLS p699 Ag 3 '67 700w

MICHAELIDES, CONSTANTINE E. Hydra: a Greek island town; its growth and form; pub. for Washington university. 93p 11 maps $10.50 Univ. of Chicago press

711 Hydra, Greece

66-20584

"The town of Hydra . . . close to the Eastern coast of the Peloponnesus, represents . . . the archetype of an amphitheatrical Mediterranean coastal town. . . . The author analyzes the components of the town, supported by [photographs]." (J Aesthetics) Bibliography.

"At Hydra contour lines, solar orientation, defense, the hard realities of getting a day's work done, limited building technology, and the structure of the family appear to have shaped the town completely. This longed-for clarity of the relationship between form and function makes the Michaelides book worthwhile because the subject so eloquently demonstrates the principle. . . . [However, the book] presents a dilemma. It neither addresses itself to the questions raised by our interest nor does it come to grips with the peculiarities of the case studied in sufficient depth to reveal the secrets of this island town form. . . . What we need at this juncture is the conceptual breakthrough connecting Hydra to Habitat in a way responsive to the realities of city building in the second half of the 20th century." Roger Montgomery

Arch Forum 129:87 Jl '68 1200w

"The Greek architectural historian, teaching at Washington University, St. Louis, has dedicated a fascinating monograph to this unique island-city. . . . The development of this maritime community . . . is of importance here because of the fact that its successive historical phases had practically no influence on the shape of the settlement whose growth was dictated by natural conditions only. . . . Excellent photographs. . . . [Michaelides] proves that seemingly chaotic clusters of houses, erected on slopes of different angles, still may fuse into an aesthetically unique Gestalt equally interesting to the historian of city planning and to the general aesthetician of architecture." Paul Zucker

J Aesthetics 27:118 fall '68 170w

MICHEL, ALOYS ARTHUR. The Indus rivers; a study of the effects of partition. 595p maps $12.50 Yale univ. press

333.9 Water resources development 67-13444

A study by an American scholar of the "technical problems involved in dividing between two new countries a system of irrigation planned to be administered as a homogeneous unit, and with the human passions which at every turn complicated their solution." (TLS)

"After exhaustive treatment of the background of partition of the Indus River, not all of which is essential to the reader's understanding of its effects, the author eventually reaches the main topic on page 195. . . . Economic aspects of current and projected water resource development receive less attention [than] . . . complexities of the irrigation, siltation, waterlogging, and soil salinity . . . Professor Michel succeeds well in his purpose of providing information on all political and physical aspects of development under the Indus Waters Treaty. . . His appraisal merits attention because of his intimate knowledge of the region. . . The book is a valuable source of facts and insights for historians, political scientists, and geographers concerned with South Asia. In my opinion, the work would have gained in utility by condensation." J. E. Brush

Am Hist R 73:885 F '68 350w

"[The story] begins in earnest with the mid-nineteenth-century British annexation of Punjab. . . The narrative throughout is one of conflict, sometimes overt and bloody, as at the partition of 1947, or again [as] in late 1965, more often a conflict of ideas. . . Nor were matters settled by the signing, after eight years of negotiations, of the Indus Waters Treaty of 1960. . . Whatever the nature of the dispute, the reader is treated to a full, lucid, and remarkably dispassionate account of the issues at stake, the manner in which they were resolved, the reasons why they were so resolved, and the implications of the whole. Though much that Michel discusses is technical, he manages to explain in laymen's terms exactly what is involved, which is no mean feat. Additionally, his nine clear, black and white maps, greatly facilitate our following the complex thread of his story." J. E. Schwartzberg

Ann Am Acad 375:218 Ja '68 550w

"Michel's impressive volume is scholarship on the grand scale—a fine example of the contribution which American savants, with great resources at their disposal, are making to the elucidation of Asian problems. . . In approaching this formidable task, he has supplemented his own investigation on the spot by talking to almost everyone who had a hand in shaping the final outcome—engineers, bankers, politicians, statesmen, soldiers, administrators. . . One of the most satisfying features of this admirable book is the author's grasp of how the people of Pakistan and of India look at things. . . This book will not please those who are deeply committed either to the Indian or to the Pakistani view of things. But the author, who recognizes this, need not apologize to either side. His work stands four-square."

TLS p1105 N 23 '67 500w

MICHEL, AGNES KIRSOPP. The calendar of the Roman republic. 227p il $7.50 Princeton Univ. press

529 Calendars

67-12349

"This book reconstructs the pre-Julian calendar of Rome on the basis of epigraphical and literary evidence, and analyzes its relation to the solar and lunar years. . . Technical discussions of such matters as the Roman method of intercalation, the characters of the days, and the history of the trinum nundinum are presented in appendices." (Publisher's note) Index.

"In this scholarly, well documented study, Michels . . . has placed all classical scholars in her debt. There is no other study, at least in English, to compare with this. She has employed a wealth of primary sources, mainly Latin inscriptions to develop her hypothesis. . . Her analysis and synthesis of how and why the Romans constructed their calendar shows both good judgment and common sense. . . She shows how the varied contents of the calendar reflected the political and religious life of Rome in the first century BC. . . In an oversized end-chart, she has attempted a reconstruction of a republican calendar, a task which shows her ingenuity and impeccable scholarship. Highly recommended for all liberal arts colleges, and an indispensable tool for all classics majors."

Choice 5:1196 N '68 150w

"Unlike some recent studies of the Athenian calendar, this work is marked by humility, recognition that the calendar concerns people, and absence of rancor. . . A well-argued case, a well-written text, a well-produced book." C. W. J. Eliot

Class World 61:422 J1 22 '68 190w

MICHENER, JAMES A. Iberia: Spanish travels and reflections: phot. by Robert Vavra [maps by Jean Paul Tremblay]. 818p $10; ltd ed $25 Random house

914.6 Spain—Description and travel, Spain—Civilization 67-22623

A "travelogue and interpretation of Spanish art, history, customs, politics, and . . . mystique. . . [The author] gives one chapter each to an examination of ten of Spain's leading cities. In two additional chapters he discusses 'The Bulls' and 'Las Marismas,' an immense wildlife preserve in southern Spain." (Library J) Index.

"[The author] sums up the observations of four decades. Yet [this book] is more than a travelogue; it incorporates the author's continuing search for the mystic or romantic aspects of life. Iberia begins with a series of speculations. Why was Spain not altogether a part of Europe? Why in 1492 did it reverse the pattern of ethnic tolerance which had earlier been characteristic of its society? . . . The book does not attempt to answer these questions systematically, although it draws together much relevant material. . . [The book is] neither coherent nor analytical. But it is unfailingly interesting. Michener does not resolve the speculations with which he began. But he introduces the reader to a civilization which is not quite identical with his own." Oscar Handlin

Atlantic 221:112 My '68 400w

Reviewed by Richard Conlin

Best Sell 28:152 J1 1 '68 410w

Reviewed by Alan Pryce-Jones

Book World p1 My 5 '68 1300w

"[This book] is far and away the most satisfying look at Spain this reviewer has come across in years of reading everything about that country upon which he could lay his hands.

. . . One suspects [Michener] has gotten to know more of Spain than most Spaniards. . . But there are some weak spots in the account. For one thing, Mr. Michener takes too lenient a position on the Franco dictatorship for this reviewer. His approach is matter-of-fact on the Spanish Civil War of the 1930's and on Franco's subsequent 30-year reign. . . [And] he virtually ignores the plight of the Catalonians in Spain's north who have been repressed by Spanish governments for centuries. But this is small carping when viewed against the strengths and virtues of Michener's Spain."

J. N. Goodsell

Christian Science Monitor p9 My ■ '68 600w

"A long, discursive, beautifully written travelogue . . . [illustrated with] photographs and several maps and charts. . . Destined to be a best seller, and public libraries are advised to prepare themselves. Also recommended highly for academic libraries." R. D. Harlan

Library J 93:1472 Ap 1 '68 170w

Reviewed by Helen Jacob

Library J 93:3997 O 15 '68 90w [YA]

Reviewed by Raymond Carr

N Y Rev of Books 11:29 D 19 '68 350w

"The Spain [the author] enjoys is the Spain of the village squares, with a good restaurant nearby and a cronista to talk to. . . It is a perfectly valid Spain, but it is very bourgeois and has very little relation to the Spain of Goya, or even of Hemingway. . . It is all very decorous, and sad, and far away, with no urgency, no flashing of swords. The quiet, untroubled voices discuss events safely buried in the chronicles. What is surprising is that there are so few surprises. There are no adventures. . . And the pages he devotes to Teruel are clouded by an obscure sense of guilt. They are the best pages, for they permit us to come closer to Michener and closer to Spain." Robert Payne

N Y Times Bk R p8 My 12 '68 1300w

New Yorker 44:160 My 25 '68 100w

Reviewed by R. A. Sokolov

Newsweek 71:112 My 6 '68 700w

Reviewed by Benjamin Welles

Sat R 51:28 My 4 '68 1050w

TLS p1259 N 7 '68 600w

MICHOTTE, EDMOND. Richard Wagner's visit to Rossini (Paris 1860); and. An evening at Rossini's in Beau-Sejour (Passy) 1858; tr. from the French and annotated, with an introd. and appendix by Herbert Weinstock. 144p il $7.50 Univ. of Chicago press

780.92 Wagner, Richard. Rossini, Gioacchino Antonio 68-16706

This volume contains translations of the author's booklets on Rossini—La Visite de R. Wagner à Rossini, published in 1906, and Souvenirs: Une Soirée chez Rossini à Beau-Séjour (Passy) 1858. "An Appendix adds translations of brief accounts by Eduard Hanslick . . . and

MICHOTTE, EDMOND—Continued
by Emil Naumann . . . of calls on Rossini." (Pref) Index.

"[This is] valuable as a quasi-primary source, but much of this same material can be found in [H.] Weinstock's Rossini [BRD 1968]." Choice 5:1316 D '68 130w

Reviewed by P. L. Miller
Library J 93:2876 Ag '68 210w

"This [is a] handsome though slim and sometimes typographically wayward volume. The first and possibly more valuable of the two [accounts] is 'Richard Wagner's Visit to Rossini (Paris, 1860).' Doubts have been expressed about its reliability because the booklet appeared 46 years after the event; but, as the author and his translator assure us, the account of the composers' conversation was based on notes of almost stenographic thoroughness and all the internal evidence points to its authenticity. Wagner explaining his theories of the music drama and Rossini recalling his encounters as a young man with Beethoven, Weber and Mendelssohn are heady stuff indeed. Hardly less fascinating is Rossini's bemoaning . . . the lost art of bel canto and expounding its principles with wit and authority in the second booklet." D. C. Goddard

N Y Times Bk R p22 S 8 '68 290w
TLS p1331 N 28 '68 220w

MICKIEWICZ, ELLEN PROPPER. Soviet political schools; the Communist party adult instruction system. 190p $6.50 Yale univ. press 329.947 Communist party (Russia) 67-13445

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by J. J. Schwartz
Am Pol Sci R 62:276 Mr '68 700w

Reviewed by A. A. Liveright
J Higher Ed 39:293 My '68 550w
J Pol Econ 75:903 D '67 200w

MIDDLETON, DREW. America's stake in Asia. 240p $5.95 Lippincott

327.73 U.S.—Foreign relations—Asia. Asia—Foreign relations—U.S. 68-19831

"The book's theme is twofold: the struggle of the small states—South Vietnam, Laos, Malaysia, Thailand, and Singapore—to remain independent under constant pressures, political, economic, and military, from Communist China; and secondarily, the threat that China's policy along the southern frontier has posed to the frail peace between India and Pakistan. . . . [The author analyzes some] Asian problems—overpopulation, retarded agriculture, corruption, the threat of Chinese Communism, to mention only a few—and outlines what Asia needs from us. . . . [It is his contention that American] responsibility goes far beyond bringing a conflict to a successful conclusion." (Publisher's note) Index.

Reviewed by V. S. Kearney
America 118:605 My 4 '68 140w

Christian Century 85:457 Ap 10 '68 10w

"Drew Middleton, well-known chief correspondent at the UN for the New York Times, after having traveled from Japan to India and points in between in early 1967, came to the conclusion that, among other things, many Asians find United States intervention in Vietnam a shield for their countries, not unwanted interference as some believe. . . . His book is recommended for college and public libraries as one 'on the other side' of the Vietnam issue." Wen Chao Chen

Library J 93:1490 Ap 1 '68 120w

Reviewed by Lon Rand
Library J 93:2741 J1 '68 60w [YA]

Reviewed by F. J. Johnson
Nat R 20:455 My 7 '68 190w

"A strongly worded brief for our involvement in Asia. . . . If we get out of Asia now, [the author] says, we will turn half the world upside down and in liquidating a small war, prepare the ground for a bigger and more terrible war that we will have to fight in ten years' time. In short, the other side heard from."

New Yorker 44:193 Ap 20 '68 220w

MIDDLETON, JOHN, Jr. ed. Comparative political systems. See Cohen, R.

MIDWOOD, BARTON. Bodkin. 211p $4.95 Random house

67-14469

This first "novel takes place in a home for wayward and disturbed boys, the majority of them Negro. The home . . . is located in a remote wintry region of upstate New York; most of the story takes place at night. . . . [The] adult staff members and boy inmates [are] equally unstable. Semi-literate Negro watchmen spice their sentences with such words as 'mayhap' and 'alas.' . . . Several clumsy attempts are made to murder the director of Ulser, . . . named Doberman: a mysterious tramp appears and then disappears; a child is found dead. . . . The staff nurse, Miss Rose, goes mad and gives narcotics to her charges to put them temporarily out of their misery." (Book World)

"There is no comparison between a conventional mystery novel and Bodkin, or a work of social concern and Bodkin, because Bodkin is relentlessly in the modern mode—'black comedy,' 'existential pathos,' 'the absurdity of action and commitment,' etc. The problem with emptying the novel of its customary furniture—people and social contexts—is that something must be invented to fill the vacuum. . . . Barton Midwood is aware of the need for a 'voice,' a 'poetic tone.' . . . But the language of Bodkin, the dreaming voice of the ghostly man Bodkin, is simply not good enough to carry the burden of a 200-page narrative." J. C. Oates

Book World p8 Ap 7 '68 950w

"Bodkin is almost a case study of the under-equipped, understaffed public institutions we read about in the headlines today; it is written sympathetically, with the necessary building of suspense and good taste. The book is recommended for collections in areas where there is an awareness of social problems; it will appeal to a wider audience than novel readers." John Carroll

Library J 92:4524 D 15 '67 170w

Reviewed by David Haworth
New Statesman 76:262 Ag 30 '68 290w

"[This] is not a muckraker, but an essay in black comedy brightened by compassion and nervous humor. In a clean prose as sharp as a bodkin, [the author] cuts away from the layers of progressive mythology from Ulser and, in the end, bares it as it is—a dungeon that pits the men against the boys. Even gentle Bodkin is forced to line up on the side of the authorities against one young colored inmate who sees through the fictions of the prison. As the novel grows, Ulser becomes a brilliant and powerful metaphor of life itself, with its theories shamed by practice and its loyalties compromised by necessity." P. D. Zimmerman

Newsweek 71:93 F 12 '68 300w

Reviewed by Nicholas Samstag
Sat R 51:32 F 10 '68 700w

MIERS, EARL SCHENCK. Baseball; design, layout and editorial production by Donald D. Wolf and Margot L. Wolf. 154p il col il $3.95 Grosset

796.357 Baseball—Juvenile literature 67-16148

The author "recounts the origin of the game . . . and briefly highlights noted players, outstanding teams, and noteworthy events. . . . Grade six and up." (Library J)

"Miers writes in a nostalgic vein an interesting and entertaining account of American baseball. . . . He has added an excellent collection of photos (especially of the old-timers). Though in no way approaching the completeness of The History of Baseball by Allison Danzig [BRD 1960], it is well worth buying and recommended for all collections. However, Bob Feller, certainly one of baseball's great pitchers, deserves more than the one line allotted him. And, that line erroneously states that he performed for the Boston Red Sox." J. A. Bollas

Library J 92:2041 My 15 '67 100w

"If you come across this slim volume . . . and think you might do some child a favor, don't. The book is a well illustrated but myopic bird's-eye view of baseball. . . . Mr. Stengel and the Mets take up about 10 per cent of the book, Jackie Robinson and Willie Mays ditto. Add 30 pages on the 1800's, before baseball came of age, and only about half the book is left. Where is Rogers Hornsby, who hit over 400 three times? He is relegated to a footnote. Where is Honus Wagner, who led the National League in batting eight times? You would never know he existed except for a picture on page 151. . . . Finally, the book is replete with erroneous statements." L. S. Ritter

N Y Times Bk R p30 My 14 '67 310w

MIERS, EARL SCHENCK. Football; design, layout, and editorial production, by Donald D. Wolf and Margot L. Wolf. 154p il $3.95 Grosset

796.33 Football—History—Juvenile literature 67-8860

"A concise account of almost 100 years of American football, from the Princeton-Rutgers 1869 beginning to the present game, both collegiate and professional. Miers provides comment and anecdotes on the coaches, players, winning streaks, great teams and records. . . . Grade eight and up." (Library J)

"Unfortunately, the book's value is lost because of its many inaccuracies." J. A. Bolas
Library J 92:4633 D 15 '67 120w

"Mr. Miers is a historian and he has researched his subject carefully. . . . He skirts the developmental story of the evolution of the rules, the kind of players who changed the game, and the social-economic attitudes toward football. That seems reasonable enough for a volume aimed at young teen-agers. Apart from an occasional misspelling and a confused evaluation of recent developments in professional football, it is hard to find fault with the book." W. N. Wallace
N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p53 N 5 '67 270w

MIERS, EARL SCHENCK. That Lincoln boy; il. by Kurt Werth. 141p $3.95; lib bdg $3.86 World pub.

B or 92 Lincoln, Abraham—Juvenile literature 68-14693

This story "tells of Lincoln's early years, his relationship to his father, Tom Lincoln, and to the stepmother who brought to the motherless boy a new dimension of understanding, love, and encouragement." (Publisher's note)
"Grades five to seven." (Library J)

"A beautifully written short biography of youth, by an eminent Lincoln scholar. It catches the flavor of a rough frontier life, but it also gives a moving account of young Abe's father, the stepmother whom he loved, the sister whose death affected him greatly. . . . [The sprightly illustrations] add greatly to the quality of the book." H. B.
Christian Science Monitor pB6 My 2 '68 100w

"Librarians familiar with Sandburg's Abraham Lincoln: the Prairie Years [BRD 1926] or the abbreviated edition for young readers, Abe Lincoln Grows Up [BRD 1928], will quickly recognize the heavy debt that Miers owes Sandburg—in style and in the selection of detail for atmosphere. . . . Miers' deviations from Sandburg's text are chiefly in the addition of fictional dialogue and detail, and only in the final chapters, which treat of years beyond the scope of Abe Lincoln Grows Up, does Miers seem to have employed other sources freely. This scant new material is insufficient reason to commend the book as a replacement of or a supplement to [the Sandburg title]." Janet French
Library J 93:1801 Ap 15 '68 300w

"To the familiar story . . . Mr. Miers has brought so much freshness of detail that his account can be described as new. A pleasant surprise is the sharp emergence of Abe's parents, Tom and Nancy Lincoln, from the shadows where biographers so often leave them. . . . Out of a profound familiarity with the period, Mr. Miers has carved a convincing background for his narrative. The homespun effects, however, do not cloy; the salty speech of the frontier stops short of quaintness; and the rich tapestry of time and place never gets between the reader and that Lincoln boy." Milton Lomask
N Y Times Bk R p26 F 11 '68 200w

MIHAJLOV, MIHAJLO. Russian themes; tr. by Marija Mihajlov. 373p $6.95 Farrar, Straus 891.7 Russia—Intellectual life. Russian literature—Bio-bibliography 68-20172

These essays appeared in the period 1961-1966. "Mihajlov is opposed to 'socialist realism,' . . . [he is an] advocate of 'modernism,' of explorations of the inner life, symbolism, and all the literary experiments that help a writer to express his own sense of reality." (Publisher's note)

"[These essays are] serious and penetrating. . . . The most successful essays are those demonstrating how promising Russian modernism was before its practitioners were exiled, or shot to make room for the 'socialist realism' of the 1930s. Mihajlov is remarkably well-read in modern Western literature, and he fruitfully compares writers like Kafka and Joyce to their Soviet counterparts, Tertz and Bely. . . . Occasionally Mihajlov's youth and the manifold disabilities of his cultural training betray him. Like most inexperienced critics he tends to quote too copiously. . . . But these are minor faults in an otherwise highly stimulating book." Richard Freedman

Book World p8 Je 16 '68 800w

"The impassioned essays in this new volume . . . are concerned with 20th-Century Russian prose writers—Tertz, Pasternak, Sholokhov, Solzhenitsyn, Zamiatin, and others. The Russian themes of the book's title, however, more frequently than not provide Mihajlov with takeoffs for his own highly subjective polemics, permitting him to launch into full-scale assaults on rationalism, Marxism, scientism, the lot. Somehow this controversy seems dated by now. . . . Mihajlov may have a ready-made American audience as a result of publicity in the news media (he, too, can write very well indeed much of the time), but this will be of interest mainly for substantial Slavic collections." V. D. Newman
Library J 93:1145 Mr 15 '68 210w

Reviewed by Marc Slonim

N Y Times Bk R p16 N 10 '68 750w

"Mihajlov, a young Yugoslav critic of Russian parentage, first came to public attention several years ago with his Moscow Summer [BRD 1965], a frank account of conversations with post-Stalin Russia's rebellious intellectuals. . . . [These essays] are literary criticism only in the broader, East European sense of the term. Novels and poetry often serve merely as convenient points of departure for the discussion of social and political issues. . . . The result is a sharply polemical book which holds the reader's attention. . . . Mihajlov considers himself an enemy of Communist totalitarianism and an exponent of humanitarian Socialism. Yet his strangely inconsistent book contains both heretical 'capitalist' sentiments and ideas which, for lack of a better term, may be called survivals of Communism in the author's consciousness. . . . The essay on Dostoevsky offers little that is new, but the attempt to create parallels between Dostoevsky and Andrei Sinyavsky (Abram Tertz) and between Solzhenitsyn and Tolstoy are challenging." Maurice Friedberg
Sat R 51:21 My 25 '68 900w

TLS p1215 O 31 '68 500w

Va Q R 44:cxvii summer '68 160w

MILENKOVITCH, MICHAEL M. The view from Red Square; a critique of cartoons from Pravda and Izvestia, 1947-1964. 152p $7.50 Hobbs, Dorman

741.59 Cartoons and caricatures 65-15684

"The author's aim is to show how the cartoon is used to influence the Soviet citizen's image of the outside world, especially the United States. [Mr. Milenkovitch] examines briefly the organization of the Soviet press and the place of cartoons therein. He describes by period and theme the published cartoons. He ends with a chapter on the relation between cartoons and foreign policy, concluding that, sometimes, policy can be predicted by a study of cartoons. At least half of the book's space is occupied by the 120 cartoons reproduced from the Soviet newspapers. An English translation of the cartoon text and labels is given beneath each one. Tables and appendixes give data on quantity, attitude, and frequency of cartoons." (Library J) Bibliography, Index.

"This book is a thorough analysis of the content and purpose of Soviet political cartoons from 1947 to 1964. . . . Of limited interest and usefulness, [it] is recommended for research libraries." P. E. Leinbach
Library J 91:4128 S 15 '66 170w

"The most valuable part of the book would appear to be the cartoons themselves. It lies perhaps in the nature of the subject that it does not lend itself to an exploration reaching great depth. A good number of the conclusions drawn would seem to be rather commonplace. . . . [Moreover] to indulge in conclusions based on frequency or the particular character of the cartoon alone is a highly speculative endeavor, and some of the author's conclusions are far from convincing." A. D. Low
Social Studies 59:89 F '68 420w

MILES, JOSEPHINE. Kinds of affection. 78p $4; pa $2 Wesleyan univ. press 811 67-24108

A collection of new poems by the author of Poems, 1930-1960 (BRD 1961).

Choice 5:956 O '68 120w

"In these poems, the typical problem of the very difficult times we live in—air pollution, the worship of science, the nastiness of commercialism—just do not convey anything other than vague feelings of apprehension, of discontent. This constitutes the core of the book and it reads like Vogue prose. . . . The poetry is sparse, lean, stripped of poetic image. . . . a collection of pleasant generalities." M. I. Prochilo

Library J 92:4510 D 15 '67 180w

"[Miles'] view is inward. It is an unsophisticated view in one sense, for so naive and bemused is she in the presence of her own thought that we cannot take offense, as we would from most egomania. . . . Moreover, in another sense she is far from unsophisticated; her mind is a scholar's mind, in the best and broadest tradition, encyclopedically informed. . . . Taken together, [her poems] make a work that has no name: personal, abstract, ethical, brilliant, miscellaneous, and often unattractive. . . . Hence one is pleased to find, in her new poems, more poetic command and an easier style. A few of these poems, especially 'The Doctor Who Sits by the Bedside of a Rat' and 'When I Was Eight,' are probably among the best she has written." Hayden Carruth

N Y Times Bk ■ p7 Ap 28 '68 500w

"Miles's new poems contain great moral beauty. Their abiding generosity of spirit would seem to prescribe a socio-religious faith that is rare in our times—the belief in a community of the heart. . . . Above all, these poems celebrate each 'day's simple fact,' the small kindnesses that effortlessly occur—in mutual supportiveness—between people who busy themselves with a common task. . . . Frugality is [the poet's] mode for experiencing emotion. [This] frugality of being extends gracefully from her inner to her outer resources: conservation of spirit is complemented by conservation of language and syntax. . . . Whereas most of her earlier poems were as symmetrical and as tightly wound and coiled as a watch-spring, . . . now she can adroitly maneuver into the very short or very long line." Laurence Lieberman

Yale R 57:608 summer '68 1300w

MILGROM, HARRY. Adventures with a straw; il. by Leonard Kessler. 32p $2.75; lib bdg $2.72 Dutton

507.2 Science—Experiments—Juvenile literature 67-14133

An attempt to lead children to "observe carefully, to reason clearly and to act imaginatively through simple experiments with a straw." (Publisher's note) "Kindergarten to grade one." (Library J)

"This is a greatly needed participation book which leads a child to observe, reason, and discover. A straw is used to show simple science concepts, such as that light travels in a straight line, that air takes up space, that a vibrating column of air can produce a sound, and that air has pressure. The clear text is expanded in clever, informative illustrations, and there is a concluding summary in words and pictures of the concepts offered." Rose Hennings

Library J 92:2446 Je 15 '67 80w

Reviewed by Philip and Phyllis Morrison
Sci Am 217:142 D '67 30w

MILIUKOV, PAUL. Political memoirs, 1905-1917; ed. by Arthur P. Mendel; tr. by Carl Goldberg. 508p $9.75 Univ. of Mich. press 947 Russia—Politics and government 67-25341

The memoirs of a Russian historian, a leader of the democratic constitutional movement in imperial Russia and of the Lvov regime of 1917. This translation omits the account of Miliukov's early years. It begins with a description of his role "in bringing together the various political factions to demand an elected legislative assembly after the 1905 revolution. [Miliukov] discusses foreign affairs—the Balkan problem, the crisis with Turkey, and the First World War, during part of which he was minister of Foreign Affairs. . . . He recounts the establishment of the Provisional Government in 1917 after the February revolution. . . . He also gives . . . portraits of other leading figures during this stormy period—Rasputin, and Pobedonostsev, Nicholas II, Kerensky, Witte and Prince Lvov, and Lenin." (Publisher's note) Glossary of names. Glossary of parties. Glossary of journals. Index.

"Mendel (University of Michigan) has edited the work and provided, in addition to an excellent introduction, informative glossaries of names, political parties, groups, and the journals which played a significant role in the political life of the Russian Empire in its last years. The Miliukov memoirs are a vital source for the student of these years, for they describe the internal relations and intimate workings of tsarist political life in a critical time. Undergraduate reading lists in Russian history may now be materially enriched. The footnotes have been preserved and supplemented, although an error has put them one number out of conformity with their reference points in the text. Good translation."

Choice 5:253 Ap '68 200w

"Despite his unhappy record as a practical politician, Miliukov earns our respect for the maturity and consistency of his ideas. . . . Considering that [his memoirs] were written in most difficult conditions during the last war, when Miliukov was over eighty, their quality is remarkably high. This is no mere apology but a perspicacious study of Russian politics during the last years of empire; it reveals the author as a man of integrity and a shrewd observer of human foibles."

Economist 227:51 Je 22 '68 470w

"Written when [the author] was already an octogenarian, [these memoirs] were first published in Russian in 1955; the larger part of them has now fortunately been translated into English. Miliukov's memoirs are no disappointment. Not only do they present an invaluable record and commentary upon a vital era in Russia's recent history, they also reveal a remarkable and perceptive man who dedicated much of his life to the struggle for an enlightened government and society in what had for years been a proverbial stronghold of autocracy and obscurantism. This book is basic for all collections on Russian and modern history." Hyman Kublin

Library J 93:548 F 1 '68 200w

TLS p843 Ag 8 '68 650w

MILLAR, KENNETH. See Macdonald, R.

MILLE, AGNES DE. See de Mille, A.

MILLEA, THOMAS V. Ghetto fever. 166p $3.95 Bruce pub.

301.451 Negroes—Chicago. Church and race problems 68-23527

A white priest, serving as assistant pastor for three years in a Negro neighborhood, describes the injustice suffered by residents of the Chicago west-side community of Lawndale. In the last part of the book, he presents a pastoral program for the Church.

"[The author despairs] of riots' effectiveness and prophesies a revolution, especially when the black army returns from Vietnam. His position provides a sympathetic understanding for Black Power, Black Nationalism, socialized housing and 'the fire next time.' . . . In a journalistic style plain enough to explain the issues to suburban high school students, the author adroitly slips in and out of the first and third persons, singular and plural, to evaluate honestly his total Lawndale experience. In a few instances, he invokes 'ghettonians' to speak for themselves. Non-Chicagoans should find his insight as illuminating as Chicagoans should find it incisive. . . . Inner-city churchmen should find his ecumenical 'slum theology' worth consideration." Anthony Prosen

America 118:677 My 18 '68 500w

"I was tempted to hate white people," he writes. But 'personal agony is alleviated by the knowledge that things do get better [but] things get worse, too.' Fr. Millea amply documents his pessimism. . . . Two of the grimmest chapters describe the looting and burning during Chicago's Big Snow of January 1967 and the inhumanities of eviction as a 'welfare game.' Fr. Millea is entitled to speak boldly because he speaks from experience." I. C. Lambert

Christian Century 85:727 My 29 '68 550w

MILLER, A. E. HASWELL, comp. Military drawings and paintings in the collection of Her Majesty the Queen, by A. E. Haswell Miller and N. P. Dawnay [catalogue produced in collaboration with the Army mus. Ogilby trust]. v 1 222p il col il $20 Phaidon

704.94 Uniforms, Military. Drawings, European. Paintings, European. Art—Catalogs [67-78376]

"The text is largely the history of a collection with brief notes on the artists whose work is represented. . . . The majority of the works are illustrations of military costume styles from 1680-1918 [by painters of various nationalities]. (Choice)

"Generally this book, as handsome as it is, seems overly specialized for the usual undergraduate library, although it might prove of some use to the history and theater departments. . . . It resembles an expanded exhibition catalogue more than a serious scholarly text. . . . The paintings and drawings, while nicely reproduced, generally lack much aesthetic importance, or perhaps more justly, are far removed from contemporary sensibilities."

Choice 4:810 O '67 110w

"There are 478 illustrations, 28 of them in colour. Most are of the British Army and many deal with the 'tailor and millinery' period between 1810 and 1837. A clear, workmanlike introduction defines eight main sections. Dutch, Prussian and other German states and the French Armies also appear: Denis Dighton's studies of Spanish regular and guerrilla forces are especially valuable. . . . All are of interest to 'uniform' students and many should appeal to social historians. Talent generally ranges from the minimal to the splendid. Production, organization, annotation and lay-out are exceedingly well done. Two volumes of a catalogue section are promised for a later date." T. H. McGuffie

Engl Hist R 83:443 Ap '68 150w

MILLER, ALFRED JACOB. The West of Alfred Jacob Miller (1837) from the notes and water colors in the Walters art gallery; with an account of the artist by Marvin C. Ross. rev & enl ed il col il $15 Univ. of Okla. press

759.13 The West—Description and travel 67-15578

"Miller was an artist who, in 1837, accompanied [Sir William Drummond Stewart's] expedition to the Rockies [and the Far West] to 'sketch the remarkable scenery & incidents of the journey.' The book includes . . . water-colors and on-the-spot sketches of the West before civilization—the landscape of the Rockies, the Indians, the buffalo hunts, and the fur trappers' camps. The artist's descriptive notes provide background material for the scenes he depicted." (Natur Hist) The first edition (BRD 1951) contained two hundred reproductions; this revised edition includes eight additional water colors and oils, as well as nine reproductions in color. Added also are a list of exhibitions including works by Miller, and a list of museums holding Miller paintings. Bibliography. Index.

"Among the first American artists to paint scenes of the West [was] Alfred Miller, who had studied in Europe. . . . His relatively simple water colors of Indians and frontier travelers are much more enjoyable than the highly dramatic canvases produced by Albert Bierstadt and Frederick E. Church. This collection of his work is recommended for art and history collections of the West." Roy Nelson

Library J 93:1130 Mr 15 '68 100w
Natur Hist 77:75 My '68 100w

MILLER, ARTHUR. The price; a play. 116p $4.50 Viking 812 68-14982

This play is set in the present, in the attic of a Manhattan brownstone house. It presents "a meeting of two brothers—[Walter] a successful surgeon, [and Victor] an ordinary policeman—brought together after many years by the need to dispose of their parents' property. The confrontation leads them to examine the events and quality of their lives and finally to a dramatization of two attitudes toward existence." (Publisher's note)

"[This] is a moderately effective play, and it does not support the charge that Miller is simply repeating himself. His usual solemnity is relieved by an unsuspected vein of Jewish humor, his Ibsenian dramatic techniques are given a promising elaboration, and the play proceeds on moral and psychological assumptions quite different from those that governed his earliest efforts. . . . [It] is an attempt at disinterested moral analysis, which [Miller] is unfortunately unable to sustain. . . . If Victor and Walter are to represent the old morality and the new, if we are to concern ourselves with the price exacted by the life of duty as against the life of personal advantage, then we must, of course, believe that Victor has acted ■■■ duty requires. At the very climax of the play, however, . . . we are given to understand that this is not . . . the case. . . . There was no moral dilemma after all, only a psychological trap. Our interest shifts from the price Victor pays for doing his duty to the source of the illusion that he had one." Marshall Cohen

Atlantic 221:120 Je '68 1350w

"So long as the American theater has Arthur Miller writing for its stage there is reason to rejoice. With his latest work he churns up the questioning heart in all of us and reaffirms that the unexamined life is not worth living. . . . Like meat turned on a spit, slowly, scrutinized from every angle, Miller thrusts at us the question of each man's personal guilt and probes for the authentic motivations beneath each man's actions. Nowhere more than in the character of Esther, Victor's wife, is the inexorable passage of time more poignantly at work. How time slips through our fingers and the distances between us grow is echoed from the core of her character. [There is also] Solomon, the brilliantly written, comic-tragic 89-year-old furniture appraiser. . . . In this powerful, compassionate play Arthur Miller has dissected the frailties of man with consummate artistry. Bravo!" M. B. Raines

Library J 93:1649 Ap 15 '68 470w
TLS p1154 O 10 '68 400w

MILLER, ARTHUR C. jt. auth. One reel a week. See Balshofer, F. J.

MILLER, BARBARA STOLER, tr. Bhartrihari: poems. See Bhartrihari

MILLER, BENJAMIN F. The complete medical guide; il. by R. Paul Larkin. rev ed 633p $9.95 Simon & Schuster

616 Medicine, Popular 67-13210

This book discusses "the prevention of illness and the maintenance of physical and mental health . . . [as well as] food, marriage, child care, first aid, specific ills, home and hospital care, surgery, and anatomy." (Sat R) Dictionary and glossary of medical terms. Index.

"A health guide written for the person with average comprehension, Miller's updated and revised third edition is useful in terms of preventive health care. The excellent index, illustrations, and references tend to overcome the shortcoming of extremely general information. Strongest area is in the field of helping the patient understand his relationship with the physician, especially in being a 'good patient.' Doctor's explanations are clarified through the use of a 50-page glossary of the more commonly used medical terms."

Choice 4:1365 F '68 120w

"Designed for home use and for reference, this popular guide extends the visit of the personal physician with up-to-date, authoritative health information for the layman. Dr. Miller describes functions of the body and mind, the contributing health factors of home, family, and community life, the major diseases, and many common minor ones, in a most readable, non-alarmist way. . . . The first edition of this book was starred in the Standard Catalog for Public Libraries, 1958. Among the new features of this third edition are: eight pages of color plates; current information about health insurance; a dictionary and glossary of medical terms; and a supplement: 'Family Medical Record Book.' Highly recommended." C. E. Lucio

Library J 93:563 F 1 '68 140w

Reviewed by D. M. Glixon
Sat R 50:42 N 18 '67 90w

MILLER, DONALD E., jt. auth. The shaping of modern Christian thought. See Groff, W. F.

MILLER, DOUGLAS T. Jacksonian aristocracy; class and democracy in New York, 1830-1860. 228p $6 Oxford

917.47 New York (State)—Social life and customs. Upper classes. Labor and laboring classes—New York (State) 67-15130

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by A. D. Donald
Am Hist R 73:599 D '67 600w

Reviewed by Marcus Cunliffe
Pol Sci Q 83:127 Mr '68 700w
TLS p87 Ja 25 '68 400w

MILLER, GEORGE A. The psychology of communication; seven essays. 197p $4.95 Basic bks.

001.5 Communication 67-17390

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Choice 5:686 Jl '68 140w
Economist 226:52 F 17 '68 400w
TLS p371 Ap 11 '68 550w

MILLER, HEATHER ROSS. The wind southerly. 52p $3.95 Harcourt 811 67-10767

These are poems by the author of the novels The Edge of the Woods, BRD 1964 and Tenants of the House, BRD 1965. Some of them originally appeared in Coraddi, Impetus, The Phoenix, The Raleigh News & Observer, The Red Clay Reader, Reflections, and Southern Poetry Review.

"[The poems here] display a reckless, quirky mind that darts confidently from private topics into assumed familiarity. The reader hitches along like a new friend through a tour of intriguing family relics. The tour frequently hints at stories like homemade myths, with local origins and vigorously immediate allusions. The result often is a wild, original poem that yet has a hush of conviction, as the language descends to touch earth and to gain reinforcement from any quick, internal consistency the writer can happen upon. . . . The refusal to accept comfort and the readiness to use prosy, expository progressions cannot inhibit a lively inventiveness. . . . Finally, it is the flavor of narrative that most distinguishes this collection. These narratives are separate but persistently hover around the person of the teller." W. E. Stafford

Am Scholar 37:174 winter '67-'68 1150w

"The quality of this volume is uneven. Although some of the free verse included here contains powerful language and images and dramatic and lyrical lines, these poems are marred by the poet's overfondness for alliteration and a straining for the original. . . . But when [she] is writing straight she can produce versatile narratives, tragic and painful; the natural environment receives intensive treatment, as does World War II. 'October 1965,' for the late Randall Jarrell, contains some fine passages, but like the whole volume is uneven. Some poems are difficult and obscure, others rich and personal. Especially good are 'Grandmama Leda,' 'Abandoned,' and 'Blackout.'" D. B. Schneider

Library J 92:125 Ja 1 '67 140w

"[Heather Miller] speaks in the best kind of Southern accent, and with a hard tilt we all should listen to. In such poems as 'She Bears,' 'Sally Locke,' 'Grandmama Leda,' 'Poem for My Daughter,' and 'Kassandra' she displays her terse strength in understated juxtapositions. Narrative and dramatic interest is balanced by a lyric sense which Mrs. Miller's realism, or cool self-scrutiny, makes tart in the after-taste. She has honored her region and her sensibility." Charles Philbrick

Sat R 50:32 Je 3 '67 90w

MILLER, JILL NHU HUONG. Vietnamese cookery. 118p $3.95 Tuttle

641.5 Cookery, Vietnamese 68-13869

The author explains "the differences between her cookery and that of other Far Eastern countries; she gives step by step instructions; and . . . tells you what kind of a dish you are embarking on—easy, fancy, V.I.P., [or] light." (N Y Times Bk R)

"This book, printed in Japan, is well adapted to the Western cuisine in ingredients, if it is also somewhat exotic for Western tastes, but the recipes for every sort of dish from soups to desserts are well worked out and should prove tempting to jaded appetites."

Best Sell 27:482 Mr 15 '68 50w

"[Here is] an unfamiliar cuisine backed up by foolproof instructions. Most Americans are put off by two staples of the Vietnamese kitchen: salty fermented fish sauce and citronella root, with its medicinal associations. But by and large, Vietnamese cooking resembles Chinese cooking and most fanciers of Oriental cuisine should find the recipes for shrimp paste, tasty steamed dumplings and the various breads and stuffed buns slightly offbeat but completely to their taste. Miss Miller has thoughtfully included a list of substitutes for each exotic. . . . In the absence of such essentials, she advises when substitutions may be made and when to get out the hamburgers and forget the whole thing." Gloria Levitas

Book World p7 My 12 '68 100w

Reviewed by Nika Hazelton
N Y Times Bk R p24 Je 2 '68 100w

MILLER, JOHN C. The first frontier: life in colonial America. 288p $3.95 Delacorte press

917.3 U.S.—Social life and customs—Juvenile literature 68-4799

"The first 170 years of life in America . . . is discussed in this social history. How various colonials lived and thought is disclosed in text and in . . . quotations from letters and diaries of individuals who either lived or visited in the colonies. . . . Recreation, dress, housing, food, courtship, etc. are covered in specific chapters. . . . Religious life and worship is a recurrent theme as is the lot of the Negro. [Chapter bibliographies. Index.] Grade nine and up." (Library J)

"This work of a first-rate historian is not necessarily written for younger readers, but rather for all who are interested in life in earlier times. Calling on his own extensive research for other volumes of these times, Miller presents the reader with an interesting and lively account. . . . The extensive index will enable students to use this volume for research and reference."

Best Sell 28:173 Jl 15 '68 100w

"The small type and absence of pictures, as well as the sophistication of some of the quoted passages, make this book of greatest use to high school students who will find it an interesting contribution toward a fuller understanding of America's past." E. P. Hawley

Library J 93:3320 S 15 '68 160w [YA]

MILLER, KATHERINE. Saint George: Christmas mummers' play; il. by Wallace Tripp. 48p $3.50; lib bdg $3.23 Houghton

822 Christmas plays—Juvenile literature 67-25312

This version of a mummers' play "is compiled from old English plays and dances. The language has been modernized. . . . Notes on the history and production of such plays are included. . . . Grade five and up." (Library J)

Reviewed by L. P. Scanlon
Commonweal 89:292 N 22 '68 110w

"[This] will be enjoyable either for reading as a story or for performance by children. The stage directions which tie the lines together give continuity to a tale full of horseplay: Father Christmas and the other mummers remove a giant tooth from Saint George's mouth, after the saint has vanquished Slasher the Fiery Dragon and been wounded by a Turkish knight. Spirited illustrations enlarge the buffoonery." V. H.

Horn Bk 44:184 Ap '68 100w

Reviewed by Margaret Dorsey
Library J 92:3818 O 15 '67 80w

MILLER, LINDA B. World order and local disorder; the United Nations and internal conflicts; pub. for the Center of int. studies. Princeton university. 235p $6.50 Princeton univ. press

341.13 United Nations. Arbitration, International 67-16953

This study considers "the varied roles played by the United Nations in cases where threats to the peace are created by civil strife in modernizing societies. . . . [Through an] analysis of selected cases—Algeria, Angola, the Congo, Cyprus, the Dominican Republic, Greece, Guatemala, Hungary, Lebanon, Laos, Yemen and Vietnam—the author [discusses] the legal and political factors that limit the United Nations' effectiveness in containing violence and promoting peaceful change." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"[In this assessment] the rivalry between the superpowers . . . is the dominant feature. . . . [Professor Miller is frank in describing] the United Nations' influence in conflicts directly involving the United States and the Soviet Union. In this respect she is more pessimistic than [some] other authors. Her case studies, however, suggest important successes for the United Nations, and offer more hope for the future than she seems willing to concede." L. S. Kaplan

Am Pol Sci R 62:961 S '68 650w

"[This is] the first study directed specifically at the role of the U.N. in localized civil strife. By utilizing a general theoretical framework for the analysis of selected cases, Miller attempts to bridge the gap between U.N. peace-keeping studies (e.g. [L.P.] Bloomfield, International Military Forces [BRD 1964]), and works on internal conflict (e.g. [H.] Eckstein, Internal War [BRD 1965]). . . . The analysis of political and legal extent and limits of U.N. involvement is useful for undergraduate students of international law and organization." Choice 5:683 J1 '68 120w

MILLER, LLEWELLYN. The encyclopedia of etiquette; a guide to good manners in today's world; with an introd. by Cleveland Amory. 640p il $12.50 Crown

395.03 Etiquette—Dictionaries 67-27041

This volume covers formal and everyday problems of behavior. Index.

"This is a complete guide to correct behavior for every conceivable occasion. [Miss Miller] has arranged the topics alphabetically with excellent cross references. Supplemented by an index, the entries are easily located. . . . The book is comprehensive, up-to-date, and sensible. . . . Illustrations and diagrams accompany the text where necessary. An excellent ready reference, this book will be useful in most public libraries." Gillian Olechno

Library J 92:3985 N 1 '67 120w

"The tone of [Llewellyn Miller's] book is sensible . . . and generally kind. . . . She has set herself the task, however, of trying to fill 600 pages of a book devoted to etiquette in an era when most of the elaborate old punctilios are no longer operative. To that end she has included such space-fillers as all four stanzas of 'The Star-Spangled Banner,' . . . and not only the right but the wrong abbreviations for the states. The encyclopedic form, complete with cross-references, also proved to be a help in working up to 600-plus pages. [For example] information about what to do with a guest towel (use it) turns up under Guest Towels, Towels, and Bathrooms. . . . [However] it seems unlikely that the statement 'He has good manners' will ever be considered an insult in most circles, and it may be convenient to have a book on hand to look things up in from time to time." Andy Logan

N Y Times Bk R p8 F 18 '68 2850w

Reviewed by D. M. Glixon
Sat R 51:64 My 18 '68 70w

MILLER, PERRY. Nature's nation. 298p $7.50 Harvard univ. press

917.3 American literature—History and criticism. U.S.—Intellectual life. U.S.—Religion. Philosophy, American 67-17316

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by C. A. Barker
Am Hist R 73:903 F '68 500w

Reviewed by R. P. Adams
Am Lit 39:584 Ja '68 500w
Choice 5:50 Mr '68 300w

Reviewed by R. M. Aderman
Mod Lang J 52:244 Ap '68 1100w

Reviewed by G. D. Langdon
New Eng Q 41:146 Mr '68 1000w
TLS p51 Ja 18 '68 800w

MILLER, ROY ANDREW. The Japanese language. (Hist. and structure of langs) 428p il $16 Univ. of Chicago press

495.6 Japanese language

67-16777

This "introduction to the history and structure of Japanese gives . . . [a] summary of recent scholarship on the genetic relationship, dialects, phonology, grammar, and vocabulary sources of the language. It also covers the writing system . . . loanwords from Western languages and from Japanese into other languages . . . linguistic techniques employed in traditional Japanese literature . . . [and an] account of the land, the people, and their extra-linguistic history." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Word indexes. Subject index.

"Because of the encyclopaedic array of information and interpretations provided, various chapters will be of independent value to historians, diplomats, linguists and students in general, so that the work is a good investment for public and academic libraries. A selective but extensive bibliography, in which Japanese titles are translated, further enhances its value." B. H. Smeaton

Library J 92:3422 O 1 '67 210w

"There is no fault to be found with Mr. Miller's entirely admirable work. . . . [It] will surely remain for a long time the basic work of its kind. . . . [Its] chief virtue is that it is a compact absolutely honest, and richly endowed exposition in which both any compromise of the honest complexities of the materials and any contrived obscurantisms are assiduously avoided.

. . . The second great virtue . . . is simply that Mr. Miller can write; he has literacy and an acute sense of stylistic elegance. . . . [The book] is a work of delight and value to anyone, from the professional linguist to the lover of things Japanese to the versatile amateur. . . . Mr. Miller is also ingenious and inventive in his use of occasional charts, maps, and paradigmatic arrays." J. S. Goodman

Mod Lang J 52:371 O '68 1800w

MILLER, VASSAR. Onions and roses. 70p $4, pa $2 Wesleyan univ. press

811 Religious poetry

68-27544

In this collection of poems, "the author of Wage War on Silence [BRD 1961] and My Bones Being Wiser [BRD 1964] presents [some of her] work of the past five years . . . [reflecting her] awareness of God and the spiritual life." (Publisher's note) Some of these poems have previously appeared in such literary periodicals as Hiram Poetry Review and Transatlantic Review.

"Miller celebrates and celebrates simultaneously in the best tradition of metaphysical poetry. She imitates no one. Her poems appear to be not so much comments on life as life being lived. Even the imagery with which she so precisely conveys her experience is, at times, painful. . . . This is poetry of very high quality—exquisite, genuine, and powerful."

Choice 5:1310 D '68 190w

"Just as the observer goes away from seeing a beautifully made clock and exclaims, 'It's lovely and it works!' so the reader finishes Vassar Miller's new book with the same gasp of admiration. For the most part this is religious poetry, modern in technique but not jarring. It is rich in biblical allusions, and a knowledge of the Bible is helpful although not absolutely necessary in understanding the poetry. There are so many quotable phrases and lines that it is difficult to choose, yet the words which are music demand a hearing. . . . This book is unequivocally recommended for public and academic libraries." M. M. Miller

Library J 93:3145 S 15 '68 150w

"[This, the author's] fourth book, contains one section that is mainly religious (and surely her more formal language and syntax derive from liturgy). The other two sections consist of elegies or lyrics which, even if they don't mention a specific loss, have the same air of grieving meditation and surprise. I sense that the emotional balance of this new book is a little different from that of earlier collections. God is not so often the rapturous subject. The poet repeats that there has been a diminishing of experience. Yet none of this disturbs the quality of the verse." Jane Cooper

N Y Times Bk R p10 D 22 '68 380w

"To be a 'religious poet', you must be first of all a poet. Miss Miller's poems seldom justify themselves as expressions of the writer's own knowledge, her peculiar physical anguish, her own discovery of God. Once in a while she captures some of the rightness, tightness, and power of Emily Dickinson. But it is more like her to dip, in a failure of irony, to the level of 'Whatever happens, God is on the spot.' Straining for serenity she rejects the best materials for her work, because the bleak and bitter moods are her most effective. In the bulk of her work the superannuated reflections seem neither startling nor seductive enough for verse."

MILLER, VASSAR—Continued

TLS p1172 O 17 '68 150w

MILLER, WILLIAM J. Henry Cabot Lodge; a biography. 449p pl $8.50 Heineman
B or 92 Lodge, Henry Cabot. U.S.—Politics and government 64-23625

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Choice 5:403 My '68 200w

Reviewed by E. L. Schapsmeier
J Am Hist 54:936 Mr '68 300w

Reviewed by D. Franke
Nat R 20:619 Je 18 '68 300w

MILLGATE, MICHAEL, jt. ed. Lion in the garden: interviews with William Faulkner, 1926-1962. See Meriwether, J. B.

MILLIKAN, MAX F., ed. National economic planning. See Universities-National bureau committee for economic research

MILLS, RALPH J. Selected letters of Theodore Roethke. See Roethke, T.

MILLS, THEODORE M. The sociology of small groups. 136p $4.50; pa $1.95 Prentice-Hall 301.4 Social psychology 67-22427

"After a short introductory history of research on small groups . . . and chapters on models of group functioning and on methods of observation, the remaining eight chapters elaborate [the author's] scheme for the analysis of group process. To understand interaction, he considers three system levels: personality, group, and context. Each of these systems has further subdivisions." (Ann Am Acad) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"The background for much of what Mills has to say in this book comes from his experience in ['self-analytic'] groups. . . . Although he was among the best-known figures in the experimental small-groups field when this type of study first became popular in the early 1950's, he rejects the data drawn from the majority of the laboratory studies of groups as being of little value compared with the insights derived from the experience of leaders in training or therapy groups. . . . [This book] should be most useful for those who are members or teachers of 'self-analytic' groups, which are conducted in the Harvard tradition. . . . Those who prefer a more traditional discussion of the research literature on small groups or an introduction to the 'classic' studies in the field will have to turn to other sources." A. P. Hare

Ann Am Acad 337:203 My '68 480w

"[This] would probably be appealing to the undergraduate and rigorous enough to satisfy teachers of introductory social psychology. The footnotes and two-page annotated bibliography refer to standard works."

Choice 5:691 Jl '68 160w

MILNE, LORUS. Living plants of the world [by] Lorus and Margery Milne; phot. by Josef Muench [and others]. 336p $15 Random house

582 Plants 67-22637

The authors, who are biologists at the University of New Hampshire, "present 150 of the most important [plant] families, stressing their values and uses in providing man with medicines, foods, narcotics, perfumes, incense, lumbers, gums, rubbers, waxes, spices, and many other products. They [also] explain the evolution of the vegetation of the earth from the emergence of the first primitive forms." (Library J) Index.

"[This] is a nontechnical discussion of major higher plant families of the world and of their most interesting and fascinating representatives. . . . [It is crammed with] thousands of fascinating facts. . . . The illustrations are numerous and quite superb, both those in color and the half-tones. This is a book that is strongly recommended for the shelf (handy for frequent reading and reference) of every plant lover and of every library that serves a clientele interested in plants. It is of high educational value to both young and old." Elizabeth Hall

Library J 93:91 Ja 1 '68 230w

Reviewed by Peter Farb
Sat R 50:44 N 25 '67 120w

MILNE, LORUS. The phoenix forest, by Lorus & Margery Milne; drawings by Elinor Van Ingen. 114p $3.95 Atheneum pubs.

634.9 Forest fires—Juvenile literature.
Forests and forestry—Juvenile literature 68-28042

"This book tells the story of a destructive fire and the regeneration of life on the burned land. It also tells how fire can be used . . . in managed forests to maintain life." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. "Grades five to eight." (Library J)

Reviewed by Julian May

Book World p34 (children's issue) N ■ '68 90w

"One can enjoy not only the nature lore in this authoritative study but the writing as well, for it has not even the slightest touch of ordinariness. Through it all is an air of discovery, of pleasure, and even of excitement in the wonders of the forest. . . . There is drama in the technical description of the bursting forest fire and enlightened conviction in explanations of controlled burning. Fresh and significant for a wide audience." V. H. Horn Bk 44:706 D '68 160w

"An original presentation of forest ecology using the symbolism of the legendary phoenix to represent the forest which, though burned out, is able to renew itself once more. . . . The theme of the book—that fire can be friend or foe and that controlled burning enlivens and renews—should be of interest for conservation study units." Helen Armstrong

Library J 93:4422 N 15 '68 100w

MILNE, LORUS J. The ages of life [by] Lorus J. Milne and Margery Milne; a new look at the effects of time on mankind and other living things [il. by Kenneth Gosner; phot. by Lorus and Margery Milne]. 331p $6.95 Harcourt

574.1 Growth. Life (Biology). Old age 68-12587

The authors describe how "each kind of living thing follows a detailed pattern, an inner guidance, that unfolds progressively with age. Usually this pattern of growth leads to a distinctive form of body, to a definite limit in size, and to a sequence of changes by which we distinguish youth from maturity. . . . [The authors] review the recent discoveries on growth and aging, and look into the future to see how scientific progress can be applied toward usefully extending individual human life." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by George Basalla

Library J 93:1643 Ap 15 '68 110w

"A modest and sometimes beautifully written story of the patterns of life. The text tends to ramble—but charmingly so—as the Milnes describe the birth, genetics, growth and death of all sorts of creatures. Some interested young people may read this from cover to cover, but most will put it to profitable service for assignments." Carol Tefft

Library J 93:2741 Jl '68 80w [YA]

"Lorus and Margery Milne, those indefatigable educators, have written another textbook for people who hate textbooks. Age is its unifying theme, and its concern is time—as expressed by birth, growth and death. . . . [The authors] are very good at marshaling data in answer to . . . questions, some of which are not only complex but subject to change with tomorrow's headlines. Genetic research, for example, almost defies simplification for the layman, but the Milnes' lucid description of DNA structure in the colon and bacillus is a model of its kind and makes the subject considerably less forbidding. The authors are enthusiasts—facts, about anything, turn them on—and their zest, along with a flair for graphic analogy, saves the book and the reader from statistical paralysis." R. B. N Y Times Bk R p30 Je 30 '68 210w

MILNE, LORUS J. Patterns of survival, by Lorus J. Milne and Margery Milne; all phot. by Lorus and Margery Milne unless otherwise credited; il. by Stanley Wyatt. 339p $7.95 Prentice-Hall

574.5 Adaptation (Biology). Ecology 67-22801

The authors of Living Plants of the World (BRD 1968) present "a panorama of adaptations of living organisms to their various environments. The reader is shown the special problems with which life was confronted in the primeval seas, the difficulties attendant in the terrestrial transition, and some of the present-day challenges, many of them posed by man. The study ends by pondering the durability of man as the dominant form of life on earth." (Choice) Index.

"The book is strengthened by frequent references to the authors' various trips which give an air of authenticity to many exotic examples. The style is a bit rhetorical but not enough to seriously detract from the essence of the subject. It is good natural history. . . . The quality is enhanced by 61 well chosen black-and-white photographs. No bibliography. . . . Highly recommended for college undergraduate libraries."

Choice 5:645 J1 '68 190w

Reviewed by R. E. Swinburne
Library J 92:4168 N 15 '67 110w

MILNE, MARGERY, jt. auth. The ages of life. See Milne, L. J.

MILNE, MARGERY, jt. auth. Living plants of the world. See Milne, L.

MILNE, MARGERY, jt. auth. Patterns of survival. See Milne, L. J.

MILNE, MARGERY, jt. auth. The phoenix forest. See Milne, L.

MILNE, TOM, ed. Losey on Losey. See Losey, J.

MILOSZ, CZESLAW. Native realm; a search for self-definition; tr. from the Polish by Catherine S. Leach. 300p $5.95 Doubleday

B or 92 Europe—Civilization 68-17807

The author of The Captive Mind (BRD 1953) "lived in Russia until after the Revolution, when his family moved to Poland. In the first postwar years he was secretary at the Polish embassy in Washington. He is currently professor of Slavic languages and literature, University of California, Berkeley. He has written this biography of observations he has made of himself and of others, beginning in Eastern Europe. . . . He illustrates through personal experience how he was tossed by circumstances from one civilization into another, from high pressure areas into low, and vice versa. He traces his experiences from the Russian Revolution of 1917 to New Mexico and finally to the coast of California." (Library J)

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams
Atlantic 222:150 O '68 50w

"[This will be interesting] for East-Central Europeans who recognize certain sights, sounds, smells, attitudes and types apparently common from Riga to Trieste; for Americans incurably curious of what foreigners think of them; for civilized people generally whose masochism requires a daily dose of resigned comment about Western decline. . . . It is written by a Pole with Lithuanian ancestry, a Catholic with early liberal-socialist inclinations, an aesthete caught up in the ideological whirlwind and cast to the uncertain shores of the post-1945 Atlantic Ocean. Since many others traveled along his road, he was able to fix on paper the traits of well-observed travel companions." Thomas Molnar

Book World p14 S 29 '68 470w

"Instead of thrusting the individual into the foreground as most biographers have done, Dr. Milosz focuses on the background, looking upon himself as a sociological phenomenon. The reader will find this text a unique, refreshing experience." W. J. Cegielka

Library J 93:2477 Je 15 '68 160w

MINARIK, ELSE HOLMELUND. A kiss for Little Bear; pictures by Maurice Sendak. 32p $2.50; to libs & schools $2.57 Harper

Bears—Stories 68-16820

Little Bear draws a picture of a Wild Thing and sends it to Grandmother Bear. She is pleased and sends back a thank-you kiss for him via Hen. But the kiss gets all mixed up as Hen passes it along. "Ages four to eight." (Book World)

Reviewed by Ethna Sheehan
America 119:655 D 21 '68 50w

Reviewed by Polly Goodwin
Book World p14 O 20 '68 140w

"Little Bear is a creature of love and joy and he spreads it around in this enchanting story. The illustrations are incredibly alive and expressive. This is a good easy reader, the vocabulary is simple but vivid and the story is well constructed." L. P. Scanlon

Commonweal 89:285 N 22 '68 40w

"[The story] is slight and almost incidental to the pictures. As in all the Little Bear books the artist's imagination complements and greatly extends the text. The illustrations, in muted greenish-yellow and brown, seem filled with an end-of-summer melancholy that is heightened by the expressions of alarm and watchfulness in many of the animals' eyes. There is, however, humor in each animal's reaction as he or she receives the kiss. The illustrations have many splendid touches . . . and Little Bear's kiss at the end shows that he is acquiring savoir-faire." S. D. L.

Horn Bk 44:557 O '68 140w

Reviewed by Trevelyn Jones
Library J 93:4425 N 15 '68 50w

Reviewed by C. H. Simonds
Nat R 20:1281 D 17 '68 40w

"If you don't already know, here's what a little kiss can lead to. . . . [Grandma Bear sends] a pass-it-on kiss by animal courier. It travels to Hen, Frog, Cat, boy Skunk—and here's where it gets a little sticky—girl Skunk, back to boy Skunk, again to girl Skunk. . . . Little Bear eventually gets the message—and a wedding invitation. Something else, if you don't already know, Else Minarik and Maurice Sendak are always a happy, graceful match. . . . Unlike those kissing skunks, Sendak never loses control; his scenes and animals, especially in the wedding reception, have a soft, solemn, almost elegant, dignity." G. A. Woods

N Y Times Bk R p44 O 27 '68 140w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland
Sat R 51:46 N 9 '68 100w

MINER, EARL, ed. Restoration dramatists: ■ collection of critical essays. 179p $3.95; pa $1.95 Prentice-Hall

822 English drama—History and criticism 66-28108

"This latest volume in the 'Twentieth Century Views' series presents ten essays on major figures of the Restoration stage from Dryden to Congreve. . . . Dryden's heroic plays and the tragedies of Otway, Rowe, and Lee shared the stage with the comedies, and the criticism collected here addresses itself to these groups of plays as well as the comedies." (Mod Lang J) Chronology of plays. Bibliography.

"The editor has made a judicious choice of excerpts from books published from 1952 to 1965 on the major figures of Restoration drama; only three of the selections are taken from journals. In reading selections taken out of the context in which they originally appeared, one is occasionally deprived of an overview of the historical and critical milieu in which the scholar is operating. But some of the best modern criticism is presented here, prefaced by Miner's excellent descriptive introduction to the themes and problems of a difficult area, which he handles clearly and cogently. Recommended for libraries weak in Restoration drama."

Choice 4:546 J1 '67 140w

MINER, EARL—Continued

"If these essays do indeed represent the best recent critical opinion of the drama of the Restoration, one generalization at least suggests itself. The great critical problems arising from these plays have yet to be solved. Earl Miner summarizes these issues in an admirable introduction, but for the most part the essays included address themselves to less fundamental questions." J. A. Sappenfield

Mod Lang J 51:524 D '67 850w

MINER, HORACE, ed. The city in modern Africa. 364p $7.50 Praeger

301.36 Cities and towns—Africa 68-89608

"In this collection of 11 papers read at the Conference on Methods and Objectives of Urban Research in Africa in 1965, the writers, sociologists, and anthropologists are concerned with the urbanization-industrialization of newly independent African countries. . . . [They discuss] general conceptual considerations, . . . demography and economics, . . . race relations and politics, and . . . the modernizing family." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"The content is less inclusive than the title, and in fact only one chapter, by Aidan Southall on Kampala, treats a city as an entity. However, Miner, in pulling these materials together, has supplied a useful guide to the authors' contributions and has given helpful characterizations of the city as a social unit. . . . Throughout the book is a very basic concern with just what it is one is studying when one looks at urbanization, and it is to this point that the comparative urbanist will wish to address himself. . . . American urbanists will find some familiar elements . . . and a variety of new combinations and conditions. They will find some of their theories verified and others questioned." George Jenkins

Am J Soc 74:98 J1 '68 400w

"While [this book] lacks a unifying theoretical or conceptual framework, its coherence is enhanced somewhat by the contributors' interest in future research strategies. The book could be used to supplement basic textual materials. . . . Graduate and undergraduate students of Africa and comparative urbanism will benefit from reading it."

Choice 5:834 S '68 130w

"These highly technical papers . . . [are] for specialized African collections." R. G. McInnis

Library J 92:4516 D 15 '67 200w

MINER, LEWIS S. Industrial genius: Samuel Slater. 186p $3.50 Messner

B or 92 Slater, Samuel—Juvenile literature 68-14946

This biography of the man who established the first cotton spinning plant in America covers Slater's "childhood, education, business, and home life. It stresses Slater's . . . perseverance, humanitarianism, attention to detail and amazing memory. [Bibliography. Index.] Grades seven to nine." (Library J)

Best Sell 28:18 Ap 1 '68 80w

"This biography is welcome, for . . . [it] is the first complete book about [Slater] at the junior high level. It is written in . . . [a] conversational style . . . [and] will be useful as supplementary reading in early 19th-Century history." E. P. Hawley

Library J 93:1326 Mr 15 '68 130w

MINOGUE, K. R. Nationalism. 168p $4.95 Basic bks.

320.1 Nationalism 67-24966

This "account of the history of nationalism from its roots in revolutionary France to our time . . . [analyzes] the various manifestations of the nationalist spirit and its impact on Europe as well as the traditional societies of Africa and Asia. Mr. Minogue discusses, as well, the ideological friction between nationalism on the one hand, and liberalism and Marxism on the other." (Publisher's note) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"This book is about nationalism or rather an aspect of it—political ideology. Out of the complex of political ideas behind nationalism, it stresses those expressing 'collective grievance against foreigners.' . . . Nationalism, Minogue says, may be either 'Sleeping Beauty' or a 'Frankenstein's monster' as it 'brings millions of people out of traditional corners' or 'induces bitter irrational struggles.' But, on balance, he concludes, 'it has contributed little more than a new vocabulary to the history of political evil.' While this conclusion may provide the framework for a good argument, I would have liked to have seen a fuller discussion of why the author believes the concept of nation empty until content is supplied from local circumstances and why he believes politics comes first and a national culture later." B. C. Shafer

Am Hist R 73:1095 Ap '68 460w

Choice 5:683 J1 '68 150w

"Mr. Minogue uses the historical method. He discovers the origins of modern nationalism in the French Revolution, and then chooses Germany as an illustration of the development of the nationalist idea in Europe. . . . From Europe Mr. Minogue turns to the underdeveloped world in the twentieth century and has a number of sensible and perceptive things to say about the various ways in which the countries of Asia and Africa have received and used Europe's most dangerous and ambiguous exports. . . . Mr. Minogue's study is not highly original, but originality can hardly be expected in a book that sets out to be introductory. The book is, however, both informed and stimulated. The writing is clear, lively and occasionally aphoristic. . . . A man who can write thus has—as sociologists say—'internalized' his political knowledge to a remarkable degree."

TLS p434 My 25 '67 550w

MINTZ, ILSE. Cyclical fluctuations in the exports of the United States since 1879. (Nat. bur. of economic res. Studies in business cycles) 332p $10 Columbia univ. press

382 U.S.—Commerce

66-30649

The assistant professor of economics at Columbia and member of the National Bureau of Economic Research examines "movements in U.S. export prices and quantities over the period 1879-1961. The study then looks to the relationship between fluctuations in U.S. exports and the outside world's demand for imported goods. U.S. business cycles are then brought in to explain turning points in export quantities. Mintz finds that peaks and troughs in foreign demand (as represented by world imports) match, with few exceptions, corresponding turns in U.S. exports." (Choice) Indexes of authors and of subjects.

"The Statistical Abstract of the United States has for many years carried time-series which show that commodity exports of the United States vary substantially through time. Not until the publication of Mintz's book, however, has there been (1) a systematic measurement of cyclical fluctuations of these exports and (2) a thoroughgoing empirically based attempt to explain these fluctuations. . . . [Mrs. Mintz] does not emerge from this meticulous, systematic, and impressive study with a new theory of export fluctuations, but she reveals very clearly the difficulties of formulating a simple theory. Future single-country studies of export instability will have to take her work into account. . . . The book is very well written, but it has far too much technical detail in it for a general reader. Perhaps the author will find time to revise her 1961 pamphlet on 'American Exports During Business Cycles, 1879-1958,' and set forth the essentials of the study in a fashion which is a compromise between the full text and the all-too-brief and almost non-statistical Summary (chapter 8)." J. D. Cop-pock

Ann Am Acad 378:205 J1 '68 650w

"In true N.B.E.R. style, this book enhances the objective knowledge in this field. Extensive data have been accumulated and interpreted with professional competence. This volume should prove enlightening for policy makers."

Choice 5:235 Ap '68 230w

MINTZ, MORTON. By prescription only; a report on the roles of the United States food and drug administration, the American medical association, pharmaceutical manufacturers, and others in connection with the irrational and massive use of prescription drugs that may be worthless, injurious, or even lethal. 2d ed rev 446p $6.95 Houghton

350 Drugs. U.S. Food and Drug Administration 67-8830

"An updated second edition of The Therapeutic Nightmare [BRD 1963, 1966]. A new preface has been added, the glossary of prescription drugs has been supplemented, new material has been introduced as an afterword to each chapter, and a 1967 epilogue completes the book." (Choice) Index.

"Journalist Mintz continues to indict 'those pharmaceutical companies and medical advertising agencies where drug testing has been falsified . . . the 'massive efforts' that 'continue to be made to deceive and mislead physicians about prescription drugs,' the AMA which 'in at least one case . . . was involved in noncompliance with the law,' and the U.S. Senate, no subcommittee of which 'has given informed, serious, and sustained attention to the agency's [FDA's] performance.'"

Choice 4:1136 D '67 130w

"None of the new material is available through the index. Since a major value of a book of this sort is its use as a reference for specific items, By Prescription Only loses most of the advantages offered by its new material. . . . Only for libraries collecting exhaustively in the field." W. K. Beatty

Library J 93:199 Ja 15 '68 230w

MINUCHIN, SALVADOR. Families of the slums; an exploration of their structure and treatment [by] Salvador Minuchin [and others]. 460p $10 Basic bks.

362.8 Family. Psychotherapy 67-28507

The authors from their "clinical experience with disorganized slum families and their disturbed children, have developed new therapeutic techniques, and [seek to] demonstrate that significant inroads can be made into the pathological systems of the 'hardcore' families. . . . [They] present an original theory of the special dynamics of the slum family—its structure and internal processes, the communicative and affective styles of its members—and marshal . . . empirical data in support of their conclusions: extensive excerpts from family-treatment sessions, detailed descriptions of behavioral and projective techniques, and content analyses of verbal expression." (Publisher's note) Chapter bibliographies. Index.

"These therapists [claim that they] were in a better position to understand the cultural background of the families than are most psychotherapists. So one might have hoped; but this book belies their claim. The research reported in it is ill-conceived at every level. . . . The authors' conception of their problem makes their work completely unsociological because they maintain that the family and its ways constitute the problem; society and its demands do not interest them except as something their 'experimental' families can't cope with. . . . What [this book] recounts is one further, and, on the whole, bizarre example of the contempt and impertinence our society visits on the colored poor, and its facility in adapting the bureaucracy and the ethos of social work to that end." E. Z. Friedenberg

Am Soc R 33:647 Ag '68 1500w

"It has been said that impoverished families have been researched beyond the learning point. This book is a refutation of that premise. The authors' research reveals similar family structures in the slums. . . . Of significant note, however, is the problem of communication within the family, and their use of conversation as a development of undifferentiated affect, often having little relevance to the word meaning. . . . A must for college libraries. Valuable for medical students (particularly in psychiatry), all behavioral sciences, and family courses. Written for the scholar."

Choice 5:652 J1 '68 210w

"The author . . . is a former director of the Family Research Unit at the Wiltwyck School for Boys, where his coauthors were senior staff members. Through clinical and research work with an experimental group of 12 families of children from that school, they amassed extremely valuable findings which must be applied to casework therapy with disadvantaged, 'hard-core' families. However, this book is more than the report of a research project. It is a testament of the thinking and experiences of the authors as they worked with 'flesh-and-blood' families. . . . Excerpts from transcripts of family treatment sessions highlight contacts with the Garcias, the Montgomerys, and the LaSalles. These are interspersed with pertinent commentary and interpretation. . . . If any book should be required reading for social caseworkers, therapists, psychologists, clergymen, teachers, welfare workers, and judges [this] is that book." P. W. Brouse

Library J 92:3654 O 15 '67 290w

MIRABELLI, EUGENE. The way in; a novel. 217p $4.95 Viking

68-22866

In this fictional autobiography, Frank Annunzio, the subject/narrator, "is a third generation Boston Italian, 'treading water' around Cambridge, while in search of the book's enigmatic title. He works as a technical writer for one of those ubiquitous research outfits that raise student cholera; he floats through a succession of interludes with girls." (N Y Times Bk R)

Reviewed by F. M. Rotondaro

Best Sell 28:143 J1 1 '68 460w

"The story is told in a series of intricately connected flashbacks and flashforwards. These cinematically evoke the characters and experiences which finally enable the protagonist to achieve precarious balance in a life which is depicted as basically irrational and ridiculous. Because of the complex literary technique and explicit sexual language employed in this novel, library use will probably be limited."

E. B. Hayward

Library J 93:2260 Je 1 '68 150w

"Despite the fact that the story is populated by a number of characters who are both believable and interesting, the eerie, no-contact quality which hangs over it all extends to the hero, who supposedly moves out of his own isolations and into a good life. It's hard to tell whether this is intentional—that is, whether the author is telling us that his hero is somehow fulfilled in the end in spite of his still seeming so alone, or whether he is trying to convince us that he's not alone, having acquired a wife, a child and a way of earning a living. The difference is crucial; because it is left unclear, reading the novel becomes an uneasy experience." Sara Blackburn

Nation 207:91 Ag 5 '68 150w

"The discovery of world and self, a matter as old as cave drawings, Eugene Mirabelli translates into terms so fresh and primary that they seem uniquely his own. . . . Mr. Mirabelli uses words as if he had to buy each one. His style is epigrammatic and fragmentary—but the picture he creates is surprisingly complete. Juxtaposed with a fine sense of esthetic order are images out of his hero's past, a casual view of postgraduate Cambridge, and a glimmering of a man's future. A virtuoso performance." Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p36 J1 14 '68 200w

New Yorker 44:202 N 2 '68 60w

Reviewed by Granville Hicks

Sat R 51:29 S 21 '68 600w

MISHAN, EZRA J. The costs of economic growth. 190p $6.50 Praeger

309.2 Economic development. Economic policy 67-30471

The author, a faculty member of the London School of Economics and Political Science, "challenges the thesis that economic growth is necessarily synonymous with the general welfare. [His book] begins with an attack on popular attitudes and then asserts the need to substitute a policy aimed at improving human welfare for one that stresses rapid growth. It reviews the whole range of social ills that accompany economic change: industrial noise, urban sprawl, air pollution, traffic congestion, crime, mass tourism. . . . Dr. Mishan suggests that the law recognize what he calls 'amenity rights—the rights to peace and quiet, to privacy, to clean air—and that these rights be made as inviolable as traditional property rights." (Publisher's note)

Reviewed by J. M. Buchanan

Am Econ R 58:555 Je '68 800w

Choice 5:235 Ap '68 200w

"[The author's] bête noire is the motor car, whose invention he regards as a major misfortune for mankind. This view is expressed most strongly in his brilliant parable of man's right to carry firearms, which is one of the most powerful pieces of satire to appear since Swift. . . . In the third part of the book, Dr. Mishan . . . asserts that economic growth creates wants as much as or more than it meets them, that it frustrates real satisfactions and creates meretricious ones. It is a tremendous tirade, ranging widely from the quality of family life to the evils of tourism. Hardly anyone will agree with all of it, but hardly anyone will be unaffected by its emotional force and deny that these are real and growing defects in western society." Economist 224:793 S 2 '67 800w

MISHAN, E. J.—Continued

"This could be the 'sleeper' economics book of the year. It is in many respects a pessimistic reply to [J. K.] Galbraith's Affluent Society [BRD 1958]. . . . The enemy is superefficiency, overefficiency at the expense of human need. In Dr. Mishan's analysis such efficiency is in reality economically wasteful because it is socially wasteful of the chief reason for economic efficiency, man. . . . To be read and reread. Dr. Mishan is a prophet in our time." H. S. Camenson

Library J 93:986 Mr 1 '68 320w

"Enthusiasm for the book's main theme has prevented discussion [in this review] of the many other good things in it. For the specialist there is some elegant welfare economics to reinforce the main points. There is a salutary dismissal of the proposition that our balance-of-payments problem is so grave that we must export or die. In some 'more intimate reflections on the unmeasurable consequences of economic growth', such targets as the menace of obsolescence, the increasing homogeneity of our planet, the emptiness of the hopes of salvation by science and the cult of efficiency are unerringly hit. . . . Some may feel that the book suffers from a lack of balance. This imbalance, however, is intentional and surely right." Martin Godfrey

New Statesman 74:22 J1 7 '67 750w

Reviewed by Wassily Leontief

N Y Rev of Books 11:31 O 10 '68 1150w

Reviewed by C. A. Hogan

Sat R 51:23 J1 20 '68 170w

TLS p542 Je 15 '67 110w

MISHARK, JOHN W. The road to revolution: German Marxism and World War I—1914-1919. 310p $7.50 Moira bks.

329.943 Socialism—Germany—History. Germany—Politics and government. Social democratic party (Germany). European War, 1914-1918—Germany 67-16226

This book examines the struggle between nationalism and internationalism with the German Social Democratic Party during World War I. It attempts an analysis of the "men, ideas, and events [involved]. The author seeks to show what the Marxist tradition really was and how German Socialists twisted it to suit their own goals. He stresses that the course of the German Revolution was profoundly influenced by events in Russia. He feels that the German tragedy and Hitlerism were a logical consequence of the Russian debacle." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"The author has done much honest research, but he has not used manuscripts now available in Europe, and one misses the important Leipziger Volkszeitung in the list of wartime newspapers that he consulted. Many of [his] generalizations are utterly reasonable, but some seem to be untenable, others contradictory. . . . The conclusion that the schism of German Socialists was between 'tough-minded ones' and 'gentle ones' appears to oversimplify the matter. The conjecture that 'if war conditions had been different . . . Independent Socialists might have captured the party' seems scarcely more helpful than the conclusion that 'the form of the party split was largely accidental.' . . . The literary quality of this volume . . . leaves something to be desired." J. L. Snell
Am Hist R 73:1185 Ap '68 300w

"Opens with a discussion of the activities and theories of Marx after the revolution of 1848. . . . Although nothing new in either fact or theory is offered, the book has the virtue of bringing together in one volume a great deal on the activities of the German socialists in this period, especially those of second rank importance. In its coverage of the period up to 1917 it overlaps C. Schorske, German Social Democracy, 1905-1917: The Development of the Great Schism [BRD 1955], certainly a more scholarly work. The documentation and bibliography are extensive. The book suffers severely from lack of editing and a multitude of printer's errors. Certain irregularities in translation of German terms into English indicate that it should be used with some caution."

Choice 4:1434 F '68 170w

MISHIMA, YUKIO. Forbidden colors; tr. from the Japanese by Alfred H. Marks. 403p $6.95 Knopf

67-18594

The Japanese novelist deals "with the subject of homosexuality and the internal struggles of a beautiful young man [Yuichi]. . . . An elderly novelist, Shunsuke, who has been embittered by his experiences with women, is attracted to Yuichi. Because of Yuichi's great beauty and his inability to love a woman, Shunsuke suggests a plan to avenge the wrongs which he feels he himself has experienced. Three of the women in Shunsuke's past are introduced to Yuichi and led into relationships which cause them much difficulty. At the same time Mishima analyzes and describes the relationships which Yuichi develops with a number of male companions in his attempt to satisfy his own needs for love and affection." (Library J) First published in Japanese under the title Kinjiki.

Reviewed by Oscar Handlin

Atlantic 221:135 Ap '68 320w

"[The author is] Japan's finest, undoubtedly one of the world's finest, authors. . . . Only a writer with Mishima's artistic delicacy could take readers into a world they long considered anathema and give them an intuitive sympathy for the characters who populate [it.] Mishima's delicacy, however, is not dulled into euphemism; his presentation of man dancing with man, man kissing man, man arousing man, and man responding to man is honest, just as is the homosexual's latent desire to love those like himself. This is a book of honesty not sensationalism. . . . The believable presentation of the world of male night clubs and 'Gei Pa-ti' helps overcome the one weakness in this poignant novel: the pat ending. . . . The subject matter of 'Forbidden Colors' will probably frighten away many readers. They are missing an outstanding introduction to a forbidden world and a fine example of sustained writing skill. The translation . . . captures the deceptive simplicity which characterizes Mishima's style." J. A. Phillips

Best Sell 28:28 Ap 15 '68 450w

"To describe this mass of prolix juvenilia as 'Mishima's masterpiece' is no service to the reputation of its author or to modern Japanese literature. . . . It is a mystery why, among all his works that remain to be translated, anyone should have chosen this interminable serial novel, which was written for a popular magazine some 15 years ago as a 'farewell to my twenties.' Like Confessions of a Mask [BRD 1959, this] deals with the theme of homosexuality; but it is almost totally devoid of the sensitive nuances and affecting honesty of the earlier novel. . . . There is a powerful passage in which Yuichi watches his wife giving birth to their first child. . . . For every passage like this, however, there is paragraph upon paragraph of dull, pretentious philosophizing which frequently lapses into sheer silliness. Worst of all is the generally amorphous quality of the novel. The translation does little to help matters." Ivan Morris

Book World p19 Je 2 '68 500w

Reviewed by C. W. Stuckl

Library J 93:1163 Mr 15 '68 250w

Reviewed by Janice Elliott

New Statesman 76:364 S 20 '68 270w

Reviewed by Edward Seidensticker

N Y Times Bk R p32 Je 23 '68 900w

Reviewed by Anthony West

New Yorker 44:105 Je 15 '68 1000w

Reviewed by Thomas Fitzsimmons

Sat R 51:35 Je 1 '68 600w

"At times, Mishima's single-pattern plot seems to glide in slow, repetitive cycles, freezing faces in glaring expressions like kabuki actors: frenzied passion, cross-eyed frustration. Still, what keeps the novel from being another existentialist dead end is the presence of the author. It is finally not the hang-ups of his characters but the questions Mishima asks about them that fascinate—including the ultimate, curiously Japanese question that his novel tests for itself: Can obsession with death, pushed to an extreme, result in some absolute awareness of life? The weakness—as well as the strength—of Forbidden Colors is that the reader is forced to look over the shoulders of the characters to watch the author wrestling with a problem he only pretended to leave to the participants. It cannot be helped. In print as in life, Mishima remains his own most brilliant character."

Time 91:106 My 24 '68 500w

TLS p1040 S 19 '68 390w

Va Q R 44:cxlv autumn '68 120w

MISHIMA, YUKIO. Madame de Sade; tr. from the Japanese by Donald Keene. 108p il $4.50 Grove

895.6

67-19616

A play in which the author, concerned with "the Marquise de Sade [who] remained devoted and faithful to her notorious husband for so many years, only to desert him for a convent the moment he was freed after years in prison . . . [portrays] six characters avowedly symbolizing 'wifely devotion, society, religion, guilelessness, carnal desires, and the common people.'" (Library J)

"[A] fine translation. . . . [This] is an interesting play in itself and not because this carefully constructed neoclassical drama is the product of one of Japan's better modern writers. The Marquis de Sade, never on stage himself, is the ever present symbol of chaos, of the primitive within man, threatening to destroy society. . . . [It is] an effective piece of theater, as good in its way as the Peter Weiss invasion of a lunatic asylum [in his play The Persecution and Assassination of Jean-Paul Marat, BRD 1966]. Among Mishima's other books translated into English are The Sound of Waves [BRD 1956] and Five Modern Nô Plays [BRD 1957]. His works should have a place in all college libraries."

Choice 5:204 Ap '68 180w

"[This is] a play based partially on historical fact and partially on Mishima's own imaginative solution. Despite its announced subject matter, there is nothing sensational about it. It is in reality a morality play. . . . Surprisingly, nothing of Mishima's Japanese background comes through. It seems more a product of Western than of Oriental culture. It is more an intellectual exercise than a dramatic experience." Walter Harding

Library J 92:2801 Ag '67 150w

TLS p1052 S 19 '68 180w

MISKOTTE, KORNELIS H. When the gods are silent; tr. with an introd. by John W. Doberstein. 494p $10 Harper

221.6 Bible. O.T.—Criticism, interpretation, etc. 66-10229

"Aimed at proposing the Old Testament's contemporary relevance, [this book] argues the decline of paganism (hence the silence of the 'gods') and its replacement by nihilism. To that, says Miskotte, only the Named God to whom the Old Testament is witness, has any answer." (Choice) "The original Dutch edition was published in 1956. This book, revised and augmented in a German edition, has [now been translated into English]." (Library J)

"This is a book of theology, fundamentally concerned with preaching and expounding Christian faith. As an entrance to the most recent era of European Protestant theology, the book would be valuable for the undergraduate were it not so specifically focused on the Old Testament. As an exposition of the Old Testament, it must be used with precise awareness of its Barthian presuppositions. Miskotte's argument is both fascinating and profound. It is also thoroughly theological and thoroughly European. The translation is superb and literate. Give it to your pastor, but don't make a point of giving it to your undergraduates."

Choice 5:1150 N '68 140w

"[This] has been called 'the theological book of the decade.' Here, it is available in English with Mr. Miskotte's revisions and additions. A rabbi has called it 'A Guide for the Perplexed.' It is admittedly a book for the philosopher, scholar and theologian. Mr. Miskotte, former professor of dogmatics and ethics at Leyden University, has a difficult style of writing. . . . [He] speaks to his peers; therefore the work challenges the reader's knowledge of theological and historical exegesis. Recommended for theological collections." E. F. Waterman

Library J 92:3646 O 15 '67 110w

MITCHELL, ADRIAN. Out loud. unpag. $4.50; pa $2.95 Grossman pubs.

821

[68-88001]

A collection of poems by the author of If You See Me Comin' (BRD 1962). Poems in this book have previously appeared in such periodicals as Challenge, East Village Other, Poetry Review, and New Statesman.

"A widely uneven book. At its best it has savage vitality. . . . A mordant irony rasps in 'The Liberal Christ Gives an Interview.' . . . When the poet lowers his voice it flattens, as witness the trite lines in 'When Dreams Collide.' . . . But as long as he shouts or snarls, he has the rough-hewn power of a Kipling or Kenneth Fearing." Chad Walsh

Book World p4 J1 28 '68 180w

"An avowed peacenik, [Mitchell's] loud, lusty, lovely language must be heard in college, public, and senior high school libraries. The publishers have designed a fitting book with Pop art undertones."

Choice 5:956 O '68 90w

Reviewed by Bill Katz

Library J 93:2882 Ag '68 80w

"[Mitchell's] new book proclaims itself through its title. These are poems for speaking. They are also poems that presuppose a youngish, leftish, protest-prone audience, and one that is very much there in a public place. . . . [His] poems have most of the virtues and some of the vices that one would expect, given such an audience. They are clear, direct, funny, warm-hearted, and eloquent. They are also sometimes obvious, banal, whimsical, and too genially sure of a welcome: the Queen, the bourgeois, the term 'critics' and the word 'peace' invite responses which can too easily be satisfied." Anthony Thwaite

New Statesman 75:387 Mr 22 '68 450w

TLS p499 My 16 '68 650w

MITCHELL, DAVID. The fighting Pankhursts; a study in tenacity. 352p pl $7.95 Macmillan (N Y)

920 Pankhurst, Emmeline (Goulden). Pankhurst, Estelle Sylvia. Pankhurst, Dame Christabel. Pankhurst family. Woman—Suffrage 67-28577

This is the story of Emmeline Pankhurst and her daughters Christabel, Adela and Sylvia, and their involvement in a variety of causes, including the emancipation of women and women's suffrage. Bibliography. Index.

"All four women . . . were gifted, indefatigable, and highly emotional. Their emotionalism has carried over to Mitchell's account, which is often purple in style and sometimes tasteless. Because the Pankhursts' lives were so scattered and far-ranging, his book is diffuse, and the background sketches of conditions in Great Britain, the USA, Canada, Australia, and Ethiopia necessarily somewhat sketchy. He has drawn on private papers and personal interviews as well as secondary sources, but the absence of any reference notes or documentation makes his book suggestive rather than scholarly." Eleanor Flexner

Am Hist R 73:1533 Je '68 350w

"The book [by] an English historian is extremely well written and contains numerous illustrations [and] a list of acknowledgments." Rita Estok

Library J 92:2918 S 1 '67 120w

Reviewed by A. K. Baxter

N Y Times Bk R p8 Ja 7 '68 800w

"[This] is in no sense a history of the suffragette movement; in fact, that movement occupies only one of the seven parts into which the book is divided. . . . Mr. Mitchell does not belittle his heroines; he sees them in the round, courageous, romantic, exasperating, and very funny. . . . Even when the fight for women's suffrage had been won they could not rest or relax. Mr. Mitchell brilliantly describes their reaction to the inertia and the ironic detachment characteristic of the postwar world of the 1920s. . . . The pity was that once the unifying cry, 'Votes for Women' ceased to sound these four highly idiosyncratic women could find no common cause."

TLS p1130 N 30 '67 1100w

MITCHELL, G. DUNCAN, ed. A dictionary of sociology. 224p $6 Aldine pub.

301.03 Sociology—Dictionaries 67-30870

About 235 "terms are defined; 57 of these definitions run longer than 500 words. The terms selected, for example, role, social mobility, norm, are generally basic to sociology. This is consistent with the editor's intention that the work be 'designed to meet the needs of beginners in the study of sociology.' Some terms are derived from social psychology, social and cultural anthropology, political science, and social administration. . . . Cross-referencing is provided. [Most entries are] accompanied by bibliographic references to major discussions of the concept the term represents. In addition, there are biographical sketches of 57 distinguished deceased sociologists such as Durkheim, A. R. Radcliffe-Brown, and L. F. Ward." (Library J)

MITCHELL, G. D.—Continued

"[This] is most welcome indeed. While limited in the number of terms defined, the Dictionary does give full and convincing treatment to those chosen for inclusion. Most of the 38 contributors are British academicians, but usage examples are drawn from the international literature. Academic libraries will want to purchase this significant lexicon."

Choice 5:464 Je '68 210w

"Recommended for purchase by academic and public libraries." H. O. Marcy

Library J 93:1990 My 15 '68 140w

MITCHELL, JAMES. See Munro, J.

MITCHELL, RICHARD H. The Korean minority in Japan. 186p $5.75 Univ. of Calif. press

301.453 Koreans in Japan. Japan—Politics and government 67-18074

"This study analyzes . . . [the long-standing] problem of the Korean minority in Japan. . . . [The author's purpose] is to trace the development of [this] minority, and to analyze the controversies that arose between the immigrants and the Japanese." (Pref) Bibliography. Index.

"[There has been] need of a follow-up to Professor E. Wagner's pioneering monographic study [The Korean Minority in Japan, 1904-1950]. . . . Mitchell's volume fills this need by bringing the coverage to the time of the 1965 Normalization Treaty. . . . Though [the author] skillfully elucidates many facets of [Korean-Japanese] activities in the light of their broader historical context. . . . the work nonetheless suffers from a scope too ambitiously set for a volume of this size. The result is the inclusion of superfluous events without a disciplined, discriminating assessment of their pertinence. . . . One can readily contrast . . . the cursoriness of the treatment with the judicious appraisal found in the Wagner volume. . . . Yet within the limitations set by himself, the author deftly handles his subject . . . with understanding and sympathy while sacrificing but little objectivity. . . . Lucidly written, . . . this work is a modest but keenly perceptive historical survey." H. W. Kang

Ann Am Acad 378:182 Jl '68 550w

"Over half the book, dealing with the situation before 1945, is very thin and is based largely on Japanese police accounts or on other Japanese sources. . . . The more useful and interesting portion of the book deals with attempts to liquidate the Korean problem since 1945. . . . Even here the focus is on police concern for criminal and political-subversive activities. . . . Of marginal interest to the general reader; though not a thorough, balanced study, it is up-to-date and will replace Wagner's The Korean Minority in Japan, 1904-1950."

Choice 5:543 Je '68 180w

"Relying largely on government records and other first-hand documents this study is the most comprehensive and impartial account of its kind. The main facts and issues . . . are ably sampled and discussed with objectivity and understanding of the dynamics of interaction between the two countries. . . . A commendable effort to occasionally consider such dynamics in the framework of the cultural patterns and social structure of the two countries makes this study a significant contribution to the field of Japanese-Korean studies. . . . This book will be of great help not only to the beginners in such studies but also to the social scientists who may find in it useful material for further explorations." Carlo Caldarola

Pacific Affairs 41:290 summer '68 500w

MITCHELL, WESLEY C. Types of economic theory: from mercantilism to institutionalism; ed. with an introd. by Joseph Dorfman. 2v v 1 608p $12.50 Kelley

330 Economics—History 67-16418

This, the first of two projected volumes, is based on Mitchell's "mimeographed 'Lecture

Notes on Types of Economic Theory,' prepared in 1926-27. The work treats of the development of [British] classical political economy from Smith's Wealth of Nations to Mill's Principles. . . . [It includes a] criticism of psychological axioms in the Wealth of Nations; . . . [a] discussion of Ricardian methodology and the 'preconceptions' of Ricardo's system [and] a . . . record of the force of classical political economy in everyday life which reveals the classical economist as a reforming rather than conservative force in the English tradition." (Choice)

"As the reviewer is fundamentally sympathetic to Mitchell's intention, believing that more historians of economics should place their work within such a broad framework, it is the more painful to report that he often went into far more detail than his argument required. . . . Too much space is devoted to the growth of democracy and the minutiae of contemporary politics. . . . [Also, one is] perhaps unjustifiably, in doubt as to where Mitchell ends and Dorfman begins; and the scale of the project is so vast that it seems likely that its readership will be unduly restricted." A. W. Coats

Am Econ R 58:206 Mr '68 1250w

"Viewed from the hindsight of contemporary scholarship, Mitchell's work suffers on several points: (1) interpreting Smith's system of natural liberty narrowly with great emphasis on individual freedom, he ignores the many latent functions of government contained in Smith's theory of economic policy; (2) he treats lightly Mill's theoretical contributions and says little about his critical role in the development of the theory of economic liberalism. A necessary addition to any library. Would prove valuable as supplementary reading for a course in the history of economic analysis."

Choice 4:726 S '67 120w

"[Editor] Dorfman has used the final mimeographed edition and also notes and outlines in his own possession of the collection of Mitchell papers. . . . [Mitchell] takes economic theory in a wide sense and includes with Adam Smith, Malthus, and Ricardo such quasi-political thinkers as Jeremy Bentham and John Stuart Mill, who had in the latter's words a 'social philosophy' appropriate to his times. Herein lies the specific contribution of Mitchell. He relates each of the main theorists to the particular historical conditions and problems of the time. . . . I found the book easy, indeed, almost compulsive reading, with a refreshing number of actual quotations from the originals. [The second volume will] supply an index to the whole work." P. S. Florence

Pol Sci 83:164 Mr '68 550w

MITCHELL, WILLIAM. Sociological analysis and politics; the theories of Talcott Parsons. 222p $5.95 Prentice-Hall

301.0924 Parsons, Talcott. Sociology 67-12976

An exposition of the work of an American sociologist in which the author, a professor of political science at the University of Oregon, "draws attention to the particular implications of this work for political science. . . . [The book begins with a] chapter on Parsons' intellectual history. . . . The substantive chapters start with a discussion of Parsons' early efforts to build a general theory of action. Then follow four chapters presenting in greater detail his work on social systems. These are analyzed under the following rubrics: boundary exchanges between societal inputs and political outputs, the institutional structure of a polity, political processes, and problems of change. A penultimate chapter directs attention to Parsons' work as a 'policy scientist.'" (Ann Am Acad) Bibliography of Parsons' writings. Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by G. R. Boynton

Am Pol Sci R 62:250 Mr '68 650w

"The work is not a 'defense,' for it contains critical comments, and it is not presented as an 'officially sanctioned' digest. [The author] does not, nevertheless, seek to go beyond Parsons, to offer positive suggestions for the emendation or revision of Parsons' theories. This is, perhaps, a salient shortcoming of the work, for many political scientists will be put off by the eccentricities of Parsons' mode of analysis, thereby failing to appreciate the authentic contributions he has made—at least potentially—to their discipline. . . . [Concluding bibliographies] usefully bring together a comprehensive listing of Parsons' writings, arranged chronologically, plus lists of works influenced by Parsonian thought, and critical essays on Parsons. . . . [Political scientists] who are already partisans of Parsonianism will find [this book] a useful compendium and reference work; those who are repelled by Parsons will probably remain unconvinced by Mitchell." F. W. Riggs

Ann Am Acad 374:210 N '67 1550w

"Since Parsons is unquestionably a major sociological theorist, whose writings badly need clarifying, this book is most welcome, and libraries should stock it. [Its] level is advanced, but nevertheless a great improvement over Parsons' own clotted, Teutonic style. Some readers will find that the book fawns a bit, but this is kept within reasonable bounds. . . . Indifferently indexed."
Choice 4:555 J1 '67 80w

MITCHELL, WILLIAM E., jr. auth. Kinship and casework. See Leichter, H. J.

MITCHISON, NAOMI. Friends and enemies; il. by Caroline Sassoon. 192p $3.95 Day 68-11185

"For Petrus, living with his mother and older brother in South Africa, life was dangerous; when his brother, a teacher, was arrested by the white police, Petrus was told to get away quickly, to go the sixty miles into Bechuanaland, where he had relatives. People were poor there, Petrus found, but they were free; quickly he learned to appreciate . . . freedom and dignity." (Sat R) "Grades five to seven." (Library J)

Book World p24 (children's issue) My 5 '68 120w

"Though white, Naomi Mitchison is a powerful spokeswoman for the members of the Bakgatala tribe of Bechuanaland, Africa. She contrasts these proud, independent people with their brothers in South Africa, brothers who must hide their pride if they want to stay out of jail. . . . The author's prose style is deliberate and compelling; she can really communicate what it is like to be poor, hungry, and indomitable." J. C. Thomson

Library J 93:871 F 15 '68 120w

Reviewed by Jean Fritz

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p30 My 5 '68 50w

"The pace of the writing is slowed by shifting back and forth between the two places, but the book has a quiet integrity and conviction." Zena Sutherland

Sat R 51:41 My 11 '68 110w

Time 91:10 Je 7 '68 50w

"This book is not easy to read; but books that are often slip out of mind again as easily. It is stimulating, for though a story it is very factual and its information has been observed on the spot. It will set older children thinking and independently evaluating what they read in the newspapers, what they hear adults saying, what they are taught in history lessons at school. This is valuable both because few children's books do this and because now more than ever such questioning is urgent. This book may help children to be indignant and passionately concerned, ready to identify with those whites in Africa who work with the Africans." TLS p1084 N 24 '66 700w

MITFORD, NANCY. Madame de Pompadour. 304p il col il $15 Harper

B or 92 Pompadour, Jeanne Antoinette (Poisson) Marquise de 68-23423

The author of The Sun King (BRD 1966) describes the life of Louis XV's mistress, her rise to power and her talents as a patron of the arts. Bibliography. Index. For the first edition see BRD 1954.

"[This edition is] all gussied up with some lavish illustrations in color and black-and-white, richly bound in dark green stamped with gold, as a gift item and, one might add, an addition to the art of that period in France that will be valuable to library purchase. . . . Miss Mitford's view of the Lady . . . is an indulgent one. . . . What redeems this volume are the illustrations—portraits, paintings of battle and hunting scenes, snuff boxes, jewels, clocks, interiors of rooms with their expensive boiseries, galas and fetes, statuary, chateaux—which evoke the reign of Louis XV." Best Sell 28:310 N 1 '68 200w

Reviewed by Melvin Maddocks

Christian Science Monitor pB2 N 22 '68 120w

Time 92:105 N 29 '68 60w

MITGANG, HERBERT, ed. The letters of Carl Sandburg. See Sandburg, C.

MIYASHITA, TADAO. The currency and financial system of mainland China [tr. by J. R. McEwan]. 278p il $9.50 Univ. of Wash. press

338.951 China (People's Republic of China)—Economic policy 66-8694

The author's "latest work, originally published in Japanese . . . emphasizes the development of the Communist financial institutions. In a painstaking manner, he traces the development of Communist finance from the First National Congress of the Chinese Soviets in Kiangsi, follows it on the long march to Yenan in Shensi, through the war years, and finally the civil war and complete take-over of the Chinese mainland." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"Miyashita presents an excellent, detailed account of the development of financial control. . . . He discusses the problems connected with the State's unification of the dozens of currencies outstanding when the Communists came to power, the stopping of hyperinflation [and] the socialist transformation of private banking in Shanghai. . . . All in all, the book is full of information but devoid of critical evaluation; except for a few miscellaneous numbers, the author is not interested in statistical material. He is interested, though, in treating his subject accurately." J. G. Gurley
Am Econ R 56:1276 D '66 750w

"Resident of Shanghai during the Japanese occupation years, Miyashita has long been an observer of the Chinese financial scene and author of On the Chinese Banking System, a treatise that dealt primarily with banking in Japanese occupied and Kuomintang China. . . . The methodology is mainly descriptive and historical in nature. Some attempt is made to use statistical data in dealing with the currency system. Price indices used are from official Peking sources which suffer from several well-known biases. The most interesting chapter deals with the development of rural credit co-ops. Recommended for libraries developing collections on Asiatic studies or having graduate programs in economics." Choice 4:1144 D '67 170w

MOCHULSKY, KONSTANTIN. Dostoevsky; his life and work; tr. with an introd. by Michael A. Minihan. 687p $12.50 Princeton univ. press
891.7 Dostoevsky, Fedor Mikhailovich 65-10833

This work is a "study of the development of Dostoevsky's creative art and intellectual thought by an analysis in depth of the total corpus of his writings. All the facts of his life and literary activity related to this purpose are [employed]. In order to establish a unified and comprehensible pattern of artistic and intellectual development, Mochulsky . . . elucidates in his study the psychological and existential meaning of Dostoevsky's religious ideology." (N Y Times Bk R) Dostoevsky's major works are considered in the chronological order of their appearance. Index. Originally published in Russian in France under the title Dostoevskii; zhizn' i tvorchestvo.

Choice 5:350 My '68 190w

Reviewed by Oleg Ivsky

Library J 93:1134 Mr 15 '68 200w

"There is far too much synopsis in Mochulsky's book, and far too little exposition of Dostoevsky's power of theatrical scene, of his gift of hallucination, his narrative whose strongest effects somehow arise from their disorders; and there is not enough about his humor and comedy. . . . I find Mochulsky . . . informative about Dostoevsky's style, which has usually been considered heavy and declamatory. . . . Here Mochulsky's advantage over the European critics is his intimacy with the Russian text. Mr. Michael Minihan's translation reads very well particularly in the refreshing versions of Dostoevsky's dialogue." V. S. Pritchett

New Statesman 76:287 S 6 '68 1850w

"Often a lack of Russian among Western critics [of Dostoevsky] understandably shifts the emphasis of their efforts from purely artistic considerations of form, style and language to nonliterary subjects. In this situation recent translations of primary Russian source material and literary studies bearing directly on the novels can well serve as an effective balance wheel. Therefore one welcomes [this volume].

MOCHULSKY, KONSTANTIN—Continued

It is ably translated . . . [with] a most, informative introduction. . . . No scholar has made such exhaustive and revealing use of all the evidence of the notebooks (with the exception of those for 'A Raw Youth,' which were unavailable to him) in an attempt to clarify Dostoevsky's art and thought." E. J. Simmons

N Y Times Bk R p1 F 18 '68 1500w

"Until now due to the language barrier, only a handful of specialists in the West have been acquainted with Mochulsky's monumental study, probably the best single volume on Dostoevsky to date. . . . Biographical facts are interwoven with detailed commentary on the social and artistic peculiarities of works created at each point in the author's life, [and are successfully blended] into a long, cohesive narrative. [The results] should prove equally rewarding to readers reasonably well acquainted with Dostoevsky's life and works and those for whom this book will be the first introduction. [The] study is profusely illustrated with judiciously selected long excerpts from Dostoevsky's fiction, correspondence, and diaries, as well as from testimonies by his relatives and acquaintances. Appendices include a few rough drafts found in Dostoevsky's Notebooks. . . . [The] translation is generally smooth. People familiar with the novels may quarrel with his decision to use his own titles rather than the ones under which the works are familiar to the English-reading public. . . . On the other hand, Mr. Minihan is to be thanked for his helpful notes, indispensable to a non-Russian reader of Mochulsky's study." Maurice Friedberg

Sat R 51:28 F 3 '68 700w

"The word 'Life' in the title is misleading, for the book is in no sense a formal biography. . . . [What we have] is a history of Dostoevsky's writings, both artistic and journalistic, and an exhaustive analysis in depth of all these works which aims to construct and elucidate, so to speak, the philosophy of his creative art. There emerges from this brilliant effort a pattern of closely related characters and themes which in turn establishes the artistic constants and religious ideology of Dostoevsky. . . . Mochulsky's keen critical judgment is impaired by a tendency to overwrite. . . . [His] style has few graces, and his translator has done his best to turn into readable English an often wordy and refractory text. A few spot comparisons with the Russian indicate his faithfulness to the original. . . . Mochulsky's work is an extremely important one, often highly original, and it has already exercised considerable influence on Dostoevsky scholarship. Princeton University Press is to be warmly congratulated for making it available in English." E. J. Simmons

Va Q 44:498 summer '68 1100w

MODELL, WALTER. Drugs, by Walter Modell, Alfred Lansing and the eds. of Life. 200p il col il $3.95 Time

615 Drugs

67-25859

This volume "traces the origins of modern drugs and examines, [among others] . . . alcohol, antibiotics, tranquilizers and contraceptives. Each . . . chapter of the book is accompanied by a picture essay." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"Of the same high quality as previous 'Life Science' volumes. Many of the current concepts of how drugs act are explained in terminology suitable for the nonprofessional. Although accurate in scientific content, it is slanted to the view of drugs held by physicians and does not convey a balanced, overall picture of drug research. Primarily useful for the casual and interested reader."

Choice 5:83 Mr '68 80w

Library J 92:4278 N 15 '67 10w [YA]

MODY, N. H. N. Japanese clocks. il $17.50 Tuttle

681 Clocks and watches

67-21931

"A reprint of the original 1932 edition [entitled A Collection of Japanese Clocks] which was limited to 200 copies. . . . Mody describes the hanging clock, tall floor clocks, shelf and table clocks, and other Japanese time-measuring devices." (Library J) Includes text in Japanese at end of book.

"This book is in every way equal to the original edition, including the weight of the paper and the quality of the reproductions. . . . Recommended for larger collections in the field of oriental art." Paul von Khrum

Library J 92:3987 N 1 '67 90w

"[This] is a reprint of a very scarce book on an equally obscure subject and might therefore be expected to command only a very limited audience. That it will do much better than this there is no doubt, for it is both superficially attractive and well-produced. . . . It is also a good introduction to an unfamiliar subject. In some twenty pages of narrative the ground-work is adequately laid. . . . Almost the whole of the rest of the book is devoted to a fine series of 135 plates. Each of these is accompanied by a facing page of description."

TLS p696 J1 4 '68 310w

MOFFETT, THOMAS. The theater of insects. See Topsell, E. The history of four-footed beasts and serpents and insects, v3

MOKUAMI, KAWATAKE. See Kawatake, M.

MOLIÈRE, JEAN BAPTISTE POQUELIN.

Tartuffe, and other plays; tr. with an introd. by Donald M. Frame. 384p $7.50 New Am. lib.

842

67-16940

The seven plays by Molière translated by a professor at Columbia University include "The Ridiculous Precieuses, The School for Husbands, The School for Wives, the Critique of the School for Wives, The Versailles Impromptu, Don Juan, and Tartuffe. . . . Each play is introduced by a . . . historical and critical commentary." (Library J) Bibliography.

"[Frame] has taste, poetic feeling, and a lively sense of the dramatic. . . . He has tried to find a language which will strike the modern English reader in much the same way that Molière's language strikes the modern French reader, who does not find it archaic. An easy, colloquial style which varies as does Molière's with the different characters is the result. . . . [He has also attempted] a rhymed English version of the verse comedies. To some readers, his peasant colloquialisms may at times sound too American, but they are lively and amusing. The translation of Tartuffe suggests, of course, comparison with R. Wilbur's [BRD 1964]. Both are excellent and often surprisingly similar, Wilbur may have a truer ear; Frame may have a livelier sense of Molière's tone. . . . Highly recommended for all libraries."

Choice 5:491 Je '68 230w

"[The introductory comments to each play are] brief, cogent . . . [and] will give the general reader all the background he needs to read the play with delight and understanding. Of special interest to students of drama and comparative literature, Mr. Frame's translation should be in all academic, and all but the smallest public libraries." J. R. Willingham

Library J 92:2802 Ag '67 150w

MOLNAR, THOMAS. Ecumenism or new reformation? 169p $5.95 Funk

282 Catholic Church

68-21723

The author "writes in defense of the Catholic Church against those Catholics who are, in his mind, trying to sell out to the world, to science, or to materialistic Communism. Ecumenism as it is being applied by these 'intellectuals' is nothing less [he considers] than a 'new reformation.'" (Library J) Index.

Critic 27:101 O '68 140w

"[The book] offers few genuine insights into the conservative position. In general Mr. Molnar gives a somewhat less than fair view of the 'new theology'; at times he entirely misses the point at issue, for example, his treatment of 'transsignification'; he sometimes draws a conclusion broader than the facts warrant: 'If the Church-intellectuals surround Teilhard de Chardin with a veritable cult, it is because he justifies their contempt for ordinary people and relieves them from the obligations of charity.' The book may appeal to convinced conservative Catholics." Richard Walz

Library J 93:2661 J1 '68 180w

Reviewed by P. C. Beach
Nat R 20:1283 D 17 '68 180w

"[Molnar, an] author of some intellectual respectability . . . sees the Church's attempt at updating, at aggiornamento, as dangerous and foolish. The Church has nothing to gain from a dialogue with Protestantism, non-Christian religions, or Marxism, he believes, and everything to lose. . . . One of Molnar's heroes, the prickly, individualistic Georges Bernanos, is quoted as saying that modern civilization is a conspiracy against man. Molnar is trying throughout his book to document the charge that modern civilization is a conspiracy against the Catholic Church—and, he insists, the great tragedy is that many members of the Church are taking an active and leading part in the conspiracy." P. K. Cuneo

Sat R 51:44 O 26 '68 800w

MOLNAR, THOMAS. Sartre: ideologue of our time. 143p $5.95 Funk

194 Sartre, Jean Paul 68-29781

Through his description of the French existentialist's thought the author attempts to sketch the prevailing themes of twentieth century society in areas such as literature, politics, and philosophy. Index.

"[Molnar considers Sartre who] has not written a novel since the war or a play since 1956 or a work of pure philosophy for 20 years . . . [as] the 'committed writer' [who] has ceased to be a writer, in the strict sense, and become instead a kind of prophet. And as this is more or less what happened to the first idéologues, Destutt de Tracy and his friends after the French Revolution, Molnar's use of the same word for Sartre is readily intelligible. . . . Molnar does not disguise his preference for philosophers, who are more concerned to change the world than to understand it. . . . What is the appeal of Sartre's ideology? [The author] disappoints us on this question. . . . One of [his] criticisms of Sartre is that Sartre is himself a bourgeois, exceedingly prosperous and successful, living and moving about the world, as Molnar has it, 'like a film star.' Here I feel he is a shade unfair." Maurice Cranston

Book World p12 O 27 '68 800w

"This interesting book is an important survey of Sartre's position relative to our age. It is essentially introductory in nature but is carefully written. One of Molnar's more interesting points is the very brief discussion of Sartre's relationship to materialism which requires considerable further clarification and delineation. Another topic which requires a good deal more study is Sartre's relationship to Hegel and to Husserl. . . . Perhaps the major philosophic criticism to be made of the present book is relative to the relationship of nature and grace. . . . As minor items, we must mention that the footnotes are not too well kept and that the study is somewhat repetitive." R. L. Perkins

Library J 93:3011 S 1 '68 180w

MOLNAR, THOMAS. South West Africa: the last pioneer country. 160p il $4 Fleet pub.

916.88 Africa, Southwest—Race relations 66-26807

The author of Africa, a Political Travelogue (BRD 1965) offers a report on "the economic and social conditions, politics and geography of South West Africa, together with notes on the history, legal status, and future prospects of this territory." (Publisher's note)

"Mr. Molnar is an outspoken admirer of apartheid and he . . . has traveled to Africa to see for himself. . . . His reporting helps to make comprehensible some of the bewildering claims and counterclaims now being made at the United Nations. Molnar denounces the liberals sympathetic to South West Africa's freedom as irresponsible ideologues, ignorant of both the 'incredibly complex situation' created by the ten tribal groups and primitive level of the natives, and of the wisdom of South Africa's harshly disciplined, paternalistic running of the country. He sees the Negroes as benefiting from their forced restriction to workers' compounds in the Police Zone, six men to a room, on their yearly exile from their families on contract jobs in the diamond mines. . . . [He] has much to say, mostly negative, about the United States, some of it curiously ambivalent." E. T. Chase

Nation 203:712 D 26 '66 750w

"Professor Molnar examines in detail . . . the matter of Pretoria's mandate authority in South West Africa, the sprawling desert country where nativist regimes charge mismanagement and brutality resulting from apartheid. Molnar tackles the larger question of 'separate development' and the particulars of the South West Africa case. He concludes that apartheid offers the best promise for both black and white in South Africa and demolishes the assertions of 'genocide,' militarization, and so forth with which Ethiopia and Liberia have regaled the United Nations." M. S. Evans
Nat R 19:260 Mr 7 '67 340w

MOLTMANN, JURGEN. Theology of hope; on the ground and implications of a Christian eschatology [tr. by James W. Leitch]. 342p $8.50 Harper

236 Hope. Eschatology 67-21550

This book by a German theologian 'is devoted to the establishment of . . . eschatological, historical categories as central to theology over against the [neo-orthodox] existential, inward ones. To achieve this end it deals with the problems of revelation, of history and its understanding, of resurrection and . . . concludes with a description of the corresponding 'style of life' implied in a Christian community dominated by eschatological expectations. The argument is. . . [based on] biblical and theological learning. . . . Descriptions and criticisms of opposing positions (especially of Barth and Bultmann) and of various views of history [are examined]." (Christian Century) Index of names.

"Every theological position today will have to reexamine its stance in the light of this book. . . . While it is not intended for general readership, the tutored layman will gain much from [it] and the pastor and teacher of theology ought to consider it required reading. Leitch has rendered a readable translation." Choice 5:976 O '68 200w

"A stimulating and important book, a 'must' for every theological student and every preacher who wishes to become acquainted with the most significant movement in contemporary continental theology. . . . While reading this book one has an almost kinesthetic experience of being wrenched around from an orientation to events in the past and away from experiences in the present, and of being set down facing only toward the future and its possibilities. Every familiar theological category—creation, Word, natural theology, providence, incarnation, cross, resurrection, grace and so on—is here given a different, futuristic orientation and content. . . . Although he has not answered all my problems, Moltmann has written an exceedingly fine book—one which has changed more of my ways of thinking than I would like to admit." Langdon Gilkey

Christian Century 84:1630 D 20 '67 1950w

Reviewed by J. G. Hart
Commonweal 89:36 O 4 '68 1100w

"Here is the first detailed prospectus for the much talked about 'theology of hope.' . . . [The author has] a gifted, alert, creative, expressive mind . . . [and] while his book is difficult, its overall theme is clear and its impact is decisive. . . . The book begins with a useful general survey of the phenomenology of hope. Moltmann is careful to distinguish Christian hope from mere hoping and to distinguish its goals from anything so static and settled as utopia. . . . [His] is a theology that could make a difference in a revolutionary world. . . . [However] no work like this can be wholly satisfying, and those who come with the conventional interests in Christian hope will have the most questions." M. P. Marty Critic 26:70 F '68 1950w

MOLTMANN, JURGEN. Two studies in the theology of Bonhoeffer, by Jürgen Moltmann and Jürgen Weissbach; introd. by Reginald H. Fuller; tr. by Reginald H. Fuller and Ilse Fuller. 159p $3.95; pa $2.95 Scribner

230.4 Bonhoeffer, Dietrich 67-24043

"The twin studies in this book were written in 1959 (Moltmann's) and 1956 (Weissbach's). . . . The essays both set out to examine major structures of thought in Bonhoeffer's works, beginning with the student thesis, The Communion of Saints, and leading to the Letters and Papers from Prison. Moltmann . . . concentrates on the sociological concern that penetrates all of Bonhoeffer's thought. Weissbach's essay attempts to show how Bonhoeffer's christology (the revealed, concrete God) provides a fresh understanding of ethics." (Commonweal) The lordship of Christ and human society, by J. Moltmann, is a translation of Herrschaft Christi und sozialer Wirklichkeit nach Dietrich Bonhoeffer. Christology and ethics, by J. Weissbach, is a translation of Christologie und Ethik bei Dietrich Bonhoeffer.

MOLTMANN, JÜRGEN—Continued

"[These two essays] are characteristic of the school of Bonhoeffer interpretation which emphasizes the christological and ecclesiological aspects of Bonhoeffer's work. Moltmann's essay has approximately 30 pages on the history of Bonhoeffer's thought. Here appear numerous allusions to the influence of idealism on Bonhoeffer, but this topic was not sufficiently treated to be entirely illuminating. The third part of the essay on the mandates is probably the best single writing to which to refer students for their first reading and orientation regarding Bonhoeffer's ethical thought. Weissbach's essay is also concerned with ethics, but again the christological center of Bonhoeffer's ethics is strongly emphasized. . . . This book certainly fills a marked need in contemporary theological literature."

Choice 5:1150 N '68 240w

"[Leslie Dewart has said] that 'Bonhoeffer's thought has been at the mercy of his followers.' The translators of the Moltmann-Weissbach essays have made it possible for readers of English to consider some of Bonhoeffer's famous utterances in the context of his own theology. The authors belong to the school which emphasizes the continuity of Bonhoeffer's thought, as against those who claim to discern a sharp break between The Cost of Discipleship [BRD 1949] and Letters and Papers from Prison. . . . These essays prove once again how greatly Bonhoeffer anticipated and contributed to our present-day reflections." R. E. Koenig

Christian Century 88:653 My 15 '68 290w

"Both men treat their subject with competent scholarship and a thorough knowledge of the structures in Bonhoeffer's theology. But the failure of both essays to prove interesting to an American fascinated by Bonhoeffer can be found right here—as can a strong suggestion as to why Bonhoeffer has never kindled the enthusiasm in Germany that he has in America. Moltmann and Weissbach go after structures, attempting to treat Bonhoeffer's work as if it were, together, some kind of ranging systematics. The fragmentation of almost all Bonhoeffer's writing is seen by them as an obstacle, not the key to Bonhoeffer's thought. . . . In performing marvelous anatomical studies of the body [the authors] have forgotten that the man still lives." William Kuhns

Commonweal 88:245 My 10 '68 750w

"This is a very erudite and tightly reasoned book and it amply repays the reader for his efforts to glean its meanings. Recommended for large public and academic libraries." J. A. Clarke

Library J 92:4161 N 15 '67 160w

MOMADAY, N. SCOTT. House made of dawn. 212p $4.95 Harper

67-28820

Abel is a young American Indian who had been living in the pueblo of San Ysidro with his grandfather until he was drafted into the army. This novel "spans the seven years from 1945 to 1952 [during which he lived as] an unassimilated Indian [unable] either to adapt to the white world or to find himself among the vestiges of his dying culture. [It] reflects the plight of the American Indian. Abel's contacts with the white world often erupted into violence—once in murder. . . . The first and last sections of this four-part novel present Abel in relation to reservation life while the mid-section portrays the Indian in relation to the white man's civilization." (Library J)

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams
Atlantic 222:106 J1 '68 40w

Reviewed by Charles Dollen
Best Sell 28:131 Je 15 '68 440w

Reviewed by W. J. Smith
Commonweal 88:636 S 20 '68 480w

"It is the middle chapters . . . which break the continuity of Abel's story and prevent distinct character development. As a result, the characters seem ethereal and the plot line, which is subordinate to the general theme of the Indian tragedy, seems indistinct. Strong in imaginative imagery, descriptive detail, and evocation of the natural world, this book will tax readers accustomed to definite plot lines and vivid characterization. It is a book for discriminating readers and should not be overlooked by academic libraries." J. W. Stevenson

Library J 93:2522 Je 15 '68 250w

Reviewed by Sara Blackburn
Nation 207:91 Ag 5 '68 140w

"This first novel, ■ subtly wrought as a piece of Navajo silverware, is the work of a young Kiowa Indian who teaches English and writes poetry at the University of California in Santa Barbara. That creates a difficulty for a reviewer right away. American Indians do not write novels and poetry as a rule, or teach English in top-ranking universities either. But we cannot be patronizing. N. Scott Momaday's book is superb in its own right. . . . There is a quality of revelation here as the author presents the heartbreaking effort of his hero to live in two worlds. There is plenty of haze in the telling of this tale—but that is one reason why it rings so true. The mysteries of cultures different from our own cannot be explained in a short novel, even by an artist as talented as Mr. Momaday." Marshall Sprague

N Y Times Bk R p5 Je 9 '68 600w

MONCREIFFE, IAIN. See Moncreiffe of that ilk, 1.

MONCREIFFE OF THAT ILK, SIR IAIN. The Highland clans; the dynastic origins, chiefs and background of the clans connected with Highland history and of some other families; with phot. by David Hicks. 252p maps $10 Potter, C.N.

929 Clans and clan system 67-24611

"Starting from the pre-Christian era of the Celts and Norsemen, [Sir Iain] traces the development of Highland life and customs to build up a picture of the life of the clans as it was before the Jacobite risings. [He] traces the dynastic origins of the various clans and charts much of their lesser known history, depicting their heraldic badges and war-cries and naming their lucky plants: the emblems and symbols of their individuality." (Publisher's note) Chart of tartans. Index.

Choice 5:253 Ap '68 130w

"Beyond a doubt, this is one of the most ingenious histories of the Scots ever written. . . . one which provides a sizable amount of new material on the Highlands and their inhabitants. . . . Sir Iain is a wit of a very special ilk, a fact that appears irrepressibly throughout the book. . . . Recommended without reservation." Peter Gellatly

Library J 93:548 F 1 '68 200w

Reviewed by Tom Nairn

New Statesman 75:14 Ja 5 '68 20w

"[An] extremely handsome volume, much above the usual standard of such compilations. Historians and anthropologists may raise an eye-brow here and there, especially since Sir Iain Moncreiffe can spare no space for source-references. But much criticism will be disarmed by his cheerfully informal foreword explaining that this is 'not meant to be a disciplined work of scholarship' but is 'more like a notebook of jottings'. . . . The illustrations, which justify the book's price, are copious and widely chosen including portraits, landscapes, family relics, buildings, tombstones, weapons, documents and heraldry. [The] colour plates are magnificent. Unfortunately many of the black-and-white photographs, especially portraits, are very poorly reproduced. It must be accepted that this is not a work of reference but a very personal book. . . . It hardly discriminates between the evidential value of history, tradition and legend. . . . But it is crammed full of facts, historical and pictorial, vividly written, and sure to divert a wide public."

TLS p1257 D 28 '67 1150w

MONCRIEFF, ANTHONY, ed. Suez ten years after. See Calvocoressi, P.

MONGAN, AGNES. Ingres centennial exhibition, 1867-1967. See Ingres, J. A. D.

MONNIER, LUC, ed. The two French revolutions, 1789-1796. See Ferrero, G.

MONOD, SYLVÈRE. Dickens the novelist: with an introd. by Edward Wagenknecht. 512p $7.95 Univ. of Okla. press
823 Dickens, Charles 67-15589

An English professor at the Sorbonne presents his English translation and revision of Dickens' Romancier, originally published in 1953. Index.

Choice 5:956 O '68 160w

"[The author's emphasis] is on the early novels culminating in David Copperfield, which is termed Dickens's masterpiece; he devotes nearly one fifth of the text to this novel. He validates through abundant illustration certain widely accepted generalizations, such as the stylistic consequences of publication in serial form, while providing compelling evidence for reconsideration of other generalizations. This book, a valuable addition to any literature collection, is marred only by occasional speculative excursions in the linking of biographical causes with fictional effects." T. J. Galvin
Library J 93:2242 Je 1 '68 140w

"Mr. Monod is one of the very few critics whose approach to Dickens is textual; he is also one of the very few who have consulted the Forster Collection in the Victoria and Albert Museum, London. This consists of Dickens's manuscripts, working notes and corrective proofs. . . . [Mr. Monod] shows Dickens as a novelist whose career was characterized by increasing care over style and composition. . . . [However, Mr. Monod] takes the 19th-century view that Dickens was essentially a humorist. This blinds him to what is actually there in the later novels, as is evident when he discusses 'Great Expectations.'" Walter Allen
N Y Times Bk R p22 My 5 '68 800w

MONRO, D. H. Empiricism and ethics. 235p $7.50 Cambridge
170 Ethics [67-12143]

Professor Monro starts "by examining the central problem in moral philosophy: are moral statements objectively true, or are they expressions of preference? . . . After discussing both views, the author presents a detailed defence of the subjectivist position. In the course of his argument he gives a detailed analysis and criticism of the 'universalisability thesis,' the theory that moral aspirations differ from others in being applicable to all men, and that it is this that makes them moral. He then offers an alternative account of the nature of moral attitudes." (Publisher's note) Index.

"Monro, an Australian analytic philosopher of some repute, here discusses 'the central question of moral philosophy: the relation between fact and value.' Negatively, he is concerned with refuting intuitionist and rationalist views and the use of universalizability as the criterion of morality. Positively, he argues for a subjectivist and naturalist position. Although he does not cover a very wide range of problems, he does give a clear and detailed treatment of certain issues that are presently much discussed in analytic circles. . . . Desirable for larger university collections."

Choice 4:1392 F '68 140w

"There are many problems left unresolved in [this] exposition. . . . The most interesting critical part of Professor Monro's book is that in which he examines the notion of universalisability as a possible criterion by which to distinguish moral principles and moral judgments from others. He considers the notion particularly with reference to the writing of R. M. Hare, who, . . . put forward as joint criteria of a moral judgment that it should be prescriptive and universalisable. Professor Monro succeeds in exposing the extreme ambiguity and obscurity in Professor Hare's arguments for the second half of his double criterion. . . . It is to be regretted that Professor Monro did not think it relevant to his thesis to examine equally critically the other limb of the supposed joint criterion for morality, the concept of prescriptivism. . . . Indeed the main defect of the book as a whole is the very strict limitation of its scope."

TLS p652 J1 27 '67 900w

MONSMAN, GERALD CORNELIUS. Pater's portraits; mythic pattern in the fiction of Walter Pater. 225p $8 Johns Hopkins press
823 Pater, Walter Horatio 67-12426

A "reappraisal of Pater's thought and art, with special reference to his fictional writings. In particular, Professor Monsman explores Pater's use of mythic patterns to illuminate moments of religious and cultural awakening in the lives and environments of his characters. He shows that it was through 'portraiture'—through the fictional and semi-fictional lives of his heroes—that Pater attempted to convey much of his thinking on the relation between art and life. . . . Monsman [also] utilizes Pater's well-known essays and little-known manuscripts in an effort to find those themes which are continuous throughout his portraits but which are never found in the foreground of any single work." (Publisher's note) Index.

Choice 5:1810 D '68 110w

"[Monsman] goes a long way toward achieving his goal of filling the gap in critical attention to Pater's fiction. His tracing of mythic patterns . . . is intriguing and quite detailed; the 'pleasurable "tracing out" of the concise, artistic structure of Pater's fiction' ranges from a close reading of Marius through the Portraits, with special attention to the Dionysian-renaissance theme. Footnotes are ample, the index is exhaustively detailed, but the reader often regrets the surprising lack of a supplementary bibliography. Its scope and subject will probably relegate this book to the attention of college and university libraries." Elizabeth Nelson

Library J 92:2779 Ag '67 110w

"[This] work typifies the current interest in Pater as myth-maker rather than as literary critic or permissive father-figure of the 1890s. . . . Monsman's method of supporting his argument by lavish quotation from Pater's non-fictional work has disadvantages. He glides over chronology and tends to present the mythic pattern as obsessively present from the beginning of Pater's career. . . . [But,] by careful analysis of Pater's text, he has brought to light significant examples of imagery, allusions and puns. Notably enriching our response, this admirable book occasionally fails to give us the sense of loss, pilgrimage and 'vision' in the sequence of Pater's writings. That sequence records losses and hesitations, no less than victories."

TLS p398 Ap 18 '68 600w

MONTAGU, ASHLEY. The anatomy of swearing. 370p $8.95 Macmillan (N Y)

427 Swearing 67-23483

The author investigates "swearing in all its aspects—its origins in primitive language, its philosophy and psychology, its changes . . . in various ages and cultures . . . [and its differing manifestations] among the Jews, the Egyptians, the Ancient Greeks and Romans, the Elizabethan English, the . . . Victorians, and ourselves." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

Economist 229:47 D 21 '68 350w

"Professor Montagu, the Rutgers University anthropologist and humanist, undertakes an examination of the meaning and significance of a major, universal, and ancient form of human behavior. His approach to the subject is in a lighthearted, but scholarly vein. He shows that swearing is as old as language and grows out of involuntary expressions accompanying pain, or fright, or frustration. . . . The value of swear words is the shock imparted by their sacred or obscene nature and also the fact that they are usually taboo. 'Bloody' and 'damn' are given separate chapters and the four-letter obscenities are discussed at length. A hell of a good book!" Harold Lancour

Library J 92:3423 O 1 '67 120w

"[This book is] amusing and engaging, full of miscellaneous entertaining information, light reading for civilized people. . . . [It] will equip you with a vocabulary of words the Sumerians thought dangerous or defiling, as well as a skeleton vocabulary of the baroque bad language of the Baroque Age and the American black ghetto. . . . In passing, Ashley Montagu will have told you a lot about human relations, human folly and human wisdom, and that of course is what counts. He does it singularly well, and in language it's always a pleasure to read. Not only that, his basic assumptions are good, good in the most old-fashioned sense."

Kenneth Rexroth
N Y Times Bk p13 D 31 '67 600w

MONTAGU, ASHLEY—Continued

"Swearing will never be the same now that Mr. Montagu has anatomized it in this solemn, thorough, and scholarly 370-page study. . . . If you know someone who swears too much, give him this book and he is likely to find some other outlet. For, if this is swearing at its most effective, as it claims to be and as I have no doubt it is, then it firmly establishes its competition (irony, satire, sarcasm, and similar rhetorical devices) as far more effective ways of discountenancing your opponent or relieving your own aggressions. Not that swearing is without interest or merit. . . . [However] the book is repetitive [and heavy-handed]. The essence of swearing resides in its spontaneity." Nicholas Samstag

Sat R 50:30 D 23 '67 700w

MONTAGU, ASHLEY. Man observed. 299p $6.95 Putnam

901.9 Civilization, Modern. Man 68-15517

The author of The American Way of Life (BRD 1967) examines man's condition, his behavior, beliefs, and motivations—and his future. Partial contents: The growth of population; Crime and society; The long search for euphoria; Drug addiction; Social change and human change; Psychiatry and happiness; Cultural development and religion; 'Race' and humanity. Bibliography.

"'Man Observed' means man observed in all his complex social functions and especially in the unhappy consequences of his failure to understand himself. Dr. Montagu sees man as the product of cultural patterning. . . . It must be admitted that Dr. Montagu's thinking is uniformly interesting. He is a student of behavior, not a moralizer; his terms are secular. He sees man as evolving out of the forces which man himself has created, but a vast respect for man invests his observations. He feels capabilities have scarcely been touched. He is a compassionate man, and compassion is a quality in high demand today." Henrietta Buckmaster

Christian Science Monitor p7 Je 20 '68 400w

"Few in our day speak with greater humane-ness and understanding of their fellow man than does the noted anthropologist, Ashley Montagu. . . . Seven of the 24 chapters in the book have appeared elsewhere in various journals. Though, to a degree repetitious, what Mr. Montagu says is so important it bears repeating. His book is highly recommended for public and academic libraries." Harold Lancour

Library J 93:1494 Ap 1 '68 130w

"Montagu is not a man who avoids contention, and it is clear that he takes great exception to 'the new litany of innate depravity,' which he associates with Dr. Konrad Lorenz and Robert Ardrey. Nor is he too happy with such writers as William Golding. . . . [He] sees as the real source of man's aggression 'the unsound values by which in a highly competitive, overcrowded, threatening world, man so disoperatively attempts to live.' He may well be right, and Lorenz et al. wrong; but it will take more than an eight-page essay to establish the final verdict. . . . The most satisfying article in the collection, possibly because Montagu develops his ideas at greater length than in the other essays, deals with 'race' and war. . . . Although the essay contains no surprises for those who have read any of his previous books, it is written with much style and persuasion." D. M. White

Sat R 51:34 Je 15 '68 700w

MONTAGU, ASHLEY. See also Montagu, M. F. A.

MONTAGU, M. F. ASHLEY, ed. Culture; man's adaptive dimension. 289p $7.50; pa $2.50 Oxford

572 Anthropology 68-17606

"A companion volume to the editor's earlier collection, Culture and the Evolution of Man, this selection of articles by . . . anthropologists shows how man's culture, behavior, and physical development have evolved together interdependently in a 'feedback reciprocal interaction.' . . . [Contributors are] Erich Kahler, Charles F. Hockett and Robert Ascher, Earl W. Count, Ernst Caspari, Ralph L. Holloway Jr., A. Irving Hallowell, R. Kuttner, Benson

E. Ginsburg and William S. Laughlin, and the editor." (Publisher's note) Most of these essays were first published in anthropological journals. Chapter bibliographies.

"[These nine] papers in physical anthropology [are] by leading recognized authorities. The title is somewhat misleading since many would expect an exposition of ideas related to cultural anthropology. Actually, the title implies that the 'adaptive dimension' which makes man human is his culture. . . . The book has obviously been compiled for the professional; however, it should be fascinating to biologist, anatomist, and paleontologist due to the sophistication of the conjectures regarding the physical and cultural man in his pre-fossil state. . . . Additional features are the many erudite reaction articles to several of the main papers and extensive bibliographies."

Choice 5:1054 O '68 150w

Reviewed by Daniel McKinley

Yale R 57:612 summer '68 300w

MONTAGU, M. F. ASHLEY, ed. Man and aggression. 178p $5; pa $1.95 Oxford

152.4 Aggressiveness (Psychology) 68-29723

The editor thinks that three contemporary books on aggression—Robert Ardrey's The Territorial Imperative (BRD 1966, 1967), his African Genesis (BRD 1962), and Konrad Lorenz's On Aggression (BRD 1966, 1967)—"are so misleading that he has assembled the present volume to contest the notion of an innate, aggressive instinct in man. [It] consists of a brief preface and 15 articles by 14 authors, including one by the editor, reprinted from such publications as Scientific American, The New York Times Magazine, Natural History, Encounter and Political Science Quarterly." (N Y Times Bk R)

"The authors attack [the thesis of an aggressive instinct in man] in several ways—by analysis of the concept of instinct, by discussions of animal behavior, particularly territoriality, and by pointing up the problems of comparing human behavior with that of other animals. . . . The selection is excellent, but since the pieces were written for different publications, there is a great deal of repetition. . . . This book would be much more interesting if there had been substantial quotations from the authors under attack. . . . The view of primate behavior and human evolution presented in Montagu's article is as inaccurate and biased as Ardrey's. The data are simply distorted in the opposite direction. The gentle, cooperative nonhuman primate is as much a product of the imagination as the killer-ape." S. L. Washburn

N Y Times Bk R p8 O 6 '68 1400w

"Representing only one side of the issue, the volume is hardly dispassionate; lacking order, the reviews and articles are sometimes repetitive, sometimes contradictory, and of uneven value. . . . [This] must therefore be read as polemic, and confusing polemic at that, for the contributors are far from consistent. For some (S. A. Barnett, J. P. Scott, T. C. Schneirla), Lorenz's ethology is fundamentally wrong; for others (Geoffrey Gorer, Edmund Leach, Kenneth Boulding), Lorenz or Ardrey has correctly analyzed animal behavior but erred in applying ethology to humans. . . . But while this collection of reviews has grave shortcomings as a book, it provides a welcome occasion to reconsider the widely conflicting judgments that greeted the thesis of Lorenz and Ardrey." R. D. Masters

Sat R 51:38 O 19 '68 850w

MONTANDON, PAT. How to be a party girl. 181p $4.95 McGraw

642 Entertaining 68-14760

Advice "based on [the author's] own experiences as a professional party organizer and private party giver; she covers . . . details from the initial planning—including theme, types of food, drink, decorations and helpers—to guests, including whom to invite and how to get rid of crashers." (Library J)

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 222:150 O '68 10w

"[This] is a 'how to' book of the first water. . . . [It has] a lot to say about being a good hostess, a good companion and a good human being, and how to have a great time through the trying. . . . The work is also interlarded with philosophies and reminiscences of [the author's] rise from amateur status and, while some of them are a bit corny and/or downright embarrassing, most of them work as good examples. . . . Good reading for anyone who wants to learn how to be more gracious, amiable and attractive." Liz Smith

Book World p3 S 15 '68 1100w

"For intimate little dinners à deux or for a big charity affair, for the single girl on her own, or for the chairman of a charity ball committee, Pat Montandon offers a wealth of practical advice. . . . Written with sprightly verve, and full of interesting anecdotes, her book should be popular with a wide audience and is recommended for public libraries." Gillian Olechno

Library J 93:2240 Je 1 '68 110w

MONTEJO, ESTEBAN. The autobiography of a runaway slave; ed. by Miguel Barnet; tr. from the Spanish by Jocasta Innes. 223p $4.95 Pantheon bks.

B or 92 Slavery in Cuba 68-25640

Esteban Montejo is a Cuban Negro, 108 years old and still living, who was born into slavery in 1860 but ran away from his plantation as a youth and survived for about a decade in the wilderness as a fugitive. After slavery was abolished, he came out of hiding to work in the fields and later to participate as a soldier in the war for Cuban independence from Spain. Originally published entitled Biografía de un Cimarrón.

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams
Atlantic 222:134 S '68 50w

Reviewed by Ronald Steel
Book World p7 Ag 18 '68 50w

Reviewed by Thomas Welch
Library J 93:3128 S 15 '68 180w

Reviewed by Glenda Todd
Library J 93:4742 D 15 '68 130w [YA]

Reviewed by Paul Bailey
New Statesman 75:587 My 1 '68 440w

"[Montejo] told his story to Miguel Barnet, a young Cuban poet and trained anthropologist who has condensed and edited the narrative into a powerful account of a vanished world. As a primary source for studies of nineteenth-century Cuba, Montejo's book will prove invaluable for its detailed recreations of rural fiestas, old superstitions, African religious practices and even folk medicine. It also projects a clear picture of a complex society. . . . When Montejo's description of slavery in Cuba is compared to histories of the institution in America, the contrast is particularly interesting. . . . [This] book, although its dates and names may be vague, vividly renders the feeling of slave days in Cuba. What is most immediately striking is how deeply African Negro life in Cuba remained." Pritchard Flynn Newsweek 72:100A S 16 '68 950w

"Esteban's rambling, helter-skelter narrative tells relatively little about his slave experience, dwelling instead on his participation in Cuban rebellions against Spanish rule. The book is larded with superstitions and apocryphal anecdotes mingled with descriptions of real occurrences—the nostalgic meanderings of an aged, unlettered man. While there is an argument to be made for exploring the lives of the spear-carriers in history's great dramas, the Autobiography does not serve that argument well." Ernest Dunbar
Sat R 51:41 S 21 '68 100w

"Blunt, shrewd, amorous and superstitious, with an abiding respect for honesty and courage, this vigorous old man has unfolded his childhood and youth for . . . Barnet, who has edited it with sympathy and skill, though [the] translation occasionally gets between the reader and Montejo by imposing a pseudo-American coarseness of tone. Its contribution to our understanding of Cuban history and national character is no less than its immense appeal as a human testament. . . . Montejo recalls with great insight and sympathy the life of the Africa-born slaves he knew in his youth. . . . Anyone seeking to view the Cuban social and political events of the past decade in the deeper perspective of a centenarian . . . may find it here. All the fire and dash of the Cuban character, the refusal ever to cringe or to give up, take on flesh and meaning in the reminiscences of this stubborn veteran." TLS p501 My 16 '68 850w

MONTGOMERIE, NORAH. One, two, three; a little book of counting rhymes; with pictures by Norah Montgomerie. unp $2.75; lib bdg $2.73 Abelard-Schuman

398.8 Nursery rhymes 68-10102

A collection of jingles, poems and riddles having to do with numbers. "Preschool to grade two." (Library J)

Christian Science Monitor pB4 N 7 '68 60w

"Not the usual kind of counting book. . . . Ample opportunity for counting is provided, however, in the illustrations, which are executed with humor and liveliness on alternating backgrounds of orange, white, and turquoise." Della Thomas

Library J 93:1790 Ap 15 '68 50w

"Lively if rather exotic illustrations. . . . Some of the British references—farthings, dabs, winkies—may confuse American children. The text is also full of biting, gobbling and other instances of minor violence. These being difficult times, some parents with literal minds may be disturbed by the inclusion of Ten Little Indians (one dies in his sleep, one drowns, one breaks his neck, one is shot)." N. L. Magid
NY Times Bk R p26 J1 14 '68 110w

TLS p1149 N 30 '67 40w

MONTGOMERY, DAVID. Beyond equality; labor and the radical Republicans, 1862-1872. 508p $10 Knopf

331 Labor unions, Republican party 67-18610

This "is a study of the labor movement during Reconstruction and emphasizes its effects on the political realignments of the period." (J Am Hist) Bibliography. Index.

"Students of American political and social history, and of labor history in particular, will find much in David Montgomery's book that is rewarding. . . . Based on thorough and careful research, [it] presents much previously unavailable information on the labor unions, labor-reform movements, and labor parties. The material is well integrated and offers many thoughtful insights into the dynamics of political and social developments. . . . While there is considerable merit in [Montgomery's] thesis as a limited interpretation of Radicalism, this reviewer feels that [he] has tried to prove too much. He has put a tremendous burden on his facts, and they are often too narrow to support the conclusions constructed upon them. To a large extent, this is a result of his ignoring other elements involved in the dialectics of his history." Bernard Mandel
J Am Hist 55:154 Je '68 440w

"This book is a major work of labor history. It ranks with the works of Grob, Rayback, and Ware. As a work in Reconstruction history, it plows new fields. All future historians who work in either area must refer to it. A necessary acquisition for public and academic libraries." J. J. Fox

Library J 92:3417 O 1 '67 210w

MONTGOMERY OF ALAMEIN, BERNARD LAW MONTGOMERY. 1st Viscount. A history of warfare [by] Viscount Montgomery of Alamein. 584p il col il maps $15 World pub.

355 Military art and science. Military history 68-13718

This "one-volume history of warfare . . . is divided into six major sections: Ancient Warfare, from the earliest known wars through the Fall of the Roman Empire; Medieval Warfare, including the Norman Conquests and the Crusades; European Warfare, from the Spanish conquests . . . to the era of Nelson, Napoleon and Wellington; Eastern Warfare in Mongolia, China, Japan, and India; Warfare 1815-1945, with . . . emphasis on the first and second World Wars; . . . Inscrutable Destiny, which . . . [discusses] the Ethics of War, the Iron Curtain and the Cold War, the Nuclear Age, and . . . The Ideal of Peace." (Best Sell)

"[There are] innumerable illustrations in form of photographic plates . . . and maps and battle plans. The work is exceptionally well written, clear and easy even for the reader not initiated into such things as tactics, strategy, logistics, and the whole concept of warfare. That it will be much discussed by military men is beyond question. The book is a must purchase for every library of college level and upwards as a brilliant piece of historical writing."

Best Sell 28:273 O 1 '68 300w

MONTGOMERY, of ALAMEIN, B. L. M.—Cont.

"The most fascinating chapters . . . are on the nature of war and on generalship, and . . . on the two world wars. . . . My one serious criticism of this book is that a continuous history of warfare is too bulky a subject to cram into even 584 pages. I could not spare a word of what Monty writes from his own personal experiences, but I wish that . . . [he had picked] out a few star battles, wars and generals, and [bridged] the intervals between them with skeleton historical summaries. If Monty had adopted [this] device, he could have satisfied our appetites instead of just whetting them and then having to whisk away that course in order to serve up the next." Arnold Toynbee

Book World p1 S 15 '68 1650w

"The book is not all Lord Montgomery's work. . . . The small staff of assistants have been made to work hard. . . . On ancient and medieval warfare, it looks as if Lord Montgomery was largely content to be an editor, rather than author. . . . Characteristically, however, the editor has added his own personal interjections. Some are unhelpful, except to remind the reader who is in command. . . . Some are designed to stimulate, if not shock. . . . As the book moves on to modern times, the more Lord Montgomery . . . takes control. From 1914 onwards, the book is very much his own work. Then, . . . the book loses its balance. At the same time it gains in vigour. But the historian gets swamped by the personality. . . . But if this book were not idiosyncratic, it would have little piquancy."

Economist 229:xvii N 9 '68 400w

Reviewed by A. R. Schulman
Library J 93:3784 O 15 '68 150w

Reviewed by G. F. Eliot
Nat R 20:1174 N 19 '68 700w

Reviewed by Geoffrey Barraclough
N Y Rev of Books 11:16 D 19 '68 550w

Reviewed by S. L. A. Marshall
N Y Times Bk R p6 O 20 '68 750w

"Lord Montgomery's book is the fruit of a lifetime spent in the study and practice of war and it bears the authority of one who will without doubt be numbered among the great commanders. Its greatest merit springs from its author's understanding of the human factor in war. That it is permeated with his particular and well-remembered idiosyncrasies the freshness and vigour of his approach to any subject, will, for those who served under him, only enhance its undoubted value as a deeply interesting, often inspiring and intensely instructive book."

TLS p175 O 17 '68 1200w

MONTIAS, JOHN MICHAEL. Economic development in communist Rumania. (Mass. inst. of technology. Center for int. studies. Studies in int. communism) 327p $15 Mass. inst. of technology

338.9498 Rumania—Economic conditions

67-16502

Using "official data from both Rumanian and other Communist sources until 1966, . . . the author concentrates on four areas, industry, agriculture, foreign trade, and Rumania's role within the Council for Mutual Economic Assistance (COMECON), trying to answer the basic question, for example, 'whether development has proceeded along the general lines charted by the Party and at more or less the pace anticipated in the long-term plans.' Overall, he gives a positive answer for the industrial sector and a negative one for agriculture." (Ann Am Acad)

"Professor Montias has produced, after his Central Planning in Poland [BRD 1963], another substantial volume which enhances his position as perhaps the leading American economic expert on many of the Communist countries of Europe. . . . Although his treatment of industry and agriculture is full of solid evidence and interesting conclusions, I see even greater merits in his emphasis on the interrelation between domestic development and foreign trade as a pioneering case study with broad implications. Not only are the author's statistical reconstructions in this difficult area a major contribution, . . . but his findings on the relationship between Rumanian foreign trade and the national economy, on the changes in the composition and distribution of that trade, and on the controversy between Rumania and the COMECON provide us with novel and significant material." L. A. D. Dellin
Ann Am Acad 337:219 My '68 550w

"[This book] is by virtue of its subject primarily of interest to the specialist. However the general reader who may wish to learn in greater detail about the development of Rumania's economic differences with the Soviet Union and other block countries will find this well set out in Chapter 4. In general the author prefers not to go into the merits of the party's economic policy as such of forced industrialization and collectivization; he confines himself instead to evaluating how far its exponents are achieving what they set out to do. Here his verdict is a favourable one."

TLS p208 F 29 '68 360w

MONTRESOR, BENI. I saw a ship a-sailing. See Mother Goose

MOODY, RALPH. Horse of a different color; reminiscences [sic] of a Kansas drover. 272p $4.95 Norton

B or 92 Ranch life

68-11388

This volume continues the author's reminiscences of his youth begun with Little Britches (BRD 1950). In this book he relates his "experiences as a Kansas livestock dealer [after World War II]." (Publisher's note)

"It's encouraging to read about a man so honest he postpones signing a contract the extra day that will make him legally responsible. . . . It's refreshing to observe how neighbors lend a hand when work has to be done immediately. It's satisfying to see businessmen stating forthrightly and honestly what they plan to do. . . . [This] is a book I would especially recommend for someone with a problem. It's not a bit 'preachy', but it warms your heart. It would be as appropriate for a secluded retreat for keyed-up executives as for a junior high library." J. A. Phillips
Best Sell 28:270 O 1 '68 650w

"Basically, Ralph Moody's story is a perfect example of rural American enterprise in the early 1920's. He found himself with mountainous debts through collapse of the livestock market. In the process of digging himself out of debt, he also saved a Kansan town from total bankruptcy. . . . He never heard of the 'Willa Cather school,' yet his vivid descriptions of persons and places are reminiscent of this manner of writing. The reader lives through a flash flood, admires his sanitary slaughter house, and weeps over a forced farm auction. This book is a glorious recollection of pre-Dust Bowl, pre-Depression days and is highly recommended for public libraries." Karl Brown

Library J 93:3000 S 1 '68 140w

Reviewed by Edward Abbey
N Y Times Bk R p36 O 27 '68 90w

MOODY, RALPH. Stagecoach West. 341p il maps $6.95 Crowell

388.3 Transportation—History. Express service. The West—History 67-15410

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by W. T. Jackson
Am Hist R 73:920 F '68 600w
Am Lit 39:594 Ja '68 50w

Reviewed by M. J. Mattes
J Am Hist 54:890 Mr '68 600w

MOODY, T. W., ed. The course of Irish history; ed. by T. W. Moody and F. X. Martin. 404p il maps $10 Weybright & Talley

941.5 Ireland—History

67-20363

"From 24 January to 13 June 1966 a series of twenty-one programmes was transmitted by the television service of Radio Telefís Éireann under the title 'The Course of Irish History'. The text of these programmes, revised and slightly adapted, is here published with a selection of the televised illustrations. The aim of the series was to present a survey of Irish history that would be both popular and authoritative, concise but comprehensive, selective [and] critical but constructive and sympathetic." (Pref) Chronology of Irish history. Bibliography. Index.

"Edited by two distinguished scholars in Irish history . . . this collection of essays is the work of specialists in various historical periods. . . . The essays do not always go as deeply into their subjects as one might wish. Nor does the series as a whole say enough about ecclesiastical and economic history. Nonetheless, the essays are well written and based on thorough research published earlier by the authors in book or article form. . . . Recommended both for Irish collections and for undergraduate libraries."

Choice 4:1434 F '68 130w

"[This history] will delight scholars and general readers. . . . It is authoritative, balanced, fair-minded, and beautifully written. Contributors include historians such as J. H. Whyte, Dr. E. R. R. Green, Dr. Kathleen Hughes, and Dr. G. A. Hayes-McCoy. English aggressions, explained in the context of relevant international politics, receive particularly sympathetic treatment and there is a lucid account of Ireland's complex, pioneering struggle against colonialism and exploitation." B. P. Brennan

Library J 92:3998 N 1 '67 150w

MOORE, BARRINGTON, jt. ed. The critical spirit. See Wolff, K. H.

MOORE, BRIAN. I am Mary Dunne; a novel. 217p $4.95 Viking

68-19771

The author of The Lonely Passion of Judith Hearne (BRD 1956) presents a portrait of a sexually emancipated modern woman. "Mary Dunne, twice-divorced, three times married, Canadian-Irish Catholic by birth, is, on the surface, a sophisticated, even glamorous, New Yorker. In the course of the one day in which her story unfolds, however . . . we catch her at her most vulnerable, tormented by premenstrual tension, brought face to face with truths about herself and the men in her life." (Publishers' Weekly)

Reviewed by J. R. Lindroth
America 119:17 Je '68 550w

Reviewed by Edward Weeks
Atlantic 222:100 J1 '68 650w

Reviewed by S. P. Ryan
Best Sell 28:144 J1 1 '68 320w

Reviewed by Isa Kapp
Book World p4 J1 7 '68 850w
Canadian Forum 48:164 O '68 1300w
Christian Science Monitor p7 Je 27 '68 170w

Reviewed by N. L. Magid
Commonweal 88:662 S 27 '68 1650w

Reviewed by K. G. Jackson
Harper 237:104 J1 '68 70w

"We meet Mary Dunne on a crucial day in her life, a day when encounters with two old friends from Montreal will momentarily shatter her rigid control and send her hurtling into 'the dooms' and the fear of losing her sanity. . . . Through a skillful use of flashbacks we see Mary whole, a brilliant portrait of a modern woman in which many women will see something of themselves. The sexual passages are frankly, erotic but honestly related to the narrative; only the prudish would find them offensive. Mary Dunne can take her place beside Judith Hearne as one of Brian Moore's marvelously human and perceptive character studies." A. C. Ringer

Library J 93:2522 Je 15 '68 200w

"[This book displays] the amazing empathy that the author can establish with a central character who is a woman. . . . In Mary Dunne's survey of her past, mirrors and the Mass are constant images; Moore has used them liberally before. But with them menstruation takes its place as a recurring motif. Mary Dunne's personality is a complex of her sexuality and her rejected Catholic background. . . . But in making this association while emphasizing the menstruation motif, Moore shocks the reader as no openly salacious writer can. . . . The style of Mary Dunne is at first puzzling and disappointing. . . . [However] the final terrain which Moore reaches . . . is no country for the young women of the slick magazines." R. B. Sale

Nation 206:832 Je 24 '68 900w

Reviewed by Richard Silman
New Repub 159:29 Ag 17 '68 650w

Reviewed by Philip French
New Statesman 76:550 O 25 '68 850w

Reviewed by E. S. Connell
N Y Times Bk ■ p4 Je 23 '68 750w

"A two-hundred-and-fourteen-page monologue by the most interesting of women is in danger of being trying, but a two-hundred-and-fourteen-page monologue by a nondescript woman cannot help but list from the first words. Mary Dunne . . . now, at thirty-two, finds herself with so much time on her hands that she has trouble remembering exactly who she is. . . . Mr. Moore writes with a rancid intimacy that makes his wilting heroine very real. A literary Guild selection."

New Yorker 44:87 Je 29 '68 100w

Reviewed by Granville Hicks
Sat R 51:23 Je 15 '68 1250w

Time 91:88 Je 21 '68 310w

TLS p1192 O 24 '68 650w

MOORE, CHARLES A., ed. The Chinese mind; essentials of Chinese philosophy and culture; Charles A. Moore, ed, with the assistance of Aldyth V. Morris. 402p $9.50 East West center press

181 Philosophy, Chinese

66-24011

"What are the basic, unique characteristics of the Chinese mind, of the Chinese philosophical tradition, and of the Chinese culture based upon that thought-tradition? . . . These essays are selected chapters from the Proceedings of the four East-West Philosophers' Conferences held at the University of Hawaii (1939, 1949, 1959, 1964). [This volume] is one in a series of three; the two succeeding volumes will be The Indian Mind and The Japanese Mind." (Publisher's note) Index.

"In their discussions of Chinese thought, by which they seem always to mean traditional Confucian orthodoxy, there is evident a desire to emphasize what [the conferees] believe will be acceptable to the Western reader while deemphasizing much richness in the Chinese experience that defies distortion into Western terms. Not so much a survey of traditional Chinese thought, like that of Fung Yu-lan, as . . . a set of repetitious papers in demonstration of an alleged Chinese heritage of humanistic, theistic democracy."

Choice 5:206 Ap '68 150w

"[These papers] deal with the ethics and personal philosophy of traditional China. Contributors include Hu Shih, Wing-tsit Chan, T'ang Chun-I, and other leading philosophers and educators from the non-Communist countries. The papers have been edited for consistency, but no claims have been made for major revision from the originals. This attractive book will be welcome in academic and large general libraries." Collin Clark

Library J 93:34 Ja 1 '68 200w

"[The book] is devoted to the older philosophy of China, from the earliest times; and many of the contributions give very valuable insights into the development of the Chinese philosophic tradition over the past 2,500 years. A very notable contribution is that of Dr. Hu Shih. 'The Scientific Spirit and Method in Chinese Philosophy,' which sums up his famous views on this subject. . . . For an understanding of the cultural background from which modern Communist China has emerged no book could be better. The main threads of Chinese thought are clearly distinguished and analyzed from the point of view of Western philosophy, and the effects of Buddhism on Chinese thought are closely argued by several of the contributors. . . . Dr. Moore, in a lucid introduction, defines [the] problems of Chinese thought and philosophy, giving a very clear and useful list of the main points in which Chinese thinking has diverged from the Western pattern." C. P. Fitzgerald

Nation 206:24 Ja 1 '68 600w

MOORE, CHARLES A., ed. The Indian mind; essentials of Indian philosophy and culture; Charles A. Moore, ed; with the assistance of Aldyth V. Morris. 458p $9.50 East West center press

181 Philosophy, Indic

66-24012

"The 18 essays in this volume were selected from papers presented at [four] East-West Philosophers' Conferences held [from 1939 to 1964]. . . . A general introduction to the Indian view of the status and nature of philosophy written by Professor Moore is followed by papers dealing with metaphysical matters, epistemological concerns, problems in ethical and social philosophy, topics such as religion, politics, economics, and the philosophical basis of the law. The status of the individual in Indian thought and culture is the subject of five of the essays." (Library J) All these papers have been previously published. Index.

MOORE, C. A.—Continued

"All [the essays] were written by specialists in the field, most of whom are Indian. . . . A 'Who's Who' appendix gives biographical sketches of all but two of the contributors. . . . Highly recommended for specialists, informed, and interested general readers." S. L. Hopkinson

Library J 93:84 Ja 1 '68 200w

"[This] is a collection of unconnected and often overlapping essays on various aspects of Hinduism and Buddhism. In his introduction Professor Moore castigates almost everyone for the 'confusion, misunderstanding and misrepresentation and almost universal neglect—especially by western thinkers—[that] have been much in evidence for centuries to this greatest democratic nation in the eastern world'. This seems a little unfair. . . . Apart from insisting that monism is not all India has to offer (which many, even in benighted Europe, have long since realized) this book does little to 'rid our minds of these strong misconceptions'. What the book conspicuously lacks is an editor who can knit together all these disparate and, it seems, originally independent articles."

TLS p322 Mr 28 '68 140w

MOORE, COLLEEN. Silent star. 262p il $5.95
Doubleday
B or 92 68-10562

The autobiography of the movie star who popularized the "flapper" in the period of the silent films.

"The price of this small book is by no means excessive in view of the fifty-eight excellent photographs it contains. . . . [Colleen's] story is interesting from a documentary viewpoint: the development of the 'flapper days'—she was the first flapper—the days of the great actors: Charlie Chaplin, Mary Pickford, Loretta Young, John Barrymore, Tom Mix, others too numerous to mention, though she seems to have been able to mention them all in one phase or another. Her name dropping is fascinating. . . . The account of the fabulous doll house . . . its display in many stores for the purpose of raising money for poor children, forms one of the most gratifying chapters of the book." Sr. M. Marguerite

Best Sell 27:461 Mr 1 '68 750w

"The book is a catalog of silent films and players that will appeal to senior patrons of large libraries and performing arts collections."

W. H. Matthews

Library J 93:69 Ja 1 '68 120w

MOORE, ERNEST G. The agricultural research service. 244p il $5.95 Praeger

353.81 U.S. Agricultural Research Service.
Agriculture—Research 67-22294

"The Agricultural Research Service (ARS) was established in 1953 to consolidate within a single organization most of the research going on in the United States Department of Agriculture. [The author], a former director of ARS, covers the history of USDA research and the reorganization that created ARS, and recounts some of the major achievements of USDA research. He discusses the relationship of ARS to other agencies and to Congress. He devotes one chapter, 'Controversies and Conflicts,' almost entirely to a discussion of the storm of criticism raised by Rachael Carson's Silent Spring [BRD 1962, 1963]. . . . In one of the appendixes he discusses ARS as a career." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"This book is both a history and an overview of ARS and is recommended to all collecting in this area." W. T. Johnston

Library J 92:2794 Ag '67 130w

"Moore has written a light, easily read summary of the administration and work of [this service]. . . . Moore's background . . . and his attempt to write for a wide audience probably account for his conversational style. Unfortunately, faulty organization mars the book. The reader is frequently referred to future chapters, which often contain little more than second mention of previously encountered subjects. A chronological organization of the material would probably have overcome most of the difficulties. The specialist might wish that the author had furnished less summary and more information." T. R. Wessel

Science 159:1221 Mr 15 '68 350w

MOORE, JENNY. The people on Second Street; with an introd. by Malcolm Boyd. 218p $5
Morrow

258 Church work. Jersey City—Poor

68-21541

An "autobiographical account of eight years spent in the inner city of Jersey City, New Jersey . . . [with the author's] husband Paul, now Episcopal Suffragan Bishop of Washington, D.C., Father Robert Pegram, and Father C. Kilmer Myers, now Bishop of California, as the staff of Grace Church." (Library J)

Reviewed by I. N. Pompea

Best Sell 28:244 S 15 '68 650w

Reviewed by Jane Manthorne

Horn Bk 44:577 O '68 190w

"Mrs. Moore gives insight into ghetto problems and her account is as contemporary as today's headlines. . . . It is an outstanding picture of life as it is lived in great American cities. There could not be a more 'current book.' Mrs. Moore does not give us answers. She does wonder if this generation of inner-city dwellers will have the patience of their parents." J. W. Van Meter

Library J 93:1646 Ap 15 '68 490w

"Girls interested in community service will appreciate the reflective rather than crusading tone in which Mrs. Moore describes how they worked with young people in various programs and with adults by sharing where possible in the defeats and privations of ghetto life. . . . Mrs. Moore offers no quick or dramatic successes but writes with compassion about the pathetic lives of her neighbors and with conviction about the worth of the individual."

George Merrill

Library J 93:[3339] S 15 '68 160w [YA]

Reviewed by Robert Coles

New Repub 159:29 O 19 '68 1550w

Reviewed by Robert Berkvist

N Y Times Bk R p50 O 20 '68 290w

MOORE, JOHN HAMMOND, ed. Before and after. See Seabrook, I. D.

MOORE, JOHN HAMMOND, ed. Research materials in South Carolina; a guide; comp. and ed. for the South Carolina state library board; with the coop. of the South Carolina lib. association. 346p $5.95 Univ. of S.C. press

016.05 Libraries—South Carolina. Periodicals
—Bibliography 67-25916

This volume represents "a first attempt to examine South Carolina's libraries, magazines, newspapers, historical societies, and museums in a way that will quickly show what one may expect to find on the shelves or in the files of a given institution. . . . Part One contains entries for both public and private libraries throughout South Carolina, information concerning files in newspaper and magazine offices, and data on the holdings of numerous historical societies, historical commissions, and museums. These entries are arranged alphabetically under the names of the towns where the various institutions are located. . . . Part Two is a list of periodical files, serials, and continuations begun prior to 1941. . . . Titles are listed alphabetically." (Introd) Index.

"Although of limited interest, this new guide would be invaluable to libraries used by persons undertaking (a) serious study or (b) research into South Carolina topics. . . . The holdings of the major depositories of the state are described and will lure the scholar who will suddenly sense some gold mines. . . . This guide to what lies within the state will tell the user of the two main bibliographies of the state where much of the material now rests—and much of it is not in major archives and universities elsewhere."

Choice 5:754 S '68 280w

"This Guide is an excellent bibliographical tool. . . . Here we have a new landmark in bibliographical control over a wealth of primary source materials. It should greatly reduce time-wasting searching by reference librarians, students, and scholars; facilitate interlibrary loans; and substantially increase productive research."

A. K. Kuhlman

Library Q 38:205 Ap '68 850w

MOORE, JOHN HEBRON. Andrew Brown and cypress lumbering in the Old Southwest. 180p il $6 La. state univ. press

338.4 Brown, Andrew. Lumber and lumbering 67-12216

Based on a set of business papers which came to light in 1958, this is a study of "Andrew Brown, a Scottish architect, [who] arrived in Natchez in the 1820's and proceeded to fashion one of the outstanding business enterprises in the lower Mississippi Valley. By means of entrepreneurial skill, he developed a significant lumber industry, employing such techniques as imaginative sales policy and enlightened (and profitable) labor relations, which depended heavily on Negro workers." (Library J) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"A thoroughly researched, well-organized, and significant study. . . . [Moore's] concern for the details of logging, rafting, milling, shipping, and marketing, which are always nicely fitted into the account, makes this one of the best histories of the lumber industry." P. W. Gates

Am Hist R 73:914 F '68 340w

Choice 4:1268 Ja '68 180w

"Drawing upon a superb set of business papers, . . . Moore has provided an excellent account of lower Mississippi Valley lumbering between 1829 and 1865. In many ways cypress was to the lower valley what white pine was to the upper reaches; and this account of logging in the Yazoo delta, milling at Natchez, and marketing at New Orleans indicates the importance of the Mississippi River as a center of economic activity. [Andrew Brown] brought to the plantation country an independent judgment and attitudes toward slaves, religion, and politics that were not typical of his American colleagues and business successors. . . . This book adds significantly to the understanding of southern colonial lumbering, the industrial use of slaves, the growth of New Orleans, and the impact of the Civil War on business along the lower Mississippi. . . . This [is a] valuable and well-written account of a neglected phase of early nineteenth-century southern history." G. B. Engberg

J Am Hist 54:661 D '67 420w

Reviewed by G. M. Gressley

Library J 92:2155 J 1 '67 120w

MOORE, JOHN R., ed. The economic impact of TVA. See The economic impact of TVA

MOORE, JOHN TRAVERS. Cinnamon seed; il. by Trina Schart Hyman. 47p $3.25; lib bdg $3.07 Houghton

811

67-23310

A collection of poems describing such "experiences of childhood. . . . [as] the first fruits of summer, the quiet cozy feel of grandfather's rocker, the fun of sledding in winter, [and] the sharing of secrets with a friend. Kindergarten to third grade." (Library J) Some of these poems previously appeared in The Horn Book and Story Parade.

Horn Bk 44:74 F '68 160w

"Fantasy and reality blend naturally in Mr. Moore's word images . . . caught and sharply focused through . . . Trina Hyman's drawings washed with spring green. . . . Some of the subjects [are] treated with a delicate but not overly sentimental touch." Barbara Gibson

Library J 92:4605 D 15 '67 70w

"[This collection, although] once in a while preachy, is at its best capable of quiet, graceful poetry. . . . The emphasis of the verse is on the discovery of strangeness in familiar things." John Unterecker

N Y Times Ex R pt 2, p61 N 5 '67 30w

MOORE, MARGARET, jt. auth. The lawbreakers. See Evans, M. S.

MOORE, MARIANNE. The complete poems of Marianne Moore. 305p $8.50 Macmillan (N Y); Viking 811

67-26082

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Choice 4:1382 F 15 '68 100w

Reviewed by W. J. Smith

New Repub 158:34 F 24 '68 8000w

Reviewed by Anthony Thwaite
New Statesman 75:659 My 17 '68 210w

Reviewed by Louise Bogan
New Yorker 43:136 Mr 30 '68 110w
TLS p552 My 30 '68 2200w

MOORE, PATRICK. The amateur astronomer's glossary; line drawings and diagrams by Cyril Deakins. 162p $5.95 Norton

520.3 Astronomy—Dictionaries 67-12444

This dictionary provides definitions for nearly four hundred astronomical words and phrases from "aberration of starlight" to "zodiacal light."

"Ostensibly written for the amateur, but equally suitable as a basic reference tool for the undergraduate library. Contains few or no terms in the related fields of astrophysics, cosmology or cosmogony, but does include most of the important terms in astronomy. . . . Recommended."

Choice 5:610 J1 '68 70w

"Ireland's and Britain's leading amateur astronomer has compiled a useful and interesting reference book. Aimed at young adults, this nicely complements the other titles in The Amateur Astronomer's Library. . . . Mr. Moore has picked terms that crop up in the general news and in discussions about astronomy. Sketches scattered through the text help illustrate some of the more complex concepts. He has defined the terms simply. At times he may be a bit too simple . . . but, in the main, he gives the kind of nontechnical definition most readers want." R. C. Cowen

Christian Science Monitor pB10 N 1 '67 190w [YA]

MOORE, PATRICK. Exploring the world; il. by Joan B. Williams and Clifford Bayly. 96p col maps $4.95; lib bdg $3.71 Watts, F.

910.9 Discoveries (in geography)—Juvenile literature. Explorers—Juvenile literature 67-26377

"This book starts with the world as the 3rd-century sailor Pytheas knew it, and then describes how the map of the world grew and changed as explorer after explorer went into the unknown and discovered more and more." (Intro) Index. "Grades four to six." (Library J)

"This is volume two of a 10 volume set, 'Oxford Children's Reference Library,' originally published in England. . . . The entire exploration of the world . . . [up to] Gagarin's journey into space is sketchily covered. This straightforward and accurate account concentrates to a large degree on European, especially English exploration. . . . The color illustrations on each page are attractive, but as a reference book this is more suited to home than public or school library use." Patricia Dahl

Library J 93:[3308] S 15 '68 110w

"It is plainly sensible for the Oxford University Press in planning the volumes of its Reference Library for primary school children of eight or nine and upwards to have elected to devote each to a very clear area of knowledge. . . . Much sensible thought has gone into the planning of this series. The division of each book into forty-three 'chapters' each confined to two facing pages and so to be taken in reassuringly at a glance, as well as readable at a sitting . . . has everything to commend it. Yet the essential apparatus of reference is there. . . . The text, if marred here and there by small literal errors . . . [is] decent, clear, well-organized and reliable. One can hardly doubt that this is a series that will be eagerly welcomed in primary schools and (where the purse stretches so far) in many homes."

TLS p1081 N 24 '66 400w

MOORE, RICHARD E. Historical dictionary of Guatemala. 187p $5 Scarecrow

917.281 Guatemala—History—Dictionaries

67-12059

"The primary aim of this dictionary is to present a concise, factual identification of important persons, places and events of Guatemala's past; [as well as] significant geographical place names and events of present-day Guatemala. . . . The arrangement of entries is alphabetical, with . . . cross-references for variant spellings and abbreviations, including organizations and companies commonly known by their initials." (Introd) Bibliography.

MOORE, R. E.—Continued

"Geographical entries include departments, municipios, important towns, rivers, lakes, and volcanoes. Persons include presidents, famous authors, and important colonial leaders. Spanish words which have particular meaning in Guatemala and Mayan words of common usage are also included. There is no similar work published, and this should be useful to everyone desiring quick and brief references concerning Guatemala."

Choice 5:610 J1 '68 80w

"The field of Latin American history has become an important and respected part of education in the past decades, making necessary specialized works, such as this one, to cover the history of each country in detail. . . . Many of [Moore's] entries on historical figures constitute the only information to be found on them, and his descriptions of events are of a length one would expect to find in an encyclopedia. An excellent bibliography adds to the importance of this work and makes it valuable for academic and large public reference collections." J. L. Buena

Library J 93:1618 Ap 15 '68 120w

MOORE, ROBERT, jr. auth. Race, community and conflict. See Rex, J.

MOORE, ROBIN JAMES. Sir Charles Wood's Indian policy, 1853-66. 284p $9 Barnes & Noble

954.03 Halifax, Charles Wood, 1st Viscount. India—Politics and government. India—History [66-75291]

In this survey of "Wood's years ■ President of the Board of Control for India (and later as Secretary of State for India) [the author also examines] British Indian policy in the years before and after the 1857 mutiny." (Choice)

"A fine study of the play of English attitudes and the exigencies of practical politics on the shaping of British Indian policy. . . . This book has some value even for the general English history course and much value for courses concerned with 19th-century imperialism. A little specific for the small library, but an excellent study. Wood was a Whig, a gentleman, and an imperialist; this analysis shows that these three qualities were not incompatible."

Choice 4:1152 D '67 110w

"Moore's study of Wood, thoroughly researched and gracefully written, is a definitive account of the man, his politics, and the principles which moved him. Moore has clearly grasped the essential character of mid-Victorian Whig liberalism, and in this book he has traced out meticulously (and for the most part accurately) the way in which these views found expression in Indian policy during Wood's years at the India Office. Despite this impressive research the results are curiously disappointing. Partly this ■ because, as Moore himself admits, Wood was not distinguished by any originality of thought or decisiveness in execution. . . . [and] he was too deeply committed to laissez faire and government economy to push vigorously forward those programs of education and public works which he admitted India badly needed." T. R. Metcalf

Pacific Affairs 40:174 spring-summer '67 330w

TLS p265 Mr 30 '67 1000w

MOORE, SEBASTIAN. God ■ a new language. 184p $3.50 Newman press

230.2 Catholic Church—Doctrinal and controversial works. Communication (Theology) 67-18308

The author ■ Benedictine "monk of Downside Abbey in England where he teaches theology and English literature. In these sermons and essays, some of them previously published, he attempts to set forth his [views on] the current crises in Christian theology and Christian life . . . [criticizing] both the traditionalists and the progressives." (Library J)

Reviewed by E. S. Stanton
America 119:574 N 30 '68 80w

"[Moore] is a poet-theologian seeking to draw his theology out of the relationships of contemporary experience. . . . [He] seems to be on the verge of something. At times his program seems close to Bernard E. Meland's; at other times, to Joseph Haroutunian's. The book fails because Moore has collected fragmented meditations on related themes. We need to see the results of a more exhaustive development of his occasional brilliant breakthrough. Still, the book is worthy of praise. It bears a repeated reading of several of its essays." R. E. Wentz

Christian Century 85:202 F 14 '68 240w

"[The prose is] poetic and closely controlled. Only a practiced theological reader will detect how well controlled however, for the clean sophistication of these essays is skillfully woven into ■ fine texture of considerable substance. This is the singular contribution of this slim work to theology, and the struggle it embodies to understand in order to communicate suggests a new locus where theology might be undertaken with startling results, the central city parish." David Burrell

Commonweal 87:451 Ja 12 '68 650w

Critic 26:94 Ap '68 80w

"[The author] has some excellent ideas, and may be on to something, but his writing is so diffuse and disorganized and his thoughts so involved, that it is difficult to see exactly what he is driving at. . . . Dom Sebastian's book is recommended for serious collections on current theology; it will probably only confuse the general reader." W. C. Heiser

Library J 93:84 Ja 1 '68 110w

"[The author] works in ■ Liverpool parish. He brings to pastoral problems the insight of a scholar and the sense of urgency of the man on the job. His book, as he himself admits, is unsystematic, consisting largely of reprinted articles and sermons. But perhaps this ■ an advantage, for his concern is not to present a schematized defence of theological language but rather to look at the confusion that has come about in a time of unparalleled religious change. . . . The book begins with a chapter called 'A Catholic Neurosis' . . . and ends with 'In a Word' ('the naked encounter with that final reality that men call God'). It is between these poles that the argument is pursued; it is always vigorous, compassionate and wise."

TLS p711 Ag 3 '67 280w

MOORE, SHIRLEY. Biological clocks and patterns. 133p il $3.50 Criterion bks.

574.1 Biology—Periodicity. Animals—Habits and behavior 67-23449

"Starting with clocks that time the inner and outer activities of human beings, [this book describes how] it seems that nature has provided creatures of the earth, sea, and sky with inborn devices that act as clocks, compasses, thermometers, gyroscopes, sonar, radar, and computers." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by H. C. Stubbs

Horn Bk 44:574 O '68 190w

"This book is crammed with . . . examples of how the study of biological rhythms in animals and plants is helping man understand more about himself. Hibernation, navigation and communication are some of the subjects discussed. The few black-and-white drawings of animals are only decorative, but the text provides excellent comparisons and analyses of many phases of this new and growing area of science. There is a lengthy list of adult books and articles suggested for further reading. . . . Grades five to eight." B. S. Waters

Library J 93:13308 S 15 '68 120w

MOORE, W. G. A dictionary of geography; definitions and explanations of terms used in physical geography. rev & enl ed 246p pl $5.50 Praeger

910.02 Physical geography—Dictionaries 67-21753

This dictionary "concentrates on physical geography, although terms used in meteorology, climatology, geology, astronomy, and other associated sciences have been included." (Library J)

"After 14 reprintings since 1949, this is the first revision of note, with rewriting or addition of 500 entries. However, many a standard term is still absent, while some expressions totally unrelated to physical geography (e.g. airport, croft) are still included. Genetic explanations are poor, seldom comprehensive, and frequently obsolete. The plates are wholly unessential. By comparison, [F. J.] Monkhouse's A Dictionary of Geography [BRD 1966] contains 3,400 entries, is set in compact double columns (instead of single-column pages), illustrated by better chosen and informative diagrams, and succinctly presents current theories or alternative explanations."

Choice 4:1226 Ja '68 110w

Reviewed by H. R. Downey

Library J 92:3027 S 15 '67 140w

MOORE, WARREN. Weapons of the American Revolution . . . and accoutrements. 225p il col il $10 Funk

399 Arms and armor

67-28994

"Covers small arms used by all parties involved in the Revolutionary war—American, French, British, and Hessian. . . . Swords, sabers, pikes, halberds, and spoons of an earlier age were used to some extent, as were hats with metal bands to protect against saber slashes. [These are also described.]" (Library J) Bibliography.

"Most of this book is taken up with photographs of Revolutionary weapons and accoutrements, mainly from Moore's private collection but also from some 20 other collections. The pictures of pistols, shoulder weapons, edged weapons, engraved powder horns, pole arms, bayonets, saddle holsters, gorgets, and military headgear are preceded by brief texts discussing the nomenclature, manufacture, and use in the Revolution of each type of weapon. The book is very much one for the collector or would-be collector or specialist."

Choice 5:1116 N '68 100w

"Moore, a member of the Company of Military Historians, has covered the material well, using much of his information as the source of the actual weapons discussed. . . . Highly recommended for public and academic libraries." C. F. Clotfelter

Library J 93:1468 Ap 1 '68 200w

MOORE, WILBERT E. Order and change; essays in comparative sociology. 313p $8.95 Wiley

301.2 Social change

67-19449

A selection from the author's publications of the last ten years, most of which are from professional journals or symposia. "The 17 chapters are grouped under four headings: General Structural Change, The Transformation of Economic Structures, Social Structure and the Individual, and Forecasting the Future." (Am Soc R) Index.

"[These essays reflect] Moore's long-term interests: macrosocial structure, economy, occupations and professions, the labor force; innovation, industrialization, modernization and social change; polity, the family, and basic structural properties of social systems—norms, roles, socialization, and differentiation. Cross-cutting all these analytical interests is another integral ingredient, . . . comparative analysis. . . . For this reviewer, the best parts of the book are what one can call vintage Moore. . . . But as occasional pieces, these essays suffer from some shortcomings. [For example, he] rejects the traditional-transitional-modern scheme of social change. For Moore, the diversity of patterns of social change cannot be comprehended within any single general theory. Instead, we should seek to develop 'special theories,' each relevant to a particular variety of directionality in change." R. M. Marsh

Am Soc R 33:469 Je '68 1100w

"[While it] is often challenging and interesting, the appeal of this book is not likely to be for undergraduate students. Unfortunately, Moore's style in this work reflects the professionals' propensity to the use of unnecessarily labored and ponderous language. His Social Change [BRD 1964] covers similar ground, reads well, and is highly recommended for appropriate undergraduate courses."

Choice 5:380 My '68 170w

MOOREHEAD, ALAN. Eclipse. 319p il maps $6.95 Harper

940.542 World War, 1939-1945—Campaigns and battles. World War, 1939-1945—Personal narratives

68-15966

"Eclipse, the code name for the Allies' last great operation in Europe, covers the war from the invasion of Sicily to the conquest and disintegration of the Third Reich." (Publisher's note) Index. For the first edition, published by Coward-McCann, see BRD 1946.

"[This] account of [a British correspondent's] experiences during World War II with the armies in Sicily and Southern Italy tells of the capture of Rome; then moves to the June 6, 1944 landings on the Norman beaches, the advance across northern France, the crucial crossing of the Rhine, the collapse of Germany. There are dramatic contrasts in the horrors of the concentration camps and the joy in liberated Denmark and Norway. . . . Vivid writing, keen comment and strategical analysis plus illustrations in black-and-white throughout the text make this an attractive if somewhat dated book."

Best Sell 28:116 Je 1 '68 150w

Reviewed by H. S. Hayward

Christian Science Monitor p9 J1 12 '68 700w

"The republication of Eclipse, 22 years after its initial appearance and the events which Moorehead describes, is an enterprise which . . . is justified by the nature and the quality of the book itself. The author's fans who missed it the first time around will leap at it; a generation of adult readers too young to have experienced World War II will get a superb account of the liberation of Western Europe from the last days of the battles in Sicily in 1943 through the invasions of Italy and France, . . . to the final collapse of the Reich and the surrender of its forces. . . . This is an intensely subjective book . . . [and] is recommended for general collections." E. V. Sutherland

Library J 93:1630 Ap 15 '68 300w

TLS p162 F 15 '68 120w

MORAN, GABRIEL. Vision and tactics; toward an adult church. 158p $3.95 Herder & Herder

377 Catholic Church in the U.S. Religious education

68-21484

A collection of essays on the religious education provided by the Catholic Church in the United States. "Brother Moran's book [is] written to challenge the thinking of Roman Catholic religion teachers and parochial school administrators. . . . [He] proposes reforms both in curriculum and in the strategy of priorities governing allocation of money and manpower for religious education. As the subtitle implies, he favors giving a much larger priority to adult education, particularly the education of parents. . . . [He also advocates] diocesan educational centers (rather than more parochial schools)." (Christian Century)

"This collection of essays, most of which have been published before, represent the efforts of a leading figure in American religious education to point the way toward the fruitful and informative experimentation that can change the face of catechetics in this country. . . . One of Moran's best points is . . . the urgent plea that catechists receive excellent and high-powered training in theology. . . . On the other hand, [he] seems at times almost to confuse religion with theology. People can be led by instructions—preaching and teaching—into the experience of faith without being able to understand the latest thoughts of the great theologians. . . . This distinction should be drawn more sharply." R. M. Doran

America 119:44 J1 20 '68 900w

"Moran is not among those who would dismantle the existing parochial school system, but he would alter its role and orientation. . . . [He] favors the new, theologically mature Dutch Catechism because it begins with real questions of contemporary life rather than with formal theological propositions; it uses the past to illumine the living present—unlike the traditional approach, which does the opposite. . . . Let us hope that Moran's relatively tardy insights will be heeded in the stuffy schoolrooms of an otherwise dramatically changing church." D. J. Ernster

Christian Century 85:1284 O 9 '68 700w

MORAVIA, ALBERTO. The Red book and the Great Wall; an impression of Mao's China; tr. by Ronald Strom. 170p $4.95 Farrar, Straus

915.1 China (People's Republic of China)

—Description and travel

68-29464

This book describes a visit made in the summer of 1967 by the author who travelled from Hong Kong to Canton by train, and by plane to Peking, where he visited communes and factories. After visiting the Great Wall, Moravia returned to Hong Kong and subsequently to South Korea. He "sees the Cultural Revolution as a kind of Great Wall, behind which the Chinese masses wave Mao's Red Book with puritanical fervor—while assuming the human (and especially Chinese) prerogatives of being . . . contradictory." (Publishers' Weekly) Originally published in 1967 entitled La Rivoluzione Culturale in Cina.

MORAVIA, ALBERTO—Continued

"The account of the fury of the cultural revolution is a vivid one, as might be expected from such a distinguished analyst of human passion. . . . In a turgid, repetitive introduction [Moravia] tells us that the West is an excremental, consumer society, and writes of the 'sense of relief' he felt at the sight of the poverty in China. . . . [However] the widespread resistance to the cultural revolution shows that many Chinese do not appear to share Moravia's relief at their own poverty. . . . It is unfortunate that so widely read a writer as Moravia should present a fundamentally confusing account of the cultural revolution. . . . [He] shares with the Maoists a puritan dislike of the West, and it is this aspect of the cultural revolution that he obscures more than any other. Using the assumptions of the New Left in castigating Western society, he elevates Mao in much the same way as the Old Left idealized Stalin a generation ago." David Rees

Book World p5 S 22 '68 1050w

Critic 27:102 O '68 100w

"The Italian novelist describes what life is like in China today and through his accounts of the lives of common people shows what Communism there is all about. . . . Interestingly, both Mr. Moravia and the Chinese writer with whom he conversed quote sayings from Mao to support their own views and arguments. . . . One can see from this account the great success of mass indoctrination in the Communist regime. The book, which is well translated, is recommended for libraries of all sizes where it will find its appeal among general readers." W. S. Wong

Library J 93:3146 S 15 '68 170w

Nation 207:507 N 11 '68 30w

Reviewed by Richard Gilman

New Repub 159:23 O 26 '68 2350w

"One . . . expects, from an Italian intellectual, a relatively subtle response to the China of today. And one finds it. Moravia's treatment of the Mao 'cult of personality' as by no means a simple repetition of the Stalin cult is important. . . . [His] ideas about the 'Confucianisation of Marxism' (or the other way round) seem to be akin to those of Joseph Levenson in America. These notions are interesting. Marxism could not soak into a country with as deep and rich an historical past as China without undergoing some sort of osmotic change; but what leaves me less than satisfied is the emphasis on the individual thinker and the lack of emphasis on social class and social milieu. Nevertheless a rich book, with a lot of thinking in it." Owen Lattimore

New Statesman 76:758 N 29 '68 240w

Reviewed by O. E. Clubb

Sat R 51:53 N 9 '68 800w

Time 92:112 O 18 '68 200w

TLS p1303 N 21 '68 450w

MOREY, WALT. Home is the North; il. by Robert Shore. 223p $3.95; lib bdg $3.91 Dutton 67-20132

"There are Mickie, ■ wolflike Malemute, and 15-year-old Brad, whose grandmother dies leaving the boy alone in a chill cabin off the Alaskan coast. Adopted by gravelly voiced Stampede Annie and Captain Ed, the new owner of ■ mortgaged fishing boat, Brad tangles with ■ wolverine, a rogue brown bear and does grueling work setting for salmon before facing his hardest challenge—a decision about the future. . . . Ages ten to fourteen." (N Y Times Bk R)

Book World p36 S 10 '67 200w

Horn Bk 43:602 O '67 120w

"As clear and refreshing as its Alaskan setting is this believable, action-filled story. . . . Memorable human and animal characters distinguish this second book by the author." S. M. Worthing

Library J 92:4624 D 15 '67 90w

"A good adventure, offering colorful descriptions of the wilderness and the work of the salmon fishermen and featuring Robert Shore's exceptionally fine black-and-white drawings. It seems almost churlish to note that the author's earlier book, 'Gentle Ben' [BRD 1966], had more depth and sharpness in the writing and made you feel the scratchy tundra underfoot." E. C. Neville

N Y Times Bk R p38 O 8 '67 130w

MOREY, WALT. Kävik the wolf dog; il. by Peter Parnall. 192p $4.50; lib bdg $4.45 Dutton

Dogs—Stories

68-24727

"Raised to be a champion sled dog, Kävik [his] wolf-like appearance. . . . [After a plane crash] Kävik—barely alive—was rescued by [Andy Evans] and nursed back to health. . . . Even after he was reclaimed by Mr. Hunter, he never forgot the boy, and had but one purpose: to return to the boy in the North." (Horn Bk) "Ages ten to fourteen." (Book World)

Best Sell 28:227 S 1 '68 110w

"Once again the author of Gentle Ben [BRD 1966] has worked a kind of verbal thaumaturgy, mixing some familiar ingredients with a few fresh ones and a knowledge of the Alaskan wilderness to produce an animal story that is something more than the sum of its parts. . . . What this tale of survival lacks in inventiveness it makes up for amply in suspense and an observant picture of Alaska." H. R.

Book World p22 (children's issue) N 3 '68 160w

Horn Bk 44:565 O '68 210w

"The bulk of the story relates Kävik's escape from his owner, his intelligence in finding a boat to cross the water to Alaska, and his amazing trek north across 400 miles of nearly impenetrable wilderness where the call of his wolf kin was strong. Although the human characters are credible, the story's strongest feature is the thrill of canine adventure." J. G. Russell

Library J 93:[3321] S 15 '68 160w

MORFORD, M. P. O. The poet Lucan; studies in rhetorical epic. 93p $4.50 Barnes & Noble 67-6696

873 Lucan (Marcus Annaeus Lucanus)

A "study of rhetoric and poetry as constituents of the Civil War by Lucan, the Latin epic poet of the first century A.D. . . . The use of magic and dreams is also considered." (Choice)

"The book is short but well documented and thorough in what it attempts, and it is especially welcome because of the general lack of critical studies of Lucan; most valuable and original is probably the discussion of the description and function of storms in ancient epic. . . . The brief final chapter is a thoughtful picture of Lucan's place in the literature of his age. Recommended for colleges with a major program in Latin or courses in the history of epic literature."

Choice 4:1238 Ja '68 90w

"Lucanian scholarship is distinguished by the total absence of any full-scale study of the poet who captivated the young Shelley. . . . [This] book comes closest to being the prolegomenon to a definitive study. . . . Again one must stress that the book is only a preliminary study; its length and title should indicate this. Consequently, the poem's deeper meaning will not be fully explored, but through no fault of the author. Still, one would like to suggest that Phemonoe is not a 'made-up name'; this was the name of the first Delphic priestess. . . . M., while sympathetic to Lucan, is not oblivious to his excesses, and the conclusion is a model of balanced criticism. One might expect that anyone immersed in Lucan would acquire his flamboyant rhetoric, but M. writes lucidly and is remarkably untainted by his subject." B. F. Dick

Class World 61:69 O '67 260w

MORGAN, BRIAN STANFORD. See Morgan, Bryan

MORGAN, BRYAN. Electrons at work; il. by phot. and drawings by Stuart Herriot-Smith and the author. 103p $3.95 St Martins 621.381 Electronics—Juvenile literature

65-25601

The first chapter is an "account of our early acquaintance with the electron. The succeeding material traces the development of modern electronic technology. . . . Grades eight to ten." (Library J)

"[Quantum Books] reflect the traditional literary of the British writer. . . . They are attractively designed, handsomely printed on glossy paper, and have photographs and clean two-color illustrations. . . . [However] in Mr. Morgan's book . . . the early days of television are discussed in connection with John Logie Baird, the Scots TV pioneer, of whom few on this side of the ocean have heard." Isaac Asimov

Horn Bk 42:331 Je '66 80w

"A British reprint, with the usual minor vocabulary differences (programme, gramophone, valve, etc.). . . . The subject is accurately, enthusiastically and entertainingly covered, and a fresh viewpoint is interesting." Norwood Long

Library J 91:3545 J1 '66 120w

MORGAN, DALE L., ed. The Rocky Mountain journals of William Marshall Anderson: the West in 1834. See Anderson, W. M.

MORGAN, EDMUND S. Roger Williams; the church and the state. 170p $4.50 Harcourt 322 Williams, Roger. Church and state
67-25999

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by S. H. Brockunier
Am Hist R 73:1614 Je '68 600w

Reviewed by Emery Battis
J Am Hist 55:113 Je '68 550w

Reviewed by D. B. Rutman
New Eng Q 41:156 Mr '68 800w

MORGAN, EDWIN. The second life. 88p $5
Aldine pub.
821 [67-27401]

A collection of poems which includes some experimental verse.

"[The poems] range in tone from light to serious, and from the real to fantasy. The book includes . . . some concrete poetry and some permutations on sounds and letters which produce fascinating results. . . . The theme here is renewal, [but a] . . . renewal in a grotesquely possible world that makes this real one seem paradisaical." T. E. Luddy
Library J 93:2882 Ag '68 160w

"[Mr. Morgan] is certainly the wittiest and least pretentious practitioner of concrete poetry. . . . [and he] goes a long way to justifying concrete poetry as something more than a joke. . . . [He] shows a dash and romantic bravura that are welcome elements in our present thoroughly mud-coloured poetic scene." Julian Symons

New Statesman 75:179 F 9 '68 210w

"[This] first collection of poems 'was typeset by computer'. . . . The concrete poems, printed on grey paper and thus thoughtfully segregated from the rest, are done with elegance and humour. . . . Mr. Morgan is very much a performer, and when he fails it is through an excess of virtuosity."

TLS p155 F 15 '68 290w

MORGENSTERN, CHRISTIAN. Gallows songs; tr. by W. D. Snodgrass and Lore Segal [il. by Paul Klee]. 124p $7.95 Univ. of Mich. press

831 67-25337

A collection of the German poet's nonsense poems which were first gathered together under the title Alle Galgenlieder. Some of these translations have appeared previously in such publications as The Hudson Review and Atlantic Monthly.

"This is the second collection of Christian Morgenstern's Galgenlieder to appear in an English translation. The earlier volume [BRD 1964], . . . contains the German text while the present volume does not. . . . Morgenstern gently satirized reality by creating his own little universe. His poems are nonsensical and often whimsical, but they are deeply humanitarian. Much of the effect of the poetry is gained through his accomplished mastery of language. His poetry is extremely difficult to render into another language. The present translation, by the American poet W. D. Snodgrass, is a good one considering the difficulties involved. The book is very beautiful and is further enhanced by the inclusion of a few drawings by Paul Klee." Klaus Musmann

Library J 92:4510 D 15 '67 150w

Reviewed by Jerome Mazzaro
Nation 207:252 S 16 '68 1500w

"Morgenstern, who died in 1914, at the age of forty-three, moved in his specially created world as Carroll and Lear moved in theirs. German, a language difficult to pull out of phase, here takes on a demonic life of its own; satiric fantasy induces laughter of all sorts—dark and light. . . . [However] the book is a trifle too large and rather expensive." Louise Bogan

New Yorker 43:136 Mr 30 '68 120w

"The present translators have tried to give us versions in the original meters and rhyme-schemes, with the result that they destroy Morgenstern's virtues—his word-play, allusiveness, and prosodic exactness—almost completely, while at the same time producing English verse of such feebleness that we would not expect to see it in a high-school magazine. If one turns to the German texts, which must be sought elsewhere since they are not in this book, one finds many mistranslations, some unexplainable." Hayden Carruth
Poetry 112:421 S '68 270w

MORGULAS, JERROLD. The accused. 336p $4.95
Doubleday

67-19063

This novel concerns a group of survivors of the Nazi era whose paths cross in a shabby section of Manhattan's Washington Heights. Included are a rabbi and his janitor, both survivors of German camps; a judge who presided over the Nuremberg trials; and a former Wehrmacht officer. As the community prepares for the High Holy Days, each man "prepares for a moment of confrontation when he will ask and be asked: What did you do? Why did you survive? How dare you judge? And that confrontation does come, not quite as planned, in a mock trial." (Publisher's note)

"This story is told in what might be called standard everyday minimum novelese, with careful descriptions of every thought and every feeling attributed by the author to each character in every scene. Memories of tortures in the camps are recited in the same way, with colorful adjectives. . . . [The novel] makes such mixed-up hash of its soul-searching, and its essential events are so ridiculous and so opaque, that I may misunderstand its intended message. It may not have been meant to be as piously stupid and cruel as it seems." John Thompson
Commentary 44:78 D '67 650w

"This is an eloquent and admirable statement of a moral philosophy or a summation of a case before a jury, but it falters as a work of imagination. The behavior of most of the characters is just too bizarre, too jarring in a book otherwise couched in realistic terms. The novel would have been more believable if written in a lower key. By the skill he displays in bringing a neighborhood to life, Mr. Morgulas is evidently a talented writer. . . . Broad appeal may be expected." A. L. Fessler

Library J 92:3660 O 15 '67 210w

Reviewed by Martin Levin
N Y Times Bk R p55 D 10 '67 140w

"[This] is an old-fashioned story—a thesis novel, a novel of ideas. . . . Each of the symbols-disguised-as-people brush against each other until they finally converge in an explosive final scene. What saves it all from utter contrivance is the author's talent for making certain characters and scenes genuinely interesting. . . . Yet, just when Morgulas manages to breathe life into a scene, he overdoes it and shatters believability. . . . The few facile, philosophical generalizations raised at the mock trial serve melodrama, not truth, and one is left wishing that the author who had the ingenuity to devise such a plot as this could have carried it through with the patience and seriousness it deserves." Joel Lieber

Sat R 51:87 Ja 13 '68 500w

MORISON, BRADLEY G. In search of an audience; how an audience was found for the Tyrone Guthrie theatre [by] Bradley G. Morison and Kay Fliehr; commissioned by Associated councils of the arts; pref. by Sir Tyrone Guthrie. 229p $5.95 Pitman

792 Tyrone Guthrie Theatre, Minneapolis. Minnesota Theatre Company, Minneapolis. Theater—Minneapolis 68-18783

The "public relations and audience development directors at the Tyrone Guthrie Theatre in Minneapolis here relate how they went about their task of establishing a climate 'which will encourage public acceptance of artistic policy . . . and the involved support of every part of the total community.' Through 'The Stagehands' (women volunteers), speakers, brochures, market analysis, high school matinees, and numerous other projects their work progressed." (Library J) Bibliography.

"With regional centers for the performing and allied arts springing up all over the American landscape, [this] can claim to be more than a 'special interest' book. For the vast armies of visionary promoters, sponsors, and committees trying to convert brave dreams and blueprints into popular community institutions, this brief volume may have a very special interest indeed. . . . [The book deals modestly with The Minnesota Theater Company's] success and candidly with its mistakes and mistaken assumptions. The authors came away from their experience with convictions and conclusions as well as a good many unanswered questions." John Beaufort

Christian Science Monitor p13 S 26 '68 420w

"The methods [the authors] developed and the lessons they learned should be of value to other theaters and cultural institutions. The book is recommended for theater, arts, and public relations collections." A. G. Owens

Library J 93:3018 S 1 '68 140w

MORISON, SAMUEL ELIOT. "Old Bruin": Commodore Matthew C. Perry, 1794-1858 . . . 482p il maps $12.50 Little

973.5 Perry, Matthew Calbraith. U.S.—History—1815-1861 67-16707

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by R. G. O'Connor
Am Hist R 73:1633 Je '68 600w

Reviewed by Oscar Handlin
Atlantic 221:114 Ja '68 700w

Choice 5:552 Je '68 140w

Economist 228:45 Ag 31 '68 650w

Reviewed by Lon Rand

Library J 93:316 Ja 15 '68 100w [YA]

MORRALL, JOHN B. The medieval imprint; the founding of the Western European tradition. 156p il $4.95 Basic bks.

940.1 Middle Ages 68-20962

An examination of "those aspects of medieval life and thought which [the author] considers to have been of permanent consequence to Europe." (TLS) Bibliography. Index.

"A brilliant little essay in which Morrall (London School of Economics) argues . . . for a highly creative Middle Ages. Morrall divines the true medieval contributions as the birth of 'the concept of the person as the unit of social "discourse." For him, the personalist concept becomes the individuating characteristic in our Western civilization and accounts for the fruitful tension between the individual and institution. The text sparkles with wit and penetrating insights into historiography, political theory, Christianity, and medieval government covering the period from 5th to 15th century. A good appetizer for the able freshman and valuable for either medieval civilization or medieval intellectual history courses."

Choice 5:1208 N '68 110w

"Much recent scholarship has been devoted to demonstrating how gradual was the transition from medieval to modern Europe, and that there is no true dichotomy here to be discovered. On the other hand, few modern Europeans can fail to feel that they are in many ways strangers to the medieval world, and even the most extreme advocates of continuity must face this fact. It is precisely this paradox which Dr. Morrall seeks to illustrate and explain in the short but most stimulating survey of what he felicitously terms the 'medieval imprint'. . . . His sketch of the 'dilemmas of medieval Christianity' is particularly happy with its paragraphs on St. Augustine and Boethius, and the positive contributions made by medieval writers to the development of political thought are well brought out. . . . [This is] a suitable introduction to the realities of the medieval world."

TLS p188 F 22 '68 180w

MORRESSY, JOHN. The Addison tradition. 253p $4.95 Doubleday

68-18069

Matthew Grennan, a young professor at Addison College, becomes involved in a student sit-in and jeopardizes his job when Jerry Ricks, the editor of a student magazine, is suspended because of a satire he wrote about the school.

"The plot, such as it is, and the incidents, such as they are, do not make Mr. Morressy's work unusual. But the characters and the characterizations have a masterful touch. Mr. Morressy has captured the symptoms and disease of the American college. . . . [This] is written wittily. It is a sensible volume, portraying in fiction the rot of American educational institutions and the terrible compromises one young man could not make. Both the craft and the thoughts are excellent." Harvey Sicherman

Best Sell 28:208 Ag 15 '68 440w

"The subject of this novel, revolt by students and junior college faculty, is a timely one, but it is handled in a wooden and trivial manner. Moreover, the situation described is essentially trivial."

Choice 5:1132 N '68 40w

"If John Morressy thinks he has written 'a novel about a college sit-in' he had better reread his manuscript. Instead [this] reads like the diary of one youthful, 'free-thinking' assistant professor of English gasping for air amid the oppressive conservatism of a frightened college faculty. . . . It's easy to agonize with Matt because Morressy's light but pointed sarcasm is so satisfyingly accurate. . . . Matt's private war is one of temperament rather than ideology, and Morressy's gift for caricature vividly Grennanizes everything until the reader feels he is not reading a mere novel, but a running teletype of Grennan's cerebral pick-up." A. G.

Christian Science Monitor p11 Ag 29 '68 310w

Reviewed by H. L. Leet

Library J 93:2522 Je 15 '68 160w

Reviewed by Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p30 Jl 28 '68 120w

MORRIS, ALDYTH V. The Chinese mind. See Moore, C. A., ed.

MORRIS, ALDYTH V. The Indian mind. See Moore, C. A.

MORRIS, BRIAN, ed. The poems of John Cleveland. See Cleveland, J.

MORRIS, BRUCE R. Economic growth and development [by] Bruce R. Morris in cooperation with C. Wendell King. 529p $7.50 Pitman

330.9 Underdeveloped areas. Economic development 66-25640

"The purpose of this book is to examine the wide range of economic problems facing underdeveloped countries and the wide variety of solutions that could be effected. An introductory chapter presents the concepts and facts involved in growth and development, followed by a summation of theories of economic growth. Then . . . each phase of economic life is introduced and discussed in relation to the development process, the problems involved, and the reforms necessary to improve its contribution to the total development of the economy." (Publisher's note) Chapter bibliographies. Index.

"Three points of view underlie [the author's] approach to the economic development of poor countries: (1) that 'the combination of development measures applicable to each country is unique,' (2) that 'a wide variety of more or less interrelated measures is necessary for development and that the all too scarce resources of the country must be allocated in a manner calculated to achieve the best results,' and (3) that 'the primary problem in economic development is the improvement of the human element, and it is this that should have priority in the investment program.' The organization of the book follows from the first point of view. . . . [The author] does not attempt to present any theory of economic development which he believes to be generally applicable, but instead tries to touch upon all the problems and possible solutions which might be relevant in understanding the economic position of any poor country. . . . The editorial work on the volume is poor . . . [but the] book does impress upon the reader the complexity of the problems facing poor countries, and the necessarily tentative nature of much of the analysis and of many of the policy recommendations in the field. It also will serve to acquaint the student with a fairly wide body of literature." F. M. McLaughlin

Am Econ R 57:1343 D '67 1550w

"A clearly written introductory text with 15 chapters that include Theories of Economic Growth, Agriculture, Industry, International Trade, Investment Criteria, etc. . . . At times verges on checklisting and oversimplified capitalizations, however, Morris makes good use of statistical data and scrupulously avoids single factor causation. . . . Might be an appropriate text for students' with only a semester introductory course background in economics."

Choice 4:1420 F '68 110w

MORRIS, CYNTHIA TAFT, jt. auth. Society, politics & economic development. See Adelman, I.

MORRIS, DESMOND. The naked ape; a zoologist's study of the human animal. 252p $5.95 McGraw

599 Man. Primates

67-29198

The curator of mammals of the London Zoological Society, joint author with Ramona Morris of the book Men and Apes (BRD 1966) has written an ethological study which draws upon animal behavior studies. In it he concentrates "on those aspects of our lives that have obvious counterparts in other species: such activities as feeding, grooming, sleeping, fighting, mating and care of the young. When faced with these fundamental problems, how does the naked ape react? How do his reactions compare with those of other monkeys and apes? In which particular respect is he unique, and how do his oddities relate to his special evolutionary story?" (Intro) Bibliography.

Reviewed by P. J. Reiss
America 118:326 Mr 9 '68 500w

Reviewed by W. B. Hill
Best Sell 27:436 F 15 '68 700w

Reviewed by Peter Farb
Book World p1 Ja 21 '68 1250w

"One of the better behavioral science books of the year. It is informative, well written, and should appeal to laymen as well as to undergraduates. Morris . . . gives us a startling view of man, stripped of the facade we try so hard to hide behind. It should be noted that many anthropologists may disagree with some of Morris' ideas, especially his notion that the study of primitive societies will not yield much information on man because these societies are petrified."

Choice 5:228 Ap '68 160w

Christian Century 85:204 F 14 '68 130w

Christian Science Monitor p11 F 21 '68 150w

Reviewed by Martin Green
Commonweal 87:724 Mr 15 '68 550w

Critic 26:93 Ap '68 130w

Reviewed by K. G. Jackson
Harper 236:150 Mr '68 500w

Reviewed by J. D. Buffington
Library J 93:91 Ja 1 '68 250w

"The author's attempts to startle and dismay the reader by his interpretations are, in a sense, stimulating and often thought provoking, but he must be taken to task for anatomical and physiological nonsense. . . . It is not possible either to tackle all the controversial aspects of this book in a reasonable amount of space—

I have made some 20 pages of notes while reading—or to single out for special attention the sweeping generalizations and prognostications that many readers will unfortunately misread as authentic statements rather than as speculations. . . . The author has provided the reader with some sort of psychiatric mirror that reflects his motivations in ancestral flashbacks. He has introduced some novel and challenging ideas and speculations. Various aspects will appeal to certain readers, others will be amused, others annoyed, and others satisfied. I believe that a more accurate subtitle could be 'speculations on man's ethos based on the studies of other animals.' " Ronald Singer
Natur Hist 77:64 F '68 2300w

"It is ironic, as well as interesting, that [this is] by far the most popular natural history book to be published in Britain during 1967. . . . The Morris technique is undeniably effective in helping us to reappraise the most common aspects of human life—simply because he presents them in such an unfamiliar way. . . . [The book] has appeared in Britain at an interesting time. Perhaps it could become a useful social antidote, in the sense of bringing meaning once more to actions that have become meaningless in the sexy-permissive, swinging Britain of the late 1960's. . . . No fault lies with the good Doctor though. His book is full of brilliant insights . . . and he is nowhere better than in his chapters on sex. . . . Dr. Morris has written a lively and provocative book, and I for one am happy to forget its limitations in return for this new, if incomplete, view of myself." Peter Williams

Natur Hist 77:67 F '68 650w

Reviewed by John Updike
New Repub 158:23 F 3 '68 300w

Reviewed by Lionel Tiger
New Repub 158:36 Ap 20 '68 500w

Reviewed by D. R. Newth
New Statesman 74:469 O 13 '67 1840w

Reviewed by J. Z. Young
N Y Rev of Books 10:8 Mr 14 '68 650w

"Designation and discussion of man as the naked ape is, indeed, objectionable. It is bad zoology and inept biology. . . . Morris makes [some] valid observations and interesting interpretations. On each of them he also makes remarks that are at best dubious and at their rare worst, ludicrous. . . . The second chapter, much the longest of the eight, is on sex. Its highlight is a fully detailed clinical account of coitus. The most interesting point about this and other aspects of human sexuality discussed by Morris is that in these, among the most fundamentally biological facts about any species, Morris's 'naked ape' is almost completely non-apelike. . . . Most evolutionists, geneticists, and anthropologists will feel that he overemphasizes genetic controls and underemphasizes the fact that a loosening of such controls, a broadening of genetic reaction ranges, is a fundamental element in the origin of this non-ape. The book has a bibliography of 78 titles but no index. There have lately been many good books on animal behavior, human origins, primates and related subjects, including some by Desmond Morris and his wife. In choosing the present volume The Book-of-the-Month Club has not selected the best of these." G. G. Simpson
N Y Times BK R p14 F 4 '68 1250w

Reviewed by Morton Fried
Sat R 51:34 F 17 '68 1000w

Time 91:80 Ja 26 '68 750w

"Primate Ethology is a collection of original papers (ed. by D. Morris, BRD 1968) presenting the results of research on several patterns of behaviour in monkeys and apes. . . . In The Naked Ape Dr. Morris carries the ideas outlined in Primate Ethology a step—perhaps several steps—farther. . . . Man and his ways, treated as a subject for study exactly as the monkeys and apes in the first book, present a startling appearance to the general reader who has no knowledge of ethology, and who will, no doubt, often recoil in dismay and deny the explanations given. . . . In discussing the rising tide of the human population of the world Dr. Morris rightly points out that man is part of biology, and that he cannot with impunity break the rules that govern his biological nature—that he is not somehow above biological control. . . . This is not only a thoughtful and stimulating book, but also an extremely interesting one, although some of the exciting ideas in it may be more than a little speculative."

TLS p1066 N 9 '67 300w

Va Q R 44:cxixii summer '68 130w

Reviewed by Daniel McKinley
Yale R 57:612 summer '68 300w

MORRIS, DESMOND, ed. Primate ethology. 374p il col il $10.75 Aldine pub.

599 Primates. Animals—Habits and behavior 67-28864

This book contains ten papers concerning old and new world primates in the wild and in captivity. The studies cover aspects of primate life, including facial expressions, sexual signals, grooming, play, social organization and parental care. Contributors include Wolfgang Wickler, John Sparks, T. E. Rowell, N. G. Blurton Jones, and others. Bibliographies.

Choice 5:521 Je '68 190w

"Many excellent drawings. . . . The book is a well-written contribution to a college-level library." J. H. Zar and J. R. Oppenheimer

Library J 93:1492 Ap 1 '68 260w

Reviewed by Lionel Tiger

New Repub 158:36 Ap 20 '68 500w

Reviewed by D. R. Newth

New Statesman 74:469 O 13 '67 900w

"Many of the major concepts presented in this book have appeared before in publications by the same authors (as in the case of Van Hooft, Hinde, and Spencer-Booth, Van Lawick-Goodall, and Moynihan.) . . . There are, however, some new and controversial points in several chapters. . . . All the contributors represent the European school of ethology, and all received their graduate training from Tinbergen, Morris, Hinde, or Lorenz. . . . Despite the fact that many of the individual chapters are good, this book does not leave one with a satisfactory general view of primate behavior, nor does it add up to significantly new concepts of primate characteristics. . . . This book will be useful to primate behaviorists, but it neglects, in my view, too many important aspects of primate behavior to be a good introduction for the general scientific reader." C. H. Southwick

Science 159:1342 Mr 22 '68 2700w

Sci Am 218:146 Mr '68 260w

"All the papers in this volume deal with the behaviour of primates in relation to the social group. . . . In reading these valuable objective studies one gets the impression that, speaking teleologically, the evolution of the primates has been struggling towards ever improved methods of communication. . . . Almost every author of these papers, when discussing his subject after presenting his observations, points out the bearing on similar aspects of the behaviour of man—and the last paper gives the results of applying the methods of ethological study to a group of three to five-year-old human children. These discussions add greatly to the interest of the book. . . . [This volume] provides stimulating reading not only for the advanced research worker but also for the general reader."

TLS p1066 N 9 '67 300w

MORRIS, IVAN, ed. & tr. The pillow book of Sei Shōnagon, 2v. See Sei Shōnagon

MORRIS, IVAN I. Dictionary of selected forms in classical Japanese literature. 155p $7.50 Columbia univ. press

495.6 Japanese language 66-13020

"The completely Romanized entries are listed alphabetically in context, sources of quotes are indicated, grammatical classifications given, and the various English translations presented. Appendices contain conjugations of verbs and adjectives, listing of forms according to grammatical functions, and honorific, polite, and humble auxiliary verbs." (Choice)

"A valuable supplement to a standard Japanese-English dictionary."

Choice 4:804 O '67 200w

"English-speaking students who are learning to read pre-modern Japanese texts will find this to be an eminently practical handbook to give them help where they need it most—not in deciphering the lexical meaning but in figuring out how the peculiar binding agent of the Japanese function words may be expressed in simple, direct English. From representative Japanese texts covering the period 712-c.1330 the author has chosen most of the common grammatical particles. He has explained them in English and illustrated them in various examples which he has translated. Although over half of the passages come from The Pillow Book and The Tale of Genji, both of which date from the early eleventh century, this does not necessarily limit the book's usefulness. . . . Here is a rare book that, far from obfuscating an already difficult subject, actually makes it a great deal plainer." L. M. Zolbrod

Pacific Affairs 41:152 spring '68 200w

MORRIS, JAMES. Pax Britannica; the climax of an empire. 544p pl $7.50 Harcourt

942.081 Great Britain—History—19th century. Great Britain—Colonies. Commonwealth of Nations 68-24395

The author of Oxford (BRD 1965) "sets out to describe the British Empire at its moment of . . . climax, which he pinpoints as Queen Victoria's Jubilee in 1897. . . . Several imperial centers on various continents are described. . . . The motives of imperialism are discussed, the methods of the Empire's rule, its art and architecture, its trade and communications, and the people who ran it. . . . The burden of Empire is there, but also its spoils and pleasures, the arrogance it bred, the profits it provided. . . . In subsequent volumes [the author] intends to recall the warlike rise of the Victorian Empire, and its later disillusionment." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by E. M. Yoder

Book World p4 Ja 12 '69 950w

Christian Century 85:1477 N 20 '68 60w

"Mr Morris has admirably captured the confusion of brilliance and squalor, dynamic energy and bizarre comedy that made up the imperial picture of 1897. . . . [However] he is himself occasionally misled into stretching out the time-spans. . . . But these are only slips. His main emphasis is on the transient nature of the imperialist phase. . . . As entertaining as ever, he peppers with wit each slice neatly carved from the huge imperial carcass. . . . He dissects Kitchener, Cromer, Lugard, Rhodes, Jameson and other imperial practitioners. . . . Even in 1897, while 'the hysteria of the New Imperialism shrilled on its way unabashed,' the critics were calling it both unprofitable and immoral. . . . Mr Morris's particular achievement is that his ebulliently readable imperial panorama does not ignore the omens of this kind."

Economist 229:iii N 9 '68 750w

Reviewed by C. L. Mowat

New Statesman 76:542 O 25 '68 700w

Reviewed by Philip Magnus

N Y Times Bk R p6 N 3 '68 1100w

"[The book is] an exuberantly sentimental but by no means credulous journey through the Empire at its zenith. [It] takes you first class all the way (P. & O. wherever possible, of course). . . . [One] suspects that after reading Morris's spirited tribute to the vitality—and the accomplishments—of Britain's epic socio-economic-geopolitical adventure even the fiercest Anglophobe might be unable to resist a reluctant, whispered 'Wizard, by Jove!' Charles Miller

Sat R 52:81 Ja 11 '69 650w

"The book is a tour de force, offering a vast amount of information and description, with a style full of sensuality and perfumes; so that anyone who is half in love with the late Victorian age will be still further captivated. The photographs, superbly chosen, reinforce the charms. . . . As an experienced travel-writer, [the author] carries us on his grand tour of Empire inviting us to see its splendours . . . with his own wide eyes. But when we retreat into history, there is a grave ambiguity about how we are seeing it—with whose eyes. The nostalgic traveller and the historian sit uneasily together. . . . Mr. Morris often seems to be transferring his own emotions to the Victorians themselves, investing them with all his romanticism and sensibility. . . . It is the central weakness of his book that it is set in a style, and in a frame, so nostalgic that it never really comes to grips with the harsh and brutal realities of the Empire as it was."

TLS p1241 N 7 '68 3400w

MORRIS, JOYCE M. Standards and progress in reading; studies of children's reading standards and progress in relation to their individual attributes, home circumstances and primary school conditions; with foreword and introd. by W. D. Wall. 493p $7.50 N.Y. univ. press

372.4 Reading

67-84032

This report covers "an eleven-year span of the reading achievement of English children in the Kent schools. An extensive study is reported of 2,200 fifth grade children, followed by two different intensive studies of smaller groups of third, fourth, and fifth graders, and finally by a follow-up study of ninth grade children. The findings suggest the complexity and interaction of a multitude of factors in the reading process." (Choice) Bibliography. Index. The book was first published in Great Britain in 1966.

"This study is a model of a large-scale research project in the reading area. The major criticism concerns the British terminology in the academic realm and the references to unknown British tests. A glossary for the American edition would have been most helpful."

Choice 5:844 S '68 190w

"[This report] confirms a feeling that has been in the back of thoughtful teachers' minds for some time. Children who cannot read at the age of eight are more or less permanently handicapped . . . [by] a lack of knowledge on the part of primary school teachers on how to compensate for the handicap by correct diagnostic procedure and proper techniques. . . . Going ruefully over [this book] makes me feel that training [teachers] . . . should be given less Milton and more Morris." Ronald Deadman

New Statesman 72:962 D 30 '66 950w

MORRIS, RICHARD B. The first book of the founding of the republic; il. by Leonard Everett Fisher. 64p $2.65 Watts, F.

973.4 U.S.—History—1783-1809—Juvenile literature 68-10728

The author gives an "account of the years 1789-1829 in America, highlighting the political leaders of the time, their opinions, agreements, and disagreements. Washington, Hamilton, Jefferson, Jay, and John Adams are discussed with their strengths and weaknesses. The meanings of Cabinet, impressment, credit, 'Great Rule' and other concepts are explained. [Index.] Grades four to six." (Library J)

"This well-written book could lead students to individual biographies of each leader. The full page black-and-white scratchboard illustrations are strong and attractive." E. M. Porteus

Library J 93:1314 Mr 15 '68 80w

"A distinguished historian, accustomed to addressing more adult audiences, Mr. Morris does an excellent job on this story of the early days of the republic. . . . The 'age of giants' he calls it, and he makes the administrations of Washington and John Adams downright exciting. He seems to feel no obligation to be incomprehensible, and, though he never condescends, he refrains from the polysyllabic jargon beloved by too many of his compeers. He tells the story straight, and a good story it is. The title of the book suggests that there will be others like it along soon. Good." D. B. C.

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p40 My 5 '68 120w

MORRIS, RICHARD B. John Jay, the nation, and the court. 114p $4.75 Boston Univ. press

347.9 Jay, John 67-25933

Three interpretive essays which were originally presented in 1965 as the Gaspar G. Bacon Lectures on the Constitution at Boston University. The author traces Jay's "contributions as constitutional thinker, jurist, and diplomat to the growth and development of nationalism in the United States." (Publisher's note) Index to cases cited.

"In addition to correcting older evaluations and making it clear that Jay does indeed merit 'a place in the first rank of the Founding Fathers,' this volume once again calls attention to the extraordinary self-confidence of those revolutionary leaders represented by Jay. . . . Perhaps more important, it suggests, if only implicitly, that an intensive analysis of the range of personality types among the men of the Revolution and of the relationship of each type to the general process and character of the Revolution might contribute substantially to our understanding of its psychological dimensions." J. P. Greene

Am Hist 73:1627 Je '68 500w

"[Morris] thinks that 'almost alone among the Founding Fathers . . . John Jay has not received adequate recognition for his seminal contributions as statesman and constitutional expositor.' On the contrary, Jay . . . has probably received all the recognition that is his due if no more can be said in his behalf than Morris has presented. . . . The account and style are sometimes banal. Morris has emphasized Jay's nationalism and Federalist ideas which were already well known; and the two chapters on Jay as Chief Justice would be slender indeed if the 'background and times' materials were excised. To argue that Jay was an 'activist' judge, as Morris does, sounds exceedingly curious; for Jay's 'activism' consisted mainly in upholding the rights of creditors."

Choice 5:678 J1 '68 220w

"While these . . . [essays] are not intended to be definitive, the fact that . . . [Morris] probably knows more about the nation's first Chief Justice than anyone else gives them an authentic ring. As a result . . . perhaps more is expected of this crisply written little volume than is warranted by its size. Brevity alone, however, is not responsible for the book's shortcomings. . . . The background emphasis is unfortunately devoted largely to foreign affairs . . . but to emphasize this theme almost to the exclusion of other influential factors is to take a limited view of constitutional history not usually associated with Morris. . . . There are, moreover, important unraised questions. . . . Undoubtedly Jay's qualities, good and bad, will emerge with the publication of his papers. In the meantime, thanks to this sprightly preface, he can no longer be ignored." Donald Roper

J Am Hist 55:123 Je '68 500w

MORRIS, ROBERT, jr. ed. Urban planning and social policy. See Frieden, B. J.

MORRIS, WILLIE. North toward home. 438p $5.95 Houghton

B or 92

67-25803

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by Joseph Epstein

Commentary 45:74 Ja '68 1500w

Reviewed by Susan Lardner

New Yorker 43:106 F 3 '68 1100w

TLS p985 S 12 '68 1200w

Va Q R 44:ix11 spring '68 400w

MORRIS, WRIGHT. A bill of rites, a bill of wrongs, a bill of goods. 176p $5.50 New Am. lib.

917.3 U.S.—Civilization

68-15279

This is a collection of fifteen essays on the contemporary American scene by the novelist who won the National Book Award for The Field of Vision (BRD 1956).

"[This] is a consumer's book. . . . It's a treasury of one-liners, newspaper leads disguised as thoughts that make the book become what it's author most pretends to abhor. . . . The essays smell of the lecture hall. . . . Morris looks things over that bear watching. But he refuses to look hard, refuses to bend over and pick up the things he pretends to want to see. . . . Now and again, in this unhappy work, he stumbles on something in the mind's attic that we're glad to share with him. . . . But then he gets lazy again and we see how threadbare are the lecturer's tweeds, how accessible are our dilemmas to the cheap touch. . . . These are homilies, little ideas on stilts, that threaten to make of experience itself a tarnished cliché." Geoffrey Wolff

Book World p14 Je 2 '68 750w

Christian Century 85:268 F 28 '68 40w

"Like all such collections, [this] is a form of intellectual autobiography. Mr. Morris's merit is that he pays close and fair attention to concepts he can never love. . . . Logical purposes and craft standards—these are the essences of [his] world. . . . For Mr. Morris is of the over-forty generation that simply cannot help finding a touch of the sinister in television commercials, speed reading, and the computer. What distinguishes him from many of his contemporaries is that he never allows these subjects to reduce him to diatribe. He reports the case for—then, with all the old-fashioned literateness and wit he can muster, argues the case against." Melvin Maddocks

Christian Science Monitor p12 Mr 14 '68 490w

"Readers who find [Mr Morris's] novels difficult to understand will find the same frustrations here. His pessimism does not always make enjoyable reading, but the reader will be rewarded by being drawn into thinking about the beliefs of today's American and the issues confronting him. Mr. Morris is concerned about the loss of individual thought and the loss of individual privacy in our society. A book worth the attention of all libraries with interested readers." T. M. Wagenknecht

MORRIS, WRIGHT—Continued

Library J 93:201 Ja 15 '68 110w

Reviewed by Peter Berek
Nation 206:478 Ap 8 '68 1350w

Reviewed by John Simon
N Y Times BK R p12 J1 14 '68 1150w

"[This book] is written out of almost pure indignation. . . . What is [Morris] angry at? Among other things, the triumph of raw material over imagination. . . . Morris deprecates our love of facts as a possibly fatal distraction from the business of being human. . . . He discusses other aspects of contemporary culture that illustrate and support his thesis: pop art, the behavior of the affluent elderly, the decline of the individual, the problem of the image. . . . He is often funny but always serious. . . . Most of his blows hit the mark. . . . Morris has found explicit and powerful words for his uneasiness, and we had better listen to him." Granville Hicks

Sat R 51:29 Mr 16 '68 1150w

MORRISON, J. S. Greek oared ships, 900-322 B.C., by J. S. Morrison and R. T. Williams. 356p il pl maps $19.50 Cambridge

623.82 Ships. Greece—Antiquities. Naval art and science [67-19504]

Descriptions of Greek vessels during the period "from Homer to the death of Alexander . . . [found on] decorated pottery and [in] quotations from literature and from naval inventories. The pottery is illustrated by diagrams and plates; and the quotations are given in full." (Publisher's note) Gazetteer. Glossaries. Bibliography. Index to collections. Index of Greek and Latin words. General index.

"A wide range of archaeological and textual evidence is interpreted in the light of the authors' considerable knowledge of seamanship to summarize succinctly much of the currently available knowledge about ancient Greek ships and their use, especially in warfare. . . . Although lucid and well documented, the work operates on a time scale compressed for the early end of the sequence, so that the range covered is really 1200-322 B.C., a greater span than indicated in the title."

Choice 5:1022 O '68 140w

"Evidence first, then conclusions, is [the authors'] watchword. And so, after a brief introductory chapter, there follows an exhaustive list of every ship picture dating from the Geometric age and a study of relevant passages in Homer and Hesiod; then a list of ship pictures on black-figured vases and the like, followed by a study of passages in contemporary poets and of those in Herodotus and Thucydides that relate to this period; then a list of representations from the fifth and fourth centuries B.C. and a consideration of relevant passages in the tragic and lyric poets, Herodotus, Thucydides, Aristophanes, Xenophon, and . . . other literary sources. . . . A number of individual points are contestable. . . . [but] this is a superb piece of scholarship." Lionel Casson

Class World 62:51 O '68 300w

"Certain passages in Greek poetry and prose are not clear without proper understanding of the nautical terminology employed. R. T. Williams, senior lecturer in classics, University of Durham, and J. S. Morrison, who is president of University College Cambridge, and a member of the Society of Nautical Research, have written this scholarly and scientific study which should correct this situation. To this reviewer's knowledge, it represents the first attempt at a thorough investigation of all the evidence, both literary and archaeological, covering the periods. . . . Numerous plates and diagrams richly complement the intelligently knowledgeable text. The book is highly recommended for academic and special collections." F. D. Lazenby

Library J 93:2868 Ag '68 160w

MORRISON, JOSEPH L. W. J. Cash: Southern prophet; a biography and reader. 309p $6.95 Knopf

B or 92 Cash, Wilbur Joseph 67-18611

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by D. M. Abshire
Am Pol Sci R 62:991 S '68 900w

Choice 5:614 J1 '68 70w

Reviewed by John Dollard
N Y Times BK R p22 Mr 3 '68 1400w

MORRISON, LILLIAN, jt. auth. Miranda's music. See Boudin, J.

MORROW, JOHN H. First American ambassador to Guinea. 291p il $9 Rutgers univ. press
327.66 Guinea. U.S.—Foreign relations—Africa 67-31172

The author gives an account of his experiences as U.S. Ambassador to Guinea from 1959 to 1961.

"In The Reds and the Blacks [BRD 1967, W. J. Attwood gave a spicy, often tendentious account of his ambassadorial activities in Guinea 1961-63; his book illustrated journalistic naiveté about African politics that, nevertheless, offered many entertaining and insightful passages. Morrow (Rutgers) has written a far different book: low-key, diplomatic, often pedestrian. He suffered from immense problems in his 21 months as Ambassador, such as inexperience and lack of major support from Washington, to which [his book] alludes. But the book is too brief, too discreet to offer major insights into policy-making."

Choice 5:872 S '68 130w

"Most of this literate and absorbing book by a professor turned ambassador, reads though [the author] were talking with you. In the final chapter, in which he looks to the future of United States policy in Guinea and in the rest of Africa, what he says is clear, simple, sensible, and as constructive as anything I've read from any African specialist. . . . The account of the relationship between Ambassador Morrow and President Touré of Guinea will be of special interest because [the reader] will get an excellent understanding of one of Africa's foremost leaders, and the men around him. Mr. Morrow's book is recommended generally." M. D. Herrick

Library J 93:1629 Ap 15 '68 330w

MORSBACH, MABEL. The Negro in American life. 273p il maps $6.95 Harcourt

301.451 Negroes—History—Juvenile literature. U.S.—History—Juvenile literature Civil rights—Juvenile literature 67-18544

"Feeling it necessary to supplement inadequate American history textbooks, the Cincinnati Public School system commissioned the writing of this text on Negro history, chronologically arranged from the 17th century to the present. [Chronology. Bibliography. Index.] Grade seven and up." (Library J)

"A distinguished and imaginative presentation of this crucial aspect of U.S. history is desperately needed by young Americans. Until such a book is published, this one will suffice. Although it too much resembles an old-fashioned, lackluster textbook, it is clearly written, dispassionately just, and remarkably thorough." M. L. Birmingham

Commonweal 87:184 N 10 '67 50w

"Bland, soporific, textbook language will tax readers' ability to envisage the action and will fail to stimulate interest. A much greater fault is that the brutality underscoring every step of the Negro's history in America is either avoided or minimized. . . . Distortion of another kind exists in the coverage of certain subjects out of all proportion to their historical importance. For instance: three pages are devoted to Marian Anderson, but only three paragraphs to Marcus Garvey; four pages to Mary McLeod Bethune, but just one and one-half paragraphs to Malcolm X and two paragraphs to W. E. B. DuBois. . . . Although a vast number of facts and dates are covered, the book's value will be limited to the biographical information on the less important and least controversial figures." S. E. O'Neal

Library J 93:308 Ja 15 '68 220w

"[This] book helps correct the omissions and distortions of the standard texts. The chapters on the rich variety of African cultures, on Negroes who helped explore the New World, and on the important distinctions between the experience of the Afro-American and the other immigrant groups are especially useful. . . . The author properly rejects the myth of Reconstruction as an era of nothing but graft and corruption. But the furious political battles that shaped or misshaped executive policy and legislation are missing. The final section on the struggle for full equality in the 1960's ends on the note that the United States is 'the world's best home for Negroes.' That piety will not impress many black readers. It is one sign of the congenital defect of the textbook—the bland tone, the bleached prose, the absence of any voices speaking out of the anger and bitterness that the predigested facts ever so faintly imply." Milton Meltzer

N Y Times Bk ■ p26 F 11 '68 240w

MORSE, ARTHUR D. While six million died; a chronicle of American apathy. 420p $6.95 Random house

327.73 Jews—Persecutions. U.S.—Foreign relations. World War, 1939-1945—Jews 67-22642

In studying American and British knowledge about and reaction to Nazi plans for the annihilation of the Jews, the author has examined two types of information: "materials published openly from 1933 to 1945 and . . . government documents which were denied to the public." (Introd) Excerpts from this book were published in Look on November 14 and 28, 1967. Bibliography. Index.

"Like most single-dimensional journalistic efforts, the book has glaring defects. The entire second section is a mélange of misinformation and out-of-context statements, in which emotion runs rampant over reason. In keeping with the times, the author feels compelled to drag Pius XII over the coals. . . . More unfair is the author's attack by innuendo on the character of the late historian and wartime minister to Spain, Carlton J. H. Hayes. . . . This reviewer predicts a limited readership for the book. With the exception of a concerned Jewish minority, it will be ignored by an older generation. . . . At the polar extreme of the generation gap, however, militants will seize upon it as further proof of the perfidy of their elders." R. H. Miller

America 118:270 F 24 '68 650w

Reviewed by R. A. Mohl
Best Sell 27:462 Mr 1 '68 700w

"This is an angry book by an angry author, and impossible to read without sharing the anger. . . . Against the backdrop of murder squads and extermination camps in eastern Europe, the protagonists—primarily American, secondarily British bureaucrats—thumb their rule-books and write their memoranda, ingenious in finding ways of doing nothing. . . . Although carefully researched and impressively supported by documentation, [this book] is reportorial rather than analytical. This quality is at once the book's weakness and its strength. . . . [That America remained a bystander] is a sharp indictment, and on many counts proved . . . [but] Morse fires his broadsides a bit indiscriminately, and assumes too readily that everything was done wrong." Telford Taylor

Book World p1 F 4 '68 1950w

Reviewed by Edwin Tetlow
Christian Science Monitor p9 Mr 13 '68 380w

Reviewed by E. M. Bennett
J Am Hist 55:426 S '68 330w

Reviewed by F. E. Hirsch
Library J 93:1002 Mr 1 '68 230w

"As Morse demonstrates, the record of the United States in dealing with the 'Jewish problem' from 1939 through 1945 was wretched. He makes that demonstration at three levels of diminishing persuasiveness: as a moralist, a prosecutor, and a historian. But at every level he commands attention for his case. . . . [His] brief against the officers of the [State] department convicts them in the large not of anti-Semitism, of which there was some, but of an almost glacial immobility, of which there was a great deal. The verdict is no less devastating on that account. . . . Here and there, Morse puts his topic into the perspective of the time, but by and large he examines the question of the Jews without sufficient reference to related, revealing matters. . . . While intellectually aware of Roosevelt's [priority for victory], Morse condemns it emotionally. . . . Accordingly the picture [he] paints of Roosevelt is distorted, though his descriptions of American apathy are accurate enough. . . . Still, [he] has made his major point." J. M. Blum

New Repub 158:30 F 17 '68 1750w

Reviewed by Elizabeth Wiskemann
New Statesman 75:484 Ap 12 '68 140w

Reviewed by E. W. Kenworthy
N Y Times Bk R p3 Mr 3 '68 2050w

Reviewed by R. A. Sokolov
Newsweek 71:98 F 12 '68 1000w

"The message of [this book] is a bitter one, perhaps too bitter for many Americans. . . . Unfortunately, by neglecting to footnote his text with references to the exact sources upon which he drew, many of which have only recently been made available by the National Archives and the State Department, Mr. Morse has unnecessarily created a 'credibility gap' through which those will pass who wish to question or discredit not only his facts but the thrust of his story." Balfour Brickner

Sat R 51:35 F 10 '68 650w

Time 91:86 Mr 1 '68 1050w

TLS p671 Je 27 '68 750w

MORSE, EVANGELINE. Brown Rabbit: her story; il. by David Stone Martin. 191p $3.50; Titan ed $3.48 Follett

67-4993

"Ceretha Jane and her parents . . . reluctantly exchanged their home in Mississippi for a tall, ugly building in a rundown part of a Northern town where Papa had a job in the steel mills. Fortunately, they were intelligent, spunky, not easily defeated. Brown Rabbit (pet name for Ceretha Jane) learned about snobbery from girls who snubbed her for her Deep South background and her friendship with another Southern girl who was badly handicapped by poverty and ignorance. But Brown Rabbit kept her chin up, did well in school and settlement house programs, began to blossom in her new world. . . . Ages nine to twelve." (Book World)

"Evangeline Morse, a social worker in Gary, Ind., depicts characters and situations with sympathy and realism. She tells Brown Rabbit's story with warmth and humor, while not neglecting the bleaker aspects of disintegrating neighborhoods and restricted housing." F. G.

Book World p24 O 8 '67 190w

Horn Bk 43:754 D '67 160w

"The book deals with some of the more subtle yet striking social frictions of integration—the quiet but automatic suspicion of some white people and the snobbery toward each other that exists among Negroes of different economic levels. As a piece of fiction, however, it has little to offer. Mundane school and household activities comprise most of the action; the characters are little more than types and the dialogue is stilted." E. S. Cullen

Library J 93:293 Ja 15 '68 100w

"It is not easy to handle contemporary themes in a book for pre-adolescents, but Miss Morse tackles her subject bravely. . . . The plot is cluttered, the pacing uneven, but Brown Rabbit's story, if not always graceful, is certainly too true to resist." Alice Fleming

N Y Times Bk R p26 Ag 13 '67 180w

MORSE, MEL. Ordeal of the animals. 212p $5.95 Prentice-Hall

636 Animals—Treatment 68-16322

In this study of animal abuse, the author, president of the Humane Society of the United States, focuses "not on past achievements, but rather on the continuing vulnerability of the lower animals and man's [exploitation of] the beast world." (Natur Hist)

"Much is unpleasant; little is sentimental even tolerable in [this book]. . . . [Morse] exposes so-called medical research which proves nothing other than man's capacity to inflict pain, glaringly callous 'science experiments' in schools, slaughter procedures, and the Kosher method, the filth of roadside zoos, murderously stupid hunters, the cruel farms for stolen or strayed pets. The documentation is thin, but most readers will be convinced. . . . Morse is temperate even when contemptuous; perhaps he understates his subject for a nation of pet lovers. Intelligence and fury is no substitute for proof, but for libraries lacking other materials on this subject the book is necessary." Anita Nygaard

Library J 93:2514 Je 15 '68 150w

"One of [Morse's] most telling points is that cruelty today is seldom seen. . . . Any concept of mercy or fairness toward animals has an emotional basis, and there is no doubt as to where the author's sympathies lie. . . . Morse writes from an authoritative background, for he has been in humanitarian work for thirty years. . . . There is no bibliography, probably because the data used came . . . from personal experience and observation. . . . The book will be read with approval by all who have shed their insensibility to the plight of silent animals, but it is not likely to change the attitudes of state conservation department officials who play sweethearts with sportsmen's lobbies . . . or those 'scientists' who still affirm . . . that science has not yet proved that animals suffer." Gerald Carson

MORSE, MEL.—Continued

Natur Hist 77:91 N '68 700w

MORTIMER, PENELOPE. My friend says it's bulletproof. 209p $4.95 Random house

67-12723

Muriel Rowbridge, an attractive young English "journalist is sent by her editor on a public-relations mission to an unnamed part of North America, to help her recover from a [mastectomy.] The nature of her operation and the shattering effect it had on her—psychologically and physically—is part of the story that unfolds. On the journey, which starts on a plane, she meets two men. With one she has an affair; with the other she falls in love." (Best Sell)

Reviewed by C. M. Siggins

Best Sell 28:57 My 1 '68 420w

"Penelope Mortimer has the art of getting beneath the surface of her characters, and always treats them with sympathy and realism so that the reader easily identifies with them. The story never lags. Because of the subject matter, this story is probably of more interest to mature readers and is recommended for general fiction collections." Neva White

Library J 93:1163 Mr 15 '68 110w

"[The title] occurs casually in the dialogue as a child's admiring hyperbole on the marvels of a vintage Bentley; its other, slyer reference is to the substitute plastic breast ('cold, undetectable') which Muriel wears. The image is apt. It also fairly represents the breezy way Mrs Mortimer copes with the obvious taste problem. Better to risk being too crude than too delicate. . . . Muriel's situation is, of course, not just that cancer has left her maimed; the crisis involves the whole woman, and there are some excellent, startling moments when the frenzy of her need makes her react as if meeting the world for the first time round. Where the writing is good, it is very good, but the more ambitious aspects of the book are the worst. . . . The social 'satire' is gratuitously unoriginal, the blurred non-ending merely démodé, the ventures into Muriel's (and her lover's) past out of control and the frequent evocations of that fable about the scorpion stinging the frog ferrying it across the river seem disconcertingly to belong to another project altogether." Kenith Trodd

New Statesman 74:475 O 13 '67 340w

Reviewed by R. W. Saal

N Y Times Bk R p30 J1 21 '68 500w

"[This novel] is, as we now expect from Mrs. Mortimer, brilliantly planned, taut, intelligent, unobtrusively skillful in tangling and disentangling the past and present crises in her characters' lives. Muriel's confrontation, first with the illusory horrors of her blind father's existence, and then with the fact that her own damaged life has similarly distorted the outside world, is beautifully patterned. . . . Mrs. Mortimer is a cunning seducer of our compassion, and this is a more sophisticated investigation of a lonely woman's predicament than anything she has done; yet, at the end, like Muriel herself, we are left not so much disturbed as with 'the expression, perhaps, of someone who has just been moved by a sad and true story which they will never entirely forget' . . . and with obvious material for a successful film and best-seller."

TLS p953 O 12 '67 1000w

MORTON, MIRIAM, ed. A harvest of Russian children's literature; ed. with introd. and commentary, by Miriam Morton; foreword by Ruth Hill Viguers. 474p il pl col pl $12.50 Univ. of Calif. press

891.7 Russian literature—Collections—Juvenile literature

67-21384

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by Irwin Weil

Book World p22 F 4 '68 700w

Choice 5:455 Je '68 200w

Horn Bk 44:334 Je '68 240w

MOSCATI, SABATINO. The world of the Phoenicians; tr. from the Italian by Alastair Hamilton. 281p il pl maps $10 Praeger

913.39 Phenicians

68-27432

The author "tells the story of the spread of the Phoenician colonies and describes the archaeology and history of each area settled. Beginning with the time of the invasion by the 'peoples of the sea' at the start of the Iron Age (around 1200 B.C.), he traces the development of the Phoenician civilization up to the fall of . . . 'Carthage.'" (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"This deeply scholarly work . . . should be in the possession of larger libraries, community and collegiate, as an authoritative work of reference for historians of the Mediterranean area and for Biblical scholars."

Best Sell 28:311 N 1 '68 210w

"It is strange that, only six years after the first appearance of Dr [D.] Harden's excellent little book [The Phoenicians, BRD 1963], there should be room for another larger and more expensive one covering the same ground in greater detail, and apparently aimed at the same kind of readership. There is not much room for the personal touch when dealing with a civilisation whose literature has been destroyed; it is largely a question of archaeological reconstruction, which Professor Moscati does excellently, with perhaps a little too much detail."

Economist 228:50 J1 27 '68 200w

MOSCOW, ALVIN. Merchants of heroin; an in-depth portrayal of business in the underworld. 276p maps $5.95 Dial press

364.1 Crime and criminals. Heroin. Narcotics

68-18637

The author "details the intricate operations involved in smuggling a major shipment of heroin from its origin in the poppy fields of Afyon, Turkey through Syria, Lebanon, Marseilles, and on to its ultimate market in the United States. He weaves into the story descriptions of the activities of the police who work to stamp out the illicit traffic in drugs . . . and gives the reader an inside view of the 'battle of wits between the best of our policemen and the very top criminals in the most lucrative racket of the underworld.'" (Library J)

"[This] is a report on crime that should be read and will probably not be soon forgotten. [It is] based on some four years of research in the files of the Federal Bureau of Narcotics, travel in the United States, Turkey, France and elsewhere. . . . The author's admiration for the United States Bureau of Narcotics is quite evident throughout the work. . . . The style of the book is partly straight narration. . . . Most of the work, though, is told in the novelized form made popular by 'In Cold Blood' [by T. Capote, BRD 1966]. The author recreates the actions and dialogue of a fascinating group of honest and dishonest characters. . . . All in all . . . a fascinating and thoroughly researched case study." F. M. Rotondaro

Best Sell 28:152 J1 1 '68 600w

"The trouble with Moscow's book is not in the focus, but in . . . techniques of characterization that fall somewhere between the thrall of the well-done nonfiction novel and the license of the schizoid fan magazine story. They cheapen an otherwise good comprehensive work of reportage. . . . We have here a credibility gap with no way for the reader to know . . . who is pseudonymous and who is accurately named, who is a specific character and who a composite characterization. . . . Moscow dismisses the merciful and civilized English system of medical dole as a complete failure. [He] makes another establishmentarian mistake by lumping together L.S.D. trippers, potheads and heroin addicts, implying that the heroin high is the quintessential experience all drug users aspire to. . . . This is utter nonsense." Lee Israel

Book World p4 My 26 '68 550w

Reviewed by M. A. Forslund

Library J 93:2016 My 15 '68 150w

MOSCOW, WARREN. Roosevelt and Willkie. 210p $6.95 Prentice-Hall

973.917 Presidents—U.S.—Election. Roosevelt, Franklin Delano. Willkie, Wendell Lewis 68-21139

"A former New York Times reporter [describes] . . . The Roosevelt-Willkie campaign [in 1940]. . . . In the final chapter, Mr. Moscow discusses the post-election cooperation between Roosevelt and Willkie." (Library J)

Reviewed by Paul Gavaghan
America 119:164 S 7 '68 650w

Reviewed by Hugh Scott
Book World p5 S 8 '68 1400w

"Taking advantage of his accessibility to leading figures and writing with historical perspective, Moscow has produced an 'inside' story too interesting to be missed by the general reader and too creative in its thesis to be overlooked by scholars."

Choice 5:1216 N '68 170w

"[The author] raises many questions but answers few of them. . . . The entire work suffers from lack of detail and documentation. A skimpy list of sources is included in Mr. Moscow's introduction. Clearly there is much to be said about this important election. Most libraries should wait for more definitive statements. Those libraries which collect extensively in 20th-Century political history will want to add this book." F. W. Summers

Library J 93:3147 S 15 '68 210w

"The engineering of Willkie's nomination in Philadelphia, Roosevelt's renomination in Chicago and the curious campaign that followed is briskly told by Warren Moscow . . . who subsequently worked the other side of the street as a local Democratic official. With impartiality and some fresh digging, he has reconstructed the strategy and interviewed key strategists who manipulated F.D.R.'s phony draft movement and who operated Willkie's secret, nine-month drive to win the nomination from the front runners, Dewey and Taft. On its own, without reaching for discrepancies and parallels with 1968, it is an engrossing account. And if Moscow's reportorial style—more descriptive than analytical—is undistinguished, it is at least unobtrusive." Mitchell Levitas

N Y Times Bk R p7 Ag 18 '68 1200w

MOSEL, ARLENE. Tikki Tikki Tembo; retold; il. by Blair Lent. unsp $4.50; lib bdg $3.97 Holt

398.2 Folklore—China—Juvenile literature 68-11839

A Chinese folktale about "two mischievous little brothers named Chang and Tikki-tikki tembo-no sa rembo-chari bari ruchi-pip pembo and an old well play crucial roles in convincing the ancient Chinese that grand long names can be very dangerous indeed." (Publisher's note) "Ages four to seven." (Sat R)

Reviewed by Elinore Standard
Book World p16 (children's issue) My 5 '68 50w

Reviewed by K. G. Burt
Christian Science Monitor pB2 My 2 '68 130w

Reviewed by M. L. Birmingham
Commonweal 88:301 My 24 '68 60w
Horn Bk 44:317 Je '68 90w

"This old folktale . . . should make excellent read-aloud material." Dorothy Gunzenhauser
Library J 93:1791 Ap 15 '68 100w

"[Children] can romp through an enchanted, mock classical Chinese landscape, thanks to illustrator Blair Lent's convincing fabrications. . . . Though this old saw about how Chinese first sons came to have short names is about as relevant to China today as 'The Adventures of Fu Manchu,' Mr. Lent's magical milieu—untouched by time or the tide of revolution—gives this felicitous retelling a limited point." S. G. Lanes

N Y Times Bk R p30 Mr 17 '68 100w

"[The gay] folktale is blandly silly, the nonsense syllables of the name fairly sing themselves and the illustrations are deft and distinctive." Zena Sutherland
Sat 51:40 Ap 20 '68 90w

MOSER, DON. The pied piper of Tucson, by Don Moser and Jerry Cohen. 211p pl $4.95 New Am. lib.

364.15 Schmid, Charles Howard. Murder 67-29731

This is the story of Charles Howard Schmid, Jr., and his conviction for the murder of three teen-age girls in Tucson, Arizona. Based on an article that appeared in Life Magazine, March 4, 1966.

"[Two] journalists have written this account of 'Smitty's' short, sordid career as a corrupter and killer of teen-agers; but they don't seem to have found out much about what really allured him. . . . This is expert reporting, but that is all. For libraries with an avid clientele for true crime stories." E. T. Smith

Library J 92:4022 N 1 '67 200w

Reviewed by Sergeant Cuff
Sat R 50:33 D 23 '67 40w

MOSER, HANS JOACHIM. Heinrich Schütz; a short account of his life and works; tr. and ed. by Derek McCulloch. 120p $6.50 St Martins

B or 92 Schütz, Heinrich 67-26262

This book is based on Professor Moser's monograph, Heinrich Schütz, sein Leben und Werk, which "was first published in 1936 at Kassel; a second and revised edition [was translated into English and published in 1959]. . . . A shorter volume, addressed to a wider public [is]. Kleines Heinrich-Schütz-Buch." (TLS) Schütz's works include the Christmas Oratorio, the Passions, and other musical compositions. Appendixes include Index of technical terms; Index of composers, and Discography. General index.

"Heinrich Schütz is a singularly important figure in the world of music. Living in a world of cultural and religious transitions, the period of the Counter Reformation, he heads the long list of classical composers from Bach to Brahms. As a musician of influence, it is something of a curiosity that his works are not too well known in this country. . . . [The] translator has added to the . . . original German edition, some examples of the composer's work. This happy addition makes the volume especially interesting and valuable." J. M. Hamernick

Best Sell 27:421 F 1 '68 110w

"Derek McCulloch is to be thanked for making available in English this splendid but brief introduction to the life and works of Schütz. [However,] the discography, intended for the English reader, is almost meaningless for the American reader; many of the labels listed are generally unavailable in this country. The book seems somewhat overpriced, but it is the best brief introduction to Heinrich Schütz and will be useful to informed and general readers." A. B. Skei

Library J 93:1623 Ap 15 '68 130w

Reviewed by R. T. Gore
Music Lib Assn Notes 25:239 D '68 500w

"From the translator's foreword we gather that several useful additions have been made to the German original. For one thing, the translator has added Schütz-Werk-Verzeichnis numbers to the compositions mentioned. . . . [But] Professor Moser wastes precious space by debating the question of whether or not Schütz belongs with the indisputably great composers, and continues by defining the qualities that go to make a great German composer. . . . One assumes that most readers would have preferred at least a page of bibliography, and an expansion of the discography to include more English pressings. Many of the footnotes, no doubt intended to be helpful, sound quite naive. . . . In the discussion of Schütz's compositions the emphasis is laudable on the whole, in that the major and more interesting works are consistently allotted proportionately more space. The chronology of Schütz's works and the index of works are helpful."

TLS p3 Ja 4 '68 400w

MOTHER GOOSE. The Chas. Addams Mother Goose. See The Chas. Addams Mother Goose

MOTHER GOOSE. Hurrah, we're outward bound! See Hurrah, we're outward bound!

MOTHER GOOSE. I saw a ship a-sailing; or, The wonderful games that only little flower-plant children can play, as shown by Benl Montresor. unsp $3.95; lib bdg $3.39 Knopf

398.8 Nursery rhymes 67-19486

A picture book containing sixteen selections from Mother Goose. "Ages four to seven." (Book World)

"All manner of enchantment . . . is to be found in [this book] . . . which combines this artist's highly ethereal and romantic vision with an instinct for knowing which verses will elicit the best pictures. . . . Montresor, who won the Caldecott medal in 1965 [for his illustrations of B. S. De Regnier's May I Bring a Friend? BRD 1964], brings a special fancifulness to his illustrations. His imagery is dream-like, his colors are the colors of Venetian paintings and murals, and a tapestry-like quality lends his drawings their great sense of richness and depth. His approach to the world of Mother Goose is completely personal." John Gruen

MOTHER GOOSE—Continued

Book World pt 2, p3 (children's issue)
N 5 '67 200w

Christian Science Monitor pB3 N 1 '67
100w

Reviewed by Della Thomas

Library J 93:860 F 15 '68 170w

"[This is] the most exotic of the season's illustrative approaches to Mother Goose. . . . The lines about Humpty, Nimble Jack, Peter, Contrary Mary are here and some of the less familiar rhymes, too. Flitting in and out of every picture are the two 'flower-plant' children who appeared in Montresor's earlier book, 'The Witches of Venice' [BRD 1964]. In fact there are some coy little Venetian, and other, touches in the scarlet-drenched illustrations and a great deal of rampant confusion. The viewer's free-interpretation is invited in each picture. This will require extraordinary patience from adults let alone children." G. A. Woods

N Y Times Bk R p42 O 29 '67 100w

MOTHER GOOSE. London bridge is falling down! See London bridge is falling down!

MOTHER GOOSE. To market! to market! il. by Peter Spier. unp $3.95; lib bdg $4.70 Doubleday

398.8 Nursery rhymes 67-18664

The artist draws scenes of New Castle, Pennsylvania as a background for these nineteen traditional rhymes and proverbs. "An appendix adds information about this old seaside community." (Horn Bk) "Preschool to grade one." (Library J)

"[The illustrations are] studies in visual minutiae, in which each cobblestone, each window-frame, each blade of grass is lovingly and faithfully recorded. And yet Spier's special gift is his capacity for making a virtue out of an obsessive love for detail. His all-inclusive landscape of things and events will keep any child involved and engrossed, page after page." John Gruen

Book World pt 2, p3 (children's issue)
N 5 '67 90w

Christian Science Monitor p12 Ap 25 '68 30w

Horn Bk 43:743 D '67 100w

"[The] rhymes and proverbs have been woven into a charming tapestry of 19th century American rural life. Countless small details engage the imagination in pictures of water wheels, town squares, smithies, and barnyards, with historical and geographical background provided in a closing section. Most of the rhymes date back to English sources, but they seem quite at home in the New England setting." Della Thomas

Library J 92:3841 O 15 '67 100w

Reviewed by G. A. Woods

N Y Times Bk R p42 O 29 '67 100w

MOUNTFORD, CHARLES P. Australian aboriginal portraits. 88p $11.50 Cambridge 572.994 Ethnology—Australia

Here are "photographic portraits of Australian aboriginals, from babies to the tribal elders, taken by Mr. Mountford, a scientist who has traveled with the natives and has been in close touch with them as he studied their way of life. Each photograph . . . is supplemented by a brief text describing that person and the part he or she plays in the life of the tribe. Sketches from cave drawings fill in the text pages." (Library J)

"A series of high quality portraits. The brief accompanying text conveys, more poetically than ethnographically, some sense of the social circumstance and individual character of the subjects. Mountford's approach has always been markedly artistic and this volume is no exception. Unfortunately, most literature on the native Australians is either superficial and directed toward the romantic reader or professionally esoteric and repellant to all save the most dedicated. The volume of portraits belongs to the former category and serves no scholarly purpose."

Choice 5:1054 O '68 90w

"Each photograph [is], in itself, an excellent character study. . . . For larger collections." S. L. Steen

Library J 93:538 F 1 '68 120w

MOUNTFORD, CHARLES P. Ayers Rock: its people, their beliefs, and their art. 208p il col pl $7.50 East West center press

919.4 Ayers Rock. Pitjandjara (Australian tribe) 66-7813

"This is a study of the huge monolith that rises over 1,100 feet in the western desert of central Australia, and of the daily life, beliefs, and art forms of its aboriginal inhabitants, the Pitjandjara tribe. . . . [The author attempts to show] how the natural features of the Rock were all explained by the deeds of their mythical heroes at the time of creation." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"[Despite] certain factual errors in the more general sections . . . [and some objection] to the author's interpretation of Pitjandjara origin theory, . . . students of Australian culture, as well as other anthropologists concerned with nonverbal extrasomatic means for storing tradition in nonliterate societies, will find the description of rock formations and associated myths most interesting. We are indebted to the author for his painstaking recording of this material, and especially for the fine photographic documentation." N. D. Munn

Am Anthropol 70:148 F '68 500w

"Mountford whose name is associated with a number of contributions on the art of the Australian aborigines, presents a unique account . . . based upon his M.A. thesis. . . . The main emphasis of the volume is upon the myths and their physical settings, as well as upon the petroglyphs and pictographs of Ayers Rock. The myths of most preliterate groups are closely linked to their environment, but rarely do we find a scholar who has documented this relationship with a detailed photographic survey. Thus, there emerges from these pages the story of a primitive people's emotional and psychological dependence upon their environment, as well as their attempts to explain the origin and existence of things. The bibliography is brief and does not include more than a short selection of available titles. Of interest to anthropologists, ethnopsychologists, and folklorists. College libraries with an active program in anthropology will do well to add this to their holdings."

Choice 3:968 D '66 190w

"Mountford's book is a good and careful study of the pristine culture of the Abos who lived around Ayers Rock, that remarkable formation in the central desert [which is more than one hundred miles long. To read E. Huxley's account of the Rock in Their Shining Eldorado, BRD 1967] . . . and then Mountford's is to get some grasp of what has happened to the Australian aborigines." C. H. Grattan

Pacific Affairs 40:427 fall-winter '67-'68 160w

MOUNTJOY, ALAN B. Africa: a new geographical survey [by] Alan B. Mountjoy and Clifford Embleton; with a contribution by W. B. Morgan [Eng title: Africa: a geographical study]. 688p il maps $10 Praeger

916 Africa—Description and travel 67-16686

This descriptive text on the geography of Africa "emphasizes the physical environment and its role in the socioeconomic development of the various African states. The first three sections examine in general terms Africa's physical environment, the historical and political evolution, and the human geography. The continent is then divided into 10 arbitrarily defined regions employing political boundaries, each of which is systematically examined upon the physical environment and economic patterns." (Choice) Bibliographies. Index.

"The approach is repetitious, but the contents correct and comprehensive. Each section has a good bibliography of readily accessible articles in the geographic literature. Few non-geographic sources are listed. The abundant illustrations are clear and pertinent. The latest economic data are used. A valuable contribution by two competent British geographers." Choice 4:1158 D '67 160w

"A vigorous, well-organized geography of Africa, incorporating much recent material. . . . A useful book for academic and public libraries." R. G. McInnis
Library J 93:77 Ja 1 '68 230w

MOUNTZOURES, H. L. The empire of things, and other stories. 153p $4.50 Scribner 68-17335

A collection of short stories. Except for The Buoy, all of the stories appeared originally in The New Yorker.

"In this, his first published book of short stories, Mr. Mountzoures shows himself to be a slick, sophisticated writer. . . . Most of these stories are linked together by the characters and personalities of a Greek-American family, their conflicts and problems. Story quality and the reader's interest suffer when the author shifts to other scenes and situations. Most memorable is the final story, 'A Day in the Country,' in which a young man takes his grandmother to purchase her coffin. In spite of some unevenness, this is an interesting collection which will appeal to a sophisticated public." C. A. Hough

Library J 93:1918 My 1 '68 110w

Reviewed by Alberta Hankenson
Library J 93:2739 Jl '68 50w [YA]

"[These stories] isolate fragments of ordinary experience and examine them with a clear, compassionate and bittersweet sensitivity for the dreams and charades by which we live. 'Love and Wisdom' tells of a young boy's betrayal of the woman who loved him. But within this act it reveals on many levels the strange and tenuous skeins of love and guilt, the ambiguity of loyalty. . . . Spare as they are, taut and restrained, these stories poignantly reveal the awesome intensity of the human condition. Mountzoures is a storyteller and a poet whose eyes and ears and heart are open to the beauty and wonder and frailty of human beings as they struggle to love and to live." H. M. Petrakis

N Y Times Bk R p28 Ag 4 '68 650w

"'The Buoy,' [which won an Atlantic 'First' prize, is] the most artfully conceived and fully developed story in this uneven collection of first writings. . . . Mountzoures strives for plainness and emotional honesty in the handling of these episodes. He intends a cool stand against excessive coloration. . . . Still, his mode is not genuinely realistic; at its core is a quality of romantic softness which sidesteps the tougher, more complex issues in his material. He seems suspicious of the intellect as a force that can becloud the dignity of the human spirit. . . . Mountzoures is reported to be working on a novel; one hopes that in it he will extend the range of his evident talent and tackle the iceberg which lies beneath these subjective, fragmentary gleams of insight." Muriel Haynes
Sat R 51:23 Ag 3 '68 700w

MOUSTAKAS, CLARK. The authentic teacher: sensitivity and awareness in the classroom. 265p il $5.50; pa $3.50 Howard A. Doyle pub. co.

371.1 Teaching. Teachers. School discipline. Human relations 66-27546

The author, a psychologist, has revised his The Teacher and the Child, expanding the theoretical parts. He attempts to show how personal interaction between student and teacher encourages creativity and spontaneity and prevents alienation. There are "illustrations of personal classroom relations involving spontaneous experiences which had personal meaning and value to each child. Full chapters are devoted to illustrative cases on (a) kindergarten children (b) early elementary grades (c) later elementary grades (d) High school. The cases were gathered by 92 elementary and secondary school teachers from a variety of school systems." (Record) Bibliography. Index.

"Moustakas emphasizes the importance of the teacher's awareness and acceptance of the child as a person as a prerequisite for any meaningful learning. Feelings of hostility should be confronted, not avoided; and the teacher must react to the child as a real person, not as a role-player. . . . Sometimes repetitious and perhaps under-emphasizing the need for subject content, the book is nonetheless stimulating as a whole. It should certainly be in any college, university, or education library, and should be considered for public libraries where readers include many teachers or education-oriented citizens." C. E. Wadsworth

Library J 92:109 Ja 1 '67 180w

"Approaches in books like [this one] represent refreshing antidotes to the indigestion many students may be suffering from. . . . knowledge being crammed indiscriminately down their throats. . . . The author expresses deep respect and appreciation of each child or student as a unique person, desirous and capable of making effective choices of his own. . . . Approaches described in the book were developed by these teachers individually or in small discussion groups, along with a few school principals in each group. . . . [In general, the] teachers functioned in a non-directive rather than an authoritarian manner. . . . This kind of teaching may be quite difficult for some. . . . but for the teacher who is willing to accept the challenge of a 'discovery' type curriculum, with its educational rewards, I would heartily recommend [this book]." S. J. Parnes

Record 69:394 Ja '68 850w

MOUZELIS, NICOS P. Organisation and bureaucracy: an analysis of modern theories. 230p $5 Aldine pub.

301.4 Sociology. Industrial relations [68-80179]

In this "survey of contributions to the theory of organizations originating from varied disciplines such as psychology, political science, and economics, [the] professor of sociology at the University of Leicester, England, examines the theories of some classical writers on the subject, namely Max Weber, Karl Marx, and Robert Michels. . . . [and] surveys the movement of scientific management developed by Robert Taylor, who emphasized individual productivity. . . . Professor Mouzelis recommends a comparative and empirical approach to the study of organizations." (Library J)

"[The author's] modest aim in this formidable task is to provide the 'novice in this field' with an orientation and some guidance through the 'labyrinth of organisational writings.' Specifically he does succeed in presenting the major approaches to the study of organizations, in critically examining them, and in tracing their development and recent convergences. . . . Mouzelis knows and handles the literature well and accurately brings the reader up to the early sixties. As summarizer, synthesizer, and historian of modern theories, he serves his novice well. The more initiated student of formal organizations will appreciate the critiques of his favorite theorists. . . . The clear treatment of Simon's and Parsons' theories stands out in this series of neat summaries and balanced critiques." R. A. Schoenherr
Am J Soc 74:207 S '68 550w

"Originally written as a doctoral thesis, this book is a worthwhile survey and is recommended for academic and large public libraries." Victor Novak
Library J 93:1646 Ap 15 '68 210w

"The problem of economic man is a central one in Dr Mouzelis's book. . . . primarily concerned with the sociology of industrial organisations. Is the industrial enterprise best viewed as the economic association of a number of different 'interests'—workers, managers, shareholders etc.—rationally engaged in relationships which imply conflict as well as co-operation; or, rather, as a kind of community in which economic behaviour is importantly influenced by shared values, personal ties and moral obligations? As Mouzelis shows, sociologists have oscillated a good deal between one basic model and the other before discovering how to combine the elements of truth which both contain. There is, though, much more to be said about convergence in organisation theory than Mouzelis includes in his final chapters." John Goldthorpe

New Statesman 74:909 D 29 '67 150w

MOWAT, FARLEY. The Polar passion; the quest for the North Pole; with sels. from Arctic journals. 302p il maps $15 Little

998 Arctic regions 68-11519

The author of Westviking (BRD 1965) has excerpted passages from the accounts and diaries of Arctic explorers beginning with that of the Icelander Thorvald Orrabensfostr, ca. 997, and concluding with Frederick Cook's claim to the attainment of the Pole, 1907-08. Bibliography. Index.

"High adventure that is at latitudes of 72° to 90° North, is the subject of this beautiful book. Author Mowat has excerpted passages . . . which show the tenacious, courageous, and sometimes headstrong qualities [the Arctic explorers] needed to survive. . . . Illustrations are sepia colored and fit the mood created by the sagas. True adventure for YA's who have a restless spirit, but the price is geared to higher budgets." Regina Minudri
Library J 93:316 Ja 15 '68 100w [YA]

"The actual excerpts make wonderful reading but the editor's comments are sometimes intrusive, often sneering. . . . The Eskimos and Indians who gave help are sometimes glorified at the expense of the European and American expeditions. . . . The format is handsome, but the text . . . is marred by the compiler's intrusions. For very large libraries." Phyllis Pope

Library J 93:2002 My 15 '68 650w

"Mowat has not become as well known as he perhaps should be outside of Canada. . . . It was his earlier books, People of the Deer [BRD 1952] and The Desperate People [BRD 1960] that established him as somewhat of a Rachel Carson of the North: . . . the books were a significant factor in an official awakening toward the Eskimos' plight. . . . The story of Polar history which Mowat helps to relate is of particular worth because he develops for us the character, the morality and the values of people so often glossed over by uncritical contemporary biographers or journalists. . . . [He] makes a significant contribution by placing in fascinating perspective the background of the two claimants to prior Polar discovery. Brooklyn physician Frederick Albert Cook and Peary, the naval engineer." R. W. Gibbons

Nation 206:770 Je 10 '68 1650w

"[Mowat's] purpose is to review the better known Arctic expeditions with the expectation that the public will be enthralled by the 'polar passion' as the author believes it to have been 60 years ago. . . . The plentiful illustrations are culled from books of polar travel and old periodicals. They are reproduced in a most unfortunate boot-polish brown tone, as are the author's marginal notes. Pamphleteering, some of it not in particularly good taste, is a feature of the chapter that discusses the rival claims of Peary and Cook to prior attainment of the Pole. The author comes down heavily on the side of the poor man's candidate, condemns Peary's financial supporters as the contemporary 'Establishment'. . . . In his enthusiasm for Dr. Cook's claim, Mowat fails to meet, or possibly to understand, why expert opinion still questions the evidence in his support. . . . The editing appears to have been hurried or careless." Trevor Lloyd

N Y Times Bk R p7 F 11 '68 270w

New Yorker 44:175 My 11 '68 240w

MOWBRAY, A. Q. The thumb on the scale; or The supermarket shell game; introd. by Marya Mannes. 178p $4.95 Lippincott

340 Packaging—Laws and regulations. Consumer protection 67-25898

"Most housewives today are aware that deception in pricing and packaging has existed for many years, and to them the enactment of the Fair Packaging and Labeling Act in the fall of 1966 did offer a ray of hope. Mr. Mowbray, however, is . . . [concerned with the] version which was finally passed. . . . He has pulled together much of the testimony. . . . [He argues that] with the forces of the food industry marshalled against it, the final legislation was so weakened as to be virtually powerless." (Library J)

"The various abuses in the packaging of merchandise for resale in our modern supermarkets are vividly presented and frankly discussed in this book . . . [which] demonstrates once again that in a democratic society, Congress is more responsive to organized pressure groups than it is to poorly expressed wishes of the masses of consumers. It illustrates the legislative process at work." A. J. Giunta

Best Sell 27:374 D 15 '67 400w

"The book has a strong emotional context designed to stir the consumer to do something about the way in which manufacturers who put their products in packages of misleading size, shape, or content exploit him. The array of illustrative examples is extensive. The reader cannot help but be informed. The degree of intellectual sophistication is not high. No training in any subject area is necessary for effective reading. There is a sense of repetition as one reads on. If there is strength in the book, it would be in the recitation of the history of the hearings and legislation. While this is not evident without diligent pursuit, it is there."

Choice 5:533 Je '68 160w

"The book will be a revelation to many. Mr. Mowbray, technical editor for the American Society for Testing and Materials, not only did considerable research for this book, but also interviewed persons closely connected with the investigation. Although it must be noted that he is sometimes carried away by journalistic, and the reader could wish for more objective reporting, his message is clear, and any housewife concerned with her food budget should be aware of it. . . . This book should be in public libraries." Gillian Olechno

Library J 92:3036 S 15 '67 200w

N Y Times Bk R p14 D 31 '67 90w

MOWRER, EDGAR ANSEL. Triumph and turmoil; a personal history of our time. 454p $10 Weybright & Talley

B or 92 History, Modern—20th century 68-17749

The autobiography of the former correspondent for the Chicago Daily News who won the Pulitzer Prize for Germany Puts the Clock Back (BRD 1933). The book presents "a cavalcade of kings, presidents, generals, writers, artists, the great and near-great of more than five decades in Europe and the Far East, as [the author] recalls them from his life as a foreign correspondent. . . . [The book includes accounts of] World War I battles . . . the flight from France in World War II, and encounters with Benito Mussolini." (Publishers' Weekly) Index.

Reviewed by C. L. Hohl

America 119:568 N 30 '68 30w

"Mowrer, now 76 and a columnist highly regarded on the right and dismissed as an antiquarian or worse by liberals, was one of the great foreign correspondents before, during and after the two world wars. . . . This very long book . . . [is] both fascinating and boring, for he tells much that is now irrelevant. However, patient readers who plough on and on will in the end be rewarded by an unusual portrait of a world in turmoil by a rare journalist with forthright and irreverent opinions who saw it all happen and could not be softened and was never dazzled by politicians, domestic and foreign. This is the kind of history that will illuminate textbook history." Allan Angoff

Library J 93:2871 Ag '68 220w

"The thesis of Mowrer's richly detailed autobiography is that American idealism from Roosevelt forward has been a silly belief that socialist totalitarianism is just like democracy but slightly different. . . . [The book] is not an autobiography in the usual sense. [Mowrer] tells us enough about himself and his family to keep us abreast of his personal fortunes from time to time. . . . The stage is really occupied by other matters. The historian will probably find this book most valuable as a diplomatic history of our times." Guy Davenport

Nat R 20:1018 O 3 '68 1350w

"[Mowrer] has come to be regarded by many Americans as perhaps our most distinguished native-born foreigner. . . . When [he] is describing a dramatic event he is, as far as one can judge, substantially accurate and often brilliant. . . . His personal adventures are described realistically and often with delightful humor. All this goes into the making of the fine book that this would have been had he only refrained from writing about the United States, the one country . . . about which his information is insufficient, when it is not wrong." Gerald Johnson

N Y Times Bk R p26 S 29 '68 900w

"An activist at heart, [Mowrer's] pen was consistently committed to support the cause of freedom. But, as he reported the world's turmoils, this autobiography reveals how his outlook gradually evolved from youthful anarchism to militant anti-Communism. . . . Gradually, Mowrer developed a hardening of the arteries against all totalitarian regimes. He began to advocate brinkmanship as the best guarantee of peace and freedom. . . . Mowrer's hard line will undoubtedly be rejected by those who lack his direct experience with history. However, as a world observer who has cried wolf for more than 50 years, he has often been proved distressingly right. Mowrer's dogmatism on behalf of freedom has partially blinded him to the realities of the nuclear age. But this book, his eleventh, is valuable if only because it shows how the thinking and the experience of an earlier generation have become clearly inapplicable to the problems we now face." F. Y. Blumenfeld

Newsweek 72:82B Ag 19 '68 750w

Reviewed by S. W. Little

Sat R 51:145 S 14 '68 800w

MOWRER, O. HOBART, ed. Morality and mental health. 669p $9 Rand McNally

614.58 Mental illness. Ethics

66-13447

This collection of seventy-five articles "is divided into six parts, 'Popular Appraisals and Protests,' 'Psychiatry and Moral Issues,' 'Clergymen on the 'Cure of Souls,'" 'Psychology in a New Key,' 'Social Science, Law, and Philosophy,' and finally, 'Literature, Biography, and Art.'" (Library J) Indexes of names and of subjects.

"There are no introductory statements preceding the six sections. . . . While the avowed intention is to reintroduce concepts of personal morality and individual values, many of these selections consist primarily of attacks on psychoanalytic psychotherapy and concepts. Authors include Dr. Benjamin Spock, Time, Monseigneur Fulton J. Sheen, Nathaniel Hawthorne, Van Wyck Brooks, 'Alcoholics Anonymous,' and the Bible. Numerous authors stress that modern man suffers—not from over-repression and inhibition—but rather from under-socialization and lack of control. Mowrer himself emphasizes that much of man's guilt, anxiety, and emotional distress are appropriate because man actually has 'done wrong.'" Choice 5:412 My '68 130w

"This is one of those compendia which should find a place in all of the special collections in psychology and psychiatry. . . . In the section 'Popular Appraisals' there are several articles on the part of disgruntled ex-clients and ex-patients decrying psychoanalysis which, I dare say, the editor inserted for the sake of starting the reading on a dissenting note. . . . The remainder of the book is a convenient, straightforward presentation of thoroughly stimulating material, no less dissenting but far better grounded. One of the book's chief contributions is the attempt to bring the reader face up to this vast turbulent conglomerate known as 'mental illness.' . . . The book is successful to a considerable extent, although there are important omissions such as the exclusion of the existential thinkers and the phenomenologists." Louis De Rosier

Library J 93:562 F 1 '68 180w

MOYES, PATRICIA. Death and the Dutch uncle. 245p $3.95 Holt

68-24750

"Henry Tibbett of New Scotland Yard . . . must answer the question: How does the bushwhacking killing of a small-time gambler in a seedy English pub affect an international dispute between two newly formed African nations? . . . From England to the Netherlands and into the rural waterways of the picturesque countryside, Henry pursues a stalking killer." (Publisher's note)

"[Tibbett] is advertised for his famous intuitive 'nose,' and I am as chary of hunchplayers as I am of flat-earth people. Let me publicly confess I was wrong about Miss Moyes. . . . Tibbett may have a 'nose' for skulduggery, but the organ is linked to an experienced policeman's mind which pays a great deal of attention to piecing out puzzles from available leads. And then there is his engaging personality: throughout the story Tibbett's shrewd and gentle character takes precedence over situation wherever possible." A. L. Rosenzweig

Book World p19 O 27 '68 390w

Reviewed by M. K. Grant

Library J 93:3583 O 1 '68 40w

"A shrewdly plotted puzzler, filled with lively characters that compel belief. One of Miss Moyes's best—and that is praise indeed." A. J. Hubin

N Y Times Bk R p53 N 3 '68 100w

"In the field of conventionally British detection-thrillers Miss Moyes's books rank highly among enjoyable family reads, with their pleasant old formula of nice Superintendent (as he now is) Henry Tibbett with his nice wife Emmy and their enlivening excursions into this or that vacation locale. This time it is Amsterdam and environs, and (a charming touch) they meet up with Freeling's Inspector Van der Valk, and his nice wife Arlette, but, alas, offstage."

TLS p1086 S 26 '68 70w

MOYES, PATRICIA. Helter-skelter. 243p $4.50; lib bdg $3.97 Holt

68-11840

"Felicity Bell, a London teen-ager [known as 'Cat,'] and her older sister Prue spend the summer with their aunt and uncle in Eastport where Uncle Peter is commanding officer of a secret naval research station. There, while sailing, Felicity and two friends discover the body of a dead man floating in the water. The mystery develops as Felicity, almost singlehandedly, tries to find the killer. . . . Grades seven to nine." (Library J)

"An extraordinary suspense story which will engage the eager attention of any young reader."

Best Sell 28:18 Ap 1 '68 100w

Reviewed by John Allen

Christian Science Monitor pB9 My 1 '68 170w

"The well-paced, exciting plot leads to a suspenseful climax and unexpected ending. Felicity and her friends are portrayed as wholesome, likable teen-agers with individual personalities. Light romance and sisterly rivalry add interest to this delightful adventure written in a breezy style and enlivened by the natural, spontaneous dialogue." Marilyn Goldstein

Library J 93:1813 Ap 15 '68 100w

"When an accomplished adult mystery writer [Murder Fantastical, BRD 1967, and Falling Star, BRD 1964] ventures into the teen-age field, the results might be expected to be a bit saccharine and simplistic. Miss Moyes has kept the gore to a minimum in 'Helter-Skelter,' but she has kept the writing at a high level. Suspense is keen, plot intricate, and Cat's friends and family have a freshness and believability not often found in young adult thrillers." C. E. Rinzler

N Y Times Bk R p26 Ap 7 '68 300w [YA]

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland

Sat R 51:31 J1 20 '68 90w [YA]

MOYNE, ERNEST J., ed. The journal of Margaret Hazlitt. See Hazlitt, M.

MRABET, MOHAMMED. Love with a few hairs; tr. from the tape in Moghrebi by Paul Bowles. 198p $4.50 Braziller

68-17389

This is the story of a young Moroccan, Mohammed, "who marries Mina, a pretty young Arab girl. Mohammed has been living with Mr. David, an English hotelkeeper who is in love with him and is disturbed at the idea of losing him. Mohammed secures Mina's love by means of a magic potion, and thinks, referring to its ingredients, 'There's nothing wrong with a world where you can get love with a few hairs. It's wonderful!' But things go wrong after their marriage and Mohammed casts Mina off. The loss of his beloved and of the life he wanted almost leads Mohammed to madness, but Mr. David saves him." (Sat R)

"Moral considerations aside, if the reader realizes that the Moghrebi text from which Paul Bowles translated this book was probably uncluttered with smackings of literary style and tone, the book is acceptable. Dull, but acceptable. The economy of action and emotion makes the situations unexciting, the characters wooden. The only interesting parts show a too-fleeting glimpse of an ancient people rebelling against the ignorance, tradition, and superstition which keep them from becoming a part of the Western sophistication they see about them. It is regrettable that Mr. Bowles presented this rebellion in such a plebeian way."

MRABET, MOHAMMED—Continued

J. A. Phillips

Best Sell 27:473 Mr 15 '68 260w

Choice 5:969 O '68 120w

Reviewed by Donald Purcell

Library J 93:1163 Mr 15 '68 100w

Reviewed by Ian Hamilton

New Statesman 73:121 Ja 27 '67 180w

"The picture painted [here] is a somber one. It is a view of the world where love is a commodity and perfunctory, where the gulfs between humans are not only vast but are also taken for granted as permanent. It is a mixture of Western sophistication and ancient beliefs, of naiveté and guile, of strict morality and easy promiscuity. . . . The contrasts and conflicts are held together within the novel's plain and organic structure and are carried along by a narrative that has the flavor of an authentically exotic folk idiom. This is a story well worth reading. If there is a fault, it may be in what the novel does not attempt to do. One cannot help thinking, perhaps unfairly, that if Mohammed's version of events had been joined to the wife's, the mother's, and Mr. David's, we would have had a book with deeper perspectives." J. M. Edelstein

N Y Times Bk R p58 S 8 '68 500w

"The confrontation of cultures is beautifully dramatized. The differences are deep, involving not only customs but attitudes. . . . The absolute simplicity of the narrative allies the novel with some of the most sophisticated new fiction. It is a story of people doing things. There are no judgments and no commentaries, no manipulation of symbol and image to make philosophical points. We are not assured of the significance of the characters, the validity of their understanding of events, or even that the events themselves are important. Like minimal sculpture the book establishes its own presence on its own terms. Yet one feels for these characters, and especially for Mohammed. . . . We do not despise them, for we see them behaving naturally and inevitably." J. H. Stern

Sat R 51:30 Ap 6 '68 600w

TLS p81 F 2 '67 330w

MUCHA, JIRÍ. Alphonse Mucha: his life and art, by his son; res. by M. K. 391p 24pl $10 Humanities press

709.437 Mucha, Alphonse Marie [67-70081]

A biography of the Art Nouveau artist.

"The style is chatty. . . . The book is frequently erroneous, clumsily translated, and deals only occasionally with a serious problem in art history. In any case, Brian Reade's brief Art Nouveau and Alphonse Mucha . . . is much better both for the undergraduate and for the researcher."

Choice 5:476 Je '68 110w

"An overpriced and disappointing book. It is, perhaps, not entirely [the writer's] fault: he was not born until his father was fifty-five, and consequently knew him only during his later years, so that the biography is necessarily short on personal insights—especially since the book ends, effectively, in 1913. . . . On the earlier part of Alphonse Mucha's life Mr. Mucha is readable and quite informative, though the story is padded out with too much chat about Paris society in the 1890s and familiar anecdotes about the other artists of the time, many of whom impinged little if at all on Mucha's life. . . . It is a great pity that Mr. Mucha does not go more deeply into the origins of Mucha's style. It is even more a pity that he does not go at all into Mucha's later developments during his Czechoslovak years—the period, after all, in which the son could provide personal testimony on his father."

TLS p1169 D 15 '66 320w

MUCHA, JIRÍ. Living and partly living; tr. from the original Czech by Ewald Osers. 223p $5.95 McGraw

365 Concentration camps. Prisons—Czechoslovak Republic 68-3377

The Czech writer, son of Alphonse Mucha the Art-Nouveau artist, "was arrested in 1951 on a charge of espionage, and sentenced, after twelve months in solitary confinement, to six years' imprisonment. Until his release in 1954 he worked in the mines . . . [where] he managed to scribble secretly the observations and reflections that make up [this work]. A miner who was not a prisoner smuggled out his notes and brought him fresh paper." (Canadian Forum)

"[The] diary is quiet in tone and not at all harrowing. Privation, danger, bleakness are very much subordinated to that inner core of existence where one stores and evaluates experience. Mucha had a driving need to express some of this in writing, and those stubby bits of pencil and small notebooks seem to have had a share in steadying and strengthening him. At any rate his reflections mirror his physical and mental existence during the period in which he gradually pulled himself together. Despite the inevitable damage to his spirit, what he achieves [here] is a positive affirmation of life." B. Pomer

Canadian Forum 48:115 Ag '68 650w

"In these [secretive] conditions, listening with half an ear to the rustling and cracking of the coal around him and the faint stress-cries of pit props gradually bending under the strain, Mucha produced a small work of literature. It is fragmentary, of course. There are descriptions of his life and his companions in the pit and the camp above ground. . . . There are records of extraordinary moments: Stalin's death, with the funeral music from Götterdämmerung blaring from loudspeakers in the cold night just before dawn, as the shift arrives at the pithead under the red neon star. . . . This is put down with all the energetic visual detail of his father's painting. There are long essays in criticism, snatches of dialogue between prisoners, reportages like his account of a journey through the Sudetenland as the Germans entered, and much humor." Neal Ascher-son

N Y Rev of Books 11:27 Ja 2 '69 400w

"Mucha's prison diary is not the only book which describes the Stalinist terror in Czechoslovakia. But it is the only one that has been translated into English and it deserved to be well known. His main purpose was to get on paper his impressions of his fellow convicts. . . . Like Stendhal he likes the common people but cannot live with them. In the coal-mine he had no choice. He tries to make allowances for their weaknesses but always comes to the same conclusion that the beauty of the people is the sum of a large number of small hideousnesses. In order to escape from this reality he wrote wittily about European literature and about the literary life that he had known."

TLS p554 Je 22 '67 550w

MUELLER, WILLIAM R., jt. auth. Ionesco and Genêt. See Jacobsen, J.

MUGGERIDGE, KITTY. Beatrice Webb; a life, 1858-1943 [by] Kitty Muggeridge & Ruth Adam. 271p pl $6.95 Knopf

B or 92 Webb, Beatrice (Potter) 68-12664

This biography, based largely on her private journals, concerns "one of the original members of the Fabian Society, . . . the founder (with her husband, Sidney) of the London School of Economics and The New Statesman, and . . . [a] crusader for social reform in Britain over a period of more than fifty years." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by Maurice Adelman

America 119:568 N 30 '68 90w

Reviewed by Sister Mary William

Best Sell 28:149 Jl 1 '68 700w

"This biography for the first time reveals in detail the strange story of [Beatrice Webb's] romance with Joseph Chamberlain, the most brilliant politician of the age. They met in the early 1880s, she fell passionately in love with him, and the attraction was mutual. In the graphic words of the authors, two tyrants had met, and a struggle for power was bound to ensue. In the event, Beatrice's was too strong a personality to come to terms with the complete intellectual submission Chamberlain demanded. . . . All in all, a story full of human and historical interest, entertainingly told in this familial biography." John Clive

Book World p8 Ag 4 '68 650w

Reviewed by Eric Forbes-Boyd
Christian Science Monitor p9 J1 30 '68
650w

Reviewed by Gertrude Himmelfarb
Commentary 45:70 Ag '68 2050w
Economist 225:x D 2 '67 900w

"[This book] is at once a history of economics and politics of the 19th and 20th Centuries and is a tribute to the strong family ties in spite of the conflicts among the personalities. . . . An excellent biography, it belongs as well to this period when the welfare state is now an integral part of life! It is easy to read and contemplate. It may easily send the reader back to Beatrice Webb's own writings. For general collections." K. T. Willis
Library J 93:2477 Je 15 '68 200w

"Mrs Muggeridge and Mrs Adam have written an extremely good biography of Mrs Muggeridge's Aunt Bo. . . . Sidney is given exactly the right place, and a very large place, in the book, for in the last 54 years of her life Beatrice was half of 'the Webbs'. (I do not think that the authors are quite sympathetic enough to Sidney—there was more humanity in him than they allow.). . . . One side of both Beatrice and Sidney [was] their intense seriousness. But they also had something else—they were essentially ridiculous, in what they said, in what they did, and in what happened to them. Every one who knew the Webbs felt this absurdity . . . and the great achievement of the authors of this book is that they recognise and give it full play." Leonard Woolf
New Statesman 74:642 N 10 '67 900w

Reviewed by Noel Annan
N Y Rev of Books 11:5 N 21 '68 3150w

Reviewed by Anne Fremantle
N Y Times Bk R p6 J1 14 '68 1200w
New Yorker 44:92 J1 13 '68 90w

Reviewed by F. Y. Blumenfeld
Newsweek 72:90 J1 1 '68 700w

"Given the aim of focusing the reader's attention on personality rather than on achievement, the authors of this new biography have certainly made a contribution to our understanding of Beatrice Webb. The early chapters in particular make compulsive reading, with never a dull moment. . . . It is in the final chapters, however, that second thoughts may assail the reader. Beatrice Webb has on occasions been accused of a lack of compassion. . . . If Beatrice was lacking in compassion so too, and with less excuse, are our two biographers in their final chapters. . . . Describing in some detail Beatrice's last years, illness, and death [they] create an impression that is neither respectful nor even affectionate."
TLS p1076 N 16 '67 800w

MUIR, WILLIAM K. Prayer in the public schools; law and attitude change [by] William K. Muir, Jr. 170p $5.95 Univ. of Chicago press

340 Religion in the public schools 67-28851

"A sociological study of the effect of a Supreme Court decision on public, and some private, school officials in an unidentified locale. Mr Muir interviewed these officials before and after the 1963 Schempp case (374 U.S. 208). Through these interviews and questionnaires he attempted to determine if the minds of people can be swayed by law. . . . [He] concludes that law can be effective." (Library J) Chronology. Bibliography. Index.

"An excellent and entertaining short work . . . [which blends] political science and character analysis. The study should appeal to all professionals and students interested in the law's role in changing morality. . . . [It] makes a provocative companion to . . . The Wall between Church and State [BRD 1964], edited by Dallin H. Oaks."
Choice 5:639 J1 '68 140w

"In this study of response to the Supreme Court decisions banning school prayer, Muir moves far beyond the narrower legal and religious implications to the whole question of the relation between law, attitudes and change. Solid social science."
Christian Century 85:268 F 28 '68 40w

"[Despite] much technical jargon—'non-marginalism,' 'non-contextualism,' and the usual 'izes'—and a critique of Judge Hand. . . . [this book is] recommended for college and large public libraries." E. J. Bander
Library J 93:203 Ja 15 '68 90w

"[This study] examines the question of the extent to which man can legislate such abstractions as tolerance. . . . Combining research sophistication with an ability to write, Mr. Muir has provided a rarity—a readable case study of wide implications." John Calam
Sat R 51:88 My 18 '68 80w

MULFORD, DAVID C. Zambia; the politics of independence, 1957-1964. 362p $8.80 Oxford 968.9 Zambia—Politics and government
67-113261

The author "outlines party developments through Northern Rhodesia's transition to independence, analyzes the relationship between constitutional arrangements and African administration on the one hand and African political parties on the other." (Choice) Bibliography.

"[This] covers a more recent period than L. H. Gann's History of Northern Rhodesia [BRD 1966]; it is more balanced than [R. I.] Rotberg's The Rise of Nationalism in Central Africa [BRD 1966], and more authoritative than [R.] Hall's Zambia [BRD 1966]. It is based on both primary and secondary sources; some of the archival material, never exploited before by historians, is described in a select bibliography. The style is undistinguished but clear. The book does not take much account of social and economic factors; some of its generalizations will not meet with wide acceptance. It is, however, a valuable work of scholarship, one that will interest specialists rather than general readers."
Choice 5:667 J1 '68 160w

"The outline of the story are, of course, well known. The special value of Dr. Mulford's study is that it illuminates the less-known aspects. . . . There is little doubt that Dr. Mulford has produced a standard work. He has managed to combine a study of sometimes microscopic detail with a broad judgment which never loses sight of the whole picture. This is an important book, and it is also an extraordinarily interesting one."
TLS p295 Mr 21 '68 1000w

MULLER, HERBERT J. Adlai Stevenson; a study in values. 338p $6.95 Harper
B or 92 Stevenson, Adlai Ewing. U.S.—Politics and government—20th century 67-22503

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by John Sparkman
Ann Am Acad 337:193 My '68 600w
Choice 5:552 Je '68 110w

Reviewed by Douglas Gill
New Statesman 75:244 F 23 '68 550w

Reviewed by Carl McGowan
Pol Sci Q 83:463 S '68 650w

Reviewed by Allan Nevins
Sat R 51:22 Ja 20 '68 1100w

Reviewed by J. J. Kilpatrick
Sat R 51:23 Ja 20 '68 340w
TLS p567 Je 6 '68 900w

MÜLLER, KURT. The foreign aid programs of the Soviet Bloc and Communist China; tr. by Richard H. Weber and Michael Roloff. 331p $15 Walker & co.

338.91 Communist countries. Technical assistance. Underdeveloped areas. Economic assistance. International economic relations 66-17297

"I have tried to show the principles and objectives of the East bloc policies in Asian, African and Latin American countries, and to document the background and interconnections of communist activity in the underdeveloped countries. . . . The first part of this book examines the strategy and tactics from Lenin to Fidel Castro; the second part, the East bloc's foreign trade and its economic and training aid. . . . The first edition of this book appeared in 1964 in German. It was revised, supplemented and brought up to date for the American edition." (Pref)

"Originally Muller's book was entitled Über Kalkutta nach Paris? The title change in the translated version therefore gives the impression that it is completely devoted to a discussion of communist foreign aid. . . . Unfortunately the discussion of foreign aid makes up less than one half of material covered. . . . The reader sits with the expectation that there will be more . . . [and] is disappointed when he does not find it. . . . As for what is actually in the book, it is fair to say that Muller has brought together a good deal of useful information about Soviet relations and ambitions in the less developed world. Thus this could be a handy reference source. Unfortunately there are numerous shortcomings in this volume which prevent the realization of this prospect." M. I. Goldman

MULLER, KURT—Continued

Am Pol Sci R 62:1021 S '68 1100w

"Broad in scope but lacking in depth, the book is more a compendium of statistical data and official statements (through 1964) than the careful analysis which the English title suggests. Absence of an index is especially unfortunate in an encyclopedic compendium of this sort. Nor will readers always find source references helpful. Footnotes cite only the German translations of various works originally published in English, and often only the English or German translations of works published in Russian. Clearly inferior to Marshall I. Goldman's Soviet Foreign Aid [BRD 1967], although it has two features lacking in the latter: it covers East European and Chinese activities in the field briefly, and discussion is organized functionally by activities, rather than geographically by countries or areas receiving aid. In sum, a marginal supplement to the literature."

Choice 5:236 Ap '68 200w

"The best book we currently have in English on Sino-Soviet efforts to extend Bloc influence through the weapons of training and aid. The analysis covers the developing world. . . . The first section of the book . . . is particularly illuminating, detailing and distinguishing with care both Soviet and Chinese strategy regarding the economic and political penetration of the Third World. . . . This is a book which collections on Soviet affairs will want for its thoroughness and its moderation." R. F. Delaney

Library J 92:1839 My 1 '67 300w

MULLER, ROBERT H., ed. From radical left to extreme right; current periodicals of protest, controversy, or dissent—U.S.A. 157p $4.75 Campus pubs.

016.073 U.S.—Politics and government—Periodicals—Bibliography. Right and left (Political science)—Periodicals—Bibliography
67-29985

A bibliography assembled by the editor and his associates at the University of Michigan Library which attempts "to describe and list the most important 'radical and polemic' periodicals published in the U.S. . . . There are 163 titles listed, each with the address, frequency, publisher's estimate of circulation, birth date, format, and size. Three issues of every publication were examined, and the one, two, or three paragraph annotations with each entry are largely a report of the contents sampled in the three issues. . . . [The titles cover] atheism, communism, socialism, anarchism, anti-Semitism, racism, black and white supremacy, conservation, revolution, pro and con U.S. involvement in Vietnam, Stalinism, Maoism, Trotskyism, liberalism, anti-communism, laissez faire capitalism, pacifism, etc. . . . The bibliography is classified under five . . . headings: Civil Rights and the Negro, Left of Center, Miscellaneous, Race-Oriented, and Right of Center." (Library J)

"[The annotations] are carefully objective and unbiased reports, although partisans for any cause will find their sympathies and antipathies aroused by even these unemotional notes. Each summary was sent to the editor of the publication summarized. Selected replies . . . are included with the majority of listings. The replies are a fascinating added feature, providing some fair criticism of the listings, but more interesting, they offer a glimpse of the tremendous range of ideological versions of 'truth' available in the U.S. . . . Libraries trying to build truly representative collections need [this book]. . . . It offers the best access so far to the activist fringes of U.S. opinion and must be used to bring that opinion into library collections." J. N. Berry

Library J 92:3392 O 1 '67 750w

"I needed no convincing as to: (a) the intrinsic importance of this material for the social historian, and (b) the almost total neglect of these publications by both bibliographers and librarians. . . . This bibliography is designed to aid the librarian in selecting and ordering such dissenting periodicals. Through thoughtful and painstaking organization it offers the interested reader even more. . . . The expected bibliographical data including circulation figures are there. . . . This reviewer must still question the practice of omitting in most cases the names of the responsible editors of each journal. This is important and highly useful information. Perhaps this can be remedied in future editions, a prospect that this bibliography richly deserves." R. E. Cazden

Library Q 38:116 Ja '68 850w

MULTHAUF, ROBERT P. The origins of chemistry. 412p il $7.95 Watts, F.

540.9 Chemistry—History

67-24564

A history "of the science of matter as found in technology, philosophy, alchemy and medicine to the 17th Century [by the] director of the Museum of History and Technology of the Smithsonian Institution. . . . [The author] summarizes the practical knowledge and the scientific pretensions of the leading exponents in these fields. He shows how the various threads came together after the Renaissance to start the chemist on the road which led to Lavoisier." (Library J) Bibliography. Index of personal names. Index of subjects.

"A fine starting point for students planning to dig deeply into almost any phase of early chemical thinking. Philosophy is carefully dealt with; theory and technology are well handled. The three are kept separate, and while the separation results in some jumping back and forth through time, which interfered somewhat with the clarity for me, I believe that this arrangement may be more helpful than a strictly chronological one." H. C. Stubbs

Horn Bk 44:81 F '68 180w

"This is a most engaging book, an honest, comprehensive, and searching report, . . . both challenging and important. The voluminous footnotes of each chapter and the extensive bibliography at the end make [it] a necessary addition to a collection of the history of science." M. B. Wenger

Library J 93:90 Ja 1 '68 120w

"Multhauf devotes roughly equal portions of the book to the workers of antiquity, the medieval alchemists, and the new developments of the 16th and 17th centuries. . . . [His is] a text which is lucid as well as detailed and scholarly. His writing is careful and his interpretations closely argued. With disarming ease he conjures up a wealth of names and dates to support his argument whenever he feels it necessary. The result is a work that is always readable and never dull. It will make an excellent replacement for J. M. Stillman's . . . Story of Early Chemistry [BRD 1924], to which it bears similarities that Multhauf himself notes. . . . [The author's] stress on the relation of medical and chemical thought is wholly admirable." Arnold Thackray

Science 158:364 O 20 '67 400w

MULVIHILL, DONALD F., ed. Price policies and practices; a source book in readings [ed. by] Donald F. Mulvihill [and] Stephen Paranka. 333p $7.50 Wiley

658.8 Prices. Marketing

66-28757

"This collection of articles by economists and businessmen considers recent developments in pricing. [It is divided] into six main sections: 'Approaches,' 'Pricing Policies,' 'Management of a Pricing Program,' 'Behavioral Sciences Concepts in Pricing,' 'Quantitative Techniques,' and 'Government Regulation.'" (Library J) Index.

"Most compilations of readings are by their very nature mixed; this one is particularly so. The analytical content, difficulty of the subject under discussion, felicity of style, all of these vary considerably from one selection to another. . . . A collection of readings on this general subject is surely needed; but, unfortunately, taken as a whole the selections are not very good. The best of them are in Parts II, III, and IV, and the best of these are the two contributed by Lanzilotti, and those of Oxenfeldt, Katona, and Cyert and March."

Choice 5:236 Ap '68 120w

"For both students and professionals interested in price economics and marketing this first—and only—source book of readings must prove valuable. Of particular interest is the article 'Output and Price Decisions,' by George Katona. . . . For speculators, Franz Edelman provides an intriguing study, 'Art and Science of Competitive Bidding.' In his approach, Mr. Edelman uses a computer to examine the mathematical relationships of bid factors, 'providing a basis for determination of the optimum bid price. . . . Recommended for all business-school libraries and libraries with large business collections.' Paul Sarnoff

Library J 92:1152 Mr 15 '67 200w

MUMFORD, LEWIS. The urban prospect. 255p $5.95 Harcourt

711 City planning. Sociology, Urban. Cities and towns 68-20631

The author "here continues his attack on the modern approach to the city and its problems. This new work is a collection of articles, essays, and addresses, most of which appeared in journals such as the Architectural Record and Town Planning Review between 1949 and 1965. Also included is Mumford's 1967 statement (entitled 'A Brief History of Urban Frustration') before the Ribicoff Committee on Governmental Expenditures. . . . [Mumford asserts that] widespread urban dispersal and unplanned suburban sprawl have been accompanied by disintegration and decay of inner-city core areas. . . . [And he suggests] regional planning (urban planning alone is not enough), designed to preserve and perpetuate the essential tasks of the city, massively supported by federal and state governments." (Best Sell)

Reviewed by Wolf Von Eckardt
Am Scholarr 37:688 autumn '68 700w

Reviewed by R. A. Mohl
Best Sell 23:76 My 15 '68 800w

"Mumford probably knows more than anyone else alive about man's history as an urban animal. [In this book] . . . he makes it clear that the great urban thinkers and planners of this century are unhelpful guides. Neither Frank Lloyd Wright's proposed Broadacre City nor Le Corbusier's City in the Park concepts should be heeded. Both offer a cold, conformist dispersal of structures instead of a cohesive communal interplay of people and functions. The linear projects of C. A. Doxiadis, stretching to infinity along urban thoroughfares, seem to Mumford unspeakable. These innovators and their disciples have done much to perpetrate the two favored images of the city that prevail today—the City in a Parking Lot . . . and the Anti-City. . . . This is a valuable book, in short, from a valuable citizen." Richard Kluger

Book World p4 Je 9 '68 900w

"I find [this book] a disappointing recapitulation of the author's views. 'Prospect' suggests prescription. Perhaps there is none, but I have all those questions. . . . They have been answered, Mumford suggests, long ago, but a power-used, materialistic, anti-city society has either distorted the answers (building super-highways through instead of around cities, for instance) or refused to listen (building high-rises for low-income families, buildings that first stink figuratively; later, literally). . . . As an interested amateur, I opt for unsnarling our transportation systems as the first step in city planning. I wish Mumford had had more concrete suggestions about that." B. D. Shaw

Book World p12 Je 16 '68 300w
Christian Century 85:561 Ap 24 '68 50w

Reviewed by J. A. Levine
Christian Science Monitor p10 O 17 '68 480w

"Discouragingly, [the author] finds that our supposed new Black-Power and White-Power problems are nothing but the latest symptom of our failure to control the urban environment, a failure extending through centuries. His book will not cheer you up. It may prompt some readers to do something (one hopes). This book, like all his others, is recommended for general purchase." Rinehart Potts

Library J 93:1155 Mr 15 '68 120w

Reviewed by Michael Harrington
New Repub 158:23 My 25 '68 1600w

"In effect 'The Urban Prospect' is 'The Culture of Cities' [BRD 1938] again. . . . In the text of Mumford's Ribicoff Committee speech included in [this book] he calls on those people who are over-all planners—our legislators —insisting that they plan and also set up the machinery enabling us all to participate. He then warns them not to begin vast construction until plans are made. It's the best bit in the book; in from the wilderness comes this old advocate, to tell off the erring Israelites at last. . . . On the other hand, there is Mumford being predictable but unedifying, as he is in his praise of culture, which is now quite visibly limited to the collection of middlebrow pursuits. . . . He hooks everything onto the family, though social anthropologists such as Edmund Leach now sharply question the family's future strength as the module of civilization." Nathan Silver

N Y Times Bk R p6 My 5 '68 1300w

Reviewed by Isadore Candeub
Sat R 51:34 Jl 20 '68 700w

MUNBY, A. N. L. Portrait of an obsession; the life of Sir Thomas Phillipps, the world's greatest book collector, adapted by Nicolas Barker from the five volumes of Phillipps studies. 278p il $7.50 Putnam

020.75 Phillipps, Sir Thomas, Bart. Book collecting 67-28090

The Phillipps Studies were designed "to interest bookmen, and as such they were addressed to specialists. [This adaptation] has reduced the five volumes to one, ending with the death of Phillipps in 1872." (Library J) Index.

"The book world in general receives considerable treatment, and in all it is a fascinating study. A necessary purchase for university, college, and the larger public libraries, the book should also be on every bookman's shelf, and would be a worthy present for any occasion." P. W. Filby

Library J 93:747 F 15 '68 110w

"I wish to have one copy of every book in the world!!!!" [Phillipps] screamed, and that underlining and plethora of exclamation marks give some hint of the manic quality of his ambition, his gigantic, unstoppable, acquisitiveness. Any kind of writing that could be bought, he bought. . . . He was mad. Nicolas Barker's entertaining breakdown of . . . Munby's famous Phillipps Papers has a tendency to skip over this important fact. His uneasy last chapter obviously wants to present Phillipps as some kind of amiable old-fashioned English eccentric. This can't be allowed. . . . [However] if Mr. Barker does not explain, or even consider, the enormity of the gap between [Phillipps'] gargantuan appetite for possession and his minuscule taste, his book gives a good account of the facts of the man's career." Timothy Hilton

New Statesman 74:559 O 27 '67 550w

Reviewed by L. C. Powell
N Y Times Bk R p2 Mr 10 '68 1750w

"[This reduction and adaptation] has been managed with admirable adroitness and tact. . . . The technicalities have been shorn away without disturbing the fabric. . . . The Munby-Barker narrative is splendid reading. Those who now make the acquaintance of Sir Thomas Phillipps for the first time will find, in addition to a masterly portrait of a true 'original' against the firmly delineated background of a great era of book-collecting, a gallery of subsidiary characters of notable idiosyncrasy, all painted with the relish they deserve. . . . For those who own Dr. Munby's five original volumes but must normally keep them at hand in the study, the Barker abridgment makes a comfortable-sized book for the bedside shelf." TLS p1068 N 9 '67 950w

MUNCK, JOHANNES. The Acts of the apostles. See Bible. New Testament. Acts

MUNDEN, KEN, ed. Archives & the public interest. See Posner, E.

MUNGER, EDWIN S. Afrikaner and African nationalism; South African parallels and parameters; pub. for the Inst. of race relations. 142p $4 Oxford

963 Africa, South—Politics and government. Nationalism [67-93554]

"Can Afrikaner and African nationalism exist side-by-side in South Africa? That is really the underlying question in this study of parallel

MUNGER, E. S.—Continued
evolution of two indigenous nationalisms, by an American political scientist." (Economist)

"A satisfactory book by a capable observer of South Africa. In no way, however, is it a definitive work either on the subject of Afrikaner or African Nationalism. . . . [Nevertheless,] Munger's book is one of the few that attempts any meaningful analysis or comparison of the two different nationalisms. This is, however, only a part of a comparatively small book. Often Munger wanders into peripheral and superfluous subjects. His writing style is good, however, and it is possible that many libraries might wish to acquire it as a pleasant and brief introduction to the problems of South Africa."

Choice 5:683 J1 '68 200w

"Munger has really only skimmed the surface of his subject—he could hardly do more in 131 pages of text—and in places it is curiously unacademic and superficial. At times he bends over backwards to accept Afrikaner nationalist interpretations of their apartheid policy, but is much less sure of what the Black nationalists inside the country think and desire."

Economist 226:52 Ja 20 '68 330w

MUNRO, JAMES. The money that money can't buy. 241p $4.95 Knopf

68-12668

The novel features cooperation between British Intelligence's "highly secret Department K and the KGB because of the murder of a Chinese waiter in a restaurant in the Lake District and a counterfeit $20 bill." (Library J) The operative is John Craig.

"The trail of violence and terror stretches from London to Surrey to Morocco, but there are too many sadistic sweeps and compilations before the BC is unmasked and the world is put back in orbit." M. K. Grant

Library J 93:1023 Mr 1 '68 60w

"I don't know who has the best spies these days—but the British surely deserve the international palm for the best spy fiction. In this tough league, James Munro holds his own. . . . He stuffs into this latest book enough action, color and tightly coiled espionage to suffice a lesser artist for three novels—and keeps it at a fast simmer from the first thump of an ice-axe to the final karate chop." Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p28 Mr 24 '68 180w

New Yorker 44:80 Ag 31 '68 150w

Reviewed by Sergeant Cuff
Sat R 51:43 Mr 30 '68 40w

MUNSTERBERG, HUGO. Chinese Buddhist bronzes. 192p 130ill $17.50 Tuttle

731.8 Bronzes. Art, Buddhist 67-26308

A professor of Oriental art of the "State University of New York, College at New Paltz, . . . traces the development of bronze sculpture from the later Chao dynasty of the 3d Century to the Ming of the 15th. . . . [The book includes] photographs of images from museums and private collections in Europe, the United States, and Japan." (Library J) Appendix one: Major dated Chinese Buddhist bronzes. Appendix two: List of museums and art galleries. Bibliography. Index.

"Contents include information on the origins of Buddhist sculpture in China, casting techniques, and modern collections. The bulk of the work is devoted to a review of all the types of images that were cast in various periods, with emphasis on iconographical and stylistic features. The numerous black-and-white illustrations are of fine quality. The book suffers from an organization of material which leads to considerable repetition, and from the absence of references to recent scholarship. The old myth that ancient Chinese bronzes were cast by the lost wax method is perpetuated. In spite of the defects that exist, the compact treatment of the subject may make the book useful to the student of Chinese art."

Choice 5:336 My '68 160w

"The iconography of the Buddhist pantheon, represented in . . . [photographs] shows the stylistic changes through 1000 years. Professor Munsterberg uses a scholarly approach and takes for granted that the reader has a certain knowledge of Buddhist terminology. Of particular value to scholars is the appendix with its list of major dated Chinese Buddhist bronzes. Recommended for collections in oriental art." Paul von Khrum

Library J 92:2754 Ag '67 120w

"Munsterberg offers his usual relaxed manner and easy readability to all who are attached to this fascinating, if somewhat esoteric, subject. . . . [In the past he has written] chiefly for those who have little or no previous acquaintance with the material. His studies, as here, are not products of original research but of adroit selection and condensation. . . . In this case, we are somewhat puzzled as to what public the book is intended for. The conscientious history that the author has gathered is too dry for the general reader, yet the book itself, with its rich covers of gold brocade, seems too fancy a publication for the student market. The volume suffers moreover from poor plates and from poor photographs. . . . The layout, however, is excellent and the typography very attractive." Gordon Washburn

N Y Times Bk R p4 D 24 '67 240w

MUNTS, RAYMOND. Bargaining for health; labor unions, health insurance, and medical care. 320p $7.50 Univ. of Wis. press

368.3 Insurance, Health. Labor unions. Medical care, Prepaid 67-13555

A "history and appraisal of organized labor's recent large role in the financing and organization of medical care in the United States. . . . [Part I] narrates the experiences of the major path-breaking unions, the needle trades, mine-workers, autos, and steel. Part II discusses the larger issues in health bargaining—benefits and costs, administration, financing, bargaining with insurance carriers and the various providers of health services. Part III presents a summation from which generalizations, lessons, and public policy conclusions are drawn." (Am Econ R) Bibliography. Index.

"The many important ramifications of the book's subject matter are . . . apparent. The material is presented in orderly, balanced, and thoughtful fashion. . . . The author's evidence adequately supports his conclusions that, in addition to enlarging access to care, organized labor has been a salutary influence upon the nation's health institutions in improving the standards of health insurance protection—especially Blue Cross—by sensitizing its members to the importance of health care and to the differential quality of services, and sponsoring various innovations in the delivery of health care. . . . He seems to give support to the recent development of community and area-wide health planning and controls and implicitly urges that community health bargaining relate itself to such larger community programs—although the obstacles to this broad approach seem to me somewhat understated. . . . [His] recommendations are in the main moderate and evolutionary. . . . [They] deserve the attention and thought of social scientists." H. M. Somers

Am Econ R 58:641 Je '68 900w

"[The author's] conclusions are explicitly stated: . . . it [a union] will find that the health interests of its members are best served in terms of the health resources of the entire community.' Continuing in this vein he unequivocally recommends multiunion sponsorship of direct service group practice plans with enrollment open to the entire community. This is a thoughtful, informative, and provocative book. It deserves reading by all who are involved in the planning, organization, and delivery of health services." T. E. Carroll

Am J Pub Health 57:2217 D '67 470w

MUNZER, MARTHA E. Pockets of hope; studies of land and people; for the conservation foundation; maps by John Bierhorst. 209p il $4.50 Knopf

333.7 Natural resources—U.S. Regional planning. Social surveys—U.S. 67-18590

The author "has taken five economically depressed areas in the United States and shown how their residents are getting together and lifting themselves out of despair and poverty. She covers the mined-out coal fields around Wilkes-Barre, Pennsylvania, the Johnson Creek watershed in Tennessee, the Santa Clara Indian Reservation in New Mexico, and Michigan's Upper Peninsula." (Christian Science Monitor) Bibliography. Index.

Best Sell 27:314 N 1 '67 140w [YA]

Reviewed by Robert Coles

Book World p16 F 18 '68 280w [YA]

"[Mrs. Munzer] also visits Alaska to see if that largely unspoiled land has learned from the mistakes of others. The story is an interesting one as we see ravaged lands rejuvenated and hopeless people reviving. But Mrs. Munzer never quite gets her material to catch fire as it should for 12's up." M. S.

Christian Science Monitor pB8 N 2 '67 120w [YA]

"These 'studies of land and people' show how areas potentially rich become starkly poor, and how practical action by men of hope can restore a decent standard of living. Mrs. Munzer writes with an instinct for telling detail and a flair for narrative." M. L. Birmingham

Commonweal 87:184 N 10 '67 50w [YA]

"In seeking to interpret the war against poverty for children, the author . . . is highly cognizant of the role the local inhabitants must play, the will they must exhibit 'to pull themselves up by their boot straps.' . . . Similarly, it is the personal touch imparted by her actual getting together with the people in the different areas that will make the account acceptable to children. For them it will have a reality beyond that possible in a book based solely on research." M. M.

Horn Bk 44:77 F '68 210w

"The book is so well designed, with maps and carefully selected photographs, that it will be attractive to casual readers, as well as students who will find this excellent source material for studies in conservation, civics, and sociology." D. Y. Shaffer

Library J 92:4624 D 15 '67 [YA]

MURBACH, ERNST. The painted Romanesque ceiling of St Martin in Zillis; ed. and with phot. by Peter Heman [tr. by Janet Seligman]. 48p $20 Praeger

759.949 Mural painting and decoration. Zillis, Switzerland. St Martin (Church) [68-74482]

This book describes the "oldest surviving painted church ceiling in Europe, created around 1140. Made up of 153 quadrangular panels painted with decorative motifs, the ceiling depicts the life of Christ, and the legend of St. Martin. . . . Dr. Ernst Murbach, principal editor of the Society for the History of Art in Switzerland, deals in the text first with the cultural, historical, and architectural background of the area and the church, then explains the structure, the artist's technique, and the iconographic plan of the ceiling. He discusses the identity of the unknown artist who, he concludes, must have worked in the scriptoria of Austrian or Northern Italian monasteries." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Originally published under the title Zillis. Die romanische Bilderdecke der Kirsche St. Martin.

"An unusual volume because it has colored photographs of about one-half only of the panels on what must be the most extraordinary Romanesque ceiling in the world. The plates are very clear. The adequate text contains ample information for the general reader. The scholar will wish for color plates of the complete ceiling, and a more professional analysis and description of the paintings. . . . This work will be of substantial use, especially at the undergraduate level."

Choice 5:189 Ap '68 200w

"There is a discussion of the symbolism of the elements in the separate panels and the layout of the whole ceiling, as well as the possible symbolism of the numbers and mathematical harmonies of proportion. The bibliography is, naturally enough, mostly in German. In view of the price and specialized nature of the book, it is recommended for those libraries with special interest in Romanesque painting, the arts of Switzerland, and closely related fields." Julia Sabine

Library J 93:538 F 1 '68 300w

MURDOCH, IRIS. The nice and the good. 378p $5.75 Viking

68-11412

"In a novel which has . . . touches of the bizarre and the melodramatic—suicide within the British Foreign Office, murder, celebration of the Black Mass, blackmail, danger of death by drowning in a seaside grotto—Iris Murdoch reveals the intertwining of the lives and loves of a group of people principally domiciled in a country estate on the Devon coast. Among them are an English ne'er-do-well and fallen-away Buddhist novice, a Jewish refugee scholar with an enormous guilt complex, a boy and a girl suffering the pain of first love, a divorcee and her twin children, . . . the mistress of the estate who participates in extramarital affairs with the knowledge and approval of her husband, the other partner in one of these affairs who is simultaneously entangled with another." (Library J)

Reviewed by W. B. Hill

America 118:622 My 4 '68 80w

Reviewed by Edward Weeks

Atlantic 221:135 F '68 550w

Reviewed by C. M. Siggins

Best Sell 27:402 Ja 15 '68 700w

Reviewed by R. V. Cassill

Book World p5 Ja 7 '68 700w

Choice 5:196 Ap '68 190w

Reviewed by Melvin Maddocks

Christian Science Monitor p11 Ja 11 '68 500w

Reviewed by John Thompson

Commentary 45:66 Ja '68 1550w

Reviewed by K. G. Jackson

Harper 236:100 F '68 550w

"The book as a whole is strangely compassionate for Miss Murdoch, an examination of the many faces of love, and an especial scrutiny of the difference between the nice and the good, between human self-seeking love and a higher, more impersonal kind. The characters, as always in a Murdoch novel, are curious, distinct, and alive; and the work, as always, shows its author's keen intellect. Add this to the Murdoch shelf in all respectable collections of modern fiction." L. W. Griffin

Library J 92:4524 D 15 '67 190w

Reviewed by Guy Davenport

Nat R 20:350 Ap 9 '68 500w

Reviewed by A. S. Byatt

New Statesman 75:113 Ja 26 '68 1050w

Reviewed by Bernard Bergonzi

N Y Rev of Books 10:36 Ap 11 '68 1900w

"Miss Murdoch runs her people through all possible sexual permutations, lets them suffer through various 'trial marriages,' and then brilliantly sets her house in order. Besides the amusement of this fleshly rococo, there is also the familiar Murdoch Gothic vein to revel in wickedly. . . . Pulsing through these complex adventures in lust and crime is brilliant moral clarity. Just as Jane Austen 'defines' moral categories like 'sense' and 'sensitivity' in her novel, so Iris Murdoch creates new constellations of meaning around those stand-bys of ordinary language, the nice and the good." R. A. Sokolov

Newsweek 71:73 Ja 15 '68 330w

"This seems to me Iris Murdoch's best, most exciting and most successful book. For two-thirds of its course it is un-put-downable. . . . Why, then, does it carry a quotient of disappointment? . . . [One reason has to do] with the ideas that it was (presumably) written to communicate; that goodness is not niceness; that living to please others as a means of justifying oneself is unrewarding; that self-satisfied people are, on the whole, unpleasant and selfish, if often amusing; that love transfigures the commonplace; that every individual hides some mystery; that one can learn through suffering. Surely I cannot be alone in feeling that these thoughts are not very interesting, very new, very exhilarating or, possibly, even true? . . . Manipulation is, and always has been, Miss Murdoch's worst fault. Here it appears that manipulation is what she believes fiction is meant to do; and so she chooses to use, in her novels, ideas that are not too profound to be manipulated. Unfortunately, they are ideas which give a disconcerting flavor of the second-hand, even the second-rate, to the heart of this dazzling structure." Elizabeth Janeway

N Y Times Bk R p4 Ja 14 '68 1300w

Reviewed by Anne Fremantle

Reporter 38:47 Ja 25 '68 1600w

Reviewed by Granville Hicks

Sat R 51:27 Ja 6 '68 1200w

Time 91:76 Ja 5 '68 480w

TLS p77 Ja 25 '68 1500w

MURDOCK, GEORGE PETER. Ethnographic atlas. 128p $4.95 Univ. of Pittsburgh press

572 Ethnology

67-21648

This volume "classifies the world's societies—primitive, historical, and contemporary—into some four hundred groups with closely related cultures. . . . For 862 of those societies whose cultures have been most thoroughly described it presents . . . tabulated data on their economy, technology, marriage rules, social and political organization, and other social and cultural phenomena." (Publisher's note) Bibliography.

"This volume reproduces much—but not all—of the Atlas as [originally published in the journal] Ethnology. Omitted are: (1) the copious bibliographic citations . . . although references to the journal are included; (2) societies for which there is little adequate or accurate information; and (3) the informative notes. . . . While students and researchers alike will probably often wish that the Atlas had been reproduced in full, this monographic edition will be a useful addition to social science reference collections. [This book] and Textor's Cross-cultural Summary [BRD 1968] . . . are both of inestimable value to those engaged in cross-cultural study."

Choice 5:756 S '68 170w

"This is an atlas without a single map. But the 862 societies of concern—tribes and ethnic groups—are listed according to precise geographical location. . . . The materials are coded. . . . Murdock has succeeded in bringing a great deal of material together. Nor can the atlas be regarded as complete; additional categories can yet be appended. To find data on a particular society means . . . a rather unhandy riffling back and forth to see what the column numbers and codes mean, but . . . no other arrangement would permit the compression of such extensive information into so little space. . . . In this atlas there is a ready source of materials susceptible of statistical review and computer analysis. . . . One must compliment Murdock on the prodigious amount of work he has done in assembling this vast body of data." R. F. Spencer

Science 159:968 Mr 1 '68 650w

MURE, ELEANOR. The story of the three bears. unpag $5 Walck, H.Z.

Bears—Stories

67-19932

This is a facsimile edition of "the oldest existing version of the story of the three bears. Written and illustrated by Eleanor Mure in 1831, as a birthday present for her nephew, it precedes by six years the Robert Southey prose version. . . . An endpiece by Judith St. John, Librarian in charge of the Osborne Collection [of Early Children's Books] in [the] Toronto [Public Library] provides a history of the story of the three bears, and the background to Miss Mure's version." (Publisher's note)

"Though awkward, even primitive, Miss Muir's work possesses an authentic sweetness and charm, and this handsome facsimile edition would be an ornament to any small child's bookshelf." S. G. Lanes

Book World pt 2, p1 (children's issue)
N 5 '67 140w

"[Judith St. John] has provided a delightful concluding history of the tale. This version, like Southey's, and a later verse telling dated 1837, presents an old woman as the visitor to the bears' home. The 'faithful facsimile' perfectly reproduces the hand-lettered pages and the thirteen clear water-color paintings of the bears at home on the author's Hertfordshire estate. Each of the pictures is captioned with one of the quaint (often bumpy) lines of verse. A prize for bibliophiles and libraries." V. H.

Horn Bk 44:53 F '68 150w

Reviewed by Carolyn Heilbrun
N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p58 N 5 '67 70w

"A curiosity for bibliophiles, rather than a genuine children's book. . . . The story was written and illustrated for a four-year-old nephew, but four-year-olds today will not make much of it."

TLS p1143 N 30 '67 90w

MURPHY, DERVLA. Tibetan foothold. 206p pl $6.75 Transatlantic

361.53 Refugees, Tibetan. Children in Tibet
[66-72244]

The author "bicycled from Ireland to India, a trip described in her first book, Full Tilt

[BRD 1965]. The fierce July heat of Delhi causes a break in her tour and she puts the time until cold weather to . . . use ■ a volunteer in a camp for Tibetan refugee children. (Library J) This episode is covered in the current volume.

"Getting to know these people through Miss Murphy's cool observing eye and passionately partisan heart is an experience which makes essential reading by itself. There are also unforgettable characters among the volunteers and a wealth of geographical information and nature lore. One gets a much better understanding of the intricate maze of politics affecting these unfortunate people. We all need to know more of the tragic plight of so many of our fellow humans. This book is highly recommended for libraries with collections of this type." M. L. Garvey

Library J 92:4498 D 15 '67 140w

New Statesman 72:440 S 23 '66 140w

"There is no easy acquiescence in Miss Murphy's make-up. When she sees a wrong she goes blazing into battle to put it right. [The refugee camp at] Dharamsala was wrong enough to fill her diary with the sort of witty indignation that is a specially Irish product."

TLS p758 Ag 25 '66 450w

MURPHY, EARL FINBAR. Governing nature. 333p $7.50 Quadrangle bks.

333 Natural resources. Natural resources—U.S.
67-10245

The author, professor of law at Temple University, "is concerned primarily with the renewable 'life-cycle' resources—air, water, and land—which face the onslaught of our urban, industrial, technological way of life. . . . It is time, he argues, for human institutions to take a full inventory of nature, to describe completely man's effect upon it, to specify the costs, and to consciously direct man's role and function in the universe." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"[The author] conveys a good grasp of economic issues, as well as placing problems in an interesting historical context. The principles are abundantly illustrated with examples. Style is fairly easy, but appeal could have been increased by adding a few pictures, diagrams, tables, etc. Still an excellent discussion, strongly recommended for undergraduates and general readers. . . . Patchy bibliography."

Choice 5:1334 D '68 150w

"Mr. Murphy's contribution to discussion among conservationists will be a hair shirt to many of them and also to many economists. The book is worth serious study." C. S. Johnson

Library J 92:3435 O 1 '67 130w

"A refreshing yet provoking account. Mr. Murphy is careful to see both sides of the argument. . . . He is particularly good at demonstrating how the cost of securing freedom from certain kinds of environmental contamination is often much higher than administrators will allow. . . . [His] book is a cogent case for asking that these costs be calculated courageously and then matched against the advantages to be obtained. . . . [Mr. Murphy] is stronger still on the nature of the institutions necessary to control the environment. Although there are many who will quarrel with the details of his argument, its general effect should help nudge those who are despondent about the problem of the environment into a more sober direction." John Maddox

N Y Times Bk R p8 Ja 14 '68 800w

MURPHY, FRANCIS X. Synod '67; a new sound in Rome [by] Francis X. Murphy [and] Gary MacEoin. 236p $4.95 Bruce pub.

262 Catholic Church

68-22590

Two journalists record "their impressions of the Synod of Bishops which convened in Rome [in] 1967. . . . Along with other chapters, the five main topics of the synod agenda merit one chapter each: the role of church law, doctrinal truths, seminary training, mixed marriages and liturgical experiment." (Best Sell)

"Personalities are characterized and opinions are given freely. Accolades are generous as in the case of Panama's Bishop McGrath. . . . Father Murphy and Mr. MacEoin are journalists who write forcefully and clearly. They are very select in their choice of words. This is a chronicle which might not move off the shelf because the Synod is now an accomplished fact, almost completely forgotten. It will definitely move for those who are anxious to know more about developments with the contemporary church. There is a striking similarity between this book and the Xavier Rynne volumes on Vatican II [Letters from Vatican City, BRD 1963, Second Session, BRD 1964, Third Session, BRD 1965, Fourth Session, BRD 1966]. . . . And this is especially true where references are made to more prominent personalities." Bernard Hrico

Best Sell 28:77 My 15 '68 300w

"[This] volume indicates that the church hierarchy is still capable of liveliness. How do the authors assess the synod? Murphy sees considerable progress, while MacEoin sees less than he would like and laments accordingly."

Christian Century 85:1176 S 18 '68 90w

"A very useful book for keeping up with Rome and the Bishops."

Commonweal 88:274 My 17 '68 50w

MURPHY, RICHARD. The battle of Aughrim. 74p $4 Knopf

821

[68-141548]

Two narrative poems by an Anglo-Irish poet. The title poem describes the "carnage that took place on an evening in July 1691, when the forces of William and Mary decisively defeated those of James II [on Irish soil. The second entitled The God Who Eats Corn is set in Africa, and reflects] . . . the first stirrings of revolution among the disinherited. It is dedicated to the author's father . . . who lived out his last years in central Africa, curiously untouched but not unmoved by the conflagration rising outside his peaceful farm." (Publisher's note) Parts of the first poem previously appeared in such periodicals as The Listener, The New Statesman, and The Irish Times. The God Who Eats Corn has been revised since it first appeared in The Reporter and The Listener.

"[This poet] reveals very little about himself; like Shakespeare, he seems to set his scenery and characters on the stage, and then withdraw into the audience to behold their action. . . . He [also] has a very strong sense of history, and the rootedness of the present in the past. [In the second poem's] . . . poignant quatrains the life of the former official is sketched against the sense of approaching crisis. . . . Part of Mr. Murphy's power comes from his sense of sharing sun-drenched worlds: English and Irish, and (vicariously) African and European. But mostly one remembers him for the lyrical loveliness and narrative movement of his long, sustained poems. He is the most important Irish poet now coming along, and very possibly a major figure in the entire English-speaking world." Chad Walsh

Book World p20 N 3 '68 460w

"[This volume], containing two long narrative poems of considerable distinction, fulfills the promise of Murphy's first volume of poems, Sailing to an Island [BRD 1964. In the first of these two poems he] . . . narrates the events of [a] savage conflict in [four] sections: 'Now,' 'Before,' 'During,' [and] 'After'. Thus, there is a nice balance of the philosopher's thoughtfulness, the historian's perspective, and the observer's immediacy. At no time, however, do the viewpoints interfere with poetic expression or dramatic development. . . . [In the second poem] a lively awareness of issues developing in the African state is fused with a private concern for the individual and a keen appreciation of the values of a passing generation. This volume merits space on any contemporary poetry shelf." Walter Waring

Library J 93:3145 S 15 '68 180w

"Originally written for radio, . . . these evocations of the last battle fought on Irish soil are never less than competent, but rarely very energetic: some good vignettes and anecdotes, but too much merely routine re-creation of historical moments." Alan Brownjohn

New Statesman 76:363 S 20 '68 50w

TLS p1386 D 5 '68 440w

MURPHY, WILLIAM P. The triumph of nationalism; state sovereignty, the founding fathers, and the making of the Constitution. 434p $10 Quadrangle bks.

342 U.S.—Constitutional history 67-21644

An investigation of "the motives and understandings of those who dealt with the conflict of power in the formative years of the Republic, 1776-1789. Mr. Murphy has gone back to the records of the drafting of the Articles, the debates of the Constitutional Convention, and the state ratification conventions to find that today's exercises of national power are historically legitimate, a fulfillment of the founders' grand design. The author argues that the framers of the Constitution consciously and intentionally sought to eradicate the state sovereignty that had prevailed under the Articles." (Publisher's note) Parts of this book appeared originally in different form in the Mississippi Law Journal. Bibliography. Index.

"Though much of [the] discussion lacks depth and the [author] is amiss as to the contents of some of the books that he cites, this work can well pass as a textbook on the subject. It is also refreshing to see this momentous event in our history undramatized. Besides an analysis of the Confederation period (which is rather shallow), the shaping of the Constitution in the Convention, and the formation of public opinion, students and teachers alike will find useful the bulk of the book, which consists of biographies of each convention delegate and state-by-state accounts of the fight for ratification. Unfortunately, Murphy has no conception of a period being formative. Everything, is either/or. Economic interests are slighted."

Choice 5:864 S '68 210w

Christian Century 85:457 Ap 10 '68 80w

"An examination, more legal than historical, of the ideas of the founding fathers regarding state and national sovereignty. . . . [The author] states that state sovereignty was deliberately abandoned when the Articles were rejected. 'None of these doctrines—strict construction of the Constitution, interposition, or nullification, and secession can find support from contemporary sources on drafting and ratification of the Constitution.' This is a good statement, but it is no more than a buttressing of positions already taken by legal and historical scholars. A good purchase for libraries needing material in Constitutional study." Jack Van Derhoof

Library J 92:4165 N 15 '67 240w

MURPHY, WILLIAM S., jr. auth. West of the West See Kirsch, R.

MURRAY, DAVID. Charles Percy of Illinois. 178p il $5.95 Harper

B or 92 Percy, Charles Harting 68-15967

This biography of Senator Charles Percy tells of his poverty-stricken youth during the Depression, his business ventures and rise to the presidency of Bell & Howell before he was thirty, and his political development.

"Murray is an expert journalist, who sees behind the facade of the 'clean-limbed, deep-voiced, athletic extrovert' to the 'man with a spark' who may someday attain the White House. Highly readable and filled with reportorial insights, the book would make a solid contribution to any library's contemporary political collection."

Choice 5:1042 O '68 90w

"The book is humdrum and dead, an altogether routine campaign biography."

Christian Century 85:457 Ap 10 '68 40w

"Murray, [a] seasoned political reporter, . . . knows what he wants to say and says it convincingly. Although not an authorized version, . . . this book was prepared with [Senator Percy's] assistance and the cooperation of his family, friends, and official staff. . . . Although, unfortunately, there is nothing here of Percy's recent foray into Vietnam, or of his controversial businessmen's fund, readers will be much more knowledgeable about Percy's background, rise in politics, and his opinions on current issues. Recommended for general and well-informed readers." W. C. Kiessel

Library J 93:984 Mr 1 '68 180w

MURRAY, EDMUND P. The passion players; a novel. 342p $5.95 Crown

67-27029

"This first novel deals with a provincial American road-show performance of a pasted-together version of the Passion play. Set in Dallas, this Oberammergau in Texas employs a young prostitute named Frenchy as the Virgin Mary, a washed-out Hollywood actor,

MURRAY, E. P.—Continued

Colt, as Christ, and a supporting cast dredged up from the scum of humanity. 'The gospel according to Saint Jackson Travesty' the play is termed by its author, Jackson Travis, "homosexual alcoholic." (Library J)

"[An ingenious novel.] its form is well-devised and effective. Murray's use of the contrapuntal device is successful. In both form and content Murray is able to create something like medieval Texas 'primitive,' a raw, low-slung, rich, intestinal impact that shocks but doesn't repel, at least not if one is willing to give the novel serious, full consideration. The danger is that many will find this blasphemous, or only ingenious. . . . This novel is not for the timid. Whatever losses it may suffer from novelty and ingenuity (wit, sparkle, and grotesque metaphysical conceits of a sort) it gains by making human points." R. C. Baxter
Best Sell 28:57 My 1 '68 700w

"[The characters] are mere fragments in what is more an underdeveloped sketch for a novel than a finished work. [Moreover, the book is] permeated with contrived ironies and paradoxes. . . . [The novel itself] is a parade of seedy, cardboard caricatures of tent-show types who mouth cliché lingo interspersed with pseudo-folksy Texas phrases. We learn very little about any of the characters other than what they do to each other sexually, and this lack of insight hampers the cooperative imagination of the reader. . . . Employing a quasi-Brechtian technique Mr. Murray announces what is to happen next in the novel via act and scene divisions. Example: 'Scene 12: Hart encounters a man in the gutter, a cop and a girl.' A self-conscious device that adds nothing to the novel." M. B. Raines
Library J 92:4524 D 15 '67 400w

"This first novel is irreverent, cruel, funny, tender, sad, and a foolproof catalyst to déjà vu. Murray so authentically simulates the nuts and nuthouses of wide-open American fraud and opportunism that his book triggers memory like a picture postcard. . . . [The author's] adventure in fraud carries an especially rich load of social observation because he drops Christianity, the theater and the great All-American state of Texas into one ever-expanding bag. If the novel goes wider than deeper, Murray's selection of breadth meets one's sense of the situation. Murray is after effect, and he gets it: luxurious comedy and ironic commentary. . . . He is a social novelist of romantic ribaldry. Texas and the Passion Play fits his gifts like a sheath around the knife he shoves into the soft underside of an America that recognizes two sides to every proposition—sex or money." Webster Schott
N Y Times Bk R p4 Ap 28 '68 900w

Reviewed by Dennis Powers
Sat R 51:38 My 4 '68 400w

MURRAY, EDWARD. Arthur Miller, dramatist.
186p $5; pa $1.95 Ungar
812 Miller, Arthur 66-25111

"This is a book of dramatic—not literary—criticism. In his introduction, Mr. Murray says, 'It might be objected that I have not given adequate attention to Miller's language as language. . . . But there is another way to view dialogue, namely, in terms of its ability to forward the action, to reveal character, and to extend the thematic scope of the action, and in my analyses of the plays I have not neglected this side of Miller's art. . . . Along with these analyses, Mr. Murray gives the plots of [the playwright's major works] . . . and quotes from Miller's own views of these plays.' (Library J) Bibliography.

"This attempt to explicate Miller's plays . . . fails hopelessly. Murray's formula is unvarying. Each play is given a chapter that begins with an endless summary. There follows a sophomore-level discussion of structure, character, and theme after which all of the analysis is summarized and judged. Tiresome critical clichés trot across every page: critics with negative views are 'hostile,' characters are 'three-dimensional' or 'flat.' . . . The faults are endless, and to specify more of them would be to unnecessarily broadcast the critical banality, the dreariness, the total lack of perception." Choice 5:516 Je '68 140w

"Mr. Murray's bibliography includes many magazine articles as well as books on the plays. Anyone interested in Arthur Miller would do well to consult this book." Marguerite McAneny

Library J 92:1638 Ap 15 '67 170w

MURRAY, LINDA. The high renaissance. 213p il col il $7.50 Praeger

709.45 Art, Renaissance. Art, Italian 67-18404

The author begins with a survey of the High Renaissance, "then considers its effects in Rome and Venice, and afterwards devotes her attention mostly to del Sarto and Correggio, with a special chapter on Michelangelo in Florence." (Best Sell) Bibliography. Index.

"[This book] is lavishly illustrated with color and monochrome plates, but seems, at first glance, somewhat unbalanced in its organization. A reading, however, shows that the author has her subject well in hand." R. F. Grady
Best Sell 27:317 N 15 '67 100w

"[Mrs Murray] contrasts in particular the differences in character, and how this affected their art, of Michelangelo and Titian, who both lived to ripe old age with only a decade between them. The colour plates in this book are bad, but it is excellent value." Economist 225:vii D 2 '67 130w

MURROW, EDWARD R. In search of light; the broadcasts of Edward R. Murrow, 1938-1961; ed. and with an introd. by Edward Bliss, Jr. 364p pl $6.95 Knopf

791.44 Radio broadcasting. History, Modern—20th century 67-11133

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Economist 227:50 Je 8 '68 200w

Reviewed by R. A. Rosenstone
J Am Hist 54:926 Mr '68 550w

Reviewed by Kingsley Martin
New Statesman 75:342 Mr 15 '68 1050w
TLS p389 Ap 18 '68 340w

MURTY, B. S. Propaganda and world public order; the legal regulation of the ideological instrument of coercion. 310p $10 Yale univ. press

327 Propaganda. International law 67-24505

The author "deals with the decision process, facts of state interaction, use of coercion and persuasion, consideration of policy alternatives, the trend of legal decisions, etc. and recommends policies which are compatible with a system of minimum world order and freedom of information." (Choice) Index.

"Murty makes two major contributions to the study of international law. First, he provides the most comprehensive up-to-date study of the international regulation of propaganda; he covers major areas of law and practice and utilizes allied disciplines. Second, he has departed from 'rules' of international law approach of earlier studies such as Whitton and Larson, Propaganda [BRD 1964] and L. J. Martin, International Propaganda [BRD 1959]. Murty casts his study within the policy oriented jurisprudential framework developed by Lasswell and McDougal of the Yale Law School and utilized by McDougal and associates in the series of public order studies." Choice 5:1042 O '68 140w

"Recommended for law libraries, political science departments, and large public libraries." Victor Novak

Library J 92:4008 N 1 '67 170w

MUSCAT, ROBERT J. Development strategy in Thailand; a study of economic growth. 310p $15 Praeger

338.9593 Thailand—Economic conditions. Thailand—Economic policy. Economic policy 65-24707

The author has worked "for the Agency of International Development. [He discusses the work of] authorities in the field of development theory, especially Higgins, Hirschman, Bauer, and Myint [and] finds that anthropological problems do not pose a major obstacle to accelerated economic growth in Thailand. Growth, however, is adversely affected by monopolies and syndicates which obstruct the free flow of agricultural commodities from the newly developed areas. . . . Muscat suggests that only a limited sector of future investments should be undertaken by the government and recommends more investment by the Thai commercial middle class." (Choice)

"One of the most important books in the field of 'applied development theory,' . . . Muscat's study will be helpful for future policy planners in Southeast Asia who will draw on both the scholarship of the presentation and the careful policy recommendations."

Choice 3:1055 Ja '67 150w

"A most interesting and thought-provoking study. In essence, the author is asking: why has Thailand's economic growth not been greater than it is? Why did it not match Japan's? . . . The author uses the statistics he has collected with realism. . . . [However,] this is not and cannot be a definitive work. The statistics that are available are far too uncertain . . . and interpretations which link with social causes are far too provocative and complex to admit of final acceptance. But I find it refreshing and welcome that an economist should so readily and unpretentiously link social and cultural questions with his model, and carry conviction as far as he goes. . . . [He] has opened up serious questions about the organization of commerce and industry." Cyril Belshaw

Pacific Affairs 40:159 spring-summer '67 550w

MUSKER, FRANK F. A guide to gymnastics [by] Frank F. Musker, Donald R. Casady [and] Leslie W. Irwin. 256p il $6.95 Macmillan (N Y)

796.4 Gymnastics 68-10105

"Part I of this guide prepares the gymnast, mentally and physically, to perform the stunts described in Part II. Tumbling and routines on the trampoline, side-horse, parallel bars, horizontal bar, and rings are . . . illustrated and presented in a graduated order of difficulty." (Library J) Bibliography.

"In an attempt to present a gymnastics book that is unique, a smattering of mechanics, physiology, nutrition, weight training, and physical fitness is presented. These subjects [are] treated better elsewhere. . . . The history of gymnastics is well presented, and the drawings and movements of men's Olympic events are adequate at the beginners' level."

Choice 5:649 J1 '68 80w

"[The authors] address beginners and experienced coaches who may benefit from . . . [the] emphasis on conditioning and the mechanics of gymnastics. This detailed and reasonably successful attempt to instruct the unskilled distinguishes the text; otherwise, it is not unlike many gymnastics books available."

Charles Curran

Library J 93:2013 My 15 '68 110w

MWASE, GEORGE SIMEON. Strike a blow and die; a narrative of race relations in colonial Africa; ed. and introd. by Robert I. Rotberg. 135p il $4.95 Harvard univ. press

967 Chilembwe, John. Malawi—Race relations. Negroes in Africa 66-21342

This biography of John Chilembwe, a leader in the 1915 Nyasaland rebellion, was "written in the early 1930's by G. S. Mwase, a fellow countryman. . . . The first section of the book contains . . . information about the Nyasa rebellion of 1915. . . . The second half . . . contains Mr. Mwase's personal commentary on race relations, Asian immigration, and the penal system of Nyasaland. The manuscript of this book was uncovered in the Malawi archives by Mr. Rotberg, who is assistant professor of history, Harvard University [and author of] The Rise of Nationalism in Central Africa; the Making of Malawi and Zambia, 1873-1964 [BRD 1965]." (Library J) Index.

"The only known biography of John Chilembwe written by an African, this book sheds important new light on race relations in colonial Africa. . . . [Chilembwe] is shown as having been inspired by the example of John Brown about whom he had heard while studying in America. Chilembwe's purpose in fomenting a revolt which he knew would not succeed, presumably, was merely to 'strike a blow and die' in an effort to alleviate the working conditions of the Africans of his day. . . . Rotberg's excellent introduction and editing make the narrative informative and interesting. But the book is important chiefly because it represents the viewpoint of the African at a time when few, if any, African opinions were recorded."

Choice 5:248 Ap '68 300w

"This fascinating document fulfills two important and complementary functions. As the biography of John Chilembwe, Malawi's first revolutionary, it allows a more complete interpretation of the role of Africans in the history of their own country's political development, and . . . [it] affords historians a unique view of colonial conditions in the former British Protectorate of Nyasaland. . . . The publication of this book is welcome, and as a primary source it is a necessary purchase for all libraries with historical or sociological interest in Central Africa." H. K. Flad

Library J 92:4018 N 1 '67 300w

"The book is valuable for a number of reasons. It gives us the perspective of what Rotberg calls 'a member of the indigenous intelligentsia' of Africa on various aspects of colonialism. . . . Chilembwe's story, in Mwase's telling, may inspire others who live under colonial rule. . . . Some of Mwase's intention was clearly to inspire whatever native readers of his book he hoped to reach. . . . Mwase's English . . . (he had probably no more than four years of schooling in it) is everywhere fresh and enchanting. . . . It is obvious that the great influence on his style is the King James Bible. . . . Sometimes he attains a wonderful eloquence." S. E. Hyman

New Yorker 44:85 J1 27 '68 2100w

MYDANS, CARL. The violent peace [by] Carl Mydans & Shelley Mydans. 478p il maps $12.50 Atheneum pubs.

904 Military history. History, Modern—20th century 67-25490

"By [the authors'] count, some 50 wars have pocked the face of the world since 1945, from the battle for Palestine and the Communist victory in China to the Korean police action, Hungarian revolution and the continuing conflict in South Vietnam. The Mydanses sketch the outlines of the most important of these eruptions, fleshing out their summaries with eye-witness accounts and photographs by themselves and others." (Newsweek) Index.

Reviewed by C. L. Hohl

America 119:566 N 30 '68 40w

"[To the eyewitness accounts,] which contain some extraordinarily vivid description and narrative, Mr. Mydans himself has contributed some of the best (including a hair-raising story about the rebellion at Suncheon in Korea 20 months before the war and its savage repression). The survey is remarkable even if not complete. . . . The list is, just in itself, terrible. . . . [The volume] comes at a moment when we most need the reminder, embellished as it is, by some of the best journalistic accounts of the moment of truth. And if this is so of the writing, what is one to say of the photographs? They are beautiful and terrible, arousing the imagination, the memory, the emotions, as hardly anything written on these woeful themes can still do today. The pictures are mainly from Life, although other sources have been tapped also." Vincent Sheean

Book World p3 My 26 '68 600w

Reviewed by Henrietta Buckmaster

Christian Science Monitor p7 O 24 '68 400w

Reviewed by R. H. Donahugh

Library J 93:2004 My 15 '68 120w [YA]

"What makes the book most valuable, and moving, is the effect the authors have achieved through their skillful selection and organization of 25 postwar events, in Asia, Africa, Europe and Latin America. They have summarized and interpreted these events with clarity and with human insight and understanding. These histories are interspersed with eye-witness accounts from the files of Time and Life, the work of 44 reporters. . . . These sections contain some of the best war journalism of our time—reporting that is full of the sights and sounds and smells of war, as well as the quotes of victims and participants, high and low. . . . There is a certain unavoidable sameness to some of the war reportage. As the Mydans themselves point out, 'An ambush is an ambush, and a fire-fight a desperate manner of win or lose, whether within the context of a local terrorist action or an international conflict on the widest scale.'" Robert Shaplan

N Y Times Bk ■ p1 Je 16 '68 2500w

MYDANS, CARL—Continued

"[The] photos vary greatly in quality. Some present the all too familiar specters of truncated children, wailing mothers and piled bodies we have become accustomed to over dinner. Others—the famous photograph of six Hungarian security policemen suddenly executed point-blank by a revolutionary mob, the two beautiful Jewish refugee children—deliver the message of human suffering beyond the power of prose. The photographs constitute some dark parody of Steichen's 'Family of Man' to show that street rioting, slaughter and suffering are the same all over the world. . . . The book suffers from a lack of original observations on war itself. Almost everybody deplores killing as much as do the Mydanses. They photograph a mystery instead of seeking to solve it. But those photographs and images are telling, a response to John Shaw Billings's warning that 'dead men have indeed died in vain if live men refuse to look at them.'" P. D. Zimmerman Newsweek 71:100A Je 24 '68 500w
Time 92:70 Ag 16 '68 600w

MYDANS, SHELLEY, jt. auth. The violent peace. See Mydans, C.

MYERS, CHARLES A., ed. The impact of computers on management. 310p $10 Mass. Inst. of technology

651.8 Electronic data processing 67-14097

Devoted to an examination of the present and future impact of computers on management organization and the nature of managerial work, this volume "contains the edited proceedings, eight papers and discussions, of a conference held at M.I.T. in April 1966." (Choice) Index.

"Much has been written and speculated about the future impact of computers, but little evidence has been reported. This volume differs from the rest of the literature in that its emphasis is on the impact on the structure of organizations. Its major contribution is that it contains results of some empirical studies. The papers are of uneven quality but, on the whole, the volume should be of great interest to both graduate and undergraduate students of organization, and of the broader question of the impact of technology on contemporary society." Choice 4:1144 D '67 110w

Reviewed by E. C. Bursk
Sat R 51:81 Ja 13 '68 50w

MYERS, ELISABETH P. Angel of Appalachia: Martha Berry. 191p $3.50 Messner

B or 92 Berry, Martha McChesney—Juvenile literature. Berry Schools, Mount Berry, Georgia 68-14944

A biographical account of the life and career of the founder of "Berry College, a co-educational four-year college [based on a program of work, study and religion], and Berry Academy, a prep school in the mountains of North Georgia. [Bibliography. Index.] Ages ten to fourteen." (N Y Times Bk R)

Best Sell 28:66 My 1 '68 70w

"[This book] is not so much the story of the remarkable woman who devoted her life to the establishment of the Berry Schools in Georgia, as it is a chronicle of how her dream was realized. The first four chapters, which deal with Miss Berry's youth, are weakened considerably by the fictionizing and the insertion of cumbersome dialect. . . . Characterizations lack depth so that Martha seems a curiously wooden individual. However, the adult years of Martha's life . . . are well delineated. . . . Girls, particularly those considering teaching as a career, should find inspiration here." B. S. Miller

Library J 93:1326 Mr 15 '68 180w

"Mrs. Myers' account—even though the dialect ascribed to her mountain characters is more nearly that of the uneducated among both white and black of the Deep South than of the mountaineer—of Miss Berry's ingenuity, daring and pluck will hold young readers. With national interest focused on Appalachia and its problems, this is also the time for all children to know about the work of Martha Berry." Rebecca Caudill

N Y Times Bk R p34 Ap 21 '68 150w

MYERS, JEROME K. A decade later: a follow-up of Social class and mental illness [by] Jerome K. Myers and Lee L. Bean, in collaboration with Max P. Pepper. 250p $7.95 Wiley

301.47 Mental illness. Social classes. Mentally ill—Care and treatment 67-28949

"The 1950 New Haven Psychiatric Census examined relationships between social class and the development, prevalence, and treatment of diagnosed mental illness. [Findings were set forth in A. deB. Hollingshead's and F. C. Redlich's Social Class and Mental Illness, BRD 1958]. In the present study the authors report on a ten-year (1960) follow-up of the 1,563 patients originally enumerated." (Library J) Author index. Subject index.

"[The authors] do not suggest how social class affects psychiatric variables; they merely suggest that some relationship exists. It seems as if ten years later we ought to be able to move further. . . . Putting aside this fundamental disappointment, the reader can usefully consider the book if he himself wishes to take the forward step past the general examination of whether social class is at all relevant to variables in the total complexity of mental illness. The work is solidly and reassuringly executed on the basic technical level. Actually, the very difficult process of catching up with the previous subjects was quite successfully managed. Additionally, the authors were able to make some corrections and reviews of the earlier sample. . . . Some day, I would predict, someone will take the careful work of these authors and do a secondary analysis to show that a lot more can be derived from their data than the authors themselves have presented." S. E. Perry

Am J Soc 74:311 N '68 750w

Choice 5:1002 O '68 220w

"The report, restricted to the variable of social class as a determinant of treatment outcome, is a classical scientific study undertaken by a group of distinguished interdisciplinary scientists. Jerome Myers and Lee Bean are both members of the sociology department at Yale University and Max Pepper is a professor of psychology, sociology, and public health at Yale. They intend the book to be read by both lay and professional audiences, and the clearly written text will be understood by readers with non-technical backgrounds. Recommended for large public, college, and university libraries." Harold Bloomquist

Library J 93:1151 Mr 15 '68 140w

"Follow-up studies are still relatively rare in this field, and each new one must be welcomed. Further, this study is unique both for the time span covered and for the attention given to social class. Its findings bear directly on the planning of psychiatric facilities and on the training of psychiatrists. It is my view, however, that the force and impact of the work are limited by the authors' implicit and unquestioning acceptance of the contemporary medical-psychiatric model of mental illness and treatment. . . . One would never guess from reading the analyses and the proposals that more radical approaches to definitions of illness and to forms of treatment have been proposed in recent years. . . . The book merits and will undoubtedly receive serious attention from administrative psychiatrists. It does not, however, challenge their basic assumptions." E. G. Mishler

Science 160:1331 Je 21 '68 1150w

MYERS, ROLLO, ed. Richard Strauss & Romain Rolland: correspondence. See Strauss, R.

MYRDAL, GUNNAR. Asian drama; an inquiry into the poverty of nations. 3v 2284p maps $25 Twentieth cent. fund; pa $8.50 Pantheon bks. 330.954 Asia, South—Economic conditions. Asia, Southeastern—Economic conditions 67-19179

This study examines the problems of modernization in India, Pakistan, Ceylon and Southeast Asia. "Volume I is devoted to establishing the historical setting ■ a determinant of stunted economic growth. . . . The exposition of the political-sociological framework is followed by an analysis of the economic realities as they have been shaped by the past. . . . [and an exploration of] the main obstacles to progress. Volume II is concerned with the ideology of planning, labor utilization [and] . . . the population problem . . . [Volume III discusses] the improvement in the quality of manpower through education and health." (N Y Times Bk R) Author and subject indexes in volume three.

Reviewed by V. S. Kearney
America 118:608 My 4 '68 130w

"This study, which is the product of ten years of research . . . may prove as significant in its own way as [the author's] An American Dilemma [: the Negro Problem and Modern Democracy (BRD 1944, 1963)]. . . . The [book contains] a somber assessment of past achievements and [delivers] a sober warning about the future. . . . Industrialization alone is not likely to raise the level of economic activity; nor will it absorb the annual increase in the labor force. The rapid expansion of population cannot be halted swiftly. . . . The prospects are grim. . . . The shortcomings of Myrdal's treatment arise from the limitations of a study which altered its focus in midcourse, shifting its sights from the economy to the whole social context. As a result, the definition of the frontiers of the new states receives excessive attention while other aspects of their politics are neglected. There is a general awareness of the importance of religious factors, but little effort to probe the connection to the productive system." Oscar Handlin

Atlantic 221:132 Ap '68 1150w

Reviewed by Manning Nash
Book World p8 Ap 28 '68 1250w
Choice 5:1335 D '68 170w

Reviewed by K. P. Gupta
Commonweal 89:35 O 4 '68 600w
Economist 228:45 Jl 6 '68 950w

"Future social scientists and national planners and politicians will ignore Mr. Myrdal at their peril. His study will be, and must be, read by all interested in the vexing process of economic, social, and political development. Although it will prove most exciting to trained social scientists, it is largely accessible to interested laymen, whom it will undoubtedly stimulate. The work is an imperative acquisition for college and university libraries and for major collections, and is urged, as a definitive study, for even the smaller and more general collections." R. E. Will

Library J 93:2000 My 15 '68 460w

Reviewed by D. H. Perkins
Nation 206:603 My 6 '68 1300w

"With its great length and a certain sense of urgency pervading it, there is inevitably some repetition, but [this study] is well written, with an easy flowing style, and it held my attention to the end. . . . The book improves as it goes along, and there is much to be said for starting with the Appendices in Volume 3, many of which are important monographs in their own right. The work is excellently indexed. . . . the documentation and footnoting is extensive. . . . The cumulative effect . . . is depressing, in the extreme. . . . [Myrdal] is unsparing] in his criticism of those Western economists and social scientists who think that development is equivalent to technology and who are unwilling to recognize the obstacles created by ancient tradition, class structures and especially by the existing power structure of the society. . . . There are some rather striking omissions. . . . One hopes that a condensation will be produced [and] . . . that some of the Appendices might be published as separate monographs, or again, might be combined and rearranged into a separate work. Myrdal's attack on the economists and economic models of development is often very sound." R. E. Boulding

New Repub 158:25 My 1 '68 2500w

Reviewed by E. J. Hobsbawm
New Statesman 76:32 Jl 19 '68 1200w

"The incredibly detailed knowledge assembled . . . by Mr. Myrdal and his international team of assistants will make the work a basic source not only for the study of that area, but for the whole field of economic development.

One might perhaps have wished that Myrdal had given greater emphasis to the population explosion as the most menacing single factor in underdeveloped countries. . . . [Outstanding among the] 16 theoretical appendices . . . is the second, on the mechanics of underdevelopment . . . and the third, on the relevance of the modern model-building-quasi-mathematical approach for planning in South Asia." Thomas Balogh

N Y Times Bk R p1 Mr 24 '68 2750w

Reviewed by Spencer Pollard
Sat R 51:28 Je 15 '68 1050w
TLS p1297 N 21 '68 2400w

Reviewed by G. E. Taylor
Va Q R 44:474 summer '68 900w

MYRDAL, JAN. Confessions of a disloyal European. 201p $4.95 Pantheon bks.

B or $2 67-24816

The author of Chinese Journey (BRD 1965) and Report From a Chinese Village (BRD 1965) has written an autobiography which analyzes "what it means to come of age—intellectually, morally, politically, sexually. Using the technique of the novel and of the cinema, Myrdal follows his fictionalized self through a series of confrontations." (Publisher's note)

"Gloom is Myrdal's element, guilt his ambience; as easily as other men breathe, he broods. . . . If one were to write a one-sentence biography of Jan Myrdal based solely on [this book], it would read thus: He committed a great many injustices, had a great many injustices committed against him, ate, fornicated and, in between, found time to write books. It has not been a good or an easy life, and Myrdal blames this on the culture of the West. . . . One of the two major motifs in his book has to do with the bestiality of Europeans in Asia. . . . As a long-time traveler in Asia . . . he maintains that Asia has changed his perspective, though he is not very clear about exactly how it has been changed. Nor is he very clear about what that perspective now is. . . . The other motif woven through his book concerns [Myrdal's feelings of guilt over the death of] A, a young woman who killed herself in an apartment Myrdal had let her use." Joseph Epstein
Book World p4 My 19 '68 1200w

"The younger Myrdal is convinced—and he is hardly unique here—that the western intellectual has betrayed himself and the rest of the world. . . . There is no vanity like the vanity of a guilty conscience, and Myrdal has a king-size one. . . . The book suffers from what might be called the pass-the-guilt game. . . . The special pettiness of a self-absorbed writer is clumsily evident and often irritating. . . . Yet for all his visible limitations, Myrdal has to be read. One hears in him—even at his most self-centered—the representative accents of his times. He seems to be the voice behind the disaffected student faces seen in newspaper photographs from all over the world. He is the prototype son of model liberals who has found the traditions of reform, of humane rationalism, just not enough." Melvin Maddocks

Christian Science Monitor p11 My 29 '68 600w

"This book is a bitter indictment of the Western tradition which has failed according to Jan Myrdal, who is a novelist, journalist, Asian traveler, and son of Gunnar Myrdal. He uses the confessional form to draw up his list of charges, subtitled the work a 'novel.' In this fictional autobiography he ranges back and forth in time from early boyhood to the present, relating from his observations anecdotes that illuminate cruelty, wars, poverty, exploitation, and hunger. Much of the account is good, vivid writing. He also includes metaphysical reflections on his actions." Earl Tannenbaum

Library J 93:1622 Ap 15 '68 200w

Reviewed by Robert Hatch
Nation 207:220 S 9 '68 800w

"[The author's] descriptions of the European bourgeois society which he rejects, progressive intellectuals and all, in favour of Asia, have perhaps a particular interest for English readers in illuminating certain persistent differences between this island and the Continent. . . . I had an odd impression of a missing element in the confessions, which in fact appears to be revealed at the very end, when Mr Myrdal at last speaks of his distinguished parents, of whom he saw little in childhood. . . . [He] was brought up largely by relatives and school-teachers, in his case while his parents were at the UN or on research in the US, and the deprivation cut deep: he himself links his childhood with his present withdrawals. . . . Mr Myrdal shows how psychological deprivation can be as terrible as a progressive New York school or in the Swedish welfare state as in the industrial jungle into which Dickens was plunged." T. R. Fyvel

New Statesman 76:401 S 27 '68 700w

Reviewed by Neal Ascherson
N Y Rev of Books 11:20 Ag 1 '68 850w

MYRDAL, JAN—Continued

- Reviewed by Frederic Morton
N Y Times Bk R pt My 26 '68 1400w
- Reviewed by Jack Kroll
Newsweek 71:92 Je 3 '68 500w
- Reviewed by Spencer Pollard
Sat R 51:28 Ag 31 '68 650w
- TLS p1271 N 14 '68 400w

MYRER, ANTON. Once an eagle. 817p $7.95
Holt

68-21746

This novel concerns the conflict between Sam Damon, an American who serves in several military campaigns and wars, rises from private to general, but never forgets that soldiers are human, and Courtney Massengale, a West Point graduate who allies himself with the sources of political power and considers war a game. The title is taken from a quotation from Aeschylus "that once an eagle, stricken with a dart, said, when he saw the fashion of the shaft, 'with our own feathers, not by others' hands, are we now smitten.'"

Reviewed by W. B. Hill
America 119:563 N 30 '68 90w

Reviewed by Edward Weeks
Atlantic 222:142 O '68 550w

Reviewed by C. J. Maguire
Best Sell 28:220 S 1 '68 1350w

Reviewed by Cecelia Holland
Book World p4 S 1 '68 650w

"[The book] is romantic but its political and moral anger save it from the maudlin. Myrer has tried to create in Damon a realistic Golden Mean. Flat in some areas, full in others, this book is recommended (though not mandatory) for its flashes of good battle writing, of political and military insights, and of fascination that any well crafted historical fiction holds."

Choice 5:956 O '68 130w

"[This novel will] be read and argued over for months. But primarily it will be read. At long last we have . . . an honest-to-God hero. . . . It is a purging experience to watch his—often tortured—success, up to the very end. And what is the message of the end? At this moment of anti-Army, anti-war, it is here that the argument will come. For this is also a good story as one will find of the American Army and fighting men and that mystical thing that seems to happen to men who have fought together, and of the dreadful responsibility of the man in command. It is an even more vivid depiction of the horrors of war. . . . The mind boggles at the amount of well-digested research that must have gone into this work to come out in such easy, compelling narrative."

K. G. Jackson

Harper 237:100 S '68 370w

"This is a big book, and the effort to make it good is apparent—too apparent. It begins weakly and ends in the same way, in between there are exciting battle scenes (the best parts), overwritten conversation and transition passages. Mr. Myrer's novel reads like a strong attempt at the great 20th-Century adventure of Army life. . . . The novel has a wide-screen effort, ringing true in battle, but too often Mr. Myrer tries to do too much and doesn't succeed. The plot patterns, the character portrayals, the anticipated ending—all are too often too familiar. . . . [The book] may sell, but it lacks too much to be of more than contemporary literary interest." G. O. Carey

Library J 93:2691 J1 '68 390w

Reviewed by Sara Blackburn
Nation 207:221 S 9 '68 190w

Reviewed by Martin Levin
N Y Times Bk R p45 S 15 '68 240w

New Yorker 44:118 Ag 24 '68 180w

Reviewed by Martin Russ
Sat R 51:41 Ag 24 '68 600w

MYRICK, MILDRED. Ants are fun; pictures by Arnold Lobel. 63p $2.50; to libs & schools $2.57 Harper

595.7 Ants—Juvenile literature 68-10205

"From tree-house spying between Jack and Jimmy observe a new neighbor, Don, carefully carrying a box. Then they learn that it contains an ant nest, full of interest for all of them until the glass is accidentally broken, and Jack's pet horned toad naturally finishes off the inhabitants. There is nothing now but to make a new ant nest, which creates a . . . Science I Can Read Book—for Don's father has all the needed information." (Horn Bk)

"For beginning readers." (Library J)

Reviewed by Polly Goodwin
Book World p14 J1 28 '68 80w

Reviewed by Roderick Nordell
Christian Science Monitor pB4 My 2 '68 90w

"[The] drawings capture the little-boy excitements, and his sketches of ants in their various stages are explicit magnifications." V. H.

Horn Bk 44:319 Je '68 100w

"By means of a slight story line, [the author] gives beginners at natural history a good deal of easy-to-read, understandable information about ant life and explains, in simple terms and directions, how to make an ant city. Illustrations by Arnold Lobel are clearly informative complements to the text."

Library J 93:2126 My 15 '68 30w

MYRON, ROBERT. Two faces of Asia; India and China [by] Robert Myron and Abner Sundell. 191p il $4.95; lib bdg $4.61 World pub.

915 India—Juvenile literature. China—Juvenile literature 67-23349

Using an archeological, historical and geographical approach, the authors present the story of the civilizations of India and China from the time of Peking man to A.D. 1700. Bibliography. Index. "Grade ten and up." (Best Sell)

"The authors intend the volume as a help for young readers to appreciate the countries treated. Art, music, architecture and philosophy all enter in to bring this about. However, it is difficult to decide a proper age level; the work is too deep, too heavy for the ordinary high school student. The photographs do not help to create interest. The appeal of the volume is limited to the extraordinary high school student."

Best Sell 27:431 F 1 '68 90w

Reviewed by J. E. Sheridan
Book World p13 Ag 4 '68 550w

"Although essentially a history of art and anthropology, the book illuminates the background of more modern events through its unusual approach and clear style which convey the spirit of the times discussed. Numerous photographs aid in the book's particular usefulness to studies in comparative cultural history. This is the most complete treatment of this subject written especially for teen-agers." Terry Myers

Library J 93:309 Ja 15 '68 100w [YA]

"A tautly written and clearly illustrated epitome of Chinese and Indian cultural history. . . . Bronzes, sculpture, architecture, painting and ceramics are well covered; and the evolution and mutation of artistic styles, skillfully depicted. Yet the linking of China and India is dubious; the book's ending (roughly, 1700), truncated." H. L. Boorman

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p32 N 5 '67 110w

N

NABOKOV, VLADIMIR. King, queen, knave; a novel; tr. by Dmitri Nabokov in collaboration with the author. 272p $5.95 McGraw

68-22764

Franz, "an untutored young man from a small German town comes up to Berlin to meet his uncle, a rich department store owner, and improve his fortunes. Having unknowingly ridden in the same compartment on the train to Berlin with his uncle and his wife, he is astonished to meet them again in their proper setting—a self-centered, athletic, philandering husband with a bluff sense of humor, and an equally self-centered, dissatisfied, cold, waspish, bored younger wife, who married her husband for security. . . . The knave and the queen become furtive lovers and eventually seek a convenient way to dispose of the king." (Library J) Originally published in Russian under the title Korol', Dama, Valet.

Reviewed by Doris Grumbach
America 119:46 J1 20 '68 750w

Reviewed by Charles Nicol
Atlantic 221:107 Je '68 1050w

Reviewed by W. B. Hill
Best Sell 28:97 Je 1 '68 800w

"[This] can be read as a sermon. Or as a long sneer. . . . Pawns rather than degenerates, [Franz and Martha] . . . become 'our lovers,' with which proprietorially indulgent but disowning phrase Nabokov annuls them as people, only to incorporate them as Punch-and-Judy-couchant into a glittering heraldic design that includes dummies of all kinds: dolls, bourgeois or battery-driven, as well as Franz' landlord . . . whose 'wife, . . . is just a wig on a stick in a shawl, forever and ever in the same chair.'" Paul West

Book World p3 My 12 '68 900w

Reviewed by Judith Rascoe
Christian Science Monitor p7 My 23 '68 800w

Reviewed by Alfred Appel
Commonweal 88:602 S 6 '68 1800w

Reviewed by Michael O'Malley
Critic 27:95 O '68 1150w

Harper 236:92 Je '68 200w

Reviewed by L. W. Griffin
Library J 93:1918 My 1 '68 300w

Reviewed by Gillian Tindall
New Statesman 76:435 O 4 '68 380w

"The text [appears to have] been revised, and improved, line by line. The work seems early only in the clarity of its intentions. Nabokov's esthetic was already formed, and this book's written to its program. The author's manipulations are quite obvious, even blatant, for we're supposed to see his clever hands holding the crossed sticks, managing the strings. Smoothed (one can't be sure how much), youthful gau-cheries perhaps removed, mistakes erased; its date is now much later than it was. Each verb and noun, as though in search of something sweet, fly to their modifications, and this is because the modifications manifest the master: reveal him, praise him—glorify. The result is sometimes fussily decorative, like insistent blossoms on a length of chintz." W. H. Gass
N Y Rev of Books 10:3 Je 6 '68 950w

Reviewed by Philip Toynbee
N Y Times Bk R p4 My 12 '68 900w
New Yorker 44:173 My 18 '68 200w

Reviewed by Page Stegner
Sat R 51:39 My 18 '68 800w

"This is Nabokov's second novel, written . . . in 1923, when he was a 23-year-old émigré living in Berlin. It was recently roughed into English by Nabokov's son Dmitri, then tightened and buffed to a cold brilliance by the author. . . . Actually, his later novels, notably Lolita [BRD 1958, 1959] and Pale Fire [BRD 1962] are far more elaborate. . . . But King, Queen, Knave is tricky enough—the appearance-and-reality theme as applied to the eternal love triangle. In Nabokov's idiosyncratic geometry, all three angles are obtuse. . . . Dreyer and Franz occasionally attempt to squirm out of the two-dimensional plane in which Nabokov holds them captive. But most of the time, all three are as flat and glossy as the playing cards suggested by the novel's title. . . . Here, as in [his] more sophisticated novels, an important theme is the nature of fiction itself. By putting his comic trio through a series of abstract stances . . . he never allows the reader to forget that fiction is essentially artifice. In [this novel] the artifice may be a little too obvious, but intelligence, and wit keep it working smoothly to the end."

Time 91:102 My 17 '68 700w

TLS p1153 O 10 '68 600w

Va Q R 44:cxlviii autumn '68 180w

NABOKOV, VLADIMIR. Nabokov's congeries; sel. with a critical introd. by Page Stegner. 536p $8.50 Viking

818

68-22868

This collection includes the complete novel Pnin, sections from the novels Despair (BRD 1966), The Gift (BRD 1963) and Invitation to a Beheading (BRD 1960); "eleven short stories; ten poems; and . . . passages from his recently revised autobiography, Speak, Memory [BRD 1967]. Among the essays and criticism are his introduction to Bend Sinister and preface to Lolita [BRD 1958] and excerpts from his . . . work on Nikolai Gogol [BRD 1944] and from his Commentary to Pushkin's Eugene Onegin." (Publisher's note) Chronology. Annotated bibliography.

Reviewed by Donald Gropman
Christian Science Monitor p5 D 26 '68 800w

"[This book] supplies a cross section of this important author's work and is particularly valuable for its selection of relatively hard-to-find critical materials and as the only current hardbound edition of Pnin. Nevertheless, the editor's practice of excerpting from works which have been most carefully planned as artistic wholes and the general unwieldiness of the volume detract from its usefulness. Recommended for larger public and college libraries and for those which do not own Pnin." Dorothy Curley

Library J 93:2659 J1 '68 130w

"This book is what it says it is—an agglomeration of wholes and bits by one of the finest writers of the age. . . . As there is nothing new—except for a coruscating reply to the critics of his translation of 'Eugene Onegin,' and some samples of a revised translation of that work—one is tempted merely to reaffirm old judgments, saying that Nabokov has probably given more literary pleasure than any writer since Joyce. When I talk of the literary pleasure of Nabokov, I have the etymology very much in mind. He has a fine ear, and his novels—like Joyce's—are meant to be read aloud, but he is quite healthily obsessed with the signification of the literal, or visual, morphology of words. . . . He has not been greatly acclaimed as a poet, chiefly because the prose achievement is so notable, but the selection in this volume is enchanting. It tends to romanticism sharpened by wit in the old, metaphysical sense." Anthony Burgess

N Y Times Bk R p4 O 13 '68 1000w

NAGEL'S encyclopedia-guide [to] China [English version by Anne L. Destenay]. 1503p maps col maps $19.95 Cowles

915.1 China—Description and travel

"In an introductory section, the history, economy, politics, philosophy, religion, language, literature, art, and culture is traced from the prehistoric period to the present; there is a general picture of each province or region, its natural resources and special characteristics in a description section; and, in the last part of the book, practical information is provided for the tourist's interest." (Library J) Chronological table of the history of China. Glossaries. Bibliography. Index.

"Among 48 compendiums of the series . . . this volume . . . is the most comprehensive and expensive. . . . Since most of the materials in this volume were obtained before the cultural revolution . . . part of the information may already be out of date; nevertheless, the book is still valuable. . . . In addition to excellent coverage and readable text, some 100 plates of maps and charts provide good illustration. The index includes triple romanization of Chinese terms and proper names: Pin yin, Communist China's official transcription; the E.F.E.O., used in France; and the Wade-Giles system, used in English-language countries; this is convenient for American use. Compiled by a team of subject specialists recruited by the French embassy in Peking, this newly translated reference work is recommended to large, small and medium-sized libraries with pertinent collections." W. S. Wong

Library J 93:1614 Ap 15 '68 260w

"[This volume] minutely describes the people, buildings, culture, games, history, and art of every town and its environs, with attractive colored foldout maps of streets and bus lines, and plans of temples, suburbs, gardens, and palaces." D. M. Glixon

Sat R 51:61 N 16 '68 40w

"France recognized the People's Republic at the end of 1964; ambassadors were exchanged . . . and for a brief year or two the French enjoyed favours in China that no other western imperialists could earn. . . . The honeymoon was brief and shallow, but this guide must be regarded as one of its fruits. And considering the circumstances, very good it is. . . . Since it is forty years since a guide book of any kind to China has been published this will be better than nothing. Indeed, the achievement must be saluted. . . . There is plenty of worthwhile reading even for the person who has no expectation of ever landing in China. Rules for Chinese chess, how to work an abacus, the principles of Chinese gastronomy, and Chinese names are some of the subjects tacked on to major essays—some of them first class . . . [as well as] a useful introduction to modern culture and the communist system. Besides this, each big town gets in the text of the guide a further section on its own history. . . . Readers should be warned that the guide uses the latest pinyin romanization and this leads the compilers into some confusion."

NAGEL'S encyclopedia-guide—Continued

TLS p750 J1 18 '68 1350w

NAGERA, HUMBERTO. Vincent Van Gogh; a psychological study; foreword by Anna Freud. 182p pl $6.50 Int. univ. press

B or 92 Gogh, Vincent van 67-31967

"A psychiatrist associated with the Hampstead Child-Therapy Clinic, London . . . [offers a study] based on the letters of Vincent to his brother Theo, The Complete Letters of Vincent Van Gogh [BRD 1958], and other information provided by Van Gogh's nephew." (Library J)

"The accompanying pictures illustrate the conflicts endured by the artist. This is a highly readable, painful, and illuminating book. All who have admired Van Gogh will be spurred on to read further. The book does not present a balanced picture of Van Gogh since Dr. Nagera's purpose was to identify and analyze the conflicts of a lifetime. Public and college libraries will want this book in their collections." Shirley Thurston.

Library J 93:89 Ja 1 '68 100w

"[This] study begins with one of those lovely gems that occasionally grace a significant psychoanalytic work, a foreword by Anna Freud. The directness and clarity of Miss Freud's writing, its unashamed humanity, strike a contrast with all too much of what one finds in psychoanalytic journals. . . . Dr. Nagera has written a clear, tactful and poignant account of Van Gogh's life—an account impressively free of psychoanalytic jargon and overwrought, abstract formulations. As Miss Freud points out, Dr. Nagera does indeed rely heavily on Van Gogh's letters, themselves an awesome work of art. But he also becomes, without ostentatious effort, a decent, sensitive and shrewd biographer—who wants to look without envy at the entire span of a great life rather than bear down exclusively and relentlessly on its pitfalls." Robert Coles

New Repub 158:23 Ap 6 '68 3000w

"Poor Van Gogh, it seems, will never be allowed to rest in peace. Now he has been dissected again by Dr. Nagera who, using only the contents of the Collected Letters and a few paintings, has come up with an elaborate psycho-analysis to show what was wrong with Van Gogh's character, and to furnish a somewhat kooky explanation of the symbolism in his paintings. Unfortunately it adds nothing to our understanding of the man, nor does it heighten our emotional response to his paintings. . . . Fortunately Van Gogh's brilliant and inspiring paintings continue to move us by a deep-seated humanity which is singularly lacking in Dr. Nagera's volume."

TLS p312 Mr 28 '68 460w

NAIPAUL, V. S. A flag on the island. 235p $5.95 Macmillan (N Y)

68-19698

A collection of eleven short stories some of which have previously appeared in such publications as Vogue and the London Evening Standard.

Reviewed by J. W. Hartman

Best Sell 28:29 Ap 15 '68 490w

"Naipaul writes on many levels. On the surface is the good story, underneath are so many layers of meaning, so many sly comments on human foibles, and such understanding of them that the title story overrides the stipulations made for it. . . . 'The Baker's Story' is typical Naipaul. The author has a biting point to make, but makes it without rancor, he has a story to tell and tells it well, filling it with atmosphere and people to be remembered. But the unthinking cruelty in 'Greenie and Yellow,' the mean-mindedness of 'The Perfect Tenants' are typical of their author too, for his world (full of comic possibilities though it is) is not a kind or comfortable one, whether he is writing about India, his native West Indies, or England, his present home. Certainly there is no doubt about the brilliant quality of these carefully polished tales. As for their shortness, it is as deceptive as a food concentrate—a spoonful sticks by you for many a day." Pamela Marsh

Christian Science Monitor p13 Mr 29 '68 700w

"[These stories] are set in Trinidad and London, and it is evident that Mr. Naipaul has an acute perception of the conditions of life of the not so fortunate of both places. He writes vividly and forcefully, with telling pictures of human weaknesses and conceits. . . . Most appealing to this reviewer are the humorous 'The Night Watchman's Occurrence Book,' about an almost illiterate hotel night watchman's protestations—in writing—to the manager about the peculiar habits of the hotel's patrons; and 'Greenie and Yellow,' concerning the unpropitious relations of three budgetarys belonging to an unusual London couple. This book deserves to be in any public and academic library." R. G. McInnis

Library J 93:1021 Mr 1 '68 210w

Reviewed by Desmond MacNamara

New Statesman 74:325 S 15 '67 200w

Reviewed by V. S. Pritchett

N Y Rev of Books 10:10 Ap 11 '68 1250w

"From 'Miguel Street' [BRD 1960] to 'The Mimic Men' [BRD 1967, Naipaul] has given us a series of novels which re-creates the life of Trinidad, and his own participation in it, very thoroughly; too thoroughly, by this time; the pasture is seriously overcropped. 'A Flag on the Island' is the lead story of a collection, some of which hardly merited reprinting; though, to be fair, one or two are brilliant. . . . But it is the title story that must concern us, a sharp yet sentimental fable on the theme of social and cultural change within a small community, and the strange things it does to individual lives. . . . [It] is an interesting fragment rather than a finished work: it is half-imagined and half-presented, having ceased to be cinema without becoming literature, and such interest as it has is the interest we might get from looking into the author's working notebooks. But of course, with a writer as original and perceptive as Mr. Naipaul, that interest is considerable." John Wain

N Y Times Bk R p4 Ap 7 '68 800w

Reviewed by Richard Plant

Sat R 51:52 Je 8 '68 950w

TLS p813 S 14 '67 480w

NAIS INSTITUTE ON SEX EDUCATION, PRINCETON, NEW JERSEY, 1966. Sex education and the schools; ed. by Virginia Hiliu. 153p $4.50 Harper

612.6 Sex instruction

67-13718

This volume is drawn from "materials presented to the Committee on Educational Practices of the National Association of Independent Schools at the request of the N.A.I.S. The six sessions that were devoted to the presentation are represented in the six chapters of [the book]." (Library J) Bibliography.

"[In this discussion] Mary Calderone (Director, Sex Information and Educational Council) and Alan Guttmacher (President, Planned Parenthood) defend sex education; Millicent McIntosh (President Emeritus, Barnard) illuminates the ethical question involved when schools assume a job traditionally held, but neglected, by parents; Richard Unsworth (Smith College Chaplain) underlines youth and the new morality. The sessions are lively, especially the question/answer periods, and add depth and freshness to a topic that can, if you agree to sex education, sound like a broken record."

Choice 4:1216 Ja '68 130w

"[A] well organized book. Four distinguished panel members compassionately, almost poetically, discuss their views of the half-shadowed world of sex education. . . . The book includes excellent sets of sex education programs to serve as models for schools developing their own. A second appendix lists resource agencies for sex education in the United States. . . . The book is recommended for all community and educational libraries. Parents, teachers, educators, social workers, clergymen will find it a serviceable resource, a fund of practical directives and ideas, and a challenge to more concrete actions." P. W. Brouse

Library J 92:2764 Ag '67 310w

NAPIER, JOHN RUSSELL. A handbook of living primates; morphology, ecology and behaviour of nonhuman primates, by John Russell Napier and P. H. Napier. 456p il pl maps $21.50 Academic press

599 Primates

The authors begin "with their descriptions of each of the genera with respect to geographical range, ecology, morphology, weights and dimensions, internal characters, genetic biology, behavior, reproduction and development, and performance in captivity. In addition to this the book includes some cross-genera analysis—on the cerebral cortex, the jaw, diet, the famed opposable thumb, growth rates, . . . as well as material on the habitats of primates, on their limbs and locomotion, and, finally, a . . . scheme for behavioral classification to augment the more traditional morphological kind." (New Repub)

"[An] important scientific work, . . . [this] is, quite simply, a triumph. The Napiers have assembled all the available data about primates and presented it with both great detail and great economy. . . . Besides all this splendid scientific stuff, the book contains the best group of photographs of primates I've seen in any comparable publication." Lionel Tiger

New Repub 158:36 Ap 20 '68 500w

"Basically a reference book, [this] will prove to be of great value not only to professional primatologists but also to workers in collateral fields, such as zoology, anthropology, and medical research. . . . The list of literature is remarkably extensive, consisting of nearly 900 references, all of which apparently are cited in the text. The text also contains numerous tables presenting useful basic data. As might be expected in a work of this scope and magnitude, there are some errors and omissions. These, however, appear to be of minor nature and do not detract from the value of this scholarly book." W. L. Straus

Science 160:410 Ap 26 '68 450w

Sci Am 218:146 Mr '68 180w

NAPIER, P. H., jt. auth. A handbook of living primates. See Napier, J. R.

NASATIR, ABRAHAM P. Spanish war vessels on the Mississippi, 1792-1796. 359p $10 Yale univ. press

977 Mississippi Valley—History. Spain—Colonies 68-13920

"The first half of this volume presents a view of the early Spanish interest on the Mississippi River. The second half consists of three diaries and a report of firsthand observations translated from the original Spanish." (Choice)

"Nasatir combines a very readable style with excellent scholarship. One only wishes that more maps and illustrations had been added. . . . They would have added greatly to the value of this unique book."

Choice 5:1034 O '68 140w

"Nasatir deserves praise for undertaking the difficult task of writing this book. His vast knowledge of imperial rivalries in North America . . . is evident in his impeccable scholarship. For example, his detailed description of each ship in the fleet is admirable. And he provides an excellent insight into the antiquated methods of Spain to attempt to arrest the advance of the American frontier. There are a few repetitions in text and footnotes and a few lapses of style, such as misplaced phrases and illogicalities, but these are minor flaws in a book that has been needed for a long time." J. A. Caruso

J Am Hist 55:383 S '68 350w

NASH, GERALD D., ed. Franklin Delano Roosevelt. (Great lives observed) 182p $4.95; pa $1.95 Prentice-Hall

B or 92 Roosevelt, Franklin Delano 67-25929

"In Part One, Roosevelt speaks for himself about his life, 1900-45. Part Two contains observations on F.D.R.'s first 50 years and Presidency by people ranging from his mother and wife to American politicians, correspondents, and world leaders. . . . Part Three includes well-known judgments by Hofstadter, Burns, Schlesinger, Jr., Robinson, and Gunther. . . . [There is] an editorial 'afterword' on 'F.D.R. in History,' . . . [and an introduction discussing] the role of the individual in history and the life and career of F.D.R." (Choice) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"In a book of broad scope and interest, better suited to the introductory student than the more restricted or specialized readings edited by Sternsher, Zinn and others, Nash has effectively achieved the goal . . . [of] 'combining the intimacy of autobiography, the immediacy of eyewitness observation, and the objectivity of modern scholarship.'" Choice 5:258 Ap '68 300w

"Varying in length, the pieces run from a few paragraphs to five or six pages. This form of biography will not appeal to all readers, but should be useful for both reference and reminiscence." F. N. Jones

Library J 92:3412 O 1 '67 130w

NASH, MANNING. Primitive and peasant economic systems. 166p $5; pa $1.95 Chandler pub.

330.9172 Economic conditions. Underdeveloped areas 66-13979

"The aim of this book is to put forth the major empirical generalizations about primitive and peasant economies; to present the analytical means for the interpretation of these economies, and to show the dynamics of economic and cultural change as primitives and peasants move into the modern world." (p.1) Bibliography. Index.

"Professor Nash's book is, despite its relative brevity, and despite certain difficulties, one of the best general summary treatments to date of economic anthropology. . . . Despite an initial avowal to the contrary, the book is not really very theoretical. It is concerned more with describing constant properties than with stating relationships between variables and presents illustrations rather than data per se. . . . Nevertheless, it is certain that future theoretical work in this field must take place within the co-ordinates described and interpreted so well by Nash. This book is thus of some considerable importance; it shows us clearly where the ball park is, even if it does not quite get into the intricacies of the game." S. H. Udy

Am J Soc 73:251 S '67 700w

"A strong theoretical orientation best appreciated by someone with a substantial background in economics or in cultural anthropology. This volume would stimulate a seminar but is hardly suited to an undergraduate introductory class. . . . Herskovits' classic Economic Anthropology [BRD 1952] (2nd ed., 1960) uses its greater length to good advantage in explaining the operation of many economic activities."

Choice 4:1416 F '68 100w

NASH, OGDEN. The cruise of the Aardvark: pictures by Wendy Watson. unpag $3.95 Evans, M.&co; distributed in association with Lippincott

811 Aardvarks—Poetry—Juvenile literature. Animals—Poetry—Juvenile literature 67-27296

A story in verse about "a fastidious and self-important aardvark [who] scrambles aboard Noah's Ark and finds himself booked for 'a cabin the size of a medicine cabinet/With scarcely room to swing a crab in it.' Next, he learns that the ants he has ordered for lunch are his fellow passengers and may not be eaten." (Commonweal) "Grade four and up." (Library J)

"Nash is a champion wit and social commentator at the upper level, but he becomes condescending in his new narrative poem for the little ones [which] leans heavily on the worn theme that it's best for every creature to be himself after all. The couplets seem padded ('The captain is standing at the helm/His particular personal private realm'), the rhymes are occasionally blurred, and only rarely do we get the playful persnickety or the outrageously Procrustean we expect from the master." Eve Merriam

Book World p10 D 24 '67 300w

Reviewed by M. L. Birmingham

Commonweal 87:183 N 10 '67 60w

NASH, OGDEN—Continued

"The inventive verse and humorous drawings of this sprightly tale will please young and old alike. . . . The aardvark of this story is an impertinent snob, a gourmet (ants preferred) and a horrendous portrait painter. . . . A laugh-provoking poem that will be read and enjoyed for its delightfully absurd language and situations is accompanied by comical drawings." C. A. Hough

Library J 92:4615 D 15 '67 90w

"The humorous nonsense plot has a few masked but pointed commentaries, and the bouncy rhythm and rhyme (none of the usual Nasheries) should have appeal." Zena Sutherland

Sat F 50:44 N 11 '67 270w

NASH, OGDEN. Edward Lear's The Scroobious Pip. See Lear, E.

NASH, OGDEN. Santa go home; a case history for parents; embellished by Robert Osborn. 55p $4.95 Little

811 Santa Claus—Poetry 67-21177

"After all these years of sacrificing and scrimping to provide his children with gifts at Christmas, the credit for which goes to Santa Claus who really gives nothing of his own, [Nash] wants Santa to go away, back to his Asia Minor home town of Myra, where . . . he began giving away things that didn't belong to him." (Best Sell)

"Nash makes his case for Parents in a characteristic verse story. . . . It is good fun, but mostly for parents, unless they want to let their children in on the secret that Santa is a big fake."

Best Sell 27:358 D 1 '67 120w

Reviewed by K. G. Jackson

Harper 235:129 D '67 70w

"[A] long Nashian piece—liberally decorated with his usual smart rhymes and clever puns, [The drawings] elegantly match the fun of the verse. A fine reading for a club meeting and a tasteful Christmas gift for parents. Non-parents and young ones will not be able to appreciate the humor." R. F. Clayton

Library J 92:4422 D 1 '67 320w

NASH, OGDEN. There's always another windmill; with decorations by John Alcorn. 141p il $4.95 Little

811 68-25903

Nash, an American humorist, presents another collection of his poems, many of which first appeared in such periodicals as Good Housekeeping, Look, McCall's and Saturday Review.

"[In these poems and limericks, the poet] tilts at Hollywood, Hallowe'en, husbands, hobbyists, botanists, ornithologists, the United States Postal Service, time and aging, TV jingles, marrieds, singles, beaches, dingles—See there! Now he's got us doing it. There is always fun and a fund of ingenuity in Mr. Nash's rhymes. Taken as ordered, these are a cure for the doldrums."

Best Sell 28:348 N 15 '68 80w

"This volume is divided rather arbitrarily into 'Songs of Innocence,' 'How Pleasant to Ape Mr. Lear,' and 'Songs of Experience.' It is always fun to read Nash, but the reader must realize that beneath the banter and clever rhymes one can find rather profound observations and judgments on our disordered world and human behavior. 'The Wrongs of Spring,' rather than the rites, belie some acute thoughts which compare favorably with the ideas of our current and obscure philosophers despite the sugar coating which deceives the surface reader. . . . This [is] a book for everyone." H. L. Rosofsky

Library J 93:4147 N 1 '68 150w

NASH, RODERICK. Wilderness and the American mind. 256p $6.50 Yale univ. press

917.3 U.S.—Civilization. Frontier and pioneer life. Wilderness areas 67-24506

The author "traces the evolution of the American's attitude toward wilderness. Once it was an unfriendly area to be conquered, the abode of trolls and other enemies. With Emerson, Thoreau, and Muir came a reversal of this attitude. Mr. Nash believes that Transcendentalism was both a cause and an effect of the rapid shrinking of wilderness. Wilderness became something to be protected from man. Now it seems, says Mr. Nash, that we have protected our wilderness areas against exploitation only to lose wilderness values as the hordes of 'devotees' seek to gain its benefits." (Library J)

"[Nash] treats rigorously various conceptions of wilderness, and his objectivity is such that he does not align himself clearly with the preservationist groups. The book is both scholarly and readable. Much of the biographical information is interesting, and the reader is likely to be surprised by the subtleties of American thinking about wilderness." J. L. Bates

Am Hist R 73:1612 Je '68 380w

Choice 5:469 Je '68 210w

Reviewed by J. P. Diggins

J Am Hist 55:184 Je '68 650w

"It is often refreshing to have one's interests viewed by a person engaged in another discipline. Historian Roderick Nash here gives a scholarly and refreshing view of wilderness." C. S. Johnson

Library J 92:4428 D 1 '67 190w

"This book is a mandatory prelude to any modern treatment of conservation problems. It does not purport to tell us where we go from here. But it reports in telling fashion how we got where we are and the nature of the forces that have driven us pell-mell toward a leveling of the wilderness. . . . The book, in addition to tracing the evolution of the attitudes of the Western world, treats the highlights of American efforts to establish parks, forest preserves, and the like. . . . And it has one sentence at the end respecting the threat of population pressures to the small segments of wilderness that we have left. The book, in other words, bypasses the critical burning issues of today and tomorrow. . . . The author, so far as one can tell from the text, might be just as happy if all alpine meadows were motel, cocktail, and dance hall concessions. . . . But the book has integrity; those who read with discerning eyes will have a measure of the forces that the Establishment can muster to destroy us." W. O. Douglas

Natur Hist 76:96 D '67 1400w

"[Nash] appears to take wilderness as merely human (or anti-human) habitat and slights the vision of wilderness as nature, from which new visions come. . . . [His] book is an admirable history of the flowering in this century of wilderness philosophy in Robert Marshall and Aldo Leopold. Analysis of earlier thinking is weakened by the fact that only the motives of wilderness cranks are impugned. . . . Romanticism is an easy target for Nash, but he misses the possibility that for all its overblown, strained visions, it may have been a cultural mutation allowing increased perception." Daniel McKinley

Yale R 57:612 summer '68 300w

NASR, SEYYED HOSSEIN. Ideals and realities of Islam. 184p $6 Praeger

297 Islam

67-22242

"The author seeks to answer, from the Muslim point of view many of the criticisms brought against the Islamic tradition by Western orientologists. . . . In six chapters dealing with Islam, the Quran, the Prophet, the Shari'ah of Divine Law, the Tariqah or Sufism, and Sunnism and Shi'ism, [he] discusses the major aspects of the Islamic tradition, making frequent comparisons with other religions. In each case, the traditional Islamic doctrines and beliefs are explained in the light of contemporary thought." (Publisher's note) Annotated chapter bibliographies. Index.

"Nasr is a reputed Iranian scholar of Islamic studies. The main contribution of the book is its treatment of Islam in a Western language and with Western methodology by a believer of Islam. . . . The book, if it has nothing new to offer in the field of research, has the worthwhile value of being written by a Muslim and is useful for the students of religion. In a concise clear style it is the presentation of one point of view."

Choice 5:72 Mr '68 190w

"This book is composed of six public lectures delivered during Mr. Nasr's occupancy of the Aga Khan Professorship of Islamic Studies at the University of Beirut. . . . [The] essays are in parts polemical. . . . Notwithstanding the fact that Professor Nasr wrote these essays with the Western reader in mind, they do not make easy reading especially since they are 'addressed to those who are acquainted with the dialectic of modern thought.' Recommended for academic and large public libraries." David Shavit

Library J 92:2581 J1 '67 140w

NATCHEZ, GLADYS, ed. Children with reading problems; classic and contemporary issues in reading disability; sel. readings. 445p $8.95 Basic bks.

372.4 Reading 68-22857

Part One of this volume "dealing with causation, focuses on the emotional, neurophysiological, and cultural factors involved in producing impediments to learning. Part Two presents articles which illustrate various approaches to the diagnosis of reading disability. Part Three is devoted to the treatment of both mild and severe cases of reading difficulty." (Publisher's note) Chapter bibliographies. Index.

"Part I is especially well organized. . . . One article [in Part II] on 'Rorschach Configurations Associated with Reading Disabilities' assumes that the reader has had psychological training in the evaluation of Rorschach records, but the other articles should be of value to reading specialists without such background. In Part III . . . contributors discuss two areas: classroom procedures and treatment of pupils. This section is the least satisfactory, possibly because in this area much still needs to be done. . . . Exceptions are the two articles by H. A. Robinson and B. D. Bryant, in which they offer definite, genuinely helpful suggestions for remedial reading. Introductions are clear and pertinent. This book is a real contribution to the field of reading problems and an essential supplement to the basic text in diagnostic reading courses." Marian Wozencraft

Library J 93:1475 Ap 1 '68 230w

"Among many fine essays, J. McV. Hunt on motivation, A. L. Gates on personality maladjustment, M. L. Goldberg on disadvantaged children, and N. D. Bryant on remedies for dyslexia provide stimulating material for consideration. K. B. Clark's 'Cult of Cultural Deprivation,' with its thesis that if poor children are not taught, they do not learn,' contrasts with V. P. John's conclusion in 'The Intellectual Development of Slum Children' that cultural deprivation rather than bad teaching prevents poor children from reading well. Abounding in such antitheses, the book furnishes a valuable source of the best contemporary work on the subject."

Sat R 51:73 S 21 '68 110w

NATHAN, DOROTHY. The Month brothers; adapted from Samuel Marshak's play Twelve months; as tr. from the Russian by Alexander Bakshy in collaboration with Paul Nathan; il. by Uri Shulevitz. 95p $3.95; lib bdg $3.91 Dutton

398.2 Folklore—Russia—Juvenile literature 67-20133

This tale is about the proud young Queen Alexandra who "offers a basket of gold to anyone who can bring her snowdrops in January. This edict is considered impossible by all but a greedy peasant named Agrippina, who sends her stepdaughter Katya into an icy forest to find the flowers. . . . [Katya] comes upon the twelve months of the year, brothers all, who assist her by accelerating the seasons and bringing forth snowdrops. Complications ensue, but eventually Katya's virtue triumphs, the stepmother is punished, and the petulant Queen reforms. . . . Ages nine to twelve." (N Y Times Bk R)

"Both story and pictures have a lively humor and vigorous Russian folk flavor, as well as a Cinderella theme that children will find exactly to their liking." P. G.

Book World p10 D 31 '67 230w

Horn Bk 44:59 F '68 150w

"[The story] has the classic fairy-tale themes and structure, but details of plot are original and imaginative and will intrigue children. . . . There is humor here and subtle satire. Illustrations in delicate block-print style . . . evoke wintry Russia and vividly dramatize events and characters." Jean Pretorius

Library J 92:4615 D 15 '67 130w

Reviewed by Barbara Wersba
N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p42 N 1 '67 180w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland
Sat R 51:35 Ja 27 '68 160w

NATHANSON, VIRGINIA. The art of making bead flowers and bouquets. 192p il col pl $8.95 Hearthsides press (N Y)

745.59 Artificial flowers, Beadwork 67-27169

After a chapter of general instructions, the author describes the use of beads in making artificial flowers and leaves, potted plants, miniatures, holiday and table decorations and bouquets. Index.

Christian Science Monitor p11 Mr 13 '68 50w

"[The author], who teaches bead flower making in an adult education program in Great Neck, New York, in this book deals entirely with the bead craft, and she is, so far as can be ascertained, the only one to do so. Her instructions and the illustrations are admirably clear and practical. Libraries with patrons who like to try new crafts will find this book a welcome addition to the craft bookshelf." Julia Sabine

Library J 93:1470 Ap 1 '68 130w

NATIONAL BUREAU COMMITTEE FOR ECONOMIC RESEARCH, UNIVERSITIES. See Universities-National bureau committee for economic research

NATIONAL FOUNDATION FOR EDUCATIONAL RESEARCH IN ENGLAND AND WALES. The i.t.a. symposium; research report on the British experiment with i.t.a. by John Downing; evaluations on the report, by A. Sterl Arley [and others] introd: H. L. Elvin; summary: W. D. Wall. 168p $4.50 N.Y. univ. press

372.4 Alphabet, Reading [67-76811]

This volume gives a "description of the [British] experiment [with the Initial Teaching Alphabet] followed by critical evaluations by authorities in the field of reading in Great Britain and the U.S. The purpose of this experiment . . . was to test whether children could learn to read more effectively through an augmented alphabet than with traditional orthography." (Choice)

"Downing is objective, competent, enthusiastic but unbiased, and cautious in presenting his conclusions. . . . This book is more than a description of a significant field experiment; the evaluations make clear the difficulties of conducting research under natural conditions. It also throws some light on the reading process and how children learn to read."

Choice 5:658 J1 '68 170w

"Downing's conclusions defend the investigation against charges of invalidity due to the Hawthorne Effect. They likewise charge traditional orthography of English as a cause of trouble for children first learning to read and write, and commend, as an approach to the problem, i.t.a. and its superior results. A great deal of statistical material, together with penetrating evaluations by Sir Cyril Burt, A. R. MacKinnon, and others, round out a meticulous piece of work." John Calam

Sat R 51:88 My 18 '68 120w

NEAL, HARRY EDWARD. Money. 190p il $3.95 Messner

332.4 Money—Juvenile literature 67-21628

The author traces the history of money from the time of simple barter to the present day. Included in his discussion are "the function of currency, government's role in its manufacture and use, the gold standard, the stock market, foreign exchange, the workings of a checking account, [and] the Federal Reserve System. [Bibliography. Index.] Grades six to eight." (Library J)

"With the recent de-valuation of the English pound there is at least one out-of-date item in this volume. . . . Anecdotes help sustain interest as the reader learns how to take away the mystery of money."

Best Sell 27:394 Ja 1 '68 130w [YA]

"A handy compendium of essential information, and of incidental data, about money, this briskly written volume may also serve as an introduction to many aspects of economics." M. R. Sive

Library J 92:3866 O 15 '67 90w

NEAL LARRY, jt. ed. Black fire. See Jones, L.

NEAL, ROBERT J. Smith and Wesson, 1857-1945 [by] Robert J. Neal and Roy G. Jinks. 360p il $25 Barnes, A.S.

623.4 Smith and Wesson, Inc., Springfield, Massachusetts. Pistols 66-12902

The authors "describe and illustrate the Smith and Wesson line of firearms from the company's beginning [in 1857] to the end of World War II. The breakdown of material is by caliber and then by chronological order of manufacture." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"Here is another excellent historical reference work on firearms. . . . There is a wealth of fine photographs. Variations by special order were permitted by most arms manufacturers in the 19th Century, causing both joy and headaches to present-day collectors. The authors have identified and listed many such variations, but acknowledge the possibility that there may be others still unrecorded. Additional identification aids, patent drawings, and radiograph (X-ray) photos are included in the Appendixes. This is an invaluable reference for museums, gunsmiths, collectors, and most libraries." C. F. Clotfelter

Library J 92:1145 Mr 15 '67 160w

"About 100 models are described and illustrated (with some 300 photographs). . . . Very full information is also given on serial numbers, years of production, patents and patent date markings, and on catalogues and other publications issued by the firm. This is the first book of its kind dealing with Smith and Wesson firearms and so exhaustive is its treatment that it is likely to remain the only one. In spite of its high price, therefore, it is an essential purchase for all serious students of the history of firearms in the nineteenth and twentieth centuries." TLS p1124 N 30 '67 140w

NEAME, ALAN. The happening at Lourdes: the sociology of the grotto. 323p il $6.95 Simon & Schuster

231 Lourdes

67-25384

An examination of "the apparitions at Lourdes as an event which like all others 'occurred in an historical context and produced historical consequences.'" [The author] attempts to place . . . the child Bernadette in her 19th-Century milieu, to strip from the story of her 18 religious ecstasies the pious legends which detract from their theological and mystical significance, and to show how this happening affected and continues to affect France, the Church, and the world." (Library J) Chronology. Bibliography. Index.

"[The author] has picked his way deftly between true believers and total skeptics, paying less attention to the girl who saw a vision of the Virgin Mary than to the society which produced both the girl and the subsequent explosion of churches, chapels, curative baths, and miraculous recoveries on the spot where the vision occurred. . . . The development of the shrine at Lourdes . . . produced two distinct struggles . . . [which] still make interesting reading when reinforced, as they are, by the history of the district and examination of a whole series of papal pronouncements on the status of the Virgin. Some of this material, as it emerges in the book, looks like excessive scholarship. It is not. Mr. Neame needs all of it to support his ultimate point. He is arguing that the laconic, practical instructions of Bernadette's vision, seized upon at the time by the conservative party as endorsement of its cause, actually prefigured modern attempts to liberalize church dogma." Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 221:134 Mr '68 410w

"Neame concerns himself with events in their social, historical, political and religious context. He wants the reader to realize that Bernadette of yester-year's grotto is not the same as the Bernadette of today's Lourdes. . . . The scholarship demanded for such a project is beyond his competence. He is neither a historian nor a theologian. . . . His description of contemporary Lourdes demonstrates the necessity of checking unbridled piety. He does not conceal his disdain for the struggle between the clergy of the parish in Lourdes and the various religious congregations who gained ascendancy in their management of the grotto. [His] very British style of writing and spelling contribute a flavor to the book, but they cannot justify a goodly number of errors. . . . [He] strives to be objective in his evaluation of Lourdes, but I am not so sure that he has accomplished his purpose." Bernard Hrico

Best Sell 27:480 Mr 15 '68 300w

"Mr. Neame has made every effort to use objective scholarship, neither to overstate nor understate the case for Lourdes." Genevieve Casey

Library J 92:4517 D 15 '67 140w

NEATBY, L. H. Conquest of the last frontier. 425p maps $10 Ohio univ. press

919.8 Arctic regions

66-15802

"Covered are the exploits of Kane, Nares, Schwatka, Greely, Peary, Amundsen, and Stefansson [among others]; the work, for the most part, is based on their journals and logs. Emphasis is upon the character and motivational forces that drove these men rather than upon techniques of Arctic travel, survival, and the scientific aspects of their endeavors." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"The book's main stress is undoubtedly on Peary, all of whose expeditions are described in some detail. It is in a sense an effort to rehabilitate him, but without the customary dismissal of his rival Dr. Cook as a charlatan. . . . [This volume] is in effect a summary of the last period of pre-scientific arctic exploration. It does not pretend to offer much in addition to the published accounts which appeared at the time, nor is it as literature in a class with Jeannette Mirsky's 'To the Arctic' [BRD 1948]. It gives few new insights into 'what really happened' though the passage of years and the availability of personal papers should have made this possible. . . . Exploration, to Professor Neatby, remains pretty much a matter of more degrees of latitude added, this cape rounded, that bay used for shelter, the other route closed by ice. There is room for little about the natural history that was accumulated by most of the expeditions." Trevor Lloyd

Canadian Forum 47:238 Ja '68 1200w

"There is ample literature on the history of polar exploration but this work, by concentrating its attention on Arctic exploration during 1853-1918, is a worthwhile addition. Photographs would have added much to the present work; the brief bibliography is a disappointment; and the few maps are inadequate in aiding the reader to follow the narrative, good index; ample margins and attractive type make this book pleasing to the eye. Despite the deficiencies the book is recommended for undergraduate collections as a background source for an exciting period in the history of exploration."

Choice 4:1172 D '67 180w

"A most fascinating and well-written account of Arctic exploration beginning with the mid-19th century. . . . This book is the result of extensive reading—and personal exploration?—told in a vivid and gripping style. Judgements on the contributions and shortcomings of explorers and their expeditions seem well-reasoned, thoughtful and impartial. Highly recommended for high school, public and college libraries." S. S. Swanson

Library J 91:2487 My 15 '66 230w [YA]

NEHRICH, RICHARD B. Atomic light: lasers—what they are and how they work, by Richard B. Nehrich, Jr., Glenn I. Voran [and] Norman F. Dessel. 104p il col il $3.95; lib bdg $3.99 Sterling

621.32 Lasers—Juvenile literature 67-27761

An "explanation of the development, principles, operation, and varied uses of all types of lasers. . . . Photographs of lasers and related equipment are included. . . . Grade eight and up." (Library J)

"An excellent background for teenage readers. . . . with good illustrations. The authors describe the many present and potential uses of these marvelous light 'guns' without slipping into foolish speculation about far-out weapons. In writing style, the text is a bit dry. It's factual and understandable enough. But the authors are giving information and fail to take that next important step to do this by telling an exciting story. Nevertheless, the inherent interest of the subject carries a reader along." R. C. Cowen

Christian Science Monitor pB10 My 2 '68 100w

"No background is expected of readers of this book, though the authors do occasionally use terms not explained. . . . This will supplement H. Arthur Klein's Masers and Lasers [BRD 1963] which concentrates on historical developments while this new book emphasizes current applications. The book is suitable reading for laymen interested in lasers, and its broad coverage will make it useful for many years." P. W. Alley

Library J 93:1326 Mr 15 '68 90w

NEIDLE, CECYLE S. The new Americans; foreword by Oscar Cargill. 342p $6 Twayne 325.73 U.S.—Immigration and emigration
67-25187

This volume contains a "collection of statements (all deriving from published sources) by nearly 70 immigrants on their experiences in America. The immigrants' writings are divided into four chronological sections: 1607-1830's; 1830's-1880; 1880-1929; and post-1929. . . . [The author has] written a general introduction and an introduction to each of the four sections." (Choice)

"Neidle provides overlong introductions to the individual selections. . . . [They] are simplistic and marred by occasional slips. Oscar Cargill's florid foreword contributes nothing of value. . . . [This book,] an obvious labor of love and based on extensive reading, is unsuccessful, if original. Not recommended for acquisition."

Choice 5:864 S '68 120w

"[The author's] distinctive contribution is the notable skill with which she has selected passages that illuminate both the writer and his environment, beginning with Captain John Smith in 1607 and including Laura Fermi in 1954. The surprising thing in this collection is not the diversity but the parallelism of immigrant opinion through three and a half centuries." G. W. Johnson

Sat R 51:40 Mr 23 '68 380w

NEILL, STEPHEN. The Church and Christian union. 423p $10.10 Oxford 262 Christian unity
68-87751

In this volume "based on his Bampton Lectures at Oxford, the author, an Anglican bishop, discusses especially the progress toward church unity over the past 40 years and sees the heart of the problem to be agreement on the question, What is the church? To this question he relates the problem of Christian missions, the Bible, sacraments and ministry. He takes note of evolving attitudes on these matters within and between the various communions." (N Y Times Bk R)

Choice 5:1320 D '68 200w

Reviewed by N. K. Burger

N Y Times Bk R p16 Ap 7 '68 140w

"[The author has] given a large part of his life to campaigning for reunion. . . . Further, he knows the missionary aspect of the problem, for the Church, whether in areas which were formally described as missionary or in countries where Christianity can be regarded as indigenous, is confronting a world which has either shown signs of moving away from any kind of religion, or is turning to the redevelopment of what the western countries call 'other faiths'. . . . Neill studies the problem on a world scale with an acute and genuinely open mind and, having been thoroughly involved with the Ecumenical Movement, he knows the problems from the inside. Even if the book is very long, it is certainly worth while."

TLS p672 Je 27 '68 270w

NELLIST, JOHN B. British architecture and its background. 361p il $15 St Martins 720.942 Architecture, English—History. Architecture—History
67-11466

The author "begins with the classical and European background, then outlines architecture in Britain from 1066 to 1800, and in the last section covers nineteenth century architecture and 'the modern movement' in Europe and America as well as Britain. Besides 62 plates, there are nearly 300 drawings." (Economist) Chronology. Annotated chapter bibliographies. Annotated general bibliography. Glossary. Index.

"Despite the attempt at interrelation implied in the title, this is actually two separate studies—a concise history of English architecture from the Norman Conquest to the present, coupled with a relatively brief survey of world architecture. . . . It is on the whole a straightforward and generally accurate account, but as a book this work does not serve either of [Mr. Nellist's] purposes adequately enough. [However, it is] a succinct summary of these two subjects. In certain areas the coverage is rather spotty, though in others—e.g. castles—the treatment is quite full."

Choice 5:43 Mr '68 160w

"The background plays nearly as large a part as Britain in this well-illustrated book, which should be both a useful introduction to the young would-be architectural student and a good reference book for anyone who just likes looking at churches and houses."

Economist 225:xiv D 2 '67 110w

NELSON, A. Dictionary of applied geology: mining and civil engineering. by A. Nelson and K. D. Nelson. 421p $17.50 Philosophical lib.

550 Geology—Dictionaries. Mining engineering—Dictionaries. Civil engineering—Dictionaries 67-81962

The authors "have listed minerals, gemstones, coals, and natural gas with their physical definitions, and their economic value and industrial uses where this information is useful. They have also included terms related to building materials, rock structures, water resources and supplies, soil mechanics, geophysics, and exploratory drilling and soil sampling." (Library J) Rock symbols, map symbols, and weights and measures are given in the appendix.

"A companion volume to [A] Nelson's Dictionary of Mining [BRD 1966]. Covers a wide range of topics in applied geology, as well as many entries in mineralogy, petrology, and academic geology. . . . This is a very useful book, even though the largest part of its contents will be found in the Glossary of Geology and Related Sciences . . . and older books. The spellings and definitions are British throughout."

Choice 5:610 JI '68 80w

"Intended primarily for school and college students and engineers engaged in the field, this dictionary signals recognition of the importance of geological knowledge in mining and civil engineering. [The authors are] both professional mining engineers. . . . Recommended for students, specialists, and informed readers." Robin LeSueur

Library J 92:4492 D 15 '67 110w

NELSON, GEORGE J., jt. ed. The anatomy of Wall Street. See Rolo, C. J.

NELSON, HAROLD L., ed. Freedom of the press from Hamilton to the Warren court. 420p $7.50; pa $3.75 Bobbs

323.44 Freedom of the press
66-22578

An annotated compilation of "legal rulings, pamphlets, essays, editorials, executive orders woven together to tell the story of rises and declines in U.S. press freedom from 1800 to now. . . . [The book begins with the editor's] introductory summary of that history. [He] covers libel, contempt of court, sedition, espionage, obscenity, economic restraints, government secrecy, and other issues relating to the press and includes court decisions restraining the press as well as arguments and cases pro freedom." (Choice) Chronology. Bibliography. Index.

Choice 4:972 N '67 170w

"Nelson has compiled and annotated an amazing variety of documents. . . . No other work on the subject presents so many original and complete texts, making it an indispensable reference tool for any undergraduate work in this area. . . . Excellent bibliography."

Choice 4:972 N '67 170w

"[This] should quickly become a standard work, and it belongs in special journalism and political-science collections and the reference and circulating collections of public and academic libraries." Allan Angoff

Library J 92:1144 Mr 15 '67 130w

NELSON, K. D., jt. auth. Dictionary of applied geology. See Nelson, A.

NELSON, TRUMAN. The torture of mothers. 121p $4.95 Beacon press

323.1 Harlem, New York (City)—Riot, 1964.
Negroes—New York (City). New York (City)—Police 68-17428

An account of "the case of the boys known as the Harlem Six, all Negro and none over nineteen, who were convicted of the murder, on April 29, 1964, of Mrs. Margit Sugar who ran a clothing store in Harlem." (N Y Rev of Books) Part of this book originally appeared in Ramparts magazine.

"[The author] reveals an incredible story of beatings by the police and the callousness of courts. . . . Mr. Nelson charges that in reporting the two main events he deals with in this book—an incident which led to a minor riot and [a] murder . . . the Metropolitan press and specifically the New York Times 'had become to the New York Police Department as the Voice of America is to the State Department.' It is difficult for those of us insulated by color and complacent in our comfort to begin to comprehend the nightmares of the black community, particularly those involving the police. A reading of [this book] . . . is a beginning; it is therefore an essential purchase for libraries." Patricia Schuman
Library J 93:2842 Ag '68 210w

"[This] is a moving work which . . . should certainly be read by anyone concerned with the quality of the continuing confrontation between black Americans and black American law. What is most valuable in it is the very extensive set of quotations from tapes made by the author and an official of Harlem Youth Unlimited (HARYOU) of interviews with the mothers of the accused during their long ordeal. The Beacon Press . . . has chosen to set these excerpts into the text as poetry; which they are. Nelson's work convinces me that the Harlem Six have been the victims of a miscarriage of justice as well as of gross brutality, physical and mental; and I honor him for having written it. . . . [However] he brings to bear none of Mr. Hersey's caution in amassing evidence and its subsequent analysis [as shown in The Algiers Motel Incident, BRD 1968]; and his agonized plea to me carries less conviction than Hersey's equally agonized cool." E. Z. Friedenberg
N Y Rev of Books 11:24 Ag 1 '68 1850w

NELSON, WALTER HENRY. Small wonder; the amazing story of the Volkswagen. rev ed 333p pl $4.95 Little

629.22 Volkswagen automobile 67-11230

This edition "contains a more extensive description of the company's operation under British Army control between 1945-48, two new chapters on VW in America, more details on VW's success in other countries, and biographical stories of some top VW executives." (Choice) Bibliography. Index. For the first edition see BRD 1965.

"Success story of the VW, from the first idea of a 'people's car' in the twenties to the present, with lucid chapters on the initial designs, creation of the VW factory, political exploitation of the VW idea by Hitler, the struggle of the company after World War II, and the car's subsequent international success. . . . Written in lively journalistic style, though too repetitious. . . . Recommended to the general readership."

Choice 5:330 My '68 200w

"More than one-third of [this edition] is entirely new. Mr. Nelson has even rewritten or added to some of the existing chapters. . . . Highly entertaining story of [the car's] how and why. Recommended [for] . . . readers interested in automobiles." F. B. Davenport
Library J 92:1621 Ap 15 '67 140w

NEMEROV, HOWARD. The blue swallows; poems. 105p $4.50 Univ. of Chicago press

811 67-25516

A collection of poems which have appeared previously in such publications as the American Scholar, Southern Poetry Review and Holiday.

"These poems have a calm surface, whether they be witty glosses on the Great Society or somber riddles about man and nature and history. The surpassing virtue of Nemerov's poetry has always been clarity rather than passion. In this latest book he has begun to take on the apparently (but only apparently) easy movement that Robert Frost mastered, and to tackle philosophical problems as Frost did. . . . These poems shine with wit, sing out with descriptive certainty, . . . and explore the bewilderment of a mature and civilized man surveying the world without animus." Peter Davison

Atlantic 224:142 F '68 280w

"In a quiet, unfreakish way [Nemerov] has long ago established himself as a very sure poetic voice. His poetry is a delicate blending of the ironical, even the self-mocking, and the ultimately serious. . . . [He] resists the lures of current poetic bandwagons and continues on his way, becoming steadily and more certainly what he has always been: a civilized, often melancholy, frequently wry observer of himself and all things about him." Chad Walsh

Book World p6 D 24 '67 210w

Reviewed by Louis Simpson
Harper 237:74 Ag '68 900w

Reviewed by Jerome Cushman
Library J 93:1148 Mr 15 '68 200w

"Nemerov's relationship to his poem is consistently one of distance, doubt, distrust. In an age committed to commitment he is unable, apparently, to write a committed line. Yet at the same time his ironic detachment fails to attain for him what it is traditionally supposed to attain, the superiority of uncommitted moral purity, because in our age no such thing exists, as Nemerov himself says again and again. . . . In his early work [he] turned out several notable anthology pieces [in the manner of poetic irony] which are justly popular. But today this manner is an exceedingly tired manner, betraying an exceedingly tired poetic attitude . . . revealed in tired poetry; spent meters, predictable rhymes, and metaphors haggard with use." Hayden Carruth

N Y Times Bk R p7 Ap 28 '68 1000w

Reviewed by Hayden Carruth
Poetry 112:423 S '68 130w

"[This volume] shows the same fascination with the universe of Einstein that has informed much of the poet's best work. . . . Nemerov is not always the metaphysician of time and space; but when he is not speaking of man lost and overwhelmed within them, he is usually speaking of man lost within the confusion of his own spirit. . . . His abiding concern is that of any sensible reader in these days especially. Which is not to say that the poems always work. It is true, as it has been true of Nemerov's earlier work, that the puns and playfulness he is given to . . . fall now and then to flippancy and bad jokes. Once in a while there is too much of the professorial tone. While the beginnings and resolutions of almost all Nemerov's poems are as tight as good craftsmanship can make them, a number have a curious way of going loose in rhythm and almost rambling in the middle. . . . [This] is a book of serious poems loaded with the kind of folly Nemerov makes himself the first brunt of, and which the reader cannot quite escape. Although now and then funny, it is mostly dark and unsettling." Miller Williams

Sat R 51:32 Mr 9 '68 450w

Reviewed by Laurence Lieberman
Yale R 58:140 O '68 480w

NERUDA, PABLO. Twenty poems; tr. by James Wright and Robert Bly. 111p $2; pa $1 Sixties press

$61

66-28654

Each poem is presented in its original Spanish and in an English translation. The selections range from the author's "Residencia en la tierra, written in the 1920s and 1930s, to the Elemental Odes of the 1950s." (TLS) Some of the English translations have appeared in such periodicals as London Magazine, Nation, and Poetry.

"Two translators can only do so much. This collection is snipped from the unwinding of Neruda's lifeworks, and while the individual frames are lovely, the whole jerks and stutters like a too-often-edited television movie. Wright and Bly bridge and fill as best they can. The language of translation is consistently and probably deliberately Anglo-Saxon-based English. Where a Spanish word has a direct English equivalent, usually they forebear its use. . . . The choices, though occasionally round-about, are usually right. . . . Yet again, something is missing. Not even an echo of Neruda's long rolling music . . . breaks across into the [English]. . . . These are good translations, workable—and infinitely better than no Neruda at all." Sandra Schmidt

Christian Science Monitor p11 S 12 '68 800w

Reviewed by Alan Brownjohn

New Statesman 76:638 N 8 '68 150w

"The quality of the translation is usually accurate, capturing without strain the spontaneous proliferation of images characteristic of Neruda. . . . The drawback of the selection is that it is too brief. The Canto General comes to us hopelessly mutilated and the section, The Heights of Machu Picchu . . . is represented by a few lines, which is rather like playing the opening bars of Beethoven's Ninth and leaving it at that. But despite the evident shortcomings, the . . . Neruda selections are welcome additions to a pitifully inadequate number of Spanish American poems in translation."

TLS p1285 N 14 '68 250w

NERUDA, PABLO. We are many; tr. by Alastair Reid; phot. by Hans Ehrmann. unp $4; pa $2.50 Grossman pubs.

861

68-15648

A collection of poetry by the Chilean writer with facing English and Spanish texts.

"[This poet] speaks to modern man in the modern voice. . . . Hopefully, librarians will rush out to buy [this volume]. . . . Neruda is without question, to my mind, the leading living poet of the world today. That is not a wild statement of praise, for even his critics freely admit to his strong influence on all modern poetry." Bill Katz

Library J 93:2882 Ag '68 80w

"Neruda's poems are delicate and often charming within the limits of an egotism which, in spite of the title, embraces himself rather than the world. . . . [His] sensibility is not in doubt, and is well brought out in what seems an admirable translation, but even in a fine poem like Too Many Names, with its desire for generous confusion in life rather than prissy exactness, one gets the impression that Pablo Neruda is not only his most treacherous enemy but also his very best friend." Julian Symons

New Statesman 74:595 N 3 '67 150w

NESS, GAYL D. Bureaucracy and rural development in Malaysia; a study of complex organizations in stimulating economic development in new states. 257p maps $6.50 Univ. of Calif. press

338.9595 Malaysia—Economic policy 67-14115

An "analysis of the Malayan experience with public organizations as means of change. . . . [The author] spent three years (1960-1963) in Malaya studying its rural development plans and the operation of its development organizations. Analysis was confined to the Federated States of Malaya alone. His conclusions are based on documentary materials and on approximately 100 interviews with Malayan officials, professionals, and other relevant people. Two dimensions of these complex organizations are selected for analysis; goals and control systems." (Am Soc R) Bibliography. Index.

"It ■ Ness' conclusion that Malayan organization has been successful . . . [and] that the success has been confined to goals of output and has not effected change in the economic structure or in the cultural values of the Malayan peasant, the chief target of reform. The analysis of two efforts at development through separate agencies illustrates for Ness the failure of politically weak organizations to produce change. . . . [However] despite some offhand assertions about the social groups opposing various kinds of changes (Muslim traditionalists, Chinese middlemen, Malayan separatists), the social bases of Malayan politics and economic structure are unanalyzed, and the barriers to development policies are only stated in organizational terms. . . . [But] these defects are minor in what ■ an important contribution to understanding politics and social change in post-colonial Asia today." Joseph Gusfield

Am Soc ■ 33:148 F '68 750w

Reviewed by J. C. Scott

Ann Am Acad 378:184 J1 '68 750w

"A joyous book; unlike most studies of developing countries it has a story to tell. A scholarly book; there is a theory which is applied by means of appropriate method to a problem area in which the researcher has adequate competence. It should be of interest to those concerned with development economics, the sociology of organizations, or Southeast Asia generally. . . . It should be noted that the last effective date for most of the material on which the study is based is 1963. The style is eminently readable."

Choice 5:89 Mr '68 140w

"This important and admirable book is a study of the efforts of a number of government organizations in promoting rural development in Malaya. . . . Most of the book is devoted to a careful account of the work of RIDA (Rural and Industrial Development Authority, since renamed the Majlis Amanah Ra'ayat, or MACA), the FLDA (Federal Land Development Authority), and the Ministry of Rural Development. . . . The author has set up an interesting theoretical framework to explain, among other things, why, unlike most other countries in the region, Malaya not only has plans for rural development but also has produced results corresponding to these plans. . . . His sociological training has enabled him to relate [bureaucracy in action] skilfully and meaningfully to the local scene." R. S. Milne

Pacific Affairs 40:398 fall-winter '67- '68 550w

NESTROY, JOHANN. Three comedies; A man full of nothing, The talisman, Love affairs and wedding bells; tr. (and fondly tampered with) by Max Knight and Joseph Fabry; foreword by Thornton Wilder. 258p ■ $5.50 Ungar

832

66-28138

"In the first play, A Man Full of Nothing, [Nestroy] ridicules the 19th-century Welt-schmerz, that sentimental pessimism of poets and upper-class idlers that turned out to be the forerunner of the existential meaninglessness so widespread in our own time. The Talisman is a satire on prejudice in its crudest form. In a little Austrian village people are convinced that all redheads are crooks and arsonists. . . . The third play, Love Affairs and Wedding Bells . . . [pinpoints] the conflict between tradition-ridden aristocrats and the vulgar, newly rich capitalists." (Publisher's note)

"Nestroy's low comedies . . . are truly representative of the 19th-century Viennese Volks-stück. . . . At the center of every play is the Nestroy figure of the philosopher-clown, who becomes the judge of society and its mores; Nestroy's timeless message: man being imperfect has to engage in painful self-examination in order to improve. Because of his wide use of Wortspiele and the Viennese idiom, Nestroy has been considered untranslatable. Knight and Fabry, who have successfully met the challenge, state the problem of translation and give their reason for having chosen these three comedies in their excellent introductory assessment of Nestroy. . . . A 'must' for every college library."

Choice 5:348 My '68 300w

"In translating into English the often untranslatable double meanings of words, innuendos, and situations, essential to the comic effect, Mr. Knight and Mr. Fabry have occasionally gone too far in changing the text to what Nestroy might have said to impress a modern audience. If Nestroy had lived in our century, he would not have been Nestroy. Two introductory essays, one by Wilder and one by the translators, emphasize the character and the importance of Nestroy's work." F. M. Wassermann

Library J 92:1849 My 1 '67 200w

"This is not so much a translation as an adaptation of the freest kind. The 'translators' follow the original German text scene by scene but make drastic changes within each scene. They do this deliberately, partly because Nestroy's Viennese dialect and his many puns offer insuperable difficulties in translation, partly because allusions to conditions in nineteenth-century Austria mean little to the contemporary American reader or playgoer. Thus, they constantly substitute their own topical references and wisecracks, a practice to which I, for one, have no objection if it improves the play. [But] our translator pair develop ■ kind of

NESTROY, JOHANN—Continued

Sportgeist that impels them to greater involutional extremes than even Nestroy would have appreciated. . . . The publisher has come up with an excellent example of the art of book-making." Fred Genschmer

Mod Lang J 52:391 O '68 550w

NETBOY, ANTHONY. The Atlantic salmon: a vanishing species? 457p il maps $6.95 Houghton

639 Salmon

68-23214

The author discusses the declining Atlantic salmon population, its causes and consequences. He "describes the life cycle and migrations, and he speculates on the mysteries of the fish. . . . [He argues] that their survival depends on clean, passable waters and on swift and enlightened regulations." (Atlantic)

"For a good look at man's predatory greed and for the most vivid and comprehensive history of Salmo salar yet written I recommend [this book]." Edward Weeks

Atlantic 222:91 Ag '68 800w

Reviewed by J. S. Robotham

Library J 93:4158 N 1 '68 140w

Nation 207:508 N 11 '68 60w

"[The author], an active conservationist, has visited all the countries in the Atlantic salmon range (and so knows at first hand the look and problems of the few remaining salmon rivers), he has thoroughly familiarized himself with [its] natural history, and he writes extremely well. The result is an interesting and a truly important book."

New Yorker 44:214 O 12 '68 210w

NETTL, J. P. Political mobilization; a sociological analysis of methods and concepts. 442p $8.50 Basic bks.

320.01 Political science. Sociology 67-19470

The author "attempts 'to show the particular values and goals to which social structures are related in different societies, and to discuss the instrumental utility of these structures in relation to such value and goals.' Mobilization, '... a political process which is ... central to all political activity ... a process which operates universally in all societies at any time,' provides a master key to comparative analyses of societies in all stages of development and change. Part One (Culture) clarifies the contradictory and often confusing methodologies offered by various schools of political sociologists. Part Two (Function) has an ... analysis of the process of political mobilization. Part Three (Process) is devoted mostly to the relationship of political mobilization to political processes and the problem of legitimacy in developing countries; to political parties and interest groups in the same; to a neo-Weberian treatise on the role of bureaucracy in the mobilization process." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"To what extent the shortcomings of Nettl's book are the product of a preoccupation with terminological and conceptual inventiveness is not altogether clear. Certainly this helps explain the linguistic fusion of pluralist and functionalist thought, two otherwise quite distinct theoretical traditions. It may also account for Nettl's failure to identify the extremely important position of pluralism in his own analysis. In any case, the over-all result is that [his book] will do very little to weaken the conviction of those who argue that sociological jargon does not represent a theoretical improvement over lucid prose." M. F. Lofchie

Am J Soc 74:84 J1 '68 1450w

"Despite its forbidding style and excessive footnoting, this study by the brilliant biographer of Rosa Luxemburg [BRD 1966] will, in all likelihood, be regarded as a major, and thus far the best, contribution by an English scholar to the literature of political sociology. Nettl [offers] a brilliant summary of the innovations and achievements of the best-known American, French, British, Italian, Soviet, Polish, Spanish political scientists and sociologists. . . . Highly recommended to libraries with holdings of advanced sociological and political science literature. Excellent bibliography"

Choice 5:265 Ap '68 300w

"The book is long, and its faults are more obtrusive than its merits. It reads as though it had been rewritten either much too much or much too little. So far from trying to limit the discussion to manageable proportions, Nettl ropes in everyone from Koestler on Creativity to Franks on Oxford to Sapir on Linguistics. . . . It turns out that his real purpose is to attack the assumption of Western political scientists that electoral government by competing parties is the norm and government as practised in the developing nations the deviation. . . . The doubts which Nettl's argument raises are not about his general viewpoint so much as the specific application of his 'concepts and variables'. . . . The value of his book lies much more in its vigorous and persuasive admonition that we shall never explain the developing countries satisfactorily if we try to do so in terms drawn from our own." W. R. Runciman

New Statesman 74:176 Ag 11 '67 900w

"[This book] displays a fantastic flow of ideas, tumbling over one another in a disorderly chase. Some of these are good. From time to time the version of the comparative method that Mr. Nettl employs enables him to achieve sudden and brief illumination. All too often, however, the method produces alleged contrasts that appear to defy the canons of common sense. . . . He creates a new world of 'politics' whose relationship with the real world is tenuous almost to the point of complete extinction. . . . It is a pity that, after making a masterly job of Rosa Luxemburg, Mr. Nettl has made a mess of [this book]. That it is a mess can hardly be gainsaid, the only question is whether it is one of those creative messes which are far more stimulating than tidy treatises. Even after several readings the answer remains doubtful."

TLS p854 S 28 '67 1400w

NETTL, J. P. The Soviet achievement. 288p il col il maps $6.95; pa $3.95 Harcourt

947.08 Russia—Politics and government—1917-. Russia—Social conditions—1917-

68-10325

"Ranging from the pre-1914 period to the prospects which face the U.S.S.R. in 1967, Mr. Nettl discusses the . . . questions of politics and economics, the power struggle, the gradual amalgamation of Party with society, the intensification and relaxation of state control, and the effects of Soviet policies on the nation's cultural life." (Publisher's note) Annotated bibliography. Index and Who's who.

"In struggling with the problem of communication, of imparting to the British and American reader a sense of the realities of Soviet life, Mr. Nettl encounters . . . sometimes insuperable difficulties. The trouble with the general reader, as defined in the preface, is . . . over-sophistication. He distrusts facts and he demands interpretations; and above all he looks for the fashionable concepts so beloved by the new generation of social scientists and imposed by them on the reading public. There is, for example, that wretched word, 'backwardness.' A prize should be set aside for a book on Russia which will manage to avoid this term altogether. . . . Initial but quite basic defects [of this kind] are enough to mar what is otherwise a competent and readable account of the Soviet record." A. B. Ulam

Commentary 46:81 O '68 1700w

"Mr. Nettl, who has . . . received an appointment as professor of social and political science at the University of Pennsylvania, analyzes events, and places them in the contexts of the world at the time and of Russian history, which makes for enlightening, stimulating and readable history. He is also accurate and fair. The many illustrations using contemporary posters, cartoons, and photographs are interesting and useful. Included are maps, statistical tables, and a critical bibliography. A good one-volume history of this period has been needed, and this one is recommended to public libraries for the serious general reader." J. D. Robotham

Library J 93:73 Ja 1 '68 170w

Nation 206:124 Ja 22 '68 50w

Reviewed by Anthony Austin

N Y Times Bk R p26 N 10 '68 800w

"[This] is far and away ahead of all previous short histories of the U.S.S.R. during its first half-century. . . . Mr. Nettl is far removed from the school of writers who spend their time denouncing the consequences of the Russian Revolution. . . . Throughout he studies it, analytically and critically, on its own ground. . . . Apart from differences of opinion on contentious points of interpretation, some critics may complain that insufficient attention is given to the foreign relations of the Soviet Union and to the affairs of Comintern. This is on the whole a welcome reversal, space being necessarily limited, of the more common bias in the opposite direction. A more dubious feature is an occasionally excessive indulgence in facile sociological generalizations. . . . The last chapter uses the rather creaking literary device of bringing back Lenin and Stalin to the Red Square to survey the scene on the fiftieth anniversary of October. But the observations offered to the reader are sensible and well-balanced, and free, like the rest of the book, from melodrama and sensationalism."

TLS p1027 N 2 '67 800w

NEU, CHARLES E. An uncertain friendship; Theodore Roosevelt and Japan, 1906-1909. 347p $6.95 Harvard univ. press

327.52 U.S.—Foreign relations—Japan, Japan—Foreign relations—U.S. Roosevelt, Theodore 67-27091

"A reexamination of the first Roosevelt's diplomatic dealings with Japan." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"[This] covers much of the same ground as [Raymond A.] Esthus' Theodore Roosevelt and Japan [BRD 1967]. . . . Unlike most earlier writers, both Esthus and Neu make use of Japanese diplomatic records, and Neu also occasionally cites British and Canadian records. In contrast to Esthus, however, Neu omits any extensive treatment of the Russo-Japanese War of 1904-05 and tends to place much more emphasis upon the domestic background of Roosevelt's foreign policy. Roosevelt emerges from the pages of this book as a shrewd politician as well as diplomat. Recommended for larger undergraduate libraries as an alternate explanation of an important period in American-Japanese relations."

Choice 5:390 My '68 200w

"The most valuable part of the study is the extensive analysis of the influence of the Japanese troubles on Roosevelt's naval policy. This is the aspect that the author has investigated in the greatest depth, and it is here that there is the least amount of rehashing of the material covered in previous publications. . . . The story drawn from the navy sources is skillfully placed in the context of Japanese-American relations. The monograph also goes beyond previous works in dealing with the mission of Mackenzie King to London relating to Oriental immigration. . . . Where the author writes of affairs in East Asia he does not reveal a clear understanding of such things as spheres of influence, the treaty rights of the various powers, and America's open door policy. . . . Despite the above criticism, Neu's study is the most extensive available coverage of the developments on the American side of the Pacific which related directly to the Japanese-American crises."

R. A. Esthus

J Am Hist 55:165 Je '68 450w

Reviewed by L. H. Madaras

Library J 92:4412 D 1 '67 300w

NEUGEBOREN, JAY. Listen, Ruben Fontanez; a novel. 216p $4.50 Houghton

68-14350

"Harry Meyers, sixtyish, teaches Hebrew to Puerto Rican junior high kids in Brooklyn and Spanish to Yeshiva students. He lives in a furnished room on Manhattan's upper West Side. . . . Once Meyers had helped capture the killer of a little boy, but now his philosophy is one of noninvolvement. . . . [A] trio of Puerto Rican youths, one the Ruben of the title, captures his interest. They take care of him when he falls ill and introduce him to their life of dancing and begging in the city's subways. Harry becomes involved once more with violence and out of it learns to care again." (Publishers' Weekly)

Reviewed by Norman Stein

Book World p13 Ap 7 '68 330w

"I wonder how many people—white or black—really mean it when they ask the writer to 'tell it like it is.' Can many of them really bear to hear it? This novel should provide a good test. . . . I would guess that many would eagerly rush back to the pages of, say, The Kerner Report, or the Moynihan Report, or U.S. News & World Report, and find comfort in the rhetorical 'challenges' stated in 'serious' facts, figures and faceless generalizations. In Ruben there are no comforting statistics . . . but only individual screams, aches, murders, hungers—and yes, complex loyalties and loves, sometimes transcending the hates and intra-minority prejudices, and sometimes mixed up with them, tangled in contradiction and ironies. The way it really is." Dan Wakefield

Commonweal 88:365 Je 7 '68 1050w

Reviewed by C. E. Wadsworth

Library J 93:1163 Mr 15 '68 240w

Reviewed by Helen Jacob

Library J 93:1820 Ap 15 '68 90w [YA]

"[The author] seems so entranced by the neighborhood in which his main character resides, that at times his novel resembles a Welcome Wagon shopping guide. . . . [But Neugeboren] is a writer of unmistakable talent, and his weird tale has its moments. . . . The language, cunning and mental derangement of Ruben, Manuel and Marty have an absolute ring of authenticity. They and Danny Santini, father of the slain child, are extraordinarily vivid creations. It is the hero and narrator of the book, Meyers himself, who hangs like a block of cement around the neck of the novel and ultimately drags it to its death." Eleanor Dienstag

N Y Times Bk R p42 Ap 28 '68 650w

"Neugeboren renders his New York setting with genuine authenticity. He has an eye and ear for capturing poignant details and realizes a special kind of truth about his characters. The difficulty is that he uses a short story treatment for the book's effects. Lacking is the motivation that novel-sized characters need for their third dimension. . . . We are involved in Harry Meyers's life, despite the fact that (and maybe because) Neugeboren withholds much information and chooses to suggest more than he tells us. The overdose of unaccountable behavior, however, makes for a sporadic murkiness—and an unkind suspicion that Neugeboren opts for unpredictability when he loses control of a character. But the author is very much in control of his unique technique—a stylized, surgically careful, unrelievedly sparse first-person-present-tense narration. . . . Under the novel's graphic surface, . . . lurk symbol and allegory galore." Joel Lieber

Sat R 51:42 Mr 23 '68 550w

TLS p357 D 5 '68 250w

The NEUROSCIENCES: a study program; planned and ed. by Gardner C. Quarton, Theodore Melnechuk, Francis O. Schmidt, and the associates and staff of the Neurosciences res. program. 2d ed 984p 600il $17.50 Rockefeller univ. press

574.1 Brain. Nervous system 67-30343

This book presents "survey papers, plus . . . introductory and generalizing essays, that formed the content of an intensive study program . . . carried out in the summer of 1966 for about 100 research men in many fields in and around biology. . . . The aim was to present the background of all we know about the way the brain works; in this volume, the emphasis is biochemical and molecular." (Sci Am)

"The contributors to the present volume are authoritative. . . . The book offers a fine source of information on the current status of research and concepts in the diverse aspects of neuroscience, and it will be very useful to serious students in these areas. Included are literature references for each chapter and name and subject indexes." J. H. Zar

Library J 93:2251 Je 1 '68 110w

Reviewed by E. S. Lennox

Science 162:1114 D 6 '68 750w

"The brain as a black box remains somewhat offstage, and models made by the simulators and the logicians are altogether absent. Within these limitations the work is very full indeed, and the distinction of so many participants almost—alas, not quite—guarantees the pertinence and richness of their papers. It is a study program of daunting weight and diversity."

Sci Am 219:142 O '68 360w

NEUTRA, RICHARD. Richard Neutra: buildings and projects, 1961-66; ed. by W. Boesiger. 256p il $20 Praeger

720

66-21771

The present book, the last in a three-volume series on Neutra's work, records his architectural achievements since 1961. Volume one, Richard Neutra—Buildings and Projects, 1923-50, was published in 1951. Volume two,

NEUTRA, RICHARD—Continued

Richard Neutra—Buildings and Projects 1950-1960, was published in 1959. Neutra's "approach to architectural design [consists of solving] whatever constructional problem crops up . . . with a view of bringing human warmth into the project. . . . This volume . . . provides . . . selection of Neutra's most recent works, ranging from private residences and apartment houses to stadiums, civic projects, and experimental industrial structures—in countries including Switzerland, Venezuela, India, and the United States." (Publisher's note) Bibliography.

Reviewed by Esther McCoy
Arch Forum 127:96 D '67 1300w

"Contains over 500 drawings, plans, and photographs in black and white, covering 40 projects around the world. There is a brief polyglot [English, French and German] text. . . . Short of original research these admirable volumes present the architect's oeuvre in authorized editions. For colleges and universities with any program at all in architecture, . . . [this] will be invaluable."

Choice 4:973 N '67 100w

NEVILLE, EMILY CHENEY. Traveler from ■ small kingdom; pictures by George Mocniak. 197p $3.50; to libs & schools $3.27 Harper

67-20584

"The 'small green kingdom' in which [the author] grew up was called simply 'the Place'; inhabited entirely by Cheneys—a dozen families of them—it was a solid, safe little island of orderly, comfortable living in the middle of a mill town, Manchester, Connecticut. To complete the isolation, the Cheneys had their own family school; and an abundance of cousins assured plenty of playmates for all. . . . Summers were spent in the Adirondacks." (Horn Bk) The author reconstructs those years in this autobiographical novel, "Grades four to six." (Library J)

"Children love to know what it was like 'when you were a little girl. With the storytelling skill and intuition that won her the Newbery award for It's Like This, Cat [BRD 1963], Emily Neville makes her childhood and its setting both real and appealing." Polly Goodwin

Book World p4 (children's issue)
My 5 '68 300w

"In a mood of mellow recollection, the author reconstructs with affection and indulgence the middle years of her childhood. . . . To a generation of children growing up only forty years later in a world accustomed to war, violence, speed, and technology, this almost uneventful re-creation of an extinct way of life may seem limp and unreal. Perhaps an adult, savoring the reminiscences and the evocative writing, can introduce the book." E. L. H.

Horn Bk 44:335 Je '68 220w

"The plot consists of the everyday activities of this scrawny, often sickly, yet active child. 'The Place,' the Cheney family compound, comes through exceptionally clearly, almost as the main character, in her story. The personality of the English governess is the strongest adult portrait among the parents, aunts, uncles and servants. Blemished by a self-consciousness in showing the development of a strain of social awareness in the child Emily, the story is also very slow-moving. It falls within the same genre as [Jennie] Lindquist's The Golden Name Day [BRD 1955] but is more matter-of-fact and in spite of its novelistic devices might be used to fill the ever-present need for autobiographies at the middle grade level." H. B. Quimby

Library J 93:2110 My 15 '68 200w

Reviewed by Polly Longworth
N Y Times Bk R p38 Mr 24 '68 200w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland
Sat R 51:41 My 11 '68 100w

NEVILLE, ROBERT C. God the creator; on the transcendence and presence of God; drawings by Beth Neville. 320p $3.50 Univ. of Chicago press

111 Ontology. Creation. God. Religion—Philosophy 68-13128

The author offers ■ "theory of creation that defends religion in the Platonic-Augustinian tradition for the contemporary world. . . . Neville orients his position with regard to contemporary alternatives—the existential philosophy of Paul Tillich, the neo-classical process metaphysics of Charles Hartshorne, and the speculative Aristotelian philosophy of Paul Weiss. . . . The author elaborates and argues for an abstract speculative theory of creation based on the dialectic of the one and the many; in doing so, he criticizes the views of Aquinas, Hegel, Royce, Weiss, and others. . . . [He] offers a way of coping with modern criticisms of the metaphysics of creation, arguing that a theory of creation is not only intelligible but is demanded by the very structure of intelligibility. [He] then applies the theory of creation to the practice of religion itself, applying abstract theory to certain fundamental phenomena of religion to give experiential support to the earlier arguments." (Publisher's note) Index.

Choice 5:787 S '68 120w

"While Neville makes it clear that his argument is primarily philosophical and only indirectly theological, I consider it one of the most substantial American contributions to the theological enterprise in many a year. . . . Arguing in the most rigorous tradition of speculative ontology, he presents ■ type of solution rarely met with in modern metaphysics; namely, the concept of God as creator of the world ex nihilo. . . . But his book yields much more than [an] admittedly abstract and difficult speculative schema: it integrates unrelated bits of our funded knowledge and experience. . . . Neville enters the lists with a serious challenge to the metaphysical adequacy of process philosophy, and he argues as cogently as Whitehead and Hartshorne at their best. His challenge is important because . . . it issues from a classical tradition whose credentials are unimpeachable but which has gone largely unnoticed in today's debate. . . . [His position] must receive long and searching attention." C. D. Hardwick

Christian Century 85:758 Je 5 '68 1200w

Reviewed by Anselm Atkins
Commonweal 89:354 D 6 '68 150w

"A learned and difficult, but rewarding treatise." William Gerber
Library J 93:84 Ja 1 '68 100w

NEVIN, DAVID. The Texans; what they are—and why 241p $5.95 Morrow 917.64 Texas—Social life and customs 68-22432

The author presents "portraits of a wide variety of present-day Texans . . . [from] self-made millionaires . . . [to] migrant farm workers. Topical themes include the violence of the people and the weather; . . . culture; . . . religion; . . . and background traditions—the Old South, Western, and Latin." (Library J) Index.

Christian Century 85:844 Je 26 '68 20w

"[This] sends a gullywasher through the 'howdy podner' image of this state's people and weaves an even taller tale—without exaggerating. . . . Wealth and power are still the major signs of success in Texas . . . [but] Nevin's concern for the poor is more easily expressed than his analysis of the powerful rich. . . . Although he could have organized the book more smoothly, he off and on gives the reader a feeling of not only what it means to be a Texan, but how it feels to be in Texas. . . . This subjective documentary . . . gives one a more realistic feeling about Texans than would a history or biography. It probably would have been a better novel, but then it would have been like other Texas fiction—unbelievable." J. A. Levine

Christian Science Monitor p9 S 24 '68 470w

Reviewed by T. M. Bogle
Library J 93:2486 Je 15 '68 150w

NEVINS, ALLAN, ed. Civil War books; a critical bibliography; ed. by Allan Nevins, James I. Robertson, Jr. [and] Bell I. Wiley; pub. for the U.S. Civil War centennial commission. 2v v 1 278p $11.50 La. state univ. press

016.9737 U.S.—History—Civil War—Bibliography 67-10687

The editors have excluded "manuscripts, articles, dissertations and theses, and works of poetry, drama, fiction, ■ well as other areas which they do not consider history in the 'more conventional sense.' Entries are limited by the availability of Library of Congress cards for books and pamphlets and by the accessibility of the titles to the respective compilers. . . . Annotations of from one to six lines have been made on the cards, which are reproduced ten to a page. This volume contains [approximately] 2,700 titles arranged alphabetically in seven categories, the first three of which are on military aspects of the war: 'Mobilization Organization, Administration, and Supply'; 'Campaigns'; and 'Soldier Life.' The others deal with prisons and prisoners of war, the Negro, the navies, and diplomacy." (J Am Hist)

"Volunteer compilers of the various sections range from the competent to the expert. It is quickly apparent that greater technical expertise in bibliography could have improved the publication. . . . [The editors have] eviscerated the [LC] cards by blocking out the tracing information, card number, and classification symbols in order to provide space for notes. Only in the case of Robertson's section on 'Military Aspects—Soldier Life' are the notes sufficiently descriptive, incisive, and evaluative even to begin to compensate for the loss of the omitted information. . . . The elimination of minor works, the inconsistencies in recording various editions, and, particularly, the exclusion of books (sometimes important and often hard to find) for which there are no printed cards can only be deplored; but the fact that such an overwhelming project was undertaken at all and that a coherent record has resulted from it deserves praise. . . . Of considerable value to all libraries, public and academic."

Choice 4:1228 Ja '68 260w

"A comprehensive and up-to-date . . . [bibliography] of the major works of Civil War historical literature. . . . [The titles in this] first volume are clearly and concisely treated." M. G.

Col & Res Lib 29:72 Ja '68 190w

"The section on soldier life has 1,347 listings of diaries, memoirs, recollections, reminiscences, compilations, unit histories, tales, and like materials. Thirteen of the first forty-four of these entries carry annotations denoting absolute or near uselessness of the material described. Four additional samplings indicate that one fifth of all the entries are without substantial value. Are these items history in the 'more conventional sense'? Why should they be included when from 34,000 to 54,000 items are excluded? . . . It is difficult to see how this work is to be of much value to either the scholar or the general reader." C. C. Mooney

J Am Hist 54:675 D '67 340w

"The editors promise a badly needed cross-reference index in the forthcoming second volume. This bibliography will be a boon to Civil War book collectors, but librarians may feel frustrated since the subject tracings have been removed from the reproduced Library of Congress cards." R. J. Havlik

Library J 92:3027 S 15 '67 130w

NEVITT, ADELA ADAM, ed. The economic problems of housing. See International economic association

A NEW catechism; Catholic faith for adults [tr. by Kevin Smyth]. 510p $6 Herder & Herder

238 Catholic Church—Doctrinal and controversial works. Catechisms. Theology 67-29673

"This book is an attempt to render faithfully the renewal which found expression in the Second Vatican Council. . . . Earlier catechisms looked for brief formulations which could easily be memorized. But the object of this book is to preach Christ's message through ordinary language, to set out its background at leisure, and to throw light on present-day questions by means of the gospel." (Foreword) The original edition of this book, De Nieuwe Katechismus, was commissioned by the Hierarchy of the Netherlands and produced by the Higher Catechetical Institute at Nijmegen in collaboration with numerous others. It received the Imprimatur on March 1, 1966, at Utrecht. Index.

"The arrangement of material is organic rather than systematic. . . . This makes for a less tidy but more living presentation than that found in most previously published catechisms. . . . The presentation of the Church's liturgy is not of a consistent quality, and while in the discussion of the Eucharist many things are well said . . . there are occasional lapses from a usually high level. . . . In the matter of Christian response to law, discussed at many points of the book, the treatment is almost invariably admirable. But on the question of divorce one could wish for greater clarity and for a more probing examination of 'indissolubility.' . . . The treatment of the Gospels, found in part three, 'The Son of Man,' is perhaps the most disappointing part of the book. It could almost have been written before the biblical revival in the Church. . . . While it is true that a catechism is not the place for extended exegetical study, it is hard to understand why so much was omitted. . . . [Nevertheless] one suspects that it will remain without peer for many a day." M. M. Bourke

America 118:160 F 3 '68 2500w

"It is simply impossible for a son of the Reformation to read the Dutch Catechism with hostility. Admiration and joy are the only proper responses. This work can only be saluted. . . . The Dutch Catechism makes the effort not only to be cordial but to build in Protestant insights and to build on Protestant contributions. . . . [Protestants] will do well to master this treatise, for they will discover where the abiding issues are to be found in the process of coming to know their brothers from the other side. . . . Consider its impact on traditionalist Catholics! Note the care with which the new is explored. . . . But consider also how well this care is subordinated to the determination to be relevant to the present age." B. A. Reist

Christian Century 85:400 Mr 27 '68 800w

"This catechism is new because the question and answer format has been discarded along with the technical, theological, and philosophical language which characterized so many similar works in the past. When a technical word is used, it is explained. . . . Even more striking than the change in language is the book's truly Christian concern with and understanding of people. It is a book for and about people rather than a summary of truths to be accepted on faith. . . . There is no list of commandments with the sins, mortal or venial, carefully enumerated. There is rather a discussion of various human situations and how a Catholic should or should not act in these situations. . . . The Dutch Catechism is new in the way it distributes the material. There are no airtight compartments. Faith, for example, is discussed in half a dozen different parts of the book. . . . The fundamentalism which characterizes the approach of so many Catholics to Scripture has no place in this [work]. . . . A very solid and temperate biblical scholarship permeates the entire text." Gerard Weber

Critic 26:76 D '67-Ja '68 3000w

"The authorized English edition of the revolutionary and controversial Dutch Catechism, which is now under review in Rome, has been banned in the meantime by Catholic bishops of the United States, and in some cities. . . . Experts say, however, . . . that the catechism is in every way a suitable guide to the meaning of Christian life in today's world. The Dutch have simply advanced further along the road toward liberalism than have some other countries. The catechism was in preparation throughout the years of the Second Vatican Council, and was compiled not only by theologians and biblical scholars but also by Catholic laymen." L. R. Etzkorn

Library J 93:85 Ja 1 '68 140w

"Intended for adults of university education and background. . . . Compared with much Christian speculation, the Catechism is on the whole conservative. This is shown, for example, in its treatment of the Divinity of Christ, the Apostolic Succession, and Holy Orders. The general approach to the thorny question of the historicity of Scripture is, as one would expect from such distinguished theologians, up-to-date and moderate. As for contraception, the liberal view is adopted. . . . Homosexuality is treated with a sympathy and compassion undreamed of a few years ago; whether it is a sin is not altogether clear. In the last analysis, this Catechism is neither Catholic nor Protestant. It is a tentative, necessarily unrealized, stretching out toward a Christianity which, we hope, one day will combine the best in both traditions." Magdalen Goffin

N Y Rev of Books 10:27 Ja 18 '68 4000w

TLS p66 Ja 18 '68 1000w

NEW Oxford history of music; 11v; v4, The age of humanism, 1540-1630; ed. by Gerald Abraham. 978p $22.50 Oxford

780.9 Music—History and criticism (54-12578)

The fourth in a projected eleven-volume work which replaces the original Oxford History of Music. "Crossing the traditional Renaissance-Baroque border year of 1600, the present volume identifies a period in which 'music changed its orientation from the divine to the human.' Instrumental and secular vocal forms, whose flowering marked this change, are the main topics; each is treated in an essay by a specialist. Among the contributors are Charles van den Borren, E. J. Dent, François Lesure, Higiní Anglés, Willi Apel, and Théodore Gérold." (Library J) Bibliography. Index. For volume one, Ancient and Oriental Music, see BRD 1958; for volume two, Early Medieval Music, BRD 1954; for volume three, Ars Nova and the Renaissance, BRD 1961.

"[This set] is to music history what the Oxford and Cambridge histories of English literature are to English literary history. It would be difficult to find a scholarly multi-volume history of music of comparable stature. . . . [It is marked by] comprehensiveness, consistency, evenness, and sheer readability. . . . [and includes] a list of contents in the companion series of phonorecords (History of Music in Sound). . . . [It is] a profusely illustrated and handsomely printed contribution." Choice 5:610 J1 '68 210w

"[This is] a brilliant survey. . . . Primarily for the music student, the book is nonetheless intelligible to a more general audience. . . . [However] it must be said that this volume fails to achieve one stated objective: 'to present music . . . as an art developing in constant association with every form of human culture and activity.' . . . A truly intercultural music history is yet to be written." Guy Marco Library J 93:1609 Ap 15 '68 240w Va Q R 44:clxxviii autumn '68 300w

THE NEW YORK TIMES. The New York times guide to listening pleasure; ed. and with an introd. by Howard Taubman. 328p $6.95 Macmillan (N Y)

780.1 Music—Analysis, appreciation. Music—Discography 68-27038

In separate chapters a number of music commentators for radio station WQXR indicate their musical preferences. Each has also compiled a discography of his choices: Opera, by Robert Lawrence; Orchestral music, by Martin Bookspan; Music of the baroque, by Igor Kipnis; Sonatas and chamber music, by Martin Bookspan; Piano music, by Jascha Zayde; Choral music, by David Randolph; The art song, by David Randolph; The musical theater, by Alfred Simon; Light music, by Robert Sherman; Jazz, by J. S. Wilson; Folk music, by Robert Sherman; Music from Latin America, by Pru Devon. Discographies. Index.

"While the contributors to this book pay deserved tribute to so many of the fine programs of WQXR, we find that the revised material we enjoyed as an accompaniment to the programs we loved contains value judgments too rarely supported by sufficient evidence. Even the general reading public for whom this guide is designed will realize the bias found in the lists of recordings. We may well agree, or disagree, with Robert Lawrence's statements about Madame Callas, Madame Flagstad, or Madame Kappel, and we may be charmed by his style. But overall, the various authors leave us with the impression that music is a pleasant pastime—it had better be more and mean more if it is to survive!" Baird Hastings

Library J 93:3143 S 15 '68 150w

"The average lover of 'good' music will probably feel . . . at home with the . . . standards typified in [this book]. The author's] . . . peevish and favorites are refreshing to note. For the 100-page discography each authority presents his choice of recordings; the result is a valuable check list of more than 1,600 discs." D. M. Glixon

Sat R 51:67 N 16 '68 80w

THE NEW YORK TIMES. Washington: the New York Times guide to the Nation's Capital; ed. by Alvin Shuster. 348p il maps $6.95 Luce, R.B.

917.53 Washington, D.C.—Description—Guide books 67-24129

"The volume is divided into two parts. Section I consists of essays by various authorities on the people of Washington, the Capitol, the Supreme Court, architecture, museums, and so forth. Special chapters are devoted to attractions for children, for teen-agers, and for the businessman. Section II is an alphabetical listing of things to do." (Library J)

"[Washington] visitors would do well to read this new and handsome guidebook before coming. It will also prove a useful companion while touring the city. . . . Good endpaper maps and 30 full-page illustrations add greatly to the book's attractiveness. There are a few minor inaccuracies, but all in all this is an excellent work that belongs in public libraries and Young Adult collections." Jack Goodwin Library J 93:752 F 15 '68 150w [YA]

"Written by the staffers of this newspaper, many of them veterans of the Washington bureau, this guidebook is an exploration in depth of the national capital. The neo-Roman points of interest are here, with detailed instructions on how to appreciate them. . . . But equal coverage is given to the Washingtonians themselves, homegrown and foreign, along with the evolution of the species and a prognosis of its development tomorrow. . . . Many vivid photographs round out a picture of a city unique among the world's capitals. A special section on advance planning, listing outstanding attractions alphabetically, permits the average visitor to use his time to best advantage." N Y Times Bk R p24 D 10 '67 160w

NEWBY, I. A. Challenge to the court; social scientists and the defense of segregation, 1954-1966. 239p $6.50 La. state univ. press 301.451 Negroes—Segregation. U.S.—Race relations 67-24419

A study of segregationist literature since 1954. The author, "a native of Georgia who is now professor of history at California State College, Fullerton, [contends that] . . . a group of social scientists are steadily engaged in the defense of segregation . . . and provide an aura of scientific 'proof' for the traditional segregationists. . . . [He examines the work of] Professor Henry E. Garrett, an authority on psychological testing. . . . The Garrett line, as quoted in this book, . . . that in educational testing the Negro scores below the white; hence the Negro has inferior mental abilities . . . [has been] used to counterattack the Supreme court decision ordering public school integration and other civil rights decisions. . . . [The author maintains that] 'segregationists must be taken more seriously if they are to be understood.'" (Sat R) Index.

Reviewed by Elliott Rudwick Am Hist R 73:1680 Je '68 200w

"Newby is literate and factual in his presentation. A worthwhile addition to any college library. [This] has a much wider range than Carmichael's The South and Segregation and greater breadth and understanding than [C.] Coon's The Origin of Races [BRD 1963]." Choice 5:565 Je '68 160w

"Since the Supreme Court decision of 1954, . . . men like Ernest van den Haag and Henry E. Garrett wittingly or unwittingly provided rationales for racists with their theories. Their work is disturbing and so is this book, but those who do not need to avoid unpleasant arguments should profit from seeing sophisticated, 'scientific' racism 'laid on the line.' Newby earlier wrote Jim Crow's Defense [BRD 1965], a masterful history discussing a similar theme through the years 1900-1930."

Christian Century 84:1466 N 15 '67 100w

"Newby's book has one possible serious weakness. He tries both to present an objective historical record of segregationist activities and to refute the validity of racist-oriented biology, anthropology, and social theory. . . . Nonetheless, in this reviewer's opinion, the resultant argumentative 'tone' somewhat compromises an otherwise fine book." A. H. Kelly

J Am Hist 55:187 Je '68 460w

Reviewed by Edward Margolies Library J 93:1014 Mr 1 '68 190w

"[An attempt to discredit] those who on scientific, moral, political, or constitutional grounds deviate in the slightest from a social-science 'authoritative consensus' which holds that the Brown decision is sacrosanct . . . and that the Federal Government is the most legitimate and efficient agent for defining and solving social problems. . . . Professor Newby concludes that a meaningful dialogue with 'ultraconservatives' (or, interchangeably, 'racists') has become impossible. If the unpleasant tone of dogmatic absolutism in his book is typical, then the channels of communication are indeed narrowing. It is discouraging to reflect how difficult, perhaps impossible, it would be to persuade him that van den Haag has interpreted Negro-white IQ comparisons with honesty and integrity, or that Kilpatrick is deeply concerned about the welfare and interests of America's Negroes." A. W. Green

Nat R 20:148 F 13 '68 950w

"The enemies of integration in American life did not disappear as a result of judicial decision or the Civil Rights Act. This is one of the telling points made by I. A. Newby, . . . in his valuable study." Herbert Mitgang
Sat R 51:32 Ja 27 '68 550w

Va Q R 44:lxxi spring '68 280w

NEWCOMB, THEODORE M. Persistence and change: Bennington college and its students after twenty-five years. See Persistence and change: Bennington college and its students after twenty-five years

NEWCOMB, W. W. The rock art of Texas Indians; text by W. W. Newcomb, Jr.; paintings by Forrest Kirkland. 239p maps $12.50 Univ. of Tex. press

709.01 Picture-writing. Petroglyphs 66-15697

During the eight years from 1934 "until Forrest Kirkland's death in 1942, [he and Lulu Kirkland] copied thousands of pictographs (and some petroglyphs) in many parts of Texas, among them the Big Bend area where the Rio Grande and Pecos River join in deep canyons, the vicinity of Hueco Tanks near El Paso, and the Canadian River valley in the Texas Panhandle. [The] copies represent a total of some 30 localities, many of them in nearly inaccessible canyons. . . . [The] director of the Texas Memorial Museum and professor of anthropology at the University of Texas has now collected [parts of] the Kirkland diaries and [some of the] watercolors, with ethnographic data on the same regions [into this volume]." (Science) Bibliography. Index.

"The most handsome volume on North American Indian rock art published to date, although the reproductions lack the aesthetic quality of H. Breuil's copies of Franco-Cantabrian rock art. . . . Newcomb has divided the material into five broad regional categories within which he attempts some chronological analysis. In fluent style he discusses the archaeological data presumably associated with the pictures, but he avoids any detailed discussion of the meanings of specific compositions . . . or of individual motifs. . . . However, [the book] is a valuable addition to a collection on North American Indian art and archaeology. The plates are arranged in such a manner that they accompany the pertinent text closely. . . . Useful to undergraduates and graduates interested in anthropology or comparative art." Choice 5:42 Mr '68 220w

"A fascinating book. The size of the volume, 9 by 12 inches, allows more space for reproducing the copies and adding pertinent comments on the same pages. The technical production of this book is beyond compare, and the book is (I would think) worth two or three times the quoted price. The count of 160 plates is somewhat short, for many plates reproduce several pictographic panels, and there are many excellent unnumbered field photographs showing shelters and caves in addition to environmental settings." A. D. Krieger
Science 159:293 Ja 19 '68 900w

"Since very little is known about the early Texas Indians who painted the rock pictures illustrated here, it seems almost better to speak of them entirely as art rather than as anthropology or archaeology. As art they are not quite as fluid as but rather more rich in design than the famous cave paintings in Lascaux and, as will all art, they have a magical quality which is still apparent. . . . One can only endorse [Newcomb's] statement . . . that the paintings are 'a treasure to be valued.'" Va Q R 43:clxxiv autumn '67 180w

NEWELL, R. W. The concept of philosophy. 163p $5.75 Barnes & Noble 101 Philosophy. Reasoning 67-86837
"A study of reasoning and of current philosophical notions on the subject." (Choice)

"Newell's chief stalking-horse is the Humean-Positivistic dogma that all reasoning proceeds either deductively or inductively. His arguments against the so-called 'analytic-synthetic dogma' place him squarely within the 'ordinary-language' tradition of British philosophy. His avowed mentors are Wittgenstein, Austin, Ryle, and Wisdom. Though the subject matter has been well covered, the clarity of Newell's prose and the depth of his analysis render this text far superior to [E.R.] Emmet's Thinking Clearly [BRD 1961] and John Wilson's popular Thinking with Concepts. . . . [It is] of the level of sophistication and style most suited to the college student with some knowledge of philosophy. Highly recommended." Choice 5:66 Mr '68 130w

"In the late 1930's, John Wisdom, of Cambridge, published a number of articles on the nature of philosophy which attracted a good deal of attention. . . . Now, thirty years after their first expression, his ideas on the subject form the substance of [this] rather grandiosely entitled book. . . . Mr. Newell's positive recommendations about the right conduct of philosophical inquiry are based on a very perfunctory survey of its established forms. There is an unfortunate congruity between his conviction that philosophy is an a priori discipline and his dismissal of the views that philosophical theses are inductions (a view ascribed to Hume), deductions (ascribed to the logical positivists), or verbal recommendations (a position once endorsed by Wisdom himself, until it was run into the ground by Professor Morris Lazerowitz). . . . So far as Mr. Newell is concerned the views of Ryle, Austin and D. M. Armstrong about perception might never have been formulated. . . . The same sort of myopia afflicts even more seriously the chapter on ethics." TLS p899 Ag 22 '68 950w

NEWHALL, BEAUMONT. Latent image; the discovery of photography. 148p il $4.95; pa $1.25 Doubleday

770 Photography—History 67-22460

The director of George Eastman House, the photography museum in Rochester, New York, discusses early experiments in the years 1839 to 1854. He "considers the work of four pioneers—Niépce, Daguerre, Talbot, and Herschel—and tells the . . . story of partnership and lawsuits. Included are some rare early daguerreotypes and calotypes, and an . . . explanation of the processes of photography." (Va Q R) Bibliography. Index.

"Frequent quotations from the inventors' own papers, aided by Newhall's unchallenged reputation as a scholar and photohistorian, assure the accuracy and organization we would expect from this author. . . . He wisely has chosen to emphasize the human element throughout this adventure. We see the principals as real people; we share their joys of discovery, suspicions, and failures. [This] is an engaging narrative which . . . is valuable to students and enjoyable reading for everyone." Choice 5:617 Jl '68 160w

"With great technical detail Mr. Newhall describes light-sensitive agents and the first experiments. His book will have strong appeal to students of photography and to scholars and specialists. . . . [The text is] literate [and] informative. . . . Recommended for collections on photography." T. W. Wright
Library J 92:414 N 15 '67 100w

Va Q R 44:lxviii spring '68 110w

NEWHOUSE, JOHN. Collision in Brussels; the common market crisis of 30 June 1965. 195p $5; pa $1.95 Norton

.332 European Economic Community 67-26064

The author "has probed the events, the personalities, and the forces involved and produced a narrative and analysis which . . . [attempts to show] the political condition of Western Europe. . . . Mr. Newhouse was correspondent for ABC and a staff member of the U.S. Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs." (Publisher's note) Index.

"A fine work demonstrating the interplay of general foreign policy and the affairs of the Common Market community. The general reader will be deeply impressed by the fact that certain events which are usually regarded as influential only in the realm of foreign affairs also have an important influence on Common Market deliberations. Mr. Newhouse uses as his prime example the actions of President de Gaulle. The one major criticism I have of this book is that it lacks a bibliography. The footnotes are sparse and do not adequately overcome this deficiency. This book will appeal primarily to specialists." Judah Adelson

NEWHOUSE, JOHN—Continued

Library J 92:3994 N 1 '67 180w

"[The author] knows about Paris, Bonn and Rome. He relates the crisis to Europe's, particularly France's, other political concerns. The result, alas, is that one cannot see the trees for part of the wood. He leaves out a great deal. He does not mention the fact that the third stage of the transitional period, together with majority rule, was due to begin on January 1, 1966. He does not quote the seven-point agreement that settled the crisis. . . . He mentions neither Hallstein's ludicrous pretensions to the status of a head of state, nor de Gaulle's petty spite towards his vanquished opponent. What happens next? Mr. Newhouse offers a lot of historical-defence-economic speculation."

TLS p364 Ap 11 '68 390w

NEWMAN, ARNOLD. Bravo Stravinsky. See Craft, R.

NEWMAN, BARBARA, jt. auth. Cooking for family campers. See Newman, J.

NEWMAN, JAMES. Cooking for family campers [by] James and Barbara Newman. 192p $4.95 World pub.

641.5 Outdoor cookery 68-13717

"The authors first tell you what to take along on your family outing and then show you how to cook tasty meals once you get there." (Publisher's note) Index.

"[This book gives] mercifully mundane hints for plain and fancy cooking-out-of-cans; how to make wood fires, how to cook edible plants, a list of dried foods and their sources for canoe trippers. . . . On the whole, a useful volume to slip into a teenaged camper's duffel-bag or to take along on a fishing trip." Gloria Levitas

Book World p4 Ag 11 '68 200w

"With the theory that camping should be fun for the whole family, the Newmans have provided an interesting book. . . . [of] recipes which they have collected for more than 20 years. . . . For those who enjoy novelties there are recipes for sourdough, jerky, and roast pig. This book is a necessary purchase for libraries serving campers." Judith Armstrong

Library J 93:1913 My 1 '68 100w

NEWMAN, JAMES R., ed. The Harper encyclopedia of science [rev ed]. See The Harper encyclopedia of science

NEWMAN, JOHN HENRY. Apologia pro vita sua; being a history of his religious opinions, by John Henry Cardinal Newman; ed. with an introd. and notes by Martin J. Svaglic. 604p $16.80 Oxford

230.2 Catholic Church—Doctrinal and controversial works [68-75872]

"The present edition is based on that of c.1886, taking account of as many earlier states of the text as the editor has been able to find. He has also had access to the incomplete manuscript extant at the Oratory, from which he has been able to print several substantial cancelled passages." (TLS) Index.

"Newman's Apologia is still the essential guide to a knowledge of the Oxford Movement; Svaglic's very much needed edition is certainly its definitive presentation. A lucid introduction briefly outlines Newman's career and the writing and reception of the Apologia, a work which William Longman told Newman needed annotation even in 1864. This text of the final Newman revision has been collated with extant parts of the original MS; the variant readings of the major editions have also been included. The notes—very succinct, thorough, and highly readable—contain sharply focused bibliographical information. Every library should have this edition."

Choice 5:794 S '68 100w

"Professor Svaglic has been at work on the edition for many years—the footnotes mention an article of his on the text which bears the date 1952, and there is even a reference to his doctoral thesis of 1949. The result has been worth waiting for. His introduction is searching and well balanced, and one department of it in particular shows the rewards of having waited—that which discusses the reviews received by the work both in its volume form and as its parts were appearing week by week."

TLS p139 F 8 '68 410w

NEWMAN, L. HUGH. Ants from close up; phot. by Stephen Dalton, and others. 112p $6.95 Crowell

595.7 Ants

67-12407

"The book begins by discussing the relation of the ants to other social insects, followed by a description of their anatomy, metamorphosis, and sex determination. The remainder of the book is devoted to sections on feeding, reproduction, care of young, colony formation, and aggression. . . . [A] chapter describes the development of parasitism. [Another] . . . describes the African driver ants and South American army ants, both of which have been [misrepresented in] exaggerated movies and horror stories." (Natur Hist) Bibliography. Index.

"Detailed photographs of ants carrying out their various activities are . . . clearly titled and well arranged in relation to the text. The photographs and format are similar to [E. I. Fanning's] Insects From Close Up [BRD 1966]. Recommended for the general reader." E. M. Cole

Library J 92:4426 D 1 '67 120w

Reviewed by M. L. Cooper

Natur Hist 77:71 Ja '68 260w

"Here is an up-to-date look at ants done un sentimentally by an experienced British writer on insect life, not at all technical but quite detailed. The photographs are remarkable, about 70 of them in black and white, mostly showing the ants 'close up' and big enough to see plainly." Philip and Phyllis Morrison

Sci Am 217:145 D '67 140w

NEWMAN, RUTH G. Psychological consultation in the schools; a catalyst for learning. 300p $6.95 Basic bks.

371.4 School psychologists

67-17392

A description of "the experiences of psycho-educator consultants in racially mixed public schools of Washington, D.C. . . . [The author contends] that consulting services are best when available on a continuing basis [rather than in a crisis]. . . . The consultants, who wrote various parts of the book, review the myths existing between white and black teachers, including that of superior Negro sexual and physical prowess. Special note was made of problems of communication among teachers, principals, counselors, nurses, and other school service personnel. Life space interviewing is stressed in which the consultants actually are involved in the classrooms where the action is." (Choice) Index.

"Refreshing assumptions were reflected in that the classroom teacher is not assumed to be a fool. . . . The book is not as specific or thorough as N. J. Long's Conflict in the Classroom. However, the descriptive statements are sufficient to communicate attitudes and methodology used by the consultants. The diaries of two teachers included rival Kaufman's Up the Down Staircase [BRD 1965]. . . . Would be useful for psychologists and counselors who dare, principals who are concerned, and teachers who demand."

Choice 4:1294 Ja '68 170w

"Vividly recounting experiences in . . . nursery, elementary, and junior and senior high, Dr. Newman, director of the Educational Services Institute of the Washington School of Psychiatry, presents a positive and practical point of view on psychological consultation. In case after case, one feels that the consultation was a prerequisite for rather than a mere catalyst to learning. The procedure of using group and individual interventions in on-the-spot consultation is hard work and no magic formula. The goal is to help children in trying situations and to create a more wholesome climate for learning. This book is recommended for education collections mainly, but it will also be of interest and benefit to parents who frequent public libraries." J. W. Stein

Library J 92:1829 My 1 '67 130w

NEWTON, ISAAC. The correspondence of Isaac Newton; v4, 1694-1709; ed. by J. F. Scott; pub. for the Royal society. 577p pl $38.50 Cambridge B or 92 (59-65134)

These letters range "in subject-matter from theology to monetary policy, from the . . . decaying relations with Flamsteed to the . . . dispute with Leibniz, from the projected 1690s revision of the Principia to the eventual 1704 publication of the Opticks." (TLS) This is the fourth in a projected series of seven volumes. Glossary of astronomical terms. Index. For volumes one, two and three see BRD 1960, 1961 and 1962.

"What is disappointing to the historian is the paucity of materials relating to Newton's growth, in the public eye, as a natural philosopher and statesman of science. We learn little, for example, of Newton's presidency of the Royal Society or of his short tenure as member of Parliament. Nor do we learn much about the publication of the Opticks. . . . Equally disappointing is the absence of any information regarding Newton's changing views on gravity. . . . Perhaps later volumes of the correspondence will provide further clues. Scott's edition is copiously, perhaps even too fully, annotated. The press is to be congratulated for the superb physical appearance of the book and for the inclusion of the six handsome plates." Robert Kargon

Am Hist R 73:1523 Je '68 330w

"In the tradition of Turnbull editing, Scott is continuing the correspondence relating to Newton. Like the previous volumes many letters which were neither written nor sent by Newton are included. Letters included are by Wallis, Flamsteed, Pepys, Halley, Godolphin, and others. . . . The mix of letters helps to convey excellently a fairly continuous account of events of these 15 years. Scott's notes are very helpful. No similar publication is available. An indispensable work for colleges."

Choice 4:1260 Ja '68 100w

"This fourth volume, though only slightly larger in pages than its predecessors, carries almost twice as many individual items. As a sign of the times, in the lapse of five years or so during the change of editors the price of the volumes has jumped to half as much again; but then no standard library or specialist researcher on Newton and his period can afford to be without constant access to this fundamental work of the highest caliber. . . . As usual with the Newton material . . . there is hardly a trace of the human being existing within this scientist shell. . . . [Apart from the] very extensive contributions to lunar theory, there is a fine dissertation on the quantifying of degrees of heat in the temperature scale, with astute experimental observations on melting points and other fixed marks in the range." D. J. de S. Price

Science 158:1298 D 8 '67 700w

"Like its predecessors, the new volume is a delight to handle. . . . Here we have displayed almost 300 letters and related writings by or to (or sometimes just about Newton). . . . With such a fascinating task before him, it is a pity that Dr. Scott did not draw more heavily on the results of recent Newtonian scholarship. Instead he takes a conservative, and at times almost prim, view of his subject. The coverage given to different topics in the commentary is markedly uneven, and some minor figures fare better than others so far as elucidation-by-footnote is concerned. Dr. Scott has also abandoned the practice of the earlier volumes, which gave useful tabulated information about where, if anywhere, the letters had been published before. But all these are only minor criticisms of a volume so long awaited, so sorely needed, so excellently produced, and so endlessly fascinating."

TLS p864 S 28 '67 1600w

NEWTON, ISAAC. The mathematical papers of Isaac Newton; ed. by D. T. Whiteside with the assistance in publication of M. A. Hoskin; v 1, 1664-1666. 590p il $40 Cambridge

510.8 Mathematics—History [65-11203]

"All the known mathematical papers of Newton except the trivia are to be published in an annotated and critical edition in eight . . . volumes. [This first volume contains an] introduction, [the] notations by Newton on Ough-tred, Viète, Wallis, and others, a . . . discussion and chronology of Newton's early researches in calculus, analytical geometry, the Cartesian subnormal, the fundamental theorem of calculus, the use of fluxions, theory of equations, trigonometry, and the early geometrical optics." (Choice) Index of names.

"Whiteside's notes are very helpful ■ is his method of assisting the reader to the modern equivalent wherever necessary. There is a name index but no subject index. For historians of science and mathematics, this volume is of unusual value since it discusses and gives Newton's writings of the period when he turned from annotating the work of others to his original work. Many of these writings have never been published. There is no other comparable work."

Choice 4:1132 D '67 140w

Reviewed by Carolyn Elsele

Science 158:245 O 13 '67 1300w

"Happily Whiteside brings to this assignment a rare combination of mathematical and linguistic ability and an abiding sense of history. He has had not only the patience to steep himself in the mathematical thought of another age but also the wit to discern the significance of each document in the light of Newton's development and currents of knowledge in the 17th century. In this edition each document follows the form of the original ■ closely as type allows, and Whiteside has been careful to keep separate his critical emendations and Newton's own formulations. Copious notes form a continuous commentary to help the reader follow Newton's mathematical argument, which is often extremely difficult for the uninitiated modern reader. . . . It is difficult to think of any other work in recent years that surpasses [this] in importance in the entire field of the history of science. It profoundly illuminates the creative process of science in a manner completely worthy of its subject." I. B. Cohen

Sci Am 218:134 Ja '68 5500w

TLS p665 Je 27 '68 2000w

NEWTON, ISAAC. The mathematical papers of Isaac Newton; v2, 1667-1670; ed. by D. T. Whiteside; with the assistance in publication of M. A. Hoskin. 520p $35 Cambridge

510.8 Mathematics—History [65-11203]

This second volume "continues the chronological reproduction of the mathematical papers known to exist. The years covered are the least known of Newton's creative development. Except for the 'De Analysis', all of the documents are here printed for the first time. Other writings cover analysis of properties of cubic curves and their classification by species, general properties and organic construction of curves, logarithmic computations relating to curves, observations on Kinckhuysen's Algebra, and geometrical construction of equations." (Choice) Index of names.

"Notes and introduction superlatively relate these texts to Newton's work on optics, chemistry, and to evidence for his possible priority in inventing the calculus, and early difficulties with Leibniz. Excellent for a college mathematics library."

Choice 5:376 My '68 130w

Reviewed by C. B. Boyer

Science 159:1345 Mr 22 '68 550w

"By far the most fascinating part of this volume deals with researches in the calculus. . . . [Because these] volumes present Newton in his earliest scientific development, they should attract the attention of all readers who may be concerned with the process whereby creative genius is nourished. It is particularly fascinating to witness the earliest manifestations of Newton's mighty intellect, because as a student he did not show that he was developing one of the most powerfully creative scientific minds the world has ever known. . . . Dr. Whiteside gives ■ many perceptive insights into Newton's complex personality and creative genius. These splendid volumes have been beautifully printed by the Cambridge University Press, who have exhibited an astonishing skill in coping with the complexities of Newton's mathematical style . . . special new characters have even been cast as needed for this most difficult and exacting typography."

TLS p665 Je 27 '68 2000w

NEWTON, IVOR. At the piano—Ivor Newton; the world of an accompanist. 309p pl $6.95 Crescendo pub. co.

B or 92 Musicians

[66-72204]

This book tells of the author's life and "career as accompanist for famous singers and instrumentalists [starting] with such legendary figures as Luisa Tetrazzini and Melba and [coming] up to . . . Kirsten Flagstad and Joan Sutherland." (Library J) Index. This book was first published in England in 1966.

NEWTON, IVOR—Continued

"[The author] knew intimately and worked with many of the renowned figures of the 20th-Century music world, but . . . his book is a disappointment. . . . Anecdotes and reminiscences of famous people . . . should be witty, interesting, or scandalous; Mr. Newton's are dull, and at times, pointless variations on hoary tales of the anecdotal repertoire. The book contains good extended pictures of Dame Clara Butt, Chaliapin, and Conchita Supervia, but too many artists are given only a few paragraphs which do no more than expand the text. Libraries should go back to Gerald Moore's Unashamed Accompanist [BRD 1944] and Am I Too Loud? [BRD 1962]." R. L. Enequist
Library J 93:3564 O 1 '68 170w

Reviewed by Rosalyn Tureck
New Statesman 73:53 Ja 13 '67 240w

"Newton has spent over fifty years working with [prima donnas] at close quarters: he recalls them not only with gratitude and affection but with an honest objectivity too. Their petty tantrums and vanities do not escape, and it all makes for entertaining reading. . . . Newton is for the most part content to stand aside as these great names hold the stage in turn, though naturally he tells more about himself in the opening chapters. . . . The most serious and valuable part of Mr. Newton's book comes at the end, in the form of an open letter to a would-be accompanist. . . . [His] advice is worth reading in detail."
TLS p703 Ag 4 '66 600w

NHAT HANH, THICH. Vietnam: lotus in a sea of fire; with a foreword by Thomas Merton and an afterword by Alfred Hassler. 115p $3.50; pa $1.25 Hill & Wang 959.7 Vietnam—Politics and government.

Vietnam—Religion 67-15652

A Vietnamese Buddhist scholar and poet pleads that the U.S. withdraw to self-defensive positions in the Vietnam war and allow formation of a coalition Vietnam government representative of the major Vietnam religious groups, which would negotiate with North Vietnam for the war's end.

Choice 4:1430 F '68 200w

"[The author] speaks neither for Saigon and the Americans nor for those committed to Communism. . . . He speaks clearly and articulately for the majority of his countrymen: those who are not politically aware but who do wish to preserve Vietnam's identity as an Asian, Buddhist culture. He carefully documents his viewpoint, noting critically the inadequacies of Catholicism, and concludes that in the American desire for quick solutions and in our too great willingness to oversimplify, we are only creating more Communists—not only in Vietnam, but also in the rest of the developing world. Though overpriced, this book deserves to be read and should be in all but the smallest collections." R. E. Will
Library J 92:587 F 1 '67 170w

NICHOLS, JOHN. Literary anecdotes of the eighteenth century; ed. by Colin Clair. 525p $19.50 Southern Ill. univ. press

828 Authors, English 67-23738

"A selection of pieces from the original (9v., 1812-15), a source of much biographical and literary information about 18th-century writers. Clair's introduction surveys Nichols' career and life." (Choice)

"No one can argue with many of the selections, e.g. Boswell, Dr. Johnson and John Nichols, Alexander Pope, but there is more important material in Nichols than the 500 pages selected for presentation here. . . . Since the selections have little editorial apparatus and no indication as to which volume of the original they were taken from, the work has no scholarly value. It can probably best serve as a general introduction to literary life in the 18th century for general readers and students of late high school and early college level.

Recommended for public, high school, and undergraduate libraries, but college libraries would need the whole set."

Choice 5:610 J1 '68 180w [YA]

TLS p726 Ag 10 '67 600w

NICHOLS, NELL B., ed. Cooking for company. See Farm journal

NICHOLS, PETER. The politics of the Vatican. 373p pl $6.95 Praeger

262 Papacy 68-11321

The Rome correspondent for The Times presents a history of the papacy "as a political institution and his evaluation of its place in the modern world. . . . He shows in detail how historical antecedents, beginning with the age of Constantine, have formed and still influence the papacy. He describes the structure and works of the Curia and analyzes the policies and politics of recent popes." (Library J)

Reviewed by C. P. Bruderle
America 119:137 Ag 31 '68 550w

Christian Century 85:427 Ap 3 '68 50w

Reviewed by John Horgan
Critic 27:62 Ag '68 1350w

"[This] is the best informed, most up-to-date account of the Vatican so far published. It includes the changes arising from the Second Vatican Council that are now slowly in progress; and it is also a remarkably perceptive study of the Vatican's perennial problem implied in the title: what are the right limits to the papacy's concern with politics? . . . For all Christians and students of current Christianity this is a deeply thought-provoking book."
Economist 226:42 F 10 '68 750w

"Although he admits that it is difficult for a non-Catholic to understand the papacy, Nichols's study of its history . . . does much to disprove his thesis. . . . His account of the relations of the Vatican with the Communist world is especially well done. Catholics will be offended by his gratuitous attack on the definition of the Assumption, but such lapses are few. His well-written presentation of a wealth of information and his balanced analyses are recommended for well-informed readers." W. C. Heiser

Library J 93:192 Ja 15 '68 140w

"[The author's] stance is that of a sympathetic but not uncritical observer . . . [and] his subject is the Papacy with the theology left out. Mr. Nichols is an acute observer, but from the outside. He has not used the Vatican archives, and his main interest is in the contemporary situation of an institution which has successfully weathered the storms of 2,000 years. He begins with an historical survey, but quickly moves to the present century and concentrates on the issues which confront the Catholic Church of today. . . . His surveys of the relationship with the communist world and of the birth control problem are particularly felicitous. . . . But by concentrating on the secular appearance of the Papacy, he fails to grapple with the central issue of the present dilemma, which is, to realign the theological insights of the church."

TLS p830 Ag 1 '68 330w

NICHOLS, ROY F. A historian's progress. 308p $6.95 Knopf

B or 92 U.S.—History—Study and teaching 68-12669

"In his life story the author tells of the influences that attracted him to his career; his personal and professional associations with his wife (also an accomplished historian); conceptualizations which guided him in his major writings; and his thoughts about the proper role a historian should play in intellectual inquiry. Two themes are given emphasis in the book, viz., Human behavior and the cultural concept of civilization." (Best Sell) Bibliography.

"[Nichols is] one of the country's most distinguished American history specialists who served on the University of Pennsylvania faculty for 40 years. The work is remarkably detailed as to names and places—obviously based on a well-kept diary. . . . The appeal of 'A Historian's Progress' will probably be limited to professionals and advanced students in the field. It is not the sort of work which will hold the interest of the average reader for long. Nonetheless, Professor Nichols has made an important contribution and his work should give him a place on every advanced shelf in American history." J. C. Dougherty

Best Sell 28:168 J1 15 '68 800w

Choice 5:1216 N '68 160w

Reviewed by Michael Kraus

J Am Hist 55:625 D '68 500w

"More important [than Mr. Nichols' personal autobiography is] the story of the development of his work and thought. . . . In much of this book he is concerned with explaining the way in which his books developed and their meaning to him. . . . [He] analyzes his theories on American political parties, discusses his interest in genealogy, gives his thoughts on graduate education and his views on the need for a broader interdisciplinary approach to history. Although graduates of the University of Pennsylvania will wish for more anecdotes on the school, . . . [this] book is essential for college libraries; it should also be in larger collections." Keith Eubank

Library J 93:1888 My 1 '68 230w

"Although [this] autobiography is repetitious in places and its language is often stilted and bland, it recounts worthily what it was like to be a gentleman and scholar in the generation just ended. Considered in a larger historical setting, 'A Historian's Progress' is an eyewitness statement about the shift from history-as-political-chronicle to history-as-social-science." H. F. Graff

N Y Times Bk R p29 J1 14 '68 330w

NICHOLSON, E. W. Deuteronomy and tradition. 145p $3.25 Fortress press

222 Bible. O.T. Deuteronomy—Commentaries 67-22200

"In this work, the outgrowth of a thesis, [the author] carefully evaluates the evidences for the relationship between Deuteronomy and Josiah's reformation, the traditions on which the book stands, Northern Israel, Judah, and the Deuteronomists. He discusses the date, authorship, structure, and unity of Deuteronomy." (Library J) Bibliography. Indexes of biblical references and of authors. General index.

"Professor Nicholson of the University of Dublin has made a real contribution to Deuteronomistic studies. . . . While many will differ with him in his viewpoint and conclusions, his work is original and should be thought-provoking." Shildes Johnson

Library J 92:3426 O 1 '67 80w

"Dr. Nicholson's book, a work of distinguished scholarship, will be welcomed by all Old Testament students. He not only offers a fully documented account of all the theories which have attempted to solve the historical and literary problems of Deuteronomy but also propounds an interesting theory of his own which deserves serious consideration. . . . It is most encouraging to find a piece of such admirable scholarship emanating from a member of the younger generation of Old Testament scholars."

TLS p843 S 21 '67 600w

NICOLSON, HAROLD. Diaries and letters; v3. The later years, 1945-1962; ed. by Nigel Nicolson. 448p il $8.50 Atheneum pubs.

B or 92 Great Britain—Politics and government—20th century. Great Britain—Intellectual life (66-23571)

This final volume covers the period between Nicholson's sixtieth and seventy-seventh years. It opens with 'Nicolson's frustrated efforts to return to Parliament. . . . [and describes among other events the] Nicolson series of broadcasts from Paris on the peace conference, the writing of the official biography of King George V, the birth of three grandchildren, and the sea voyages, the first of which was the basis for Nicolson's Journey to Java [BRD 1958]." (Publishers' Weekly) Bibliography. Index. For volume one, covering the years 1930-1939, see BRD 1966; for volume two, covering 1939-1945, see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by Maurice Adelman

America 119:569 N 30 '68 70w

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 222:150 O '68 40w

Reviewed by Ambrose Agius

Best Sell 28:306 N 1 '68 600w

"Any fellow-writer must be full of admiration and respect for the high standards [Nicolson] maintained; for his diligence, conscientiousness and reliability. . . . When I started reading the first volume of the Diaries I decided that their interest lay in the day-by-day picture they gave of the events of our strange time and the people who shaped, or were supposed to shape, them, but that as personal revelation they were disappointing. Now that I have finished reading the third volume I feel exactly the opposite—that as an account of our times they are banal and superficial, but that they convey with great, if unconscious, poignancy something of the tragic undertones in the upper social reaches of a society in dissolution." Malcolm Muggeridge

Book World p1 J1 21 '68 1900w

Christian Science Monitor p5 Ag 1 '68 550w

Economist 228:45 Ag 31 '68 370w

Reviewed by K. T. Willis

Library J 93:2479 Je 15 '68 140w

Reviewed by Kingsley Martin

New Statesman 76:260 Ag 30 '68 1000w

"This final volume . . . is as entrancing and well-edited as its two predecessors. . . . The three volumes of the diary register the daily oscillations of an acutely sensitive and almost excessively civilized mind over a period of 32 years from 1930 until 1962. They sparkle with that elusive attribute of exceptional personal charm no biographer can normally hope to recapture. . . . Nigel Nicolson has transformed an essay in self-revelation, and an exercise in contemporary history, into a polished work of compulsive human interest and literary art. . . . The diary presents a full-length portrait of a most happy and remarkable marriage, against the background of a celebrated garden that he and his wife created at Sissinghurst Castle, their Kentish home. . . . American readers should be warned that the diary reflects with unusual clarity certain obsolete assumptions, which some may resent, of the former European upper class." Philip Magnus

N Y Times Bk R p1 J1 28 '68 2050w

New Yorker 44:88 J1 27 '68 140w

"The late Sir Harold Nicolson, like all good diarists, reflected not only the personalities of his acquaintance and the events of his time, but himself as well. What he reveals is that wondrous creature, the English Gentleman—the best and worst qualities of the dying breed. Possibly because he saw himself as above reproach, he wrote with total candor, though never with malice; and even where his views are most deplorable, his integrity is disarming and refreshing. . . . In this as in the earlier volumes, Nicolson is seldom at his worst. On the whole, the volume is charming, full of the grace and insight that were his hallmarks as critic and biographer. The dominant note is darkened by his poignant sense of failing health and diminishing force. . . . The volume ends, not with his death in 1968, but with that of his beloved wife, novelist V. Sackville-West, in 1962. He hadn't the heart to go on." Saul Maloff

Newsweek 72:78 J1 15 '68 750w

Reviewed by Glendy Culligan

Sat R 51:34 O 19 '68 1350w

Time 92:85 Ag 9 '68 900w

"Nigel Nicolson has made some use of his own diary in this third volume, and of letters to and from him and his wife and a few others; but as before the main constituents are Harold Nicolson's own diary and the letters that passed daily between him and V. Sackville-West. . . . It is the presence of Harold Nicolson the observer, critic and castigator of Harold Nicolson the actor that gives the diary its continuing interest and redeems it. . . . Family affection could stand up to plain speaking. Husband and wife disagree. . . . Sons censure their father's wavering policies, berate his literary style. Nothing seems to be glossed over out of kindness. A clear-sighted judgment and astringent humour mark the editing of this record; particularly evident in the sharp summaries at the beginning of each year's entries. More than anything, these qualities convince us of the truth of this double portrait that Nigel Nicolson has composed from his parents' words. . . . This [last volume] adds to our knowledge of the endless strangeness and variety of the heart's affections."

TLS p911 Ag 29 '68 2600w

NICOLSON, NIGEL. ed. Diaries and letters, v3. See Nicolson, H.

NIEBUHR, REINHOLD. Faith and politics; a commentary on religious, social and political thought in a technological age; ed. by Ronald H. Stone. 268p $6.50 Braziller

170 Ethics. Christianity and politics 68-29097

"This volume contains 19 essays . . . written between 1930 and 1968 and published originally in a variety of journals, both popular and scholarly. The topics range from a consideration of 'Walter Rauschenbush in Historical Perspective' to . . . 'Johnson and the Myths of Democracy.' [The editor] has grouped these essays into [three] sections. In the first part Mr. Niebuhr deals with the social gospel, in the second with Christian social ethics, in the third with international affairs." (Library J)

Reviewed by J. C. Raines
Christian Century 85:1407 N 6 '68 370w

Reviewed by R. M. Brown
Commonweal 89:356 D 6 '68 80w

"Niebuhr is an impressively well-informed man who has a great gift for explaining complicated issues in simple and direct language. This book is recommended for academic libraries and for medium-sized to large public libraries."

Jack Clarke

Library J 93:3012 S 1 '68 160w

"[This book] begins with a number of Niebuhr's essays on religion, ends with some weighty pieces on recent politics, and holds the two ends together with a set of articles on how faith and politics are related. The linkage of these two fields is the main theme of the book. . . . [Niebuhr's] view of the relation of faith and conduct deserves the respect that is due to its advocacy by a great and good man. But many readers will feel difficulties. The first is that of penetrating the heavy brocade of abstraction that forms Mr. Niebuhr's style. If one succeeds in doing this, one runs into more serious difficulties with the thought itself. . . . When Mr. Niebuhr talks about politics, where his great intellectual gifts can have free play, he is always illuminating. When he talks about the relation of faith to conduct those gifts are held in check by the religious tradition in which he was brought up, which was profoundly suspicious of reason. The sage and the prophet are not equally emancipated." Brand Blanshard

N Y Times Bk R p10 O 6 '68 1300w

NIEDERHOFFER, ARTHUR. Behind the shield; the police in urban society. 253p $5.95 Doubleday

363.2 Police—U.S. 67-16896

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by Neal Milner
Am Pol Sci R 62:625 Je '68 900w

Reviewed by D. J. Bordua
Ann Am Acad 337:202 My '68 600w
Choice 5:274 Ap '68 220w

NILSSEN, JEROME. The drowning, the dancing. 165p $3.50 Fortress press

68-23990

"Jesse Christian, an Arkansas Negro living in Nortonville, Minnesota, is the center of a series of events that begins with a barn burning and progresses through abortion, brutality and murder." (Christian Century)

"A very fine first novel, this book deals with various ways people accept or reject individual guilt and thereby come to terms with the essential nature of moral failure. Although . . . the novel does not attempt to resolve any of the sociological problems currently fashionable in much modern fiction, the story incorporates some typically modern violent elements. . . . Of particular interest is the author's excellent handling of both the multiple first-person narrative points of view and the dislocations of the time sequence. In spite of the intellectual and technical complexity, the story is always engrossing and the reality of the characters never in doubt. Recommended for all contemporary fiction collections."

Choice 5:958 O '68 140w

"The book displays a timely interest in law and order, violence, minorities . . . and a timeless understanding of the ethos and mores of Nilssen's native midwest. . . . The author's style is contrived and uneven. . . . The protagonist of this allegory does not, alas, come through as fully dimensional, as a real flesh and blood man, and the last thing today's white man needs is an effete, black, dead symbol. But in spite of these shortcomings the reader will be challenged by the dual interest of events, characters and setting on the one hand, and on the other the holy glimpses they convey. . . . This book will make fine reading for anyone . . . involved in sifting adult principles and compromised behavior. The mirror which Jerome Nilssen holds up to us . . . is painfully accurate and revealing." D. W. Stump

Christian Century 85:1222 S 25 '68 410w

Reviewed by Dolores Tambellini
Library J 93:4308 N 15 '68 130w

"[This] novel needs a lot of work. Nilssen writes reasonably well, scene by scene, . . . but the scenes add up to a mess. If only the young man could have integrated all his good things—for he does have some talent in pungent expression. . . . Nilssen's idea for a story may be good enough . . . but in this novel everything happens not as any consequence of what went before but because the author needs each extra bit of horror to prepare us for the Easter death of Jesse Christian after he enters the church and upsets the collection plates. However, there is not much of Jesus in Jesse, even when he prepares a feast in the presence of his enemy; he is more like Sidney Poitier." Thorpe Menn

Sat R 51:40 S 21 '68 410w

NISH, IAN. A short history of Japan [Eng title: The story of Japan]. 238p il maps $6 Praeger

952 Japan—History 68-16796

"In the early chapters, the [author] deals with prehistory, the Heian period, the protracted period of civil war, leading [to] . . . unity under the Tokugawa family. He . . . discusses the factors underlying the Meiji Restoration and the subsequent modernization of the country. From 1894, the story is caught up in a succession of wars and incidents that culminate in the conflict with China beginning in 1931 and World War II. Two final chapters are devoted to the occupation and economic recovery of Japan after 1945." (Publisher's note) Glossary. Annotated chapter bibliographies. Index.

"Dr Nish is an historian and presumably takes it for granted that his readers know what the Japanese are and have been like. If they do, then the historical abstractions and group analyses in which this book abounds will be as intelligible as they are extremely intelligent. . . . Dr Nish is much better with policies than with people, as has already been clearly demonstrated in his 'The Anglo-Japanese Alliance' [BRD 1967]. Probably, then, the right answer for the general reader is to take on this impersonal history after reading, say, 'Japan Past and Present' by E. O. Reischauer . . . and perhaps one of the attempts at nothing more than character interpretation like 'The Kimono Mind' by B. Rudofsky [BRD 1965, which] . . . would help to make Dr Nish's work easier and more intelligible going."

Economist 227:50 Je 15 '68 430w

"[Dr. Nish's] account is generally friendly to the Japanese; he emphasizes the cooperation of Japan and the United States in the postwar period and ignores or understates areas of friction. The book is directed to the tourist, the general reader, and the beginning student." Muriel Weins

Library J 93:2003 My 15 '68 120w

"A sober, thoughtful account with two-thirds of the text devoted, justifiably enough, to the modern age—that is to say, to the years since the middle of the nineteenth century. On the policy of the Meiji oligarchy the author makes a point that seems as fresh as it is valid, for it has received no great emphasis in previous studies of Japan by British specialists. He suggests that the Meiji leaders adopted the wrong priorities for the nation's future development. . . . On another matter, somewhat neglected by those who write about present-day Japan, Dr. Nish is equally interesting. He refers to spiritual aridity as the main weakness from which Japan suffers at the present time. . . . In a study so careful and well-balanced it is disappointing to encounter a certain number of errors and ambiguities."

TLS p919 Ag 29 '68 850w

NISHIDA, KITARŌ. Intelligibility and the philosophy of nothingness; three philosophical essays; tr. with an introd. by Robert Schinzinger. 251p $5.50 East West center press

181 Philosophy. Philosophy, Japanese

66-6244

This is a "reissuing of the Tokyo edition. (The first edition, published in Tokyo, 1953, however, states "Translated and introduced by Robert Schinzinger in collaboration with I. Kōyama and T. Kojima.). . . [The introduction] is divided into six chapters: (1) 'The Difficulties of Understanding,' (2) 'The Historical Background of Modern Japanese Philosophy,' (3) 'Nishida as the Representative Philosopher of Modern Japan,' (4) 'Being and Nothingness,' (5) 'Art and Metaphysics,' and (6) 'Philosophy of History.' The last three chapters are meant to introduce the readers to the main tenets of Nishida's three essays included in this book." (J Religion) Glossary.

"Schinzinger has interjected too much of himself and in a very confused manner; he seems not to understand either Japanese or English. Nishida has something to say, but he is not given the opportunity in this book. Not recommended for any library."

Choice 4:635 S '67 60w

"Those who have had no previous exposure to modern Japanese philosophy will benefit from Schinzinger's 'Introduction.' . . . [This volume] presents excellent samples of Nishida's philosophical reflection. Western readers who find it difficult to follow Nishida's thought in English translation will be comforted by the fact that many Japanese readers are also baffled by his logic and thought pattern. . . . But, if readers should patiently follow Nishida's statements, they will find him very rewarding. They will learn, for example, that his idea of Nothingness is derived from the Zen Buddhist tradition of 'pure experience.' . . . Nishida's concern with the present is further elaborated in his last essay, 'The Unity of Opposites.' . . . Indeed, his notion of the distinction between culture and religion, as well as his view of the disjunction-conjunction relationship between God and man, will be read with great profit by many Western thinkers on these subjects." J. M. Kitagawa

J Religion 48:79 Ja '68 1000w

NISSONSON, HUGH. Notes from the frontier. 215p $4.50 Dial press

335.95694 Agriculture, Cooperative. Israel 68-14994

The author records his experiences during four weeks in the summer of 1965 "on a kibbutz in northern Galilee, under the Syrian heights, and a return visit he made at the end of the June 1967 war." (Sat R)

Reviewed by J. J. Shapiro

Book World p10 S 8 '68 480w

"In this book with its unpretentious title and deceptively simple story line . . . a small miracle happens. Somehow, here in capsule form, in everyday language . . . the whole history of the Jewish people is reviewed—all hopes, fears, doubts, reenacted in the lives of these few but infinitely various people from all parts of the world and in the lives of their children who have never known any other. . . . The freight of feeling that these lucid pages carry is great; the people who come vividly to life in their daily occupations, the food, the sights and sounds and smells of the country become known in infinite detail and the picture that emerges of the author's wife, Marilyn, is engaging to a degree—almost a figure of joyous comic relief. . . . When you start this journal don't be deceived by the easy, quiet tone of voice. There is passion here, and excitement, and belief which in the end is compelling, almost hypnotic." K. G. Jackson

Harper 236:90 My '68 300w

Reviewed by S. L. Simon

Library J 93:1153 Mr 15 '68 100w

Reviewed by Bebe Morehead

Library J 93:2741 J1 '68 110w [YA]

"Nissenson's account focuses on the nature of the communal settlement and the motivations of its people. Much of it is familiar in the popular literature of the kibbutz experiment, but the account also moves beyond the oft-described stoicism of these settlers. . . . [The author] has not written a war book, however. It seems in fact to fall between fiction and non-fiction. Its characters are real enough, but they do not involve our emotions. Each tells his story, but as a group they do not become any more the parts of a whole than do beads on a string. The author has produced a primer on kibbutz life, but only a primer, and it is as stark as the life it describes. The addition of its postwar finale brings it up to date but not to life." James Feron

N Y Times Bk R p16 Ap 28 '68 1250w

"Nissenson (author of the highly praised short-story collection A Pile of Stones) [BRD 1965] is calm, probing, and truthful. He doesn't editorialize or lecture us. In neo-classical New Yorker style he reports what he has seen and heard, and he does so honestly, movingly, and naturally. . . . Combining a novelist's interest in people and a reporter's inquiring gaze, the author gives us kibbutzniks talking informally, bluntly about idealism and practicality, Utopia and reality, past and present. . . . It is not that Nissenson is intent on painting a bleak picture of kibbutzniks; he simply presents them as they are. . . . [A] flaw in Nissenson's book is its blandness, the tight, tedium-making monotone that even his unpretentious, graceful prose sometimes fails to overcome. But any minor criticism is dwarfed by the pleasure of reading such a good book on Israel. When people ask me now what life on a kibbutz is really like, I have a ready answer: read [this book]." Joel Lieber

Sat R 51:42 Ap 13 '68 700w

NIST, JOHN. The modernist movement in Brazil; a literary study. 223p $5 Univ. of Tex. press

869.1 Brazilian poetry—History and criticism 65-27537

"Professor Nist sketches the literary scene in Brazil leading up to the 'Modern Art Week Exhibition' of 1922, at which Modernist poets first were introduced. Then he takes up individual poets in turn, giving many examples of their verse in [translation]." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"Well written, [this book] covers the literary output of the last 45 years in Brazil, with its major emphasis upon poetry. Modernismo is presented as ending an undue emphasis on the past or upon provincialism, and Nist buttresses this position with many comments upon artists and prose writers as well as poets. Selections of modern Brazilian poetry (in excellent translation) bear out the basically cosmopolitan nature of the modernist movement in the literary field. . . . A valuable reference work for any course in modern world literature or for more specialized courses in Brazilian literature."

Choice 4:1250 Ja '68 150w

"This is a scholarly study by a graduate professor of English and linguistics at Auburn University, who spent a year as Fulbright lecturer in Brazil. . . . Samplings from authors like Bandeira, Drummond de Andrade, and Jorge de Lima should interest most readers. Recommended for University and large public libraries." Lois Huish

Library J 92:2412 Je 15 '67 130w

NIVER, KEMP R. Motion pictures from the Library of Congress paper print collection, 1894-1912; ed. by Bebe Bergsten. 402p $27.50 Univ. of Calif. press

016.79143 Moving pictures—Bibliography. U.S. Library of Congress, Motion Picture Division 66-28789

An "annotated subject (e.g. documentary, peep show) index [to 3,000] 'bromide paper copies' of films placed with [Library of Congress] for copyright during 1894-1912. . . . Entries state, where possible, cast, length, date, features, contents." (Choice) Subject and title indexes.

"No book has made a similar contribution to film history (many of the clips have never been seen by contemporary scholars), and that history may change because of Niver's emulsifying and documentation. Cinema history collections cannot get along without this book (prints of the films are available from L.C. at cost)."

Choice 4:1368 F '68 110w

"Until a special category was established by the Copyright Office in August 1912, motion pictures were entered as photographs. Copyright deposits were submitted by the claimants in many forms which often included paper prints of complete films. These paper prints have now been transferred to film and are available for study. . . . The salvaging of these films and their cataloging is an achievement important not only for research in motion picture history but in social history as well. . . . It should be made clear that the paper print collection represents only a fraction of what was actually produced from 1894 to 1912. About 8500 film titles have been identified in the copyright record for the period. . . . But it is wonderful that this large collection has been saved and there is much that may be learned from it. The catalog is of prime importance to all libraries that use films or collect materials for research into their history." G. D. McDonald

NIVER, K. R.—Continued

Library J 92:2802 Ag '67 320w

Reviewed by Dean Albertson

Social Studies 59:281 N '68 360w

TLS p270 Mr 14 '68 750w

NIZAN, PAUL. Aden, Arabie; with a foreword by Jean-Paul Sartre; tr. from the French by Joan Pinkham. 159p $6 Monthly review

915.3 Aden—Description and travel. Europe—Civilization 68-13653

Originally published in 1931. The author tells in this, his first book, how he 'left school to travel, embittered by the propagandist basis of bourgeois-controlled education and determined to shake from his feet the dust of a decadent Europe. In Arabia he did find an exotic charm, but its attraction for him was overwhelmed by the cruel discovery that men are divided into masters and slaves everywhere." (Library J)

"Nizan—philosopher, rebel, promising literary talent before his untimely death during World War II—has become a symbol of the uncompromising revolutionary fervor of the European Left in the 1920's and 1930's. . . . Sartre lauds Nizan as the one pure voice of a lost generation. . . . This book is a strange mixture of the elegant prose of a sensitive traveler and the impassioned social protests of a committed foe of injustice. An interesting book for larger college and public libraries." Arthur Curley

Library J 93:2000 My 15 '68 200w

"[This book] is under-cooked, unpruned, and self-indulgent. . . . The Preface . . . is not one of Sartre's better essays. There is much rhapsodizing over the various violences of youth, a subject on which both Sartre and Mlle. de Beauvoir become increasingly misty-eyed as time goes by. More interesting are the main sections on Nizan himself. . . . [The] fear of betrayal, by surrender to the bourgeoisie, is identified by Sartre as central to Paul Nizan. . . . [The book] is a crescendo of antibourgeois invective, sometimes fine invective. It is not a travel book in any conventional sense. . . . [It] ends with an oath of hate. It is to be war in every waking instant against the bourgeois. . . . It is not hard to see the fear of treachery which pervades this book: both the fear of being betrayed and the fear of betraying. . . . It has been said that [this work] makes a good text for the European student rebels of today." Neal Ascherson

N Y Rev of Books 11:20 Ag 1 '68 850w

"Sartre writes in an introduction almost as long as the book itself (which is really a long essay) a defence of Nizan which is at once a biography, an analysis of Nizan's thought, and an explanation of the tense, angry [book. It] . . . was a young philosophy student's first embittered cry against a world which, as he saw, had been bestialized by money and the dehumanizing slavery to which men submitted themselves to get it. He chose the hot colonial port of Aden as a focus for his essay; it was 'Europe compressed.' . . . His description of life endured solely for commerce reminds us of both Camus and Malraux. In fact, this essay in misery and spiritual anguish is a kind of embryonic first statement of Camus's 'L'Etranger' [BRD 1946] and 'La Peste' [BRD 1948]." Guy Davenport

N Y Times Bk R p10 Je 30 '68 700w

TLS p986 S 12 '68 450w

NOAH, HAROLD J. Financing Soviet schools. (Columbia univ. Russian inst. Studies; Columbia univ. Teachers college. Comparative educ. studies) 294p $8.50; pa $3.95 Teachers college press

379 Education—Russia

66-29416

This is a "study of details of the method and results of Soviet educational finance. After a

. . . preliminary description of the Soviet formal educational structure, Noah examines in depth the sources of funds for Soviet education, educational budget theory and practice." (Choice) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"Extensive reliance is placed on original Soviet documents, 12 of which are translated and included in appendices. Extensive statistical data, seldom more recent than 1961, are contained in 35 comprehensive tables. The bibliography is comprehensive and includes numerous foreign sources. . . . There is no comparable work in English and, although it is marred by too many footnotes of material that should have been incorporated in the text, it will be useful both to economists and to specialists in comparative education interested in financial developments in the U.S.S.R."

Choice 5:388 My '68 200w

"The work provides the first systematic study of Soviet school financing. An important conclusion . . . is that, popular opinion in the West notwithstanding, general education was treated much more generously than higher and secondary specialized education in the Soviet Union during the last decade. . . . The authorities have instituted a considerably more uniform level of provision and public expenditure than have the states of the United States."

J Pol Econ 76:159 Ja '68 200w

"[Noah] shows that the federal and state governments provide the bulk of financial support (about 80 per cent). His chapters on (Education and the Soviet Budget,' 'School Estimates and Budgets,' and 'Teachers Salaries and Earnings' are definitely the most interesting and explain in great detail the various steps from federal to local government units. . . . This small book has definite reference value; apart from tables and graphs, it includes extensive appendixes with salary schedules and other materials, up to now not easily found in English. The many lengthy footnotes and a detailed index contain a wealth of source materials." H. H. Bernt

Library J 92:2562 Jl '67 150w

NOBÉCOURT, JACQUES. Hitler's last gamble; the battle of the Bulge; tr. from the French by R. H. Barry. 302p pl maps $8.95 Schocken

940.54 Ardennes, Battle of the, 1944-1945

67-20897

The author, a correspondent for Le Monde, discusses both the military and the political aspects of the Battle of the Bulge. Bibliography. Index. Originally published in 1962 as Le Dernier Coup de Dés de Hitler.

Reviewed by Martin Blumenson

Am Hist R 73:1190 Ap '68 550w

"This book is recommended for reading with caution. Its ease of presentation and interest of narration may lead astray anyone who too willingly accepts the too glib evaluations which it contains." Elbridge Colby

Best Sell 27:375 D 15 '67 600w

"We have already had J. Toland's Battle: The Story of the Bulge [BRD 1960] and [R. E.] Merriam's Battle of the Bulge. . . . Nobécourt's book does not simply repeat what Toland and Merriam have already written. . . . Nobécourt puts more emphasis on the planning, the actions and the mistakes of the Germans. . . . [Moreover, he] lays more emphasis on the psychological factors involved in this battle . . . attempting to show the decisive roles personalities played in the outcome of the combat. So far as showing what part the relations between Hitler and his generals played, he has rich material." F.-A. von der Heydte

Book World p3 D 24 '67 850w

Choice 5:1208 N '68 170w

"Mr. Nobécourt tells the story of the Battle of the Bulge as a competent journalist. . . . [His book derives its] interest from the way he traces developments in the fighting forces and in the high commands of both sides. . . . His bibliography is extensive, given in three languages, and he makes effective use of the occasional personal interview. He keeps his narrative moving smoothly, summarizes skillfully, and uses direct documentation with good effect. Occasionally he presumes upon the reader by presenting . . . ostensibly verbatim conversations without giving sources. A book which veterans of the Bulge will read with interest." E. V. Sutherland

Library J 92:3039 S 15 '67 280w

NOBLE, DAVID W. The eternal Adam and the new world garden; the central myth in the American novel since 1830. 226p $5.95 Braziller 813 American fiction—History and criticism
68-12839

Discussing eighteen novelists from Cooper, Hawthorne and Melville to Mailer, Baldwin and Bellow, the author of Historians Against History (BRD 1966) "treats these figures in the context of the New World as a Garden of Eden in which the founders of America and the European emigrants after they sought refuge from the wickedness of the Old World. . . . All our major novelists, he argues, have made this myth their central concern, and they have either condemned it or tried to prove its validity." (Library J)

"Both the strength and the weakness of this book may be attributed in part to the fact that it is a study of the American novel by a professor of history. Experts in American literature are likely to find it derivative and critically naive. . . . There is a certain freshness about [the] approach, but Noble does little more than offer top-of-the-head interpretations of 18 novelists whose works so conveniently fit his thesis. . . . Because Noble has all too easily found what he was looking for, it is doubtful that this otherwise stimulating book will stir up much enthusiasm among other professors of English or history." (Library J)

Choice 5:624 J1 '68 200w

"Noble's study throws light not only on agrarian-urban myths but also on the way in which historians and novelists have served as the jeremiahs and salvation-preachers in American culture."

Christian Century 85:172 F 7 '68 90w

Reviewed by N. J. Karolides

J Am Hist 55:396 S '68 460w

"[Mr. Noble's] idea, needless to say, is not a new one. . . . [His] contention is that the 'dream' of the escape from time and history is an insidious one. . . . [He] makes too many glib generalizations that a closer examination of the criticism and scholarship would have undoubtedly caused him to modify or correct. . . . [and] loses the reader's confidence by his superficial treatment, and in too many instances, gross simplification of a very complex subject. For public and academic libraries where appeal will be to informed laymen, scholars generally, and specialists in the field." Arnold Smithline

Library J 93:754 F 15 '68 290w

"The virtue of [this] book is that it consolidates the insights of modern criticism and provides an important overview of the development of the Adamic myth through the work of the major American novelists. . . . There is a monotony about Mr. Noble's findings which might suggest that he has sacrificed subtlety for an easy coherence. Yet in many of his studies of individual writers he displays a remarkable sensitivity to literary values and provides fresh interpretations. . . . It is only in his treatment of immediately contemporary writers that Mr. Noble's views seem seriously open to question." J. W. Aldridge

N Y Times Bk R p20 My 12 '68 1450w

NOGUCHI, ISAMU. Isamu Noguchi: a sculptor's world; foreword by R. Buckminster Fuller. 259p il col il $20 Harper

730

67-22505

The Japanese-American sculptor "recounts not only his experiences, but his reaction to them in his creative attitude and acts. He touches on different aspects of his work and discusses his fascination with form and space. . . . He has [collaborated] with Martha Graham, designing sets for the dance in which the set becomes a part of the choreography. He has also done playground equipment, some industrial design, and architectural compositions." (Library J) Index.

"As a history of work done and methods used, the book is unusual and highly interesting. One must be grateful for it, but it nags at the mind by raising questions that the author does not answer. Behind the abstraction and cool practicality of Mr. Noguchi's prose one detects, or seems to detect, the presence of a quite different person—a demonically energetic basher and hewer, a hotheaded experimenter, a man of odd history, wide travel, interesting acquaintance, and a certain gift for high-minded imbroglia. Mr. Noguchi refuses to introduce this fellow." Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 221:114 My '68 200w

Choice 5:1298 D '68 70w

"In the introduction Buckminster Fuller points out that Noguchi is a complex being—Oriental and Occidental, scientist and artist at the same time. Noguchi is himself conscious of his divided heritage and draws strength from both. . . . The book, which includes excellent photographs, is highly recommended for art libraries; it will appeal to general readers." Julia Sabine

Library J 93:2233 Je 1 '68 210w

"In studying his autobiography, one is surprised to learn how many up-to-the-minute esthetic preoccupations Noguchi's work has anticipated. The involvement with theater, with architecture, with industrial products, with environment are all very much part of the present art scene. It is no doubt due to his Japanese heritage that he is able to bring to settings or objects of daily life—a garden in the city, a simple lamp, a children's playground—a sense of elegance and refinement. . . . The generous selection of illustrations in the book details that refinement throughout Noguchi's career." J. R. Mellow

N Y Times Bk R p6 My 5 '68 1100w

TLS p864 Ag 15 '68 350w

NOLAN, KEVIN O., ed. The best of Myles. See O'Brien, F.

NOLEN, CLAUDE H. The Negro's image in the South; the anatomy of white supremacy. 232p $6.50 Univ. of Ky. press

301.451 Negroes—Southern States. U.S.—Race relations. Discrimination 67-17843

The author "has surveyed the history of anti-Negro propaganda from slavery days to the present." (Library J)

"[This] regional study is invaluable for an understanding of the roots of prejudice."

Christian Century 84:724 My 3 '67 60w

"Nolen has identified the major contradictions and paradoxes that have plagued southern racial thought. While he frequently does no more than cite these conceptual inconsistencies, . . . his ability to refer to them at timely points throughout his monograph shows a breadth of understanding about the effects of prejudice on the white man's belief structure and the consequences that followed for public policy and action. . . . The book offers little that will be new to the specialist, but it is the sort of study that belongs in the hands of every undergraduate and general reader. Nolen refers to an impressive array of southern comment, which he enriches with information from numerous contemporary sources . . . and from later historical studies. Unfortunately [he] makes no consistent attempt to differentiate between major sources reflecting southern thought and less relevant fugitive comments. Finally, one might wish that Nolen had given more attention to the attitudes of southern Negroes themselves in response to white beliefs." R. L. Zangrando

J Am Hist 55:153 Je '68 430w

"Carefully documenting his quotations from primary sources, [Nolen] presents convincing evidence that prejudice against Negroes has been largely inculcated rather than being inherent in the white man. . . . This study is recommended for most libraries." R. F. Kugler

Library J 92:1504 Ap 1 '67 130w

NOLL, BINK. The feast. 70p $4.50 Harcourt

811

67-25068

The author of The Center of the Circle (BRD 1963) presents a second book of poems, some of which have previously appeared in The Antioch Review, Commonweal, Saturday Review, and other publications.

"Develops the theme of man at odds with the manifestations of life. . . . While the themes are valid, the volume contains the major flaw in readability: many of the poems make their point in an obscure fashion—or not at all. The texture and variety of the language proves Noll's grasp of poetic forms and diction, but the general reader could not gain much from the poetry."

Choice 5:778 S '68 100w

"A trilogy of collected poems under three cycles: 'The Calendar,' 'The Nude,' and 'The Feast.' [Noll's] poetry is vibrant, alive, and redolent with the musk of humanity and activity. Sexual metaphors, images, and themes course through the cycles in recurrent patterns that echo Baudelaire. The dominant image is the self, the sensualist body. . . . Alive, pulsating episodes are intermingled with lyric passages and prose pieces. The message is an old one, but forcibly and refreshingly restated: that old devil libido dominates and destroys the debilitating forces once again." M. I. Prochilo

NOLL, BINK—Continued

Library J 92:2584 J1 '67 180w

"A curiously uneasy wedding of verse and prose suggests that Noll has yet to find a form that he can call his own. . . . He attempts to take in, or at least take account of, experience at several levels of consciousness; but the discursiveness of his language reveals that his real flair is for intellectual poetry." S. F. Morse
Va Q R 44:507 summer '68 170w

NORDLINGER, ERIC A. The working-class Tories; authority, deference and stable democracy. 276p $8.95 Univ. of Calif. press

320.5 Conservative party (Great Britain).
Great Britain—Politics and government—1945- 67-19219

"Why does one-third of the English working class vote for the Conservative Party and, in doing so, provide that party with half of its electoral strength? In seeking answers to this question, Mr. Nordlinger attempts to relate the workers' voting behavior to their preference for leaders of high social status, their acquiescence toward political authority, their normative acceptance of a hierarchical political system, their partisanship, and their attitudes toward class conflict and class solidarity. . . . [In this survey based] upon a national survey that he conducted in 1964, Mr. Nordlinger analyzes the factors that conditions worker's behavior patterns. . . . [and seeks to] demonstrate how the worker's attitudes toward political authority help to shape the British political system." (Publisher's note) Index.

Reviewed by Frank Bonilla
Am J Soc 74:85 J1 '68 550w
Choice 5:1368 D '68 240w

"[The author has] attempted to account for the working-class Tory. To say that he has conspicuously succeeded where others have failed would not, unfortunately, be true. However, his book seems well designed to keep the discussion going. The data of Nordlinger's study come chiefly from interviews with several hundred manual workers—Labour voters as well as Conservatives—living in a number of urban constituencies. . . . He is fascinated by the complex patterns of political attitudes which his survey data can be made to reveal; but he shows surprisingly little interest in investigating how attitudes and allegiances are created and sustained. . . . [This book which] begins as promising political sociology ends in tendentious, and rather unsophisticated political philosophy." John Goldthorpe

New Statesman 73:690 My 19 '67 950w

"The author's factual findings are of great political interest, though his summarizing of the pattern of class distinction in British society now has a slightly out-of-date look. He probably underrates the influence of the meritocratic thesis upon changes in attitudes towards speech, education, and opportunities for achievement in Britain today. And, unfortunately, towards the end of the book, the linguistic fog which bedevils so much useful sociology comes rolling over meaning. . . . Nevertheless, the work has much interest for the general reader, and will no doubt be devoured with avidity in the political research centres."

TLS p437 My 25 '67 650w

NORDSTROM, CARL. Society's children: a study of resentment in the secondary school [by] Carl Nordstrom, Edgar Z. Friedenberg [and] Hilary A. Gold. 209p $4.95; pa $2.45 Random house

370.19 Students. Human relations. High schools 67-15464

The authors "seek to determine whether there might be an unrecognized process by which schools actually do something to students . . . to stifle enthusiasm, to undermine fortitude, and to discourage the development of self-mastery." (p.10) Bibliography. Index.

Choice 5:103 Mr '68 110w

"The analysis is penetrating, unorthodox, and calculated to infuriate. . . . There are few who would not read [it] with profit. . . . The impact and clarity of the book would have been markedly greater had it not been so cluttered with the paraphernalia of pseudo-research. . . . [Moreover,] the principal outcome of the study is certain from the beginning. . . . Nevertheless, neither of these matters has greatly diminished the book's considerable value. Its great strength is found in such passages as the one in which a school is described as a . . . compound of forces [rather than] the product of an educational philosophy. . . . [There is a striking] section in which majority rule is identified as a source of alienation in schools. . . . In a similar fashion, what is termed 'the equality principle' is subjected to scrutiny which is in sharp contrast to conventional wisdom." A. D. Kesselheim

Harvard Ed R 38:196 winter '68 1800w

"[This book] probes the disquieting possibility that schools may be inculcating values derived from weakness or fear and unconsciously abetting their transformation to feelings of stuffy, moralized success inimical with a productive post-school life. Data compiled from forced-choice questioning at nine high schools in a variety of settings verify a more than casual urge on the part of adolescents to accommodate conventionality. The sample, admittedly, is small. Elegant research design and a happy balance of narrative and tabular reporting combine, though, to make this volume a must for anyone who ever confronted a high school class or chaired a staff meeting." John Calam

Sat R 50:74 D 16 '67 100w

NORMAN, CHARLES. The case of Ezra Pound. 209p il $5.95 Funk

B or 92 Pound, Ezra Loomis

The biography of the American poet who lived in Italy where 'he espoused Fascism, preferring Mussolini's totalitarianism over Roosevelt's socialism. During World War II he broadcast subversive propaganda against the United States in general and FDR and Jews in particular. Excerpts from these broadcasts, his subsequent incarceration, and trial for treason with its . . . verdict of insanity form the major part of this book. Mr. Norman . . . has updated an earlier account [Ezra Pound, BRD 1961] to include Pound's release from custody and return to Italy." (Library J)

"This is the latest, and best, book on Pound's trial for treason. Mr. Norman includes much documentary material, which he allows to speak for itself, including certain transcripts, etc., previously classified. In his Foreword he writes: 'There was no victimization. What is open to question is the incarceration, seemingly for life, of an accused man who had not been tried. This aspect of the story is fully covered here as is the government's case, which appears to have been formidable.' The long background of Pound's mentality prior to his treasonable broadcasts is expertly traced, and the aftermath of the trial is succinctly outlined, in all cases with selections from letters and documents supplying the grist."

Am Lit 40:433 N '68 120w

"The background is cursory: the new material adds little to [J.] Cornell's The Trial of Ezra Pound [BRD 1967]. Not as concise or as balanced as [G. S.] Fraser's Ezra Pound, it is good enough for casual readers and browsing shelves but not for serious Pound students."

Choice 5:1132 N '68 140w

"This book will interest scholars and neophyte lawyers, and it is useful for college and large libraries. A luxury for smaller libraries holding a biography of [Pound,] W. C. Kiessel
Library J 93:81 Ja 1 '68 140w

"Norman concentrates on Pound's broadcasts and the legal proceedings that resulted in his being institutionalized. . . . [His] approach is largely that of a casebook. He reproduces, among other documents, the transcript of the testimony of four psychiatrists who found Pound to be in a paranoid condition at the time of his indictment for treason. Norman believes that 'A glance at their testimony will show how hard the government tried . . . to find a basis for putting Pound on trial.' But my reading of the cross-examination of the psychiatrists by the prosecuting attorneys, as well as the judge's charge to the jury investigating the question of Pound's sanity, indicates that the government was not trying especially hard to have Pound brought to trial. . . . Behind Norman's decision to allow 'the documents to speak for themselves . . . there seems to lie more hostility to Pound than anything else.' Alan Holder

Va Q R 44:337 spring '68 500w

Reviewed by C. L. Mowat
Engl Hist R 83:639 J1 '68 750w

Reviewed by David Owen
Pol Sci Q 83:471 S '68 600w

NORMAN, E. R. The conscience of the state in North America. 200p $6.50 Cambridge

322 Church and state in the U.S. Church and state in Canada [68-10473]

The author interprets "the comparative history of the relations of church and state in Canada and the United States in the light of similar experience in the British Isles. . . . After commenting . . . on the neutrality of the state, the author shows how the separation of church and state actually occurred in the United States and Canada. . . . [His thesis is] that the leading dissimilarities were . . . chronological. He then discusses the effects of separation on state and church, . . . anti-Catholic tradition, the reorganization of the churches . . . [and] the problem of religion in the . . . schools of both British North America and the United States." (J Am Hist) Bibliography. Index.

Choice 5:1360 D '68 240w

"[Norman] makes an attempt to establish common ground for American and English readers by reminding each side of important truisms. However, [he] seems to want to push one thesis out of proportion to his evidence—that the American experience is absolutely derivative. Perhaps the chief dissimilarities of church and state relations in the three communities . . . are merely chronological, but this does not completely take the edge off the unique features of these relations in the U.S. Otherwise the book is generally well researched and informative. . . . Norman is strongest in his knowledge of English and Canadian history. . . . [His] section on religion and the universities in the U.S. is somewhat dull and lackluster compared to the actual events in this area." G. H. Shriver

Christian Century 85:426 Ap 3 '68 600w

"It is a rewarding experience to read E. R. Norman's interpretation. . . . Norman's thesis is very engaging, and for most readers his evidence will be convincing. All scholars, before making further generalizations on the history of the separation of church and state in either the United States or Canada, should read Norman's stimulating volume." C. J. Kennedy
J Am Hist 55:385 S '68 500w

NORRIS, J. A. The first Afghan war, 1838-1842. 500p $15 Cambridge

958.1 Afghan wars [67-21962]

The author undertakes to challenge the view that the first Afghan war was "both immoral and a blunder." (Choice) Bibliography.

"The book will be of interest to students of European foreign policy as well as to those in Indian history. It is the only modern attempt to deal fully with all aspects of the war, and the bibliography mentions most of the important sources."

Choice 5:390 My '68 110w

"What Mr. Norris has done is to go right back to the sources. . . . These researches enable him to set the actions of Lords Auckland and Ellenborough, as Governors-General, in the right perspective. . . . [and to show] that it is no longer possible . . . to look upon the War as the result of knavery, muddling and incompetence in India. The thing must be viewed in a far wider perspective; it cannot be condemned as a mere 'unjust aggression'. . . . [There is] a refreshing absence of cant in the author's matter-of-fact treatment of controversial affairs. . . . This important book will certainly take its place, among the standard authorities on the fortunes of the British in India during a particularly critical period."

TLS p249 Mr 14 '68 550w

NORTLEDGE, F. S. The troubled giant; Britain among the great powers, 1916-1939. (London. Univ. London school of economics and political science. Publication) 657p maps $17.50 Praeger

327.42 Great Britain—Foreign relations. World politics 66-26556

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Am Hist R 73:1158 Ap '68 700w

NORTON, ALICE MARY. See Norton, Andre

NORTON, ANDRE. Octagon magic; il. by Mac Conner. 189p $3.95; lib bdg $3.86 World pub.

67-13822

"According to local legend, the odd-looking eight-sided house harbors a wicked witch. But 11-year-old [Canadian] Lorrie, an orphan now living with her aunt [in the United States], discovers this is untrue when she hides there one day to escape the teasing of three boys. Lorrie thus meets Miss Ashmeade, a wise, dignified old woman who teaches Lorrie fine sewing and more important, how to accept changes in her life. This is accomplished with the help of a magical doll house, which is an exact replica of Octagon House, and a hobby horse on which Lorrie journeys back in time to discover the history of the house. . . . Grades four to six." (Library J)

"Miss Norton has depicted well Lorrie's adolescent confusion. Any girl who has had a cherished doll broken will share Lorrie's sense of desolation when her last tangible link with the secure past she remembers is shattered. Teenage girls will certainly recognize themselves in Lorrie's classmates; her aunt, who works all day and can 'mother her' only weekends and evenings, is also a familiar and well-drawn figure. Though the author is more successful in creating the present milieu than in re-creating the past, the adventures in which Lorrie participates, especially those involving the runaway slaves and the wounded Confederate soldier, are most exciting." Rosemary Sprague

Book Week p13 J1 9 '67 420w

Reviewed by M. L. Birmingham
Commonweal 87:177 N 10 '67 50w

Reviewed by Dorothy Jones
Library J 92:2656 J1 '67 110w

"Ideally, fantasy and reality should reach the same level of intensity and maturity. Fantasy loses its potential power if the real background, though convincing itself, is also in some senses too lightweight for it. For this is the chief criticism to be made of Andre Norton's interesting and accomplished [book]. . . . [It is] a very subtle and delicate story; in which little is explained but everything explicable; in which the overtones, the implications are fascinating. The fantasy is marvellously controlled. . . . You are slid imperceptibly from one world to another, never sure how and when the transition will come. Similarly you are given no simple answers. Miss Ashmeade has all the moral severity of her generation; but this is part of her character, not merely the simplistic morality which [the book] didactically expressed in the everyday background of school life. . . . It is as if the fantasy world frees Miss Norton's adult sensibilities—whereas in the real world she is audience-conscious and afraid of ambiguity and uncertainty. It seems a pity in this sometimes illuminating and beautiful book, like mouthfuls of porridge in syllabus."

TLS p584 Je 6 '68 400w

NORTON, ANDRE. Operation time search. 224p $3.95 Harcourt

67-17156

Ray Osborne, a young "American photographer, blunders into the charged area [of an experimental time machine] and finds himself plunged back to the mythic age of Atlantis. He becomes involved in hostilities between the barbaric city-state and [the inhabitants of the lost continent of Mu, a] more humane contemporary—while still in the clutch of longing for his own lost space in time." (Commonweal) "Grades eight to twelve." (Library J)

Reviewed by P. J. Henniker-Heaton
Christian Science Monitor pB13 N 2 '67 120w

"Like much science fiction, this example is most interesting for its plot and its crucial gimmick. . . . This is a high-tension thriller." M. L. Birmingham

Commonweal 87:181 N 10 '67 80w [YA]
Horn Bk 43:760 D '67 200w

"With Miss Norton's usual skilled writing, solid construction and sympathetic characters, this book is a pleasure to read and to recommend. . . . Osborne is captured by an Atlantean hunting party, then rescued by the gentle Muriens, skilled in occult and telepathic arts, for whom he becomes a valuable spy, venturing finally into the heart of Atlantis. There is little here of the provocative speculation, insight or satire which characterizes the best adult science fiction, just a good moralistic adventure story (with a slightly surprising end)." M. A. Dorsey

NORTON, ANDRE—Continued

Library J 92:3202 S 15 '67 150w

NORTON-TAYLOR, DUNCAN, ed. Time inc. See Elson, R. T.

NOSSACK, HANS ERICH. The impossible proof; tr. from the German by Michael Lebeck. 218p $4.95 Farrar, Straus 68-14912

This novel is an account of a marriage and its disintegration. It describes a murder trial which a man, trying to comprehend himself and the apparent disappearance of his wife, conducts in his mind during a sleepless night. The judge joins the prosecution, and the defendant finds himself misunderstood, but through his testimony the truth about his marriage is gradually revealed. Originally entitled Unmögliche Beweisaufnahme, published in the volume, Spirale, Roman einer schlaflosen Nacht, 1956.

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams
Atlantic 221:136 Ap '68 90w

"Man's nagging awareness of the provisional quality of his existence (which is becoming one of the clichés of the sagging Sixties), as well as his dreary isolation from his fellows, constitutes the purported theme of Nossack's work. This quality is indeed apparent . . . but is lost in wordy, trivial introspection, the narrator making himself monotonous as he proceeds to an unrewarding conclusion." W. H. Archer
Best Sell 28:6 Ap 1 '68 240w

Reviewed by Richard Freedman
Book World p14 Je 9 '68 600w
Choice 5:1136 N '68 190w

"From the position of the accused [the narrator] comments on his feelings of alienation and dread which have resulted in an anxious life of monotonous boredom. Essentially his life is a state of living death, of trying to appear like other men, but with no hope, no aim, no end in sight. . . . Mr. Nossack, a sensitive and talented writer and winner of several literary prizes, should be represented in all college libraries. Smaller public libraries will need to consider the fact that unrelieved Angst with every little action will make the book unappealing to the general reader." M. E. Kelley
Library J 93:1163 Mr 15 '68 170w

Reviewed by Guy Davenport
Nat R 20:403 Ap 23 '68 410w

Reviewed by Lore Segal
New Repub 158:23 Je 29 '68 1650w

Reviewed by J. P. Bauke
N Y Times Bk R p4 Mr 17 '68 900w

"This work will probably occupy a place of some prominence in future critical chapters, however provisionally written, on the chief European connoisseurs of annihilation—Kafka, Hesse, Musil, Camus. Moreover, this edition has the not inconsiderable advantage of being well Englished—the prose is graceful and precise, sometimes even elegant. . . . Notwithstanding the tissues of innuendo, nerve-wracking circumstantial evidence, and obsession with trivial objects, [this] is a brilliantly sustained piece of fiction in which Nossack often successfully explains metaphysical realities with physical words. He is probably trying to create what is increasingly known as the 'language of silence,' but his prose is sharp and vigorous too, richly aphoristic and paradoxical." E. M. Potoker
Sat R 51:23 Mr 30 '68 650w

Reviewed by D. J. Gordon
Yale R 58:125 O '68 850w

NOTRE DAME, INDIANA. University philosophical institute for artificial intelligence. Philosophy and cybernetics. See Crosson, F. J., ed.

NOURISSIER, FRANÇOIS. The French; tr. from the French by Adrienne Foulke. 309p $6.95 Knopf

914.4 National characteristics, French. France—Civilization
67-18626

"This is a survey of the French by a Frenchman. . . . He discusses and illuminates such topics as the attitudes of Frenchmen and French women toward past glory and present rejuvenation, toward foreigners and themselves, toward beauty and General de Gaulle, toward the city of Paris, the provinces, and the difficulties of being French." (Publisher's note)

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams
Atlantic 222:106 Jl '68 60w
Best Sell 28:153 Jl 1 '68 240w

Reviewed by C. W. Morgan
Christian Science Monitor p13 S 5 '68 300w

Reviewed by M. E. Kelley
Library J 93:2516 Je 15 '68 130w

Reviewed by Michael Harrington
New Repub 159:24 Jl 20 '68 1550w

"Because Nourissier, a Paris-born novelist, essayist and critic, is the antithesis of a pedantic theorist he has tried, and to a great extent succeeded, in this masterly feat of nuance; that is, of being both a tourist inside France and a distant spectator, who may nevertheless be French. Face to face with France, he has found the state of sociological grace that one might call interested indifference. In the first place, [his] treatise is not addressed to the French, but to foreign readers and assumes nothing a foreigner normally does not know. Allusion is banned, at least that which is only for internal use.

The author covers all sections of French life: family and politics, economy and culture, demography and militarism, rural wilderness and urban slums, their collective psychology and their variety. It is his keen sense of this variety that keeps [him] from being dogmatic. . . . [He] has the rare talent and the rare discretion of making his reader think, instead of doing his thinking for him." J.-F. Revel
N Y Times Bk R p14 Ag 18 '68 1450w

"It would be a pity if this were overlooked because it was written before the recent turmoil in France, for it includes witty, lively reports on long-term characteristics of France and of various kinds of Frenchmen. . . . Then, too, in some ways it foreshadows (and partly explains) the rebelliousness. In its early chapters, the author's complacency about France under de Gaulle seems unrealistic; no place since Eden has been that satisfactory to its inhabitants. The later chapters, which are more critical, mention some national-planning decisions—for instance, France decided to increase the production of cars rather than build new schools—that Nourissier regards as mistakes."

New Yorker 44:120 Ag 24 '68 120w

Reviewed by B. C. Shafer
Sat R 51:25 Ag 3 '68 490w
Time 92:78 Jl 12 '68 650w

NOVAK, MICHAEL. A time to build. 493p $8.95 Macmillan (N Y)

230 Theology
67-23484

These essays "include studies of modern theologians and philosophers (Tillich, Bonhoeffer, Reinhold Niebuhr, Lonergan); reports on Rome during sessions of the Vatican Council, and speculations about what American Catholicism will be like after the Council has taken effect; articles on birth control, chastity, and sexual morality; an effort to come to a moral conclusion about our involvement in Vietnam, and examinations of the differences and similarities between the Protestant and Catholic churches." (Sat R) Index.

Reviewed by Charles Chatfield
Christian Century 85:267 F 28 '68 600w

"What is important about this edited collection of essays on many subjects is that it gives us an inclusive picture of the range and direction of the change taking place in the thinking of Roman theologians. . . . Mr. Novak is undaunted by the crumbling of the intellectual and cultural structures of Christendom. . . . [His] vision of the reconception of Christian faith in our era includes a prescription for a further shift toward secularity. . . . His concentration on this-worldliness and on America makes it all the more regrettable that Novak does not show any awareness of the spirit and meaning of Judaism, either for what it is in itself or as a resource for his undertaking. He does, to be sure, speak with great admiration of the Jewish capacity for creative cultural achievement in the common life. But [he] seems to feel no need for dialogue." J. C. Rylaarsdam
Commentary 45:79 My '68 2950w

"[This book] is insightful, relevant and enhanced by a free and easy style. . . . It is good to see the unity in variety which characterizes [the authors'] thought. Here we encounter a thinker who doesn't make a cult of change but accepts it and subjects it to analysis. [His] book has the merit of offering fruitful suggestions for directing our participation in the becoming of humanity, for our partaking in God's ongoing revelation of Himself. . . . A jump into [the] book is like a refreshing swim—a few cold waves slap you in the face and bring back the sensation of moving in the real world." Mary Daly

Commonweal 88:601 S 6 '68 600w

"This is a stupendously diverse collection of essays, lectures and articles which have appeared in previously published books and in a wide variety of periodicals, ranging from Concillium to The Saturday Evening Post. . . . Mr. Novak is outspoken, serious, capable. For large public and academic libraries, and for the serious student of religion and world affairs." L. R. Etzkorn

Library J 92:3426 O 1 '67 140w

"In one essay after another Novak presents the views of today's young liberal Catholics, who are badly frightening many of their bishops but who are in most cases moving the more enlightened members of the hierarchy to recognize them, if for no other reason than that the future seems to be cast in their language and style. . . . It is interesting to note that Novak's essay on the 'new nuns' presents with special enthusiasm two Orders that have had bishop trouble in the reasonably short time since the article was written. . . . Michael Novak makes many of his readers feel that they are conservatives. 'Feel' is the important word here, because afterthought about much of what Novak has written ends in at least some agreement. Why, then, the negative reaction? It could be Novak's solemnity [of style in writing]. . . . If you have reservations about such a style, you may still want to plow through the essays for their current significance." P. K. Cuneo

Sat R 51:34 Ja 6 '68 550w

NOVICK, JULIUS. Beyond Broadway: the quest for permanent theatres. 393p pl $7.95 Hill & Wang

792 Theater—U.S. Theater—Canada

68-18847

Including "such organizations as the APA, ACT, Lincoln Center, the Negro Ensemble Co., the American Place Theatre and the New York Shakespeare Festival, Mr. Novick . . . visited, observed, investigated, and evaluated more than 50 [resident professional] theaters [three of which are in Canada] which are striving to become permanent institutions. . . . His evaluations are composed of reviews of two or more productions offered by each theater considered, a brief discussion of that particular theater's history, aims, overall program of operation, general level of work, philosophy, and its significance as a force within the surrounding community." (Library J) Index.

"The word 'impressions' is the key to the book. . . . Novick has given us an honestly personal reaction to the American regional theatre. . . . He is an impressionistic reporter whose sketches are valuable in that they may bring a well-trained but still intuitive mind to bear on current theatrical problems. . . . A subjectively factual book about theatre is not that rare but 'Beyond Broadway' is, to date, one of the best of the lot." L. C. Schneider

Best Sell 28:201 Ag 15 '68 700w

"[The author's] admittedly subjective approach possesses not only a lively strength but some doubtful aspects. There seems a certain calculation in the sprinkling of quotes containing dirty words. Based on contributions to the Nation, the Village Voice, Harper's, and other publications, the material contains glaring instances of insufficient editing for book presentation. Finally, however, the shortcomings are outweighed by the service the book performs." Roderick Nordell

Christian Science Monitor p5 Ag 1 '68 600w

"While deploring the dearth of scripts of quality being discovered, developed, and mounted by these theaters, and acknowledging other existing shortcomings which vary from theater to theater, Mr. Novick nevertheless finds much to admire, and his book leaves one with a sense of the force that is at work in theaters throughout the country. . . . [He] has conveyed his findings in a concise, entertaining, highly readable style, offering a book of enormous value to those who cannot go out across America to see for themselves the current theatrical revolution." M. B. Raines

Library J 93:2519 Je 15 '68 320w

Reviewed by Carol Kalamaras

Library J 93:[3339] S 15 '68 100w [YA]

NOWELL-SMITH, GEOFFREY. Luchino Visconti [publ in assn. with the British film institute. 192p il $4.95; pa $2.95 Doubleday

791.43 Moving pictures—Production and direction. Visconti, Luchino 68-12995

This volume in the Cinema World series discusses the work of the Italian director whose films include Ossessione and The Leopard. Filmography.

"Handsomely bound, richly illustrated, neatly printed, [this] volume contains a filmography, an introduction, a detailed and documented treatment of [the] director's films, and an explorative investigation into [his] philosophies and techniques. . . . Off to a brilliant start, the Cinema World series should enrich and enlarge interested film audiences everywhere." J. J. Quinn

Best Sell 27:422 F 1 '68 100w

"[This] is an almost totally useless book. It is shot through with sophomoric structuralist and auteur-theory notions that produce swaggering phrases but shed no light. . . . It should be no surprise . . . that the grand conclusion to which this book huffs and puffs is that Visconti's films 'reveal the world in a particular guise . . . how it can be perceived and experienced by a particular individual at a particular time.' That, apparently, makes them 'works of art.'" John Simon

Book World p7 My 26 '68 470w

Reviewed by G. D. McDonald

Library J 93:1650 Ap 15 '68 170w

Reviewed by John Coleman

New Statesman 75:46 Ja 12 '68 80w

"[This is] a handsome and stylish production. [It] has the problem of dealing with a director who was not so long ago the height of fashion and has now slipped badly. . . . Naturally Mr. Nowell-Smith thinks that Visconti's present low reputation is unjustified, and makes valiant attempts to restore the balance."

TLS p16 Ja 4 '68 200w

Va Q R 44:lxixiv spring '68 60w

NOWELL-SMITH, SIMON HARCOURT, ed. Letters to Macmillan. See Macmillan & company, limited

NUGENT, WALTER T. K. Money and American society, 1865-1880. 336p $7.95 Free press

332.4 Money—History 68-10793

"In the first two thirds of the book, [the author] describes and analyzes the rhetoric and ideology of the principal interest groups in the United States between 1865 and 1873 and also provides a narrative of monetary events here and in western Europe. In the remaining portion of the book he follows the same pattern in dealing with the years 1873-1879." (J Am Hist) Chronology. Index.

Reviewed by P. B. Trescott

Am Econ R 58:992 S '68 850w

"While this new work covers much the same chronological ground as the earlier studies of the money question by R. P. Sharkey [Money, Class, and Party, BRD 1961] and by I. Unger [Men, Money, and Politics], Nugent does contribute valuable new information. . . . [He] offers some useful, and at times, surprising data on the positions of various interest groups, economic, or otherwise, on the monetary question. A minor weakness is Nugent's tendency to be too clever in his organization with his fondness for sociological terms and concepts giving the effort somewhat of a 'gimmicky' cast. Nevertheless, the book should and will be read by students of the period."

Choice 5:656 J1 '68 170w

"Nugent's account is well researched and is consistently interesting, and he tells more about the intellectual history of the money question . . . and about its international setting than any other historian has. . . . What gives Nugent's book its distinctive character is the author's use of the money question to explain why the 1870s constituted a 'watershed of the future.' . . . It is difficult to accept Nugent's judgment that the preoccupation of society with the money question in the late-nineteenth century prevented it from seriously considering alternative solutions to the problems posed by industrialism. . . . The central thesis of Nugent's book is thus overargued, but the author has nevertheless provided a sophisticated, informative, and stimulating account of one of the crucial problems of the post-Civil War era." Sidney Fine

NUGENT, W. T. K.—Continued

J Am Hist 55:409 S '68 600w

NUGENT, WALTER T. K. The money question during reconstruction. 127p $4.50; pa $1.25 Norton

332.4 Currency question—U.S. 67-16613

A professor of history offers his interpretation of the personalities and issues involved in the financial legislation following the Civil War. He discusses the "Crime '73, the Coinage Act . . . which did away with silver as the monetary standard and placed gold in its stead. . . . [He views] the debate over gold, silver, and greenbacks . . . not merely as a struggle for political advantage but as one of the growing pains of a nation coming to power." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"Little attempt is made to plumb the depths of interaction between the money question and other political and economic issues of the time. . . . Nugent devotes somewhere between a third and a fourth of his pages to a discussion of international monetary affairs including the trend toward gold monometallism and the failure of efforts toward international bimetalism. His treatment of this subject is quite useful and plausible. . . . The treatment of the 'Crime of '73' in this volume . . . places major emphasis on moral and ideological considerations rather than economic interest. . . . As a brief survey of the money question in the sixties and seventies, this book should be useful to college and university students, particularly inasmuch as it contains an excellent fifteen-page bibliographical essay." R. P. Sharkey

Am Hist R 73:1650 Je '68 450w

Choice 5:1010 O '68 110w

"In concisely structured prose, Nugent . . . perceives the politics of the period as dominated by shifting 'interest-groups.' . . . By analyzing the slippery complexities of Reconstruction-era economics in little more than 100 pages, Nugent demonstrates, as he did in his previous work, The Tolerant Populists [BRD 1964], that he is one of our ablest historians." G. M. Gressley

Library J 92:3994 N 1 '67 180w

NUTTALL, A. D. Two concepts of allegory; a study of Shakespeare's The Tempest, and the logic of allegorical expression. 175p $7 Barnes & Noble

822.3 Shakespeare, William. The tempest 67-8166

The author "argues for allegorical writing as a form of metaphysical expression in which image and concept interpenetrate and develop multiple simultaneous meanings and metaphysical associations. To support his views [he] points to the psychological relevance of 'non-specific imagery,' to the Renaissance emphasis on emblematic imagery and the masque, and to Shakespeare's propensity for metaphysical orientations in his sonnets and plays. Finally, The Tempest is seen as a metaphysical probing of reality in which images and characters exist in a dream-like state of multiple awareness." (Choice) Bibliography.

"The book, formerly a B. Litt. thesis at Oxford, is carefully argued and contains useful brief critiques of various philosophers, psychologists, and literary critics, plus an engaging interpretation of The Tempest, but its basic theses are available elsewhere. [A.J.S.] Fletcher's Allegory: The Theory of a Symbolic Mode [BRD 1965] is much more synoptic, and [R. A.] Brower's essay on The Tempest in The Fields of Light [BRD 1952] develops a similar interpretation in more vigorous detail. Neither author, incidentally, is cited in Nuttall's bibliography. Not necessary for basic undergraduate collections."

Choice 4:1382 F '68 180w

"[This] has the exhilarating quality of books which successfully combine disciplines—it uses philosophy, aesthetics, perceptual psychology, classical scholarship and literary criticism to examine a habit of mind—the practice of thinking about universals as though they were concrete things'. . . . The book is academic, but not drily so—it is concerned not so much with the validity or otherwise of interpretations, definitions, categories, as with the workings of the mind and emotions that brought them about. Its major virtue is a continuous excited, precise, questing curiosity. . . . The density and convolution of Mr Nuttall's style make it at times difficult to follow the connections of his thought—and he admits occasionally that he cannot work them out himself. But, like him, one can usually sense that they are there and worth hunting for." A. S. Byatt

New Statesman 74:371 S 22 '67 750w

TLS p134 F 8 '68 360w

NYERERE, JULIUS K. Freedom and unity (Uhuru na umoja) a selection from writings and speeches, 1952-65. 366p pl $7.20 Oxford

320.9 Africa—Politics [67-77497]

Past statements by the president of Tanzania. Index.

"In the historical context of African upheaval, this volume is a breath of fresh air. . . . [Nyerere's] form of liberalism, so clearly stated in this book, has become a rallying point for moderate African nationalism, one that is proud of its African heritage without being chauvinistically inclined to discard all else. Though some of his speeches are pro forma and could have been omitted, they make interesting and enlightening reading. The lack of severe ideological bias has afforded Nyerere the opportunity of speaking very frankly, and this feature of the book should be welcomed by scholar and layman alike."

Choice 4:1160 D '67 230w

"Nyerere's [selections] underline the extent to which any leader of a young and underdeveloped country must concern himself with the details of administration and policy. . . . From the pages of this book [he] emerges as a man of passion, prepared to sacrifice expediency to principle, but still endowed with the sense of humour which has always been one of his most pronounced attributes. His letter to officials and Ministers attacking pomposity (in July, 1963) is a gem."

TLS p259 Mr 30 '67 500w

NYOMARKAY, JOSEPH. Charisma and factionalism in the Nazi party. 161p $5 Univ. of Minn. press

329.943 National socialist party (Germany) 67-21015

The author "examines the interparty disputes within the Nazi party from its origins until the Roehm purge of 1934. The main thesis of the work is that the structure of interparty conflict was determined by the fact that the source of legitimacy in the Nazi party was the charisma of Adolf Hitler. This led to an acceptance of his leadership and to the aim of various opposition groups not to challenge this, but rather to win him over to their position, while he in turn avoided committing himself as long as possible, and only acted at the last possible moment, usually, except for the Roehm episode, as an arbiter rather than a condemning judge." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by Daniel Horn

Am Hist R 73:1189 Ap '68 450w

Reviewed by H. P. Secher

Am Pol Sci R 62:590 Je '68 2450w

"Probably few general readers will want to spend time on [this] relatively obscure subject. . . . Nevertheless for the specialist, Nyomarkay's study is exceptionally useful. It brings together a wide variety of data on early Nazi history, focuses systematically on several significant turning points in the Nazi party's grasp for power, and then proposes an analytical framework of concepts to develop a theory of factional antagonisms in totalitarian movements." R. M. Hunt

Ann Am Acad 376:158 Mr '68 380w

"Parts of the analysis would have been clarified if the author had utilized W. Z. Laqueur's study of the German youth movement, Young Germany [BRD 1963], which played a major role in the development of the Nazi concept of leadership, and G. L. Mosse's study of the völk- ish movement, The Crisis of German Ideology [BRD 1965, 1966]. The study raises a number of very fruitful questions about the role of ideology in totalitarian movements. Valuable contribution to the early history of National Socialism and to the sociology of modern dictatorships. Recommended for large college libraries."

Choice 4:1307 Ja '68 110w

"Mr. Nyomarkay has utilized monographic studies of Nazism and memoirs of Nazi party members to show how Hitler exploited factionalism to strengthen his control of the party. Unfortunately Mr. Nyomarkay's intriguing account . . . is marred by occasional lapses into the jargon of political science. Nevertheless, his is a revealing study of an aspect of the Nazi movement that often puzzled contemporary observers. The book is well worth reading."

Keith Eubank

Library J 92:2790 Ag '67 240w

NYREN, DOROTHY. See Curley, D. N.

O

OAKES, GEORGE W. Turn left at the pub. 174p maps $4.95 McKay

914.2 England—Description and travel

68-19021

A "collection of walking tours of the English countryside . . . [which] take the reader to the cathedral and university towns of England . . . [as well as the] countryside of Kent, the . . . streets of York, the sands and cliffs of South Devon, the historic city of Bath, the hills and vales of the Cotswolds, and Stratford-on-Avon. . . . [The book gives] directions concerning the transportation available to the starting point of each walk, and . . . a description of what to look for and how to get home." (Publisher's note)

"[This book describes] some of the most interesting and most beautiful parts of England. Mr. Oakes provides minute details and includes . . . hours that many historic buildings are open to the public, and places to stop for meals. The tours are planned for a half-day's or a whole day's walk and Mr. Oakes points out the places of significance in the area. Although the narrative style is perhaps a little cloying, this is really a guidebook and will be useful in those libraries with large travel collections. It will be attractive not only to actual travelers but to the armchair variety as well."

Gillian Olechno

Library J 93:2656 J1 '68 140w

"Lending aid and comfort to all unreconstructed pedestrians, the late G. W. Oakes, whose 'Turn Right at the Fountain' [BRD 1963] slowed vehicular traffic all over Europe, has posthumously done the same for England with this delightful little book of 24 esthetically subversive walking tours. Strolls, really, as they are all measured in yards rather than miles and none need occupy more than a leisurely morning or afternoon. . . . Following Mr. Oakes's invariably sound advice and excellent sketch maps, the visitor to England will miss very little of what he ought to see. . . . Not for nothing is the book called 'Turn Left at the Pub.' The only other thing one needs is a working knowledge of local licensing hours."

D. C. Goddard

N Y Times █ R p12 █ 22 '68 330w

OAKESHOTT, WALTER. The mosaics of Rome; from the third to the fourteenth centuries. 388p il col il $32.50 N.Y. graphic

729 Mosaics. Rome (City)—Churches

[68-72308]

A study of the mosaics in twenty-six Roman churches. "The seven chapters lead from Old St. Peter's, Santa Costanza, SS. Cosma e Damiano . . . [to] the remnants of Giotto's 'Navicella,' harbinger of the Renaissance." (Library J) Bibliography.

"Known for his study of the Winchester Bible, Oakeshott admits here to being more interested in the techniques of the mosaics than in their art-historical and ideological context. His book concentrates upon the restoration that almost every Roman example has undergone. Problems of judgment are enormously complicated by these repairs and can be only illuminated by the author's careful analyses. . . . [His] excellent plates (including many new photographs) are intelligently correlated with the text, and each of the book's six chronological sections is followed by its own set of footnotes and notes to the plates. Oakeshott . . . will often prove too purely technical for the undergraduate. But as his comprehensive bibliography suggests this is the only work of its kind in English."

Choice 4:1372 F '68 170w

"[This [is a] scholarly and readable work. . . . [It] includes 33 magnificent full-page color plates. . . . Among many other topics Professor Oakeshott discusses the particular character of the Roman mosaic as compared with contemporary works of Byzantine art in Constantinople, Ravenna, and Venice. Recommended for specialists and general readers." F. M. Wassermann

Library J 93:982 Mr 1 '68 220w

"During the past twelve years Dr. Oakeshott has studied the mosaics in all the Roman churches, and he has now published a detailed and perceptive survey. He displays intimacy with his subject, aesthetic judgment and lucid and sensitive scholarship. Perhaps the first section is the least satisfying. The chapter on mosaic technique could be expanded through the further use of archaeological evidence from Constantinople and Ravenna, and the second chapter on the Classical Period blurs the contrast between the fifth century mosaic cycles and the rich, rather haphazard, essentially secular decoration which preceded them. The fourth chapter on 'The Paschalian Period' is the most deeply satisfying section of Dr. Oakeshott's study."

TLS p112 F 1 '68 750w

OATES, DAVID. Studies in the ancient history of Northern Iraq; pub. for the British academy. 176p il pl maps $14.40 Oxford

913.35 Mesopotamia—History. Mesopotamia—Antiquities. Iraq—Antiquities [68-82584]

"The director of the British School of Archaeology in Iraq . . . [here presents an] examination of several aspects of the ecology of northern Iraq. . . . He begins with a discussion of the environmental factors, abstracting . . . information from modern land use, and then proceeds to the early settlement patterns of the Assyrians at Assur and Nineveh, the expansion of Assyrian urban structures in the eighth and seventh centuries, the social and economic disruptions after the fall of the Empire in 614-612 B.C., and the diminished fortunes of the land under the administrations of Hellenistic Parthian and Roman generals and petty tyrants. Appended to this basically topographical survey are . . . reports on a Byzantine church and some pottery catalogs of Hellenistic, Roman, and Parthian ware from Nimrud and Ain Sinu-Zagur." (Class World)

"Oates' primary objective is to assess the degree to which physical resources and geographical factors helped and frequently were decisive in determining the settlement patterns, economic growth, population density, and political face of the land. His firsthand knowledge of the modern terrain is essential for and equal to this type of study." Bernard Goldman

Class World 62:13 S '68 230w

"[The author] is an archaeologist of extremely high standing. . . . Though the book may be expected . . . to interest specialists in many aspects of Mesopotamian antiquity, the general reader will find the variety of subjects dealt with a little bewildering. . . . It is perhaps only partly fair to judge the importance of this book by the results of Mr. Oates's own field operations, reports of which appear intermittently throughout its pages. In particular, two principal excavations at post-Assyrian sites are recorded. . . . Both excavations are here fully discussed and an analysis of the pottery from the two sites by Mrs. Joan Oates, which occupies the last forty-odd pages of the book, will be thought by some archaeologists alone to justify its publication."

TLS p850 Ag 8 '68 900w

OATES, JAMES F. Business and social change; life insurance looks to the future [by] James F. Oates, Jr. (Columbia Univ. Graduate school of business. McKinsey foundation lecture ser) 99p $4.95 McGraw

368.3 Insurance, Life

68-15475

The author presents an "overview of the life insurance field today—showing . . . how social change and evolving human needs have posed business opportunities and concerns and how these have been met." (Publisher's note) Index.

OATES, J. F.—Continued

"Oates contributes no important new thinking to the vital subject of management's response to social change. The range of topics is adequate but coverage is extremely shallow. . . . No substitute for research or creativity, it is the paternalistic kind of writing one would expect to find in a company career booklet. The index is an overstatement of content. Not recommended."

Choice 5:656 J1 '68 120w

"This is an expensive book but it is recommended for insurance and business collections."

R. L. Enequist

Library J 93:2234 Je 1 '68 110w

OATES, JOYCE CAROL. Expensive people. 308p $5.95 Vanguard press

68-8084

The narrator of this novel is Richard Everett, "a 250 pound 18-year-old boy-genius sitting alone in a shabby rented room composing a memoir about how he assassinated . . . [his mother, Nada] seven years before." (N Y Times Bk R) One chapter of the book appeared as a short story in The Quarterly Review of Literature.

"The author so well documents the logical stages in the boy's pathological development that a reader accepts the inevitable outcome with little if any skepticism. One of the parents, a compulsive flourisher, is a type too common on the current scene; but if the mother is so credible, the boy's poise in stalking and victimizing his community strains at times our credulity. . . . This writer is to be congratulated for a new twist in plot, but the characters hardly enlist sympathy. Rather than struggle against their self-created stagnation, or anything else, these suburbanites, with narcissistic satisfaction, yield to and even induce petulant tantrums. . . . This fictionalized documentary may for the thoughtful reader be more sobering than mere chilling entertainment."

W. H. Archer

Best Sell 28:335 N 15 '68 300w

Reviewed by R. V. Cassill

Book World p5 N 3 '68 1100w

Reviewed by J. M. Hoagland

Library J 93:3800 O 15 '68 130w

Reviewed by L. T. Grant

Nation 207:475 N 4 '68 950w

Reviewed by Bernard Bergonzi

N Y Rev of Books 11:40 Ja 2 '69 250w

"The novel has, among its other qualities, a great deal of good old-fashioned suspense. . . . Nada is the core of the novel. . . . [She] is a writer of national reputation. An extremely effective, and relevant, story by her is printed to prove her talent. . . . Miss Oates has no trouble becoming a semi-insane, boy-genius murderer, but she doesn't quite bring off a talented woman writer. . . . Technically, Miss Oates had many problems, with which she was usually, but not always, successful. . . . [First-person narrative] leads to eloquent self-revelations, to strong, immediate effects, and it can also lead to self-concern, self-indulgence. . . . This occurs from time to time here. . . . Miss Oates here gives us what might be subtitled 'The Absolutely True Confessions of a Parent Murderer.'" John Knowles

N Y Times Bk R p5 N 3 '68 850w

Reviewed by Granville Hicks

Sat R 51:33 O 26 '68 1150w

"Author Oates has but one message in her demonic little tale; behind the suburban façade lie corruption and madness. . . . [She] puts her really sinister touches of evil into her stage setting rather than her characters. The villain in the end is that old devil, bad environment. . . . If only Miss Oates were content to be just a modern romancer—to go all the way with her unnerved vision. Her trouble is that she seems to regard her book variously as a black humor exercise, a parable of national sickness of heart, and, worst of all, a realistic piece of social reportage. Too cool for fantasy, too hysterical for imagination, [this book] says too little half the time, and too much the other half."

Time 92:102 N 1 '68 440w

O'BALLANCE, EDGAR. The Algerian insurrection, 1954-62. (Archon bk) 231p maps $7 Shoe String

965 Algeria—History

67-2184

This account of the struggle for independence by a former French colony written by a "British authority on the modern phenomenon of 'insurgent warfare' . . . focuses on military operations, but . . . also demonstrates how the A.L.N. in the face of superior French military might was ultimately compelled to resort to political and diplomatic means to secure France's recognition of an independent Algerian Republic." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"[The author] aims here primarily at dispelling the view that insurgent warfare contains some magic properties that prevent successful counteraction by conventional armies and methods. . . . If this book were equipped with footnotes citing precise sources, it would please the scholars, but it probably would not change the argument. As far as I know, no scholar has had access to the ALN records, which were rather faithfully kept and stored; without them we are limited. The study asks limited questions, and the answers are sound. A few rough edges where reference is unclear or where small slips of fact occur could stand a little more polish." R. M. Erace

Am Hist R 73:559 D '67 370w

"A highly competent account of Algeria's protracted struggle for independence. . . . As in his earlier studies on guerilla warfare in Indochina, Greece, and Malaya, O'Ballance tackles the insurrection from a strictly military and political standpoint. This approach has a somewhat distorting effect on what was a crucial phase in the process of French 'decolonization'—a crisis of moral intensity which precipitated the fall of the Fourth Republic, undermined the authority of the French high command, and eliminated the vast power wielded by the colons and their allies in metropolitan France. Yet within the limits of the stated purpose, the book traces with great skill and clarity the vicissitudes of a long drawn-out guerilla struggle. . . . No comparable work in English to date. A useful addition to any college library."

Choice 4:1301 Ja '68 220w

"The book emphasizes military strategy and tactics of unconventional warfare on the part of the Algerian 'freedom fighters.' . . . [However according to the author] the battle for independence was not won by guerilla warfare but by clever diplomatic and propaganda action both in France and at the United Nations. The book presupposes a great deal of background knowledge and would be improved by a more substantial bibliography." A. F. Peterson

Library J 92:2588 J1 '67 120w

OBEYESEKERE, GANANATH. Land tenure in village Ceylon; a sociological and historical study. 319p $13 Cambridge

333.3 Land tenure. Inheritance and succession. Madagama, Ceylon [66-16664]

A "study of a changing rural society. Dr. Obeyesekere analyzes the land tenure system of Madagama, a Sinhalese village in the low country of Southern Ceylon, from its founding in 1790 to its predictable disintegration in 1961." (Am Soc R) Bibliography. Index.

"[The author] makes full use of the various pasts including the legacy of the pre-1815 Kandyan 'feudal' system as a model for social relations at present. . . . Dr. Obeyesekere brings to light two important and heretofore ignored institutions; the vāsagama, a kinship group with ancestral rights in a portion of village land; and the pelantiya, the modern kindred led by men of achieved status and prestige. . . . It is in the study of such factors, however, that the monograph is often confused and ambiguous. . . . The introduction of Weber's concepts of 'status honor,' 'status group,' and 'status stratification' are, similarly, not very helpful in explaining why the tenurial and social arrangements in this part of Ceylon moved 'rational men' to 'invest' in the 'share market' of landholdings of the village. . . . [Despite these problems] this volume certainly moves us along with both its empirical, descriptive material and its theoretical formulations."

Burton Stein

Am Hist R 73:889 F '68 550w

"Starting off from problems drawn from [E.] Leach's book on land tenure and kinship in Ceylon, Pul Eliya, a Village in Ceylon, . . . this study derives its conceptual framework and its methodology from Lévi-Strauss, Max Weber and traditional British Social Anthropology. These combined approaches, plus the author's own theoretical sophistication and skillful interpretation of detailed field data, result in a very convincing [analysis], . . . the underlying assumption of [which] is that past empirical conditions approximated the ideal model, but since the founding of the village in 1790, a number of prerequisites of the social system have broken down. . . . Obeyesekere portrays the loss of [these] as a major factor producing change, but he also isolates other accelerating processes . . . [and concludes with] a sophisticated discussion of kinship, residence and land tenure. . . . In a last brilliant chapter, Obeyesekere takes issue with the views of his predecessors. . . . All of [his] arguments are backed by detailed data and field observations." Hans-Dieter Evers

Am Soc R 32:1032 D '67 1300w

"Especially valuable is [the author's] illustration of the tendency under the 'share' model of land tenure to obtain mortgages only for prestige and power but with the subdivision of estates to obtain them for economic gain. He relates his thesis to ideas put forth previously about South Asian village organization and makes clear to the reader the type of model used in describing his data. . . . For upper division and graduate students in anthropology and economics."

Choice 5:1004 O '68 160w

O'BRIEN, CONOR CRUISE. The United Nations: sacred drama [by] Conor Cruise O'Brien and Feliks Topolski. 320p il $7.95 Simon & Schuster

341.13 United Nations

68-24051

The author, who was Ireland's representative at The United Nations for several years and was the Secretary-General's representative during the UN operations in Katanga, argues that "since the United Nations makes its impression on the imagination of mankind through a spectacle presented in an auditorium with confrontations of opposing personages, it may be said to belong to the category of drama. 'Since the personages, individually or collectively, symbolize mighty forces, since the audience is mankind and the theme the destiny of man, the drama may rightly be called sacred.' . . . [He] explores the ritual and symbols of the United Nations of which, he maintains, the Secretary General should be High Priest. When he steps down from that exalted, 'sacred' position and assumes a 'temporal' role of peace-keeping and mediation, he compromises not only the office but the whole organization. . . . [Topolski's drawings depict] the early days of the UN; the operations in the Congo and the Middle East; a recent session in New York recorded day by day; and unanswered questions." (Publisher's note) Appendix: The Leopard-skin priest, by David Brokensha. Annotated bibliography.

Best Sell 28:170 J1 15 '68 230w

"The fascinating prose of O'Brien and the even more fascinating drawings of Topolski in this handsome, outsize book . . . is an example of competitive co-existence. . . . However, Topolski's sketches are so savage, so unsparing, so vivid and literal that they overshadow O'Brien's vision of the almost quarter-century 'sacred drama' that is the U.N. . . . [O'Brien] is a polemicist of considerable talent. Unfortunately, in this book he has sought to play two conflicting roles, scholar and mystagogue. It doesn't come off. O'Brien is ingenious as he works out his notion of the U.N. as 'a structure of metaphors'—an organization which 'has no role except a role.' . . . The difficulty with O'Brien's metaphysical conceit is that the 124 U.N. member states do not represent a world culture nor do their diverse cultures have a common ancestry. . . . I find the book's substantive matters far more useful and less confusing than O'Brien's cultural anthropology." Arnold Beichman

Book World p6 J1 28 '68 650w

Reviewed by Louis Barron
Library J 93:4569 D 1 '68 190w

Reviewed by John Osborne
New Repub 159:31 S 7 '68 1500w

"[This book] is a day's ramble with a great and garrulous teacher. . . . To Dr O'Brien the play being the thing, it is an error to wish physical strength on the United Nations. . . . [He argues that] the Secretary-General should stick to his sacred dramaturgy by the East River. A 'coordinator' should be invented to run [peace-keeping] operations and carry the blame for them. Mistaken ideas about 'strengthening' the UN relate to the hope that the organisation will one day harden into a Universal Government. Dr O'Brien knocks this hope about. Not only do notions of world government often conceal the imperialism of one nation . . . but the effort to realize that 'real' UN would probably destroy the phenomenal one we have. . . . It was the existence of [Topolski's] drawings which incited Dr O'Brien to add his text to them. That is some excuse for the unwieldy, unaffordable, picture-book format, but these are insights which should get round the world by paperback." Neal Ascherson
New Statesman 75:838 Je 21 '68 950w

"[O'Brien points out that the U.N.] lacks the material power to cope with such threats to survival as nationalism, imperialism, class war, race war and the population explosion. It has 'only the kind of power that we associate with poetry and religion.' Its 'action is symbolic, the action of a play.' . . . [He] has observed the deficiencies of the U.N. at its testing times, and he writes with marvelous clarity about the real nature of the disputes over Suez, the Congo, Hungary, Southwest Africa, Korea and Vietnam. Perhaps he seems to feel, if the U.N. cannot resolve itself into a superpolitical body, it can become a superreligion. In this age of (among other things) ungodliness what could be a worthier outlet for our untapped devotional zeal than an institution pledged to our survival as a species? . . . [However, Mr. O'Brien is asking that the Secretary General] turn into a figurehead. . . . Topolski's pen and pencil sketches . . . match the text in holding moments of history eloquently still. . . . Like Daumier, [he] goes for the total expression." Albert Bermel

N Y Times Bk R p7 Ag 4 '68 2000w

New Yorker 44:182 O 5 '68 90w

Reviewed by Eric Ritter
Sat R 51:30 O 5 '68 500w

"[The author] an Irish internationalist [contends that the U.N.] supplies a world stage where the representatives of the national states in which we live can act out the roles assigned to them in this particular phase of world history. Starting from this premise, Dr. O'Brien—steeped in Yeats, Nietzsche and Johan Huizinga . . . regales us with a brilliant essay on the 'play-element' in this simulacrum of an international community: and manages to sustain his positive enthusiasm for the 'theatre' and the moral symbolism of the United Nations stage sets through 300 metaphor-strewn pages. . . . [He] draws pertinently on his own personal experience as a former senior United Nations official for some salty observations on the workings of the Organization. . . . He is fully alive to the danger of current 'philipizing', particularly with regard to China. . . . Topolski drawings are not to everyone's taste. But, if you like them, here are more than 100 full pages of them . . . to adorn and complete a cautionary tale which will one day no doubt be a collector's piece."

TLS p677 Je 27 '68 750w

O'BRIEN, DARCY. The conscience of James Joyce. 258p $6.95 Princeton univ. press

828 Joyce, James

67-21027

"Mr. O'Brien discovers a . . . traditional moral vision inherent in Joyce's writings. The book is a study of the man as well as of his works, combining biographical perspective with textual analysis. Particular reference is made to the letters from Joyce to his wife during 1909-1912, still partially unpublished, in which Joyce revealed his moral and emotional convictions with unusual frankness." (Publisher's note) Index.

"Mr. O'Brien knows his Joyce and conducts us on an intensive tour of the terrain in search of evidence that the Joyce who took himself out of Irish Catholicism couldn't take Irish Catholicism out of himself; he never threw over the basic attitudes of the Church toward human behavior. The stories in Dubliners, the confessional novel, A Portrait of the Artist, and the wordy play, Exiles, are combed for support of this idea, as O'Brien builds up a strong case. . . . But as the theme is pursued, through chapter after chapter on Ulysses and one on Finnegans Wake, the insistence on Joyce's role as a 'comic satirist' produces repetitiousness. One suspects that Mr. O'Brien himself, for all his scholarship and lively way with a pinpointing pen, in the long run is left behind by his quarry, who may well have intended three, six, or twelve meanings where the professor perceives only two. The sense of Joyce's prose, when separated from its music, defies the dead process of mere dissection." Paul Kresh

O'BRIEN, DARCY—Continued

Sat R 51:23 My 25 '68 400w

"Too much emphasis is placed on the sexy letters of 1909 from Joyce to his wife, which supposedly show that Joyce viewed sex as bestial. He was posing and composing more than O'Brien would have us believe. . . . There is much good to be said of O'Brien's controversial book, however. When he sets his thesis aside, he shows himself to be a first-rate critic of Joyce's work. The critical readings are fresh, interesting, and lively, maintaining an admirable balance between scholarship and insight." Va Q R 44:1x spring '68 300w

O'BRIEN, EDNA. Girls in their married bliss. 191p $4.95 Simon & Schuster

65-10455

A sequel to The Country Girls (BRD 1960) and The Lonely Girl (BRD 1962), this story is set in London "with Kate married to her lover, Eugene, and producing a son, Cash, shortly after. Hurt by Eugene's pettiness and indifference, she drifts into a . . . semi-affair, which Eugene uses to get rid of her and keep the boy. . . . The other country girl, Baba, . . . marries an awkward naive 'redneck' for his money and pulls the marriage through the crisis of a pregnancy brought on by her one date with Harvey, a drum player." (Library J)

"Occasionally a book comes along with literally nothing to recommend it, neither plot, nor characterization, nor style, nor (worst of all) meaning. . . . [This] is such a book. . . . One assumes that Edna O'Brien is trying to be funny. . . . [But] must life and literature be so dreary?" G. M. Casey

Best Sell 28:7 Ap 1 '68 200w

Reviewed by Melvin Maddocks
Christian Science Monitor p15 F 15 '68 500w

"Miss O'Brien shows the difference between the two girls by telling Kate's story in a disengaged third-person style while Baba's story is a first-person uproarious outpouring of good-natured toughness. The book's a little rough and sassy and has no particular message. Do you care? It's an excellent novel." J. B. Lopez
Library J 93:209 Ja 15 '68 210w

Reviewed by Liam Lenihan
Nation 206:512 Ap 15 '68 310w

"The ribald note is less rollicking in this third stage of [Kate and Baba's] adventures. In retrospect, it is evident that Miss O'Brien's sense of destiny has been, all along, as much tragic as comic. . . . Miss O'Brien suggests a theme that may be essentially religious. . . . Certainly one feels in certain portions of this book a kind of poetry of the ordeals of conscience. . . . The cold London winter which grimly encloses Kate during the whole course of these episodes is raised, by descriptive suggestion—often quite beautifully—to a metaphor of her spiritual condition. . . . [Unfortunately] the reader . . . may be inclined to protest that her fate seems grim rather than meaningful." Millicent Bell
N Y Times Bk R p44 F 18 '68 850w

"Miss O'Brien's portrayal of the psychology of adulterous love is brilliant. . . . Her subject is sex, its dynamics and ethics, and she treats it as a many-sided problem. . . . She wants us to react to her book as we would to a first-hand experience, and to achieve this purpose she alternates her narrative between voices, between dialogue and description, between epigram and summary. The suddenness of these changes jolts us; the off-key logic and rhythm communicate, probably better than conventional writing could, the immediacy of the impact. . . . [This book] is a minor masterpiece." Peter Wolfe
Sat R 51:38 F 17 '68 650w

O'BRIEN, FLANN. The best of Myles; a selection from 'Cruiskeen lawn' [by] Myles na Gopaleen (Flann O'Brien) ed. and with a pref. by Kevin O Nolan. 400p il $7.50 Walker & co.

827

68-28353

"The Irish Times began publishing Myles's daily column in Irish (i.e., Gaelic) during 1939. . . . Soon, 'Cruiskeen Lawn' ('The Full Little Jug') began appearing in English on alternate days and eventually continued mainly in that language until [the writer's] death in 1966 at the age of fifty-four. . . . [The selections here, edited by the author's brother, are] almost entirely in English, [and come] from the columns of the first five years—the period of Irish neutrality in World War II." (Book World)

Reviewed by Vivian Mercier
Book World p6 N 24 '68 1050w

"Myles on good days was a modern Swift come to judge and scourge the Yahoos in prose as plain as that of the Dean himself. On bad days he could be tiresome and preachy as an old parish priest sermonizing to peasants. . . . His lists of dislikes included bores, clichés and 'people who are very important and equally ignorant'. . . . He could be unfair too and as narrow as some of his victims. . . . Some of those Dublin topics of a quarter-century ago may make little sense to one unfamiliar with the time and place of writing. The editing might have been more helpful here; at the very least the dates of the columns should have been noted. All the same it's a fair compendium of Myles's nonsense and erudition, his wit and concern for language." Sean Cronin
Nation 207:636 D 9 '68 700w

"[This is] humorous, satirical, learned, grave-faced, crazy writing. . . . Myles was feared as were some of the ancient Gaelic poets, who it was said could kill with a satire. There was no malice in him, but he could set the town laughing, and a pity for you if the laughter was at your expense. . . . The columnist did not on occasion despise the French or the classical languages. . . . [His] brother, Kevin, has honored his memory by a skillful editing. The sectionalizing according to subject cannot, because of the capricious nature of the column, be absolutely rigid. Old devotees of the column may object because such an arrangement was even attempted. Yet it seems to me to be most effective. My only objection is that for readers not in the know a few pages of notes would have been useful." Benedict Kiely
N Y Times Bk R p32 N 17 '68 800w

"It is good to have these fugitive pieces restrained within the covers of a book. Myles was a genial man, a wag, a humorist. . . . Read one by one, his fragments were very funny, but there is a particular pleasure in the continuity of feeling and idiom provided by a book. . . . After a while it begins to emerge that Myles's several personalities were audible in the daily pieces. . . . The formal rhetoric of documentation, the informal bravado of the bar, and the pedantic euphuism of his own mind, . . . [his] style includes all three, diversely apportioned. Much of his comedy is the result of setting these three idioms amiably at odds." TLS p1046 S 19 '68 800w

O'BRIEN, MICHAEL J. The Socratic paradoxes and the Greek mind. 249p $6 Univ. of N.C. press

170 Plato. Philosophy, Ancient 67-23494

"The central doctrines of Plato's ethics are examined and elucidated in this . . . study of [his] moral philosophy." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"[Written] in unstrained, readable prose, . . . the book is not quite a commentary: it moves on too general a level without any probing in depth. . . . A help to two sorts of readers: (1) those specially interested in the language setting of Socratic Athens . . . (2) general bookbrowsers looking for readable summaries of various Platonic dialogues in all three periods."

Cholce 5:509 Je '68 300w

"[O'Brien attempts] to show that . . . no philosophical plebiscite will neatly establish the origin of the paradoxes or that they came to Plato's or Socrates' attention as the result of an inevitable process. . . . [He] pursues the evidence for this judgment through the Dialogues, in considerable detail (perhaps too much: the length of his analyses, plus the fact that the book has no element of suspense—its conclusions are put foremost—drive the reader to inattention). . . . The book is not readily skimmed or summarized; it is slow but rich." D. J. Stewart

Class World 61:249 F '68 300w

Reviewed by T. M. Robinson
Library J 92:2784 Ag '67 170w

O'BRIEN, WILLIAM V. Nuclear war, deterrence, and morality. 120p $3.75 Newman press 261.8 War and religion. Christian ethics
67-15720

This consideration of the limits of war and peace by the chairman of the Institute of World Policy, Georgetown University, contains an "exposition of traditional Catholic thought, especially on the Just War, and more recent thinking as reflected in the reports of Vatican Council II." (Choice) Bibliography.

"Pope Paul VI has been calling persistently for peace. More Catholics should familiarize themselves with the ethical positions set forth in this small but very significant book, and so prepare themselves to follow his leadership." E. S. Stanton

America 116:698 My 6 '67 100w

"To delineate the moral limits of modern war, one of the stated purposes of the book, is indeed a necessary undertaking, but it is highly doubtful if this has been fulfilled. Nowhere does O'Brien state what the specific factors or conditions are that constitute a moral situation."

The book does contain, however, much valuable material that could well be included in a more definitive study of so global a problem as the threat of nuclear war. . . . Most readers would doubtless agree with the author that no 'higher cause' can possibly justify an unlimited war, but there are wide divergencies of views as to how peace might be attained as O'Brien readily recognizes. . . . Extensive bibliography on current books and articles by both church and secular writers."

Choice 5:334 My '68 200w

O'CONNELL, JEFFREY, jt. auth. After cars crash: the need for legal and insurance reform. See Keeton, R. E.

O'CONNOR, ELIZABETH. Journey inward, journey outward. 175p $4.95 Harper 289.9 Washington, D.C. Church of the Saviour
68-11728

The author discusses the efforts of the Church of the Saviour in Washington, D.C., "to maintain a creative tension between its mission of 'outward journey' to encounter social problems, and 'inward journey' to advance the continual growth of the members' inner life." (Library J)

Reviewed by Cora Brady
America 118:265 F 24 '68 60w

"Those who profited from [the author's] Call to Commitment will provide a ready-made market of readers for this continuation of the story of the Church of the Saviour. . . . [The book] deserves the attention of many."

Christian Century 85:24 Ja 3 '68 70w

"Elizabeth O'Connor, one of the original members of the staff of the church . . . effectively interprets this church's efforts. . . . Her writing, void of any warm-water sort of devotional sentimentality, abounds in sound, imaginative pastoral insights. For seminary libraries, church libraries, and public and college libraries, here is, unreservedly, a necessary purchase." Lawrence Mills

Library J 93:85 Ja 1 '68 140w

O'CONNOR, FRANCIS V. Jackson Pollock. 148p il $6.95; pa $3.95 Mus. of modern art 759.13 Pollock, Jackson
67-26814

Published in conjunction with a retrospective exhibition of the artist's work at the Museum of Modern Art, this book documents chronologically Pollock's life and work. The author includes "material from the artist's correspondence and contracts, letters from [his] family, friends, and dealers, and selected reviews which record the varied and contrasting critical and public response to Pollock's work. Documentary photos that relate to the artist's life are included as are 88 reproductions of his paintings and drawings." (Library J) Bibliography.

"The book contains a major bibliography of 217 items in the thorough and scholarly tradition of Museum of Modern Art publications. Recommended for all art collections where it will appeal to the informed laymen and specialists." W. J. Dane

Library J 92:440 D 1 '67 170w

"This 'cool' book of hard facts and documents affords a glimpse of the man behind the paintings in a way that no biography or criticism could ever do. It should interest anyone either fascinated with or bewildered by Pollock's great paintings." John Perreault

Nation 205:698 D 25 '67 100w

O'CONNOR, JOHN J. A chaplain looks at Vietnam; foreword by Everett M. Dirksen. 256p $5.95 World pub.

959.7 Vietnamese Conflict, 1961- 68-26834

"Prompted by criticism of the morality of America's position in Vietnam, [the author,] a Navy chaplain who has been decorated for outstanding performances of duty in Vietnam, [offers] a defense of his nation's policy. . . . [He moves] from a summary of the legal roots of America's commitment to Southeast Asia to an analysis of recent Vietnamese history." (Library J) Bibliography.

Reviewed by V. S. Kearney
America 119:560 N 30 '68 100w

"Father O'Connor is both scholarly and experienced. He does not let his love for the Marine Corps sway his judgment, nor his great admiration for them unbalance his judgment."

His thesis would be terribly difficult to disprove. . . . [He] documents his statements meticulously and from primary sources. He includes a six-page bibliography of prime importance for those who are seriously upset by the Vietnamese war. This timely volume should have first-purchase priority in every public and academic library. Never has the 'pro-war' side been so thoroughly treated and in this issue both sides must be heard carefully and adequately." Charles Dollen

Best Sell 28:168 J1 15 '68 350w

Reviewed by R. J. Neuhaus
Christian Century 85:1223 S 25 '68 700w

"[The author] mostly emphasizes the moral rightness of American policy; and, like anyone determined to demonstrate the ethical correctness of human policy, he makes the mistake of reaching absolute political conclusions. He makes some interesting statements, but none add light to an already tired debate. If an uncritical, undocumented defense of the moral rectitude of America's Vietnam policy is desired, this book should fill the need." Charles DeBenedetti

Library J 93:2842 Ag '68 170w

O'CONNOR, RICHARD. Ambrose Bierce; a biography. 333p pl $6.95 Little

B or 92 Bierce, Ambrose
67-11229

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by Franklin Walker
Am Lit 39:574 Ja '68 400w

Reviewed by R. W. Butterfield
New Statesman 75:306 Mr 11 '68 500w
TLS p169 F 22 '68 1300w

O'CONNOR, RICHARD. The German-Americans; an informal history. 484p il $8.95 Little 301.453 Germans in the U.S.
68-21880

"This is an informal account of the social and historical influences of German-Americans on the United States beginning in the 1600's. . . . [The author] concludes that while Germans constitute the largest 'minority' group in this country, they have been more completely Americanized or acculturated than any other group." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by W. F. Kimball
America 119:295 O 5 '68 600w

Reviewed by B. A. Welsberger
Book World p4 Ag 25 '68 1100w

"Not 'a scholarly exercise' but 'an informal inquiry.' Even though scholarly standards may, therefore, be unfair in appraising it, a number of caveats are necessary for the user enjoying the smooth, often amusing reading which is full of anecdotes and entertaining features. It is precisely these features which shift emphases and distort the historically significant. There are omissions, e.g. the influence of the refugees from Hitler. The book abounds in clichés and inaccuracies. Annotations lack page indications. The illustrations are insufficiently captioned as to sources and dates. The bibliography is curiously uneven. . . . O'Connor's book cannot be recommended to undergraduates without many restrictions."

O'CONNOR, RICHARD—Continued

Choice 5:1362 D '68 160w

Christian Century 85:1965 Ag 21 '68 80w

"[The author] tells his story in minute detail and with engaging fluency. He is never tedious and he leavens his narrative with many refreshing anecdote. Usefully, he reminds us of facts which we either never knew or had forgotten—that German-Americans invented the linotype and developed the political cartoon and the comic strip; that they were a decisive element in the nomination of Abraham Lincoln for the presidency; and that half a dozen of them were among eight men convicted of making and throwing the first anarchist bomb in America, in Chicago, in 1886." Edwin Tetlow

Christian Science Monitor p9 Ag 12 '68 800w

"In supporting his inquiry [Mr. O'Connor] relies heavily on selected anecdotes about diverse luminaries ranging from John Peter Zenger to Babe Ruth. [The] book is a mixed bag: readable, entertaining, and informative for the lay reader, but repetitious, uneven, not thoroughly researched or correlated. Certainly, it should not be a first purchase." S. G. Heppell

Library J 93:2865 Ag '68 190w

Reviewed W. A. Swanberg

N Y Times Bk R p8 S 8 '68 1300w

"[O'Connor] has supplied a Valhalla of illustrious ancestors that should please any descendant of the people that brought the Christmas tree and Santa Claus to America. . . . [He] also allots a chapter to the 'Jewish Grand Dukes,' an aspect of German-Americana described with much wit and charm in Stephen Birmingham's best seller, 'Our Crowd' [BRD 1967]. By contrast, O'Connor's attempt to sketch the entire German-American scene often degenerates into a perfunctory list. . . . [He] finally gives up the search for reasonable categories and scrambles together one final list that contains Wernher Von Braun, Eric Hoffer, Lawrence Welk, Walter Reuther and 'half of Grace Kelly.' As a book this kind of name-dropping doesn't mean much." Howard Junker

Newsweek 72:82 Ap 19 '68 700w

O'CONNOR, RICHARD. The lost revolutionary; a biography of John Reed [by] Richard O'Connor [and] Dale L. Walker. 328p $6.95 Harcourt

B or 92 Reed, John 67-20314

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by Oscar Handlin

Atlantic 221:118 Ja '68 190w

Choice 5:244 Ap '68 180w

Va Q R 44:cxix summer '68 100w

O'DEA, THOMAS F. The Catholic crisis. 267p $5.95 Beacon press

262.5 Church renewal. Vatican Council, 2d. Catholic Church 68-14707

"O'Dea, professor of sociology and director of the Institute of Religious Studies at the University of California, Santa Barbara, believes that the Catholic attempt at aggiornamento represents 'a great and indeed probably final opportunity for Christianity'—an opportunity for relevance. He analyzes . . . three important Council documents, On the Church, The Church in the Modern World, and On Divine Revelation, to show the crisis brought about by centuries of defensive hostility to change, and to suggest the implications of the Council's beginnings as a 'process' view of man and the Church." (Library J)

"An equally acceptable title [for this book] would have been The Second Chance, for it is the author's contention that Christianity is currently involved in its second major attempt to face the challenges of historicism, modern science, modern biblical scholarship and the rebellion against the values of traditional religion. . . . O'Dea believes that this may be the last chance; if the unique advantages of Roman Catholicism prove insufficient for the task, then it may be too late for a third. . . . One of his most important chapters is that in which he relates earlier efforts at modernization to those made at Vatican II. . . . The volume stands out as one of the best interpretative accounts of the Second Vatican Council and of the struggle for renewal in the churches." L. E. Schaller

Christian Century 85:1081 Ag 28 '68 360w

"O'Dea's earlier approach to the plight of the Catholic intellectual [in the American Catholic Dilemma, BRD 1959] was diagnostic, not prescriptive. His concern was with the causes that inhibit intellectual development. His approach in The Catholic Crisis is similar. . . . [His] account emphasizes the modernism crisis brought about by the writings of Abbe Loisy and Father Tyrell. . . . [O'Dea] also draws upon the work of Ernst Troeltsch, and concludes with a two-page quotation from Max Scheler.

"Sociological demythologization" and an oddity or two like 'askewness' notwithstanding, O'Dea's writing is conspicuously free of the nebulous verbosity and jargon that so often mar the work of other practitioners of his academic discipline. Few laymen could bring such perception, sympathy and tempered optimism to the issues raised by Vatican II. For this reason, despite some dry stretches in the more explicatory pages, [this] is an absorbingly interesting commentary." Philip Deasy

Commonweal 89:66 O 11 '68 800w

"This study can be singled out as an unusually unified and carefully written analysis of the implications of aggiornamento, the theme of the Council. . . . This is a necessary purchase for theological and research libraries." J. K. Amrhein

Library J 93:1147 Mr 15 '68 140w

O'DELL, SCOTT. The psychology of children's art. See Kellogg, R.

ODEN, THOMAS C. Contemporary theology and psychotherapy. 158p $4.95; pa $1.95 Westminster press

253.5 Psychology, Pastoral. Psychotherapy 67-11798

A "study of how certain new initiatives in theology have potential relevance for the emergent forms of psychotherapy." (Publisher's note)

"The 'prevailing patterns' found in Tillich, Thurneysen, and Hiltner (as well as those in Outler, Roberts and Williams) are criticized; these patterns seem to have reached a dead end. Instead, Oden suggests we pursue 'a theological perception of the effective therapeutic process as the incognito embodiment of Christ's formation in the secularizing world.' The book is directed mainly to Christian theologians and those in the 'pastoral movement.' . . . Good style; many stimulating and insightful suggestions."

Choice 4:1257 Ja '68 210w

"Oden is moving in seriously on the gap that stretches between theological thought and psychotherapeutic thought, and he suggests some new thinking that is necessary to close the gap. . . . With a passing glance at Teilhard, he suggests that Bonhoeffer speaks to the required resolution. This approach is all the more intriguing in view of Bonhoeffer's distaste for psychotherapeutic approaches. But Oden points out that the newer thinking in such therapy might have changed Bonhoeffer's attitude." H. S. Stroup

Christian Century 85:202 F 14 '68 180w

"Dr. Oden, professor of theology and ethics, Graduate Seminary, Phillips University, correctly deplores the fact that since Tillich's death no major theologian, conservative or liberal, is concerned with maintaining a dialogue with psychotherapy. . . . Oden goes beyond his Kerygma and Counseling [BRD 1966] in his consideration of the implications for theology and psychotherapy of the implicit ontological assumptions hidden in all effective psychotherapy. He applies Bonhoeffer and Teilhard's concepts in the development of his theme. A provocative book!" Shildes Johnson

Library J 92:1628 Ap 15 '67 120w

ODINGA, OGINGA. Not yet uhuru; the autobiography of Oginga Odinga. 323p il $7.50 Hill & Wang

967.6 Kenya—Politics and government

67-26850

Uhuru is the Swahili word for freedom. This is the autobiography of the former vice-president of Kenya who became a teacher in 1939 "and then left teaching to organize a cooperative business among his Luo tribesmen. He met Jomo Kenyatta, the Kenyan political leader, in 1948, became active in Kenya's nationalist movement, and in 1957, when he was elected to the Legislative Council, became a key figure in the prolonged negotiations with the British for Kenya's independence. . . . [In 1966, he] formed the Kenya People's Union in opposition to Mr. Kenyatta and Mr. Mboya." (Library J)

Reviewed by J. A. Phillips
Best Sell 27:325 N 15 '67 650w

"Mr. Odinga's extreme anti-Western bias and his associations with Communists (critics claim he is an opportunist rather than a doctrinaire Communist) have made him a controversial figure in African politics, and this book is as much polemic as autobiography. . . . Mr. Odinga claims that the major cause of the split [with Kenyatta and Mboya] was a difference of opinion over the issues of pan-Africanism and land reform. Kenyan politics follow tribal lines. Mr. Odinga obtains his political strength from the Luo, the second largest tribe in Kenya. . . . This book is an essential purchase for libraries with African collections." R. G. McInnis

Library J 92:3034 S 15 '67 230w

"The Government's efforts have just not been good enough, according to Mr. Odinga. . . . He has been a rebel and a scorned all his life and, as this autobiography shows, is rarely not blasting some form of Establishment. . . . He seems in this book to be still picking a fight, interested not so much in the precise ground for the battle as in singling out his enemies. . . . Mr. Odinga will be criticized for his politics, for his petty fulminations against his opponents, for his lack of a constructive alternative to Kenya's general line of policies. But in his observations of his countrymen, even in recounting some of his own unhappy experiences, he uncovers and helps to explain a deep well of bitterness and frustration that ought not to be ignored. In this respect his book may have great significance in Kenya's political history." Lawrence Fellows

N Y Times Bk R p68 N 19 '67 1350w

